

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

I. IN ACTIONS AT COMMON LAW.

II. IN SUITS IN EQUITY.

I. IN ACTIONS AT COMMON LAW.

1. Who may sue. — The same person cannot be both plaintiff and defendant, although he is the representative of conflicting rights. Livingston v. Livingston, 12 D. 684; Burley v. Harris, 29 D. 650; Allin v. Shadburne, 25 D. 121; Hill v. McPherson, 55 D. 142. But this rule is confined to natural persons. Connell v. Woodard, 37 D. 173.

An action to recover damages for the breach of a covenant for the conveyance of land must be brought by the administrator, and not by the heir. Watson v. Blaine, 14 D. 669.

A note given to the trustees of a corporation is properly sued on in their name, they having the legal interest therein; otherwise where a note is given to corporation agents or servants. Binney v. Plumley, 26 D. 313.

Trustees of schools constitute quasi corporations, and may, in their corporate character, sue their own members. It will not affect the rule that the action is brought in the names of the individual trustees, instead of under the general title of trustees of schools. Connell v. Woodard, 37 D. 173.

The right of a survivor to sue alone on a contract, without joining the representative of the deceased, is not limited to cases of partnership. Smith v. Salomon, 91 D. 711.

One described in a contract of carriage as consignor, consignee, and sole owner, is "a trustee of an express trust" within the statute of parties, and may maintain an action to recover overcharges paid. Waterman v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 50 R. 145.

2. When the real party in interest must sue. — An action at law must be brought in the name of him to whom the promise is made, or in whom the legal right of action exists. Carter v. Darby, 50 D. 156.

The real party in interest must bring action under the statute of Indiana, except where the statute has otherwise provided. This was formerly the rule in equity. Swift v. Ellsworth, 71 D. 316.

Action may be brought in the name of a party who has no interest, if there is a cause of action and he appears to have the legal title. Berry v. Gills, 43 D. 584.

Real party in interest who may sue on written contract may be ascertained by proof alunde, where the agency or trust of the nominal party appears upon the face of the contract. Michigan State Bank v. Peck, 65 D. 234.

Objection that plaintiff is not real party in interest will not avail where a recovery in the action will bar another action for the same cause. White v. The Mary Ann, 65 D. 623.

3. Joinder of parties plaintiff. — All parties in interest as plaintiffs should be joined. Whitney v. Stark, 68 D. 360.

Old equity rules for joinder of parties are substantially re-enacted by Indiana code: See R. S. 1852, pp. 30, 31, secs. 17-19. Tate v. Ohio etc. R. R. Co., 71 D. 309.

Separate creditors cannot join in action against their debtor, unless there is a joint interest in the thing demanded, or a privity of contract which authorizes the joinder. Dyas v. Dinkgrave, 77 D. 196.

Joint contractors must all sue upon their joint contract, although one of them has been settled with, unless all of the parties agree to the severance of the joint interest, and the obligor promises to pay each his several share, and the suit is based upon the new promise. Angus v. Robinson, 59 R. 753.

4. Misjoinder of plaintiffs. — A false and fraudulent affirmation made by a seller to two or more purchasers is, in its nature, a several tort to each, and they cannot join in an action therefor. Baker v. Jewell, 4 D. 162.

5. Non-joinder of plaintiffs is to be taken advantage of in two ways when the defect does not appear upon the face of the complaint; namely, by answer or by apportionment of the damages at the trial. Whitney v. Stark, 68 D. 360.

Under the Indiana statute, if all persons interested as plaintiffs should not be joined as such, and the fact should be developed upon the trial, it would perhaps be available as a bar to the action, or might be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

Where a person, answerable in contract to two jointly, settles with one of them so that one has no longer any real interest in the matter in dispute, it is a severance of the cause of action, and the debtor is liable in an action at law to the other alone. Boston & M. R. R. v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 333.

6. Who may be sued, generally. — If one joint contractor die, the survivors only can be sued at law; and when all have died, the action must be against the representative of the last survivor. Ayer v. Wilson, 12 D. 677.

An action may be maintained against one obligor, upon a joint bond of himself and another; and such bond is sufficiently described in the declaration, either as the bond of the defendant alone, or as the bond of both. Allis v. Shadburne, 25 D. 121.

An individual may be joined as party defendant in an action against a corporation for trespass. Brokaw v. New Jersey R. R. etc. Co., 90 D. 659.

Object of making a person a party to a legal proceeding is to enable him to be heard in the assertion of his rights, and failing to set them up, that he may be concluded from again litigating them. Wright v. Dunning, 92 D. 257.

Tenants in possession may be sued jointly in an action for trespass committed by animals kept by them in common upon the premises, although the several animals are owned by them separately and individually. Jack v. Hudnall, 18 R. 293.

7. Who are necessary parties defendant. — The law of the forum determines who shall be parties to an action. Kirkland v. Lowe, 69 D. 355.

Encumbrancers must be made parties to a suit where their claims arose before the commencement thereof, but not where they arose pendente lite. Miller v. Kershaw, 23 D. 183.

Neither the remote grantor, from whose vendee the contending parties both derive title, nor his heirs, are necessary parties to a suit between such contending parties affecting the title to the land. Hanly v. Blackford, 25 D. 114.

Bankrupt joint contractors must nevertheless be joined as defendants in an action on the contract. Roberts v. McLean, 42 D. 529.

A person having an interest in lands prior to suit brought to recover them must be made a party thereto, and if not made a party, will retain the right to clothe his equity with the legal title, as though no suit were in existence. Trimble v. Boothby, 45 D. 526.

Under the Indiana statute, all parties interested as defendants should be joined; if not, a plea in abatement may be available. Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

A person having no interest in a proceeding need not be made a party thereto. Coolley v. Scarlett, 87 D. 298.

Persons who will not be affected by judgment are not necessary parties. Thus in an action upon promissory notes, upon which plaintiff agreed, in consideration of the promise of a third person to pay them upon the confirmation of the title of his grantor to certain lands, to forbear suit until the decision of the question of such title, — held, that neither such third person nor his grantor were necessary parties to the action. Smith v. Lawrence, 99 D. 344.

As a general rule, in actions in form ex delicto, for a tort committed by several, the plaintiff may sue any of them, and the non-joinder of others cannot be pleaded in abatement; but where the action relates to real property, if it be such as to draw in question the title, all those jointly concerned should be made co-defendants. Low v. Mumford, 7 D. 469.

There is a settled distinction between mere personal actions of tort and such as concern real property. Southard v. Hill, 69 D. 85.

Plaintiff in an action ex delicto should not be required to include all tort-feasors, because he may not know them, or be able to find proof against them; but where the gist of the action is that the defendants are proprietors of the land, and have neglected a duty incident to their title, it is otherwise. Id.

8. Proper though not necessary parties. — Plaintiff in execution may be joined with the sheriff and his deputy, in an action of trespass for seizing and selling partnership property on execution against one of two partners, where such plaintiff was present at the sale and purchased a portion of the property. Deal v. Bogue, 57 D. 702.

9. Improper parties defendant. — A declaration in assumpsit, or in case ex quasi contractis, must unite all the joint contracting parties as defendants, but it must not unite any whose liability is not strictly and absolutely joint. Patton v. Magrath, 33 D. 98.

10. Misjoinder of defendants. — Courts of law will not take cognizance of distinct and separate claims or liabilities of several persons in one action, though standing in the same relative situations. Hence, where two persons have covenanted with another, by distinct and separate writings, the one for the performance of several duties, and the other becoming surety for him, they cannot be joined in the same action to recover for a breach. Childress v. McCullough, 30 D. 549.

A joint action against separate owners of animals cannot be sustained for damages inflicted by the joint act of such animals. Van Sternburgh v. Tobias, 31 D. 310.

Several persons being united as defendants in an action for damages arising from the commission of a tort not joint, it being alleged that one of the defendants was the owner of a lath-mill, from which rubbish had been thrown into a river and carried down to the plaintiff's mill, contributing to the injury complained of, and that the remaining defendants were also the owners of a mill from which rubbish had been carried down the river to plaintiff's mill, also contributing to the injury complained of, whether such defendants were properly joined, discussed, but not decided, it appearing that the defendant who owned the mill alone had died during the pendency of the action, and it was consequently held that as to such defendant the action had abated, and that the remaining defendants were liable. Simpson v. Seavey, 22 D. 228.

The agents of a corporation leased a wharf belonging to the corporation, and covenanted to keep it in repair. By reason of their neglect so to do, a person was injured while lawfully on the wharf. Held, that an action lay against either the agents or the corporation, but that a joint action against both would not lie. Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 16 R. 503.

11. Non-joinder of defendants. — Non-joinder of a joint contractor still living, if it appears on the face of the declaration, may be taken advantage of by demurrer, motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error. Roberts v. McLean, 42 D. 529.

In actions upon partnership contracts, all partners ought to be made defendants, as a general rule; but the omission to do so can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. In default of such plea, a joint contract may be offered in evidence in support of the separate contract declared on. Smith v. Cooke, 100 D. 58.

12. Bringing in new parties. — At common law, where the defendant insists that a third person should be the sole defendant, the court may order him to be brought in by amendment. Owen v. Weston, 56 R. 547.

An amendment purporting to bring in a new plaintiff (here the attorney-general) in place of an individual who began the suit, but has been judicially found not to have a right of action, is not authorized by New York code of procedure. Davis v. Mayor etc. of New York, 67 D. 186.

According to common-law rules, parties not sued in an action of trespass cannot be brought in by mere notice, where there is no pretense that they were trespassers. They must have legal notice, which is the notice required by statute, or make voluntary appearance as parties to the record. Pico v. Webster, 73 D. 647.

Omission to demur for want of parties does not affect the power of the court, under section 17 of the California Practice Act, to direct other parties to be brought in, if it finds it impossible to completely determine the controversy without them. Grain v. Aldrich, 99 D. 423.

13. Substitution. — An amendment substituting different plaintiffs in a complaint from those in whose names the suit was brought, but without changing the cause of action, may be allowed in the discretion of the court, without entitling the adverse party to a continuance. Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

An amendment to a petition substituting the principals as plaintiffs, in an action brought by their agent, affords the defendant no ground of objection, unless he was thereby deprived of some substantial right. Price v. Wiley, 70 D. 323.

Such substitution is not making a new party, where it is done with the consent of the agent, and upon his allegation that he has no interest in the note sued on, but is merely the agent of the new plaintiffs. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The principals cannot be substituted as plaintiffs in an action by an agent after the agent's death, where the fact that he sues for their use does not appear from the petition, but the suit must be revived in the name of his representatives, and the principals claiming to be the real parties in interest may contest their rights with the representatives and claim judgment in their names, if the defendant is not thereby deprived of any substantial defense. Id.

14. Time and manner of objecting for defect of parties. — Where an action is brought in the name of one person for the benefit of another, if unauthorized, the proper practice to obtain a dismissal thereof is by affidavit of the defendant showing that fact, and a rule on the plaintiff to show cause why it should not be dismissed. Cage v. Foster, 26 D. 265.

Defect of parties may be taken advantage of in an action of account by two tenants in common against their co-tenants, under the plea that the defendants are not the bailiffs of the plaintiffs in the manner alleged in the declaration. McPherson v. McPherson, 53 D. 416.

Real party in interest being plaintiff, an objection that the contract in question was made by him as agent for others will not be considered. Salmon v. Hoffman, 56 D. 322.

Defect of parties plaintiff is good ground for demurrer when it appears upon the face of the complaint; when it does not so appear, it may be taken advantage of by answer; but if the objection be not taken either by demurrer or answer, it is deemed to be waived by the defendant. Alvarez v. Branson, 68 D. 274.

Objection that no person, natural or artificial, is named as plaintiff cannot be made by demurrer, on the ground that there is a "defect of parties," or that "plaintiffs have not the legal capacity to sue." Objection should be made by motion to dismiss. Proprietors etc. v. Yellow Jacket S. M. Co., 97 D. 510.

The objection to the misjoinder of the parties to a real action, if the misjoinder do not appear from the record, must, if not pleaded in abatement, be taken advantage of by a motion for a nonsuit; it will be too late to urge the objection after a verdict. Campbell v. Wallace, 37 D. 219.

A want of proper plaintiffs, in actions on contract, is an exception to the merits, and should be taken advantage of, either upon demurrer, in bar, or on the general issue, but not in abatement. Baker v. Jewell, 4 D. 162.

The non-joinder of a co-debtor, to be taken advantage of, must be pleaded; but where, after issue joined, the case is, as to certain of the proper parties, discontinued, there that fact can be taken advantage of on the trial. Mayor of New Orleans v. Ripley, 25 D. 178.

Non-joinder of a corporation as a party defendant is not so apparent as to be reached by demurrer, where the complaint, though it shows that such corporation once existed, and was a proper party, does not show that such existence continued up to the filing of the complaint. State v. Woram, 40 D. 378.

Non-joinder of plaintiffs need not be taken advantage of by plea in abatement or by demurrer, but may be given in evidence under the plea of non assumpsit. Hoffar v. Dement, 46 D. 628.

Objection of non-joinder of parties must be taken advantage of by demurrer, and comes too late on appeal from the final judgment. Beard v. Knox, 63 D. 125.

Objection on ground of non-joinder of a partner, in an action by the other members of a firm for deceit practiced upon them, must be taken, under the New York code of procedure, by demurrer or answer; if not pleaded, it is waived, and cannot be proved in diminution of damages. Zabriskie v. Smith, 64 D. 551.

Non-joinder of necessary parties plaintiff in an action of tort arising ex contractu may be taken advantage of by defendant by plea in abatement or under the general issue on the trial. Scott v. Brown, 67 D. 256.

Non-joinder of necessary parties plaintiff in an action on contract may be taken advantage of by defendant, under the general issue, by motion in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error, when the defect appears upon the record. Id.

Where a part owner sues ex delicto, and objection of non-joinder of a co-owner is not made by plea in abatement, a motion for nonsuit is properly refused, since the damages may be apportioned, and the other part owner may afterwards sue alone. Whitney v. State, 68 D. 360.

An objection to a complaint for want of parties is waived if not taken advantage of by demurrer on that ground, though sought to be reached by a demurrer for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Grain v. Aldrich, 99 D. 423.

II. IN SUITS IN EQUITY.

15. Who may sue, generally. — The real party in interest must sue, when suit is brought in equity. Thompson v. Cartwright, 46 D. 95.

A bill in equity to enforce performance of a public duty by a corporation cannot be maintained by a private person, in the absence of a special right or authority; nor, in such a case, has the complainant a right to a decree compensating him for any damage suffered. Buck Mountain Coal Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 88 D. 534.

A bill in equity to compel a corporation to observe its charter obligations can be maintained, it seems, on behalf of the state, by the attorney-general. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Private individuals cannot sustain a bill in chancery against the county officers, to enjoin them from making a use of a public square, which, it is alleged, would result in a forfeiture of the property and an injury to the complainants. Smith v. Houston, 25 D. 741.

16. All parties in interest should be joined either as plaintiffs or defendants.*—It is general rule in equity pleading that all persons are necessary parties to a suit whose interests are to be affected by it. Allison v. Shilling, 86 D. 622; Howell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376; May v. Smith, 59 D. 594; Moore v. Hood, 70 D. 210. But although this is a general rule, it is subject to the discretion of the court. New London Bank v. Lee, 27 D. 713. An exception to the rule exists where it is not in the power of the complainant to make them parties. Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 41 D. 549.

Where several persons have a common interest, arising out of the same transaction, although their interest is not joint, even the defendant may sometimes insist that they shall all be made parties, that he may be subjected to the trouble and expense of but one litigation. Robinson v. Smith, 24 D. 212.

A bill filed prior to the revised statutes, by the stockholders, against the directors of an incorporated company, for fraud and mismanagement, should make the corporation party either plaintiff or defendant. Ib.

Where there are several creditors or legatees who have a common interest, and are entitled to share in a fund insufficient to pay all in full, they should be made parties, or the suit should be brought by some on behalf of themselves and of all others similarly situated, and it should be so stated in the bill. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

All parties in interest should be made defendants to a bill in chancery, where it can be done without extraordinary difficulty, or where the defendants are not very numerous, and do not reside in remote and distant countries. Herrington v. Hubbard, 33 D. 426.

All parties need not have an interest in all matters contained in the suit to sustain the bill against the charge of multifariousness; it being sufficient if each party has an interest in some matter common to all the parties. Worthy v. Johnson, 52 D. 399.

All persons immediately interested should be made parties to a suit, and when this is the case the court will go on and try the cause, even though it appear that persons having more remote interests are not represented. Boff v. Fisher, 55 D. 627.

17. Joinder of parties complainant.—Parties seeking redress in chancery may join in the same complaint, and maintain their action together, where there is unity in interest as to the object to be attained by the bill. In such a case, it is within the province of a court of chancery to mete out to each and all of the complainants their rights, on the principle of sound equity. De Louis v. Meek, 50 D. 491.

Two persons are properly joined as plaintiffs in a bill in equity when both are interested in the property to be recovered, although their interests are not co-extensive. Blackwell v. Blackwell, 70 D. 556.

The joinder of several creditors of a decedent in a creditor's bill to vacate a fraudulent conveyance is proper. Dugan v. Vattier, 25 D. 106.

Different judgment creditors may join in one bill if they have a common, though not a joint, interest in the relief sought. Murray v. Hay, 43 D. 773.

An individual may join with the municipality to prevent the erection of buildings on lands dedicated to a public use. Watertown v. Cowen, 27 D. 80.

18. Misjoinder of complainants.—Parties having conflicting interests cannot be joined as complainants. Grant v. Van Schoonhoven, 37 D. 393.

Generally, complainants cannot unite when their claims to relief are distinct and independent; but this rule is not inflexible. Murray v. Hay, 43 D. 773.

Where a party is improperly made co-plaintiff without his privity or consent, the proper course is to move that his name be stricken out, not that the bill be dismissed even as to him. Southern Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier, 58 D. 448.

Demurrer on ground of misjoinder of party plaintiff must be presented in limine, and if not so presented, the right to demur will be deemed waived. Ib.

A bill is demurrable on ground of misjoinder of parties where the complainants are owners of several and distinct parcels of land, and have no common interest, but each seeks relief for special injury to his own property, under the impression that the nuisance complained of is a grievance common to all of the land-owners, and therefore that all might be properly joined. Hickman v. Paterson Horse R. R. Co., 86 D. 252.

19. Non-joinder of complainants.—When the parties interested are numerous, and the suit is for an object common to all of them, some of the body may maintain a bill in equity in behalf of themselves and others having a like interest; but in all cases where one or a few individuals of a larger number institute a suit on behalf of themselves and others, they must expressly state in their bill that it is filed as well on behalf of other members of the body as of those who are really made complainants. March v. E. R. R. Co. 77 D. 732. S. P., New London Bank v. Lee, 27 D. 713.

* See note on joinder of parties in equity, 71 D. 311-316.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A bill in equity may be sustained by several plaintiffs on behalf of others jointly interested with them, when it is alleged in the bill that the persons not made parties to the action are unknown or not within the jurisdiction of the court. Vana v. Hargett, 32 D. 689.

A decree upon a bill brought by several plaintiffs on behalf of a greater number having a joint and equal interest in the subject of the action will bind the persons who are not parties to the bill, so far as to determine the validity of their claim as a just demand, but such parties will not be bound by an account taken in the action, until they have been allowed an opportunity to be heard. Id.

20. Who are necessary parties defendant.* — No one need be made a party to a suit in equity against whom no decree can be made. Bowden v. Schatsell, 23 D. 170.

The vendee, or his legal representatives, ought to be parties to a suit in chancery brought by the vendor against his subsequent purchaser, to recover a balance alleged to be due from the vendee. Dual v. Babb, 4 D. 506.

If a defendant in execution makes the plaintiff and the officer both parties to a bill for an injunction where both do not participate in the levy, the answer of the officer alone is sufficient. Beard v. Foreman, 12 D. 197.

When the court, on the application of creditors, opens a judgment for the purpose of trying whether the bond sued upon was given to defraud creditors, it is not necessary that the latter be made parties to the action. Whiting v. Johnson, 14 D. 633.

Executors of an obligee of a bond for a conveyance of land who dies before the time fixed in the condition for the conveyance, must be parties to a bill brought for rescission on the ground of fraud on the part of the obligor in misrepresenting boundaries, and in selling land to which he had no title; or where a part of the purchase-money remains unpaid. Rice v. Spotswood, 17 D. 115.

The assignor of a judgment should be made a party to a bill brought by an assignee against a husband, to apply certain property to the satisfaction of the judgment; and when the property sought to be so applied is the wife's distributive share in her father's estate, she should also be a party. Elliot v. Waring, 17 D. 69.

The assignor of land affected by a trust is not a necessary party to a bill against his assignee, in an action by a surety of the former to charge lands in the hands of the latter for the payment of the purchase price for which the surety was bound, when the bill sets out that the defendant is the assignee of the entire interest in the land. Polk v. Gallant, 34 D. 410.

The appointee is a necessary party in an action to subject the property appointed to a debt due the complainant, though the property is in the hands of those to whom it was ultimately given. Leigh v. Smith, 42 D. 182.

Where it is sought to charge the heirs upon the bond of their ancestor, the personal representative is a necessary party for their protection, and in order that the personal assets should be applied for their relief, as far as they may go, towards the extinguishment of the debt. Beall v. Taylor, 44 D. 398.

Where a bill by B's heirs against A alleges that A purchased land with the money of A, B, and C, taking a conveyance to himself; that A and B were to be the owners in fee and tenants in common of the land; and that C was to have wood from the premises during her life, — she should be made a party to the bill, that her interests may be determined. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

In an action brought to restrain an administrator from selling property to pay debts of a deceased person and to set up a lost deed, it is sufficient if the administrator and the heirs are brought before the court, as they fully represent the property and are liable for all demands against it. Kennerly v. Shepley, 57 D. 219.

The state is not a necessary party to a suit against commissioners engaged in prosecution of a public work, though the acts complained of be within the scope of their authority, for they must defend under the law and their authority; and even if made a party, it might be that the only way to afford the relief sought would be to enjoin her agents or officers. Ex parte Martin, 58 D. 321.

The assignor of a bond must be made a party in an action against the assignee, calling him to account for it by one claiming to be entitled to the bond. In such a case it is not a sufficient answer that the assignor is dead and that there is no personal representative, as it is the duty of the party seeking relief to procure a representative, and it is therefore no answer for the plaintiff that he is the representative. May v. Smith, 59 D. 594.

Where a debtor assigns his property to trustees to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided pro rata among the creditors, in an action by one creditor against the trustees for an accounting and for judgment for his pro rata share, he must make the other creditors parties and the assignor a defendant. McPherson v. Parker, 89 D. 129.

21. Proper though not necessary defendants. — A bill is not demurrable because of misjoinder of parties, where the defendants, though not all necessary, are not improper parties. Whittemore v. Coates, 41 D. 740.

One to whom land has been conveyed to escape a levy under the executions of the grantor's creditors and to enable the grantor to convey to the plaintiff when he has paid the purchase-money under a contract for the purchase of the land, is a proper party defendant. Pringle v. Samuel, 13 D. 214.

If property be fraudulently conveyed and parceled out by its owner to several persons, they may be joined in one bill to vacate the transfers. Fellows v. Fellows, 15 D. 412.

A bill against several persons must relate to matters of the same nature and having a connection with one another; and all of the defendants must be more or less concerned, though their rights in respect to the general subject of the cause may be distinct. Ib.

An individual holding funds for an absent party may be made a party to the suit, because he is compellable to perform the decree with respect to those funds. Bowden v. Schatzell, 23 D. 170.

The attorney-general may be joined as a defendant in equity, representing the rights of the state, where those rights are connected with the relief sought against some other defendant, but not otherwise. Varick v. Smith, 28 D. 417.

A merely formal party to the original bill need not be made a party to the supplemental bill, where the new matter charged therein does not affect his rights. Allen v. Taylor, 29 D. 721.

A party compelled to resort to a court of equity to make out a case may properly join all the parties nominally or really interested in the transaction, and the court will, under such circumstances, retain the suit until all matters are finally disposed of. Beardsley v. Knight, 33 D. 193.

Complainant need not make parties of persons unknown to him, claiming an interest in the suit, nor of persons collaterally interested, who are exceedingly numerous. Therefore, a mortgagee need not join as defendants in a suit to foreclose the mortgage the creditors of one who has purchased the premises with notice of the mortgage, and has made a voluntary deed of the same for the benefit of his creditors, there being nothing to show who the creditors are or how many of them there are. Willis v. Henderson, 38 D. 120.

An unsworn answer to a bill is not evidence for any purpose, but performs merely the office of a pleading, and the complainant is not required to make parties of persons stated in such answer to have an interest in the controversy, there being no other evidence of that fact. Ib.

A statutory refunding bond may be dispensed with where the non-resident defendant is represented by a resident trustee, for he is not an indispensable party to the bill. Montandon v. Deas, 48 D. 84.

Persons having different and opposite interests to be affected by a judgment may properly be made parties defendant in a suit to set aside a sheriff's sale for fraud. Teas v. McDonald, 65 D. 65.

22. Improper parties defendant.—A clerk of a court in possession of a fund belonging to an absent party, which has been paid into court, does not hold it as an individual, but as an organ of the court, and cannot be made a party to a suit in equity in respect of that fund, because neither he nor the court of which he is clerk can be controlled by the decree as to the disposition of the fund. Bowden v. Schatzell, 23 D. 170.

Where parties are improperly made defendants, the bill should be dismissed as to them, with costs. Covenhoven v. Skuler, 21 D. 73.

23. Non-joinder of defendants.—Parties to a bill to enforce a lien should include all the owners of the subject of the lien; but the non-joinder of one of the owners ceases to be objectionable if the lien is released, and no decree is made affecting his interest. Case v. Woolley, 32 D. 54.

Courts will notice the omission of proper defendants in the bill, although no demurrer is interposed, when it is manifest that the decree will have the effect of depriving them of their legal rights. Harrington v. Hubbard, 33 D. 426.

Where a bill is filed for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of lands, the court is not warranted in making an order requiring the defendants before the court to defend for all the defendants in the cause. McQueen v. Chouteau, 64 D. 178.

24. Bringing in new parties.—Where an answer objects to the want of proper parties, the complainant should amend his bill before any further proceedings are had in the cause. Van Wyke v. Van Deusen, 25 D. 516.

If he neglects to do this, the court may, at the hearing, permit the cause to stand over for the purpose of bringing the proper parties before the court, on payment of costs to the adverse party, or dismiss the bill, with costs. Ib.

The proper course in such case, if the cause is not permitted to stand over, is to dismiss the bill without prejudice to the claim, or right of the complainant, in any future litigation. Ib.

If the objection of want of proper parties is raised at the hearing for the first time, the bill should not be dismissed, where the defect can be remedied by an amendment or a supplemental bill, and the complainants elect so to do within a reasonable time; provided that necessary parties were not left out of the bill, by the fraudulent or willful omission of the complainant, or in bad faith. Ib.

Where the answer to a bill in chancery discloses an interest in the subject-matter of the suit in a third person, he should be made a defendant in the bill, so that he may protect his interests. Harrington v. Hubbard, 33 D. 426.

New parties may be brought in after a final decree, and a reference to the master to take an account, if they affect only the account, and not the merits of the action. Bank of Mobile v. Hall, 41 D. 41.

An amendment limited to bringing in new parties to a bill may be made at any time upon leave of the court, in case the plaintiff discovers they are necessary. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

Upon a bill by certain creditors of a decedent's estate seeking to charge their claims upon the realty in the hands of devisees, other creditors should have an opportunity of coming in, and of sharing in the equitable assets. Kinney v. Harvey, 21 D. 597.

25. Rule as to parties beyond the jurisdiction. — A court of equity cannot dispose of the interests of an absent party, according to the English practice, unless some of the parties and the property are within its jurisdiction. Bowden v. Schatwell, 23 D. 179.

An absent person who has property within the state may be made a party to a suit in equity in respect of that property, under our statute, though there be no other party in the state. Ib.

Absent attaching creditors of individual partners who have received payment out of a fund paid into court by a garnishee, upon giving a bond to refund if found not entitled thereto, may be made parties in respect of their interest in that fund, to a suit in equity brought by a partnership creditor to establish his demand for the purpose of obtaining payment out of that fund, where the only surviving partner is also without the state. Ib.

Non-residents may maintain a suit in chancery against non-resident defendants, provided there is one resident defendant. Comstock v. Rayford, 40 D. 102.

A citizen of a foreign state can be made a party only by voluntary appearance, to a suit in Georgia, so as to be bound by a judgment or decree in personam, either by the statute or common law. Dearing v. Bank of Charleston, 48 D. 300.

In England, in a suit against joint obligors, both must be sued, or if one is within the realm, but cannot be found, he must be prosecuted to outlawry. In Georgia, however, if the sheriff returns one party not found, the plaintiff may proceed against the party served. Raney v. McRae, 60 D. 660.

26. How objections for want of parties should be taken. — The objection that parties have been made defendants in a suit who should have been joined as plaintiffs goes only to a matter of form, and will not be regarded by the court at the hearing, where the parties thus made defendants have accepted that character, and have filed their answer. Osgood v. Franklin, 7 D. 513.

Defendants to a bill in equity cannot be stricken out as parties on their own motion. If improperly made parties, they must demur or plead. Lyne v. Guardian, 13 D. 509.

Where it is not apparent from a bill itself that necessary parties are omitted, it can be taken advantage of only by plea or answer, showing who are the necessary parties, and making the objection of a want of parties in a plain and explicit manner. Robinson v. Smith, 24 D. 212.

Defendants can demur for non-joinder of parties only when it is apparent from the bill itself that there are other persons who ought to have been made parties. Ib.

The objection of non-joinder comes too late after an answer to the merits. Pascal v. Ducros, 41 D. 294.

Misjoinder must be taken advantage of by demurrer or by answer; the objection comes too late at the hearing. Watertown v. Cowen, 27 D. 80; Hinchman v. Paterson Horse R. R. Co., 86 D. 252.

The objection of a want of proper parties, after answer filed, and a report of the facts of the case by a committee, is unsustainable. New London Bank v. Lee, 27 D. 713.

Unnecessary joinder of a party as defendant does not afford ground for a demurrer to the bill by another defendant, unless there is some valid claim against the unnecessary party, in which the party demurring is not interested. Varick v. Smith, 23 D. 417.

The objection that a party was improperly joined in a bill for specific execution of a contract of sale, and that the bill ought to be dismissed as to him, is premature, where there was not a final decree in the cause. Clarke v. Curtis, 37 D. 625.

One unnecessarily made a party to a suit in equity may demur, if that fact appears on the face of the bill. Bowden v. Schatwell, 23 D. 170.

In a motion to dismiss, where the bill contains equity, the question of proper parties could not come up; for the plaintiff should have an opportunity to perfect his bill, which would not be allowed him if it was dismissed. Stone v. Hale, 52 D. 185.

Objection of want of proper parties cannot be raised on motion to dismiss a bill for want of equity. Hightower v. Thornton, 52 D. 412.

A bill in chancery is never dismissed for want of parties, provided necessary parties can be made, but stands over on payment of costs. Ib.

Where necessary parties cannot be made, the bill must be dismissed. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In equity, if there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff, all the defendants may demur; but if the misjoinder is of parties defendant, those only can demur who are improperly joined. Christian v. Crocker, 99 D. 223.

Objection of misjoinder of parties defendant in a bill is a merely personal privilege. Id.

PARTITION.

[Includes the division of real property among co-owners, either by their voluntary agreement and deed, or by means of a suit for partition, and whether the land be actually divided and set off in severalty, or sold, and the proceeds divided.]

Between tenants in common, see also CO-TENANCY, 34, 35.

When bars dower, see DOWER, 27.

I. BY ACT OF THE PARTIES; PAROL PARTITION.

II. BY SUIT.

I. BY ACT OF THE PARTIES; PAROL PARTITION.

1. Power to make partition. — In general, a valid partition of lands held in common cannot be made by parol, because of the statute of frauds; but the case of a resulting trust is not within the provisions of the statute, and a parol partition of such lands is valid. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

Parol partition, valid between the parties to it, may be ratified by the other parties interested. Id.

Heirs may make a valid parol partition of land among themselves, where they are all of age, and if one is not of age at the time of the partition, it is nevertheless valid, if acquiesced in and confirmed by such heir after coming of age. Lynch v. Baxter, 51 D. 735.

A verbal partition of land was binding under the Mexican law, where possession was taken. Id.

Parol partition of lands among tenants in common, when followed by a several possession in conformity with the terms of the partition, gives to each co-tenant the rights and incidents of an exclusive possession of his property. Tomlin v. Hilyard, 92 D. 118.

2. What is a valid partition. — A parol partition made between tenants in common, by marking a line of division on the ground, and followed by a corresponding separate possession, is good, and not within the statute of frauds. Ebert v. Wood, 2 D. 436; Jackson v. Harder, 4 D. 262; Brown v. Wheeler, 44 D. 550; Wood v. Fleet, 93 D. 523. Yet where the evidence of a separate possession is vague and slight, there can be no presumption in favor of a partition. Haughabaugh v. Donald, 5 D. 548.

Partition of a tract of land owned by two or more persons jointly may be shown by a map or plat signed by all the owners, on which the division lines of the several co-owners are traced, and the same is as effectual as if the lines had been actually run and marked by a surveyor. Compton v. Mathews, 22 D. 167.

Partition, to be effectual, need not be made upon the land, but the same may be made on a map, although the lines there traced merely existed in the mind. Actual separation of parts is not necessary, and the acts of the co-owners allotting to one and another a portion of the joint property which each is entitled to, and which each enjoys without interruption, are sufficient. Id.

Parol partition by a grantee of the husband who is tenant by curtesy, the wife not having acknowledged the deed so as to pass her interest, though not binding on the wife, is good in ejectment against a stranger. Ryeres v. Wheeler, 37 D. 243.

Tenants in common making mutual deeds of bargain, sale, and release, expressing nominal considerations, do not thereby acquire or lose any title, but obtain defined boundaries to the land they previously held in common. Such deeds operate as deeds of partition only. Dawson v. Lawrence, 42 D. 210.

Parol partition, if fair and equal, and executed by corresponding possession, is good, though some of the tenants be under coverture, and others of them elect to hold their purparts as before, by community of possession. McMahan v. McMahan, 53 D. 481.

An absent co-tenant not assenting to a partition may repudiate it by demanding a new partition of the whole tract, or he may adopt it by ratifying the acts of one who has assumed to act for him in such partition. Id.

Where parties owned a tract of land jointly, and afterwards married and made subsequently a deed of partition of the same, and held it in severalty afterwards, the partition so made will be binding on the parties, even though no certificate of privy examination of the wives appears in the deed. Bryson v. Stump, 56 D. 139.

A partition made by release deeds between grantee of tenant in common and co-tenants is valid, when it is in the power of any co-tenant to compel a partition by legal proceeding; and a creditor of the grantor, before any interference on his part to obtain payment of his debt as against the property, has no legal interest therein requiring recognition in the partition proceedings. Staples v. Bradley, 60 D. 630.

Partition may be treated as legal by creditor of tenant in common when he levies his execution, where it is made by release deeds between the grantee of such tenant and his co-tenants, although the creditor at the same time insists that the deed of the tenant is void, so far as it was designed to defraud his creditors. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

3. What is not.—A partition by parol is void, being within the statute of frauds, and a deed of partition by tenants in common will not be presumed merely from the fact of their several possession. Porter v. Perkins, 4 D. 52.

Where a tenancy in common is admitted, a parol partition, followed by possession under it, will be valid; yet, where the whole right or title of the party setting up the tenancy in common and parol partition is denied, a parol partition and subsequent possession will not be sufficient to transfer the title. Jackson v. Vosburgh, 6 D. 276.

Partition of land by parol is not valid, notwithstanding the division line was marked and monuments set up, and the parties for several years occupied in accordance with the division so made. Ballou v. Hale, 93 D. 438.

4. How construed.—An implied warranty is by law annexed to every partition of land, even where no warranty is expressed in the deed; hence parties to a partition are thereafter subject to the same rule in regard to the purchase and use of an outstanding title as they were before the partition. Venable v. Beauchamp, 28 D. 74.

A grantee of one of the parties to a deed of partition which was made under his direction, and at a time when he had an executory contract with his grantor for the purchase of his share of the land when partitioned, is, in equity, regarded as the real tenant in common with the other owner, and although not bound by the express covenants of the deed of partition, nor a formal party thereto, is, nevertheless, a party to the partition itself, and is as fully bound, in equity, by the deed, so far as it is merely a deed of partition, as if he executed it as a party. Id.

Such grantee is bound by the implied warranty in the deed of partition, which estops him from evicting the other tenant by adverse title. Id.

There is no implied warranty in a partition deed between tenants in common under a will, though there is, it seems, an implied special warranty annexed to every partition between coparceners. Weiser v. Weiser, 30 D. 313.

An express special warranty limits an implied general warranty in a deed, except, perhaps, where the implied warranty is a necessary consequence of tenure, which is not the case in a partition deed. Id.

In partition of real estate between co-tenants there is an implied warranty that in case of an eviction from any portion, by paramount title, the party evicted shall have a right of contribution against the other for the loss sustained; and this remedy exists against alienees, though not in their favor. Sawyers v. Oator, 47 D. 608.

The forum in an action on implied warranty in partition is a court of chancery, which is peculiarly adapted to give relief, either by setting aside the partition or by contribution. Id.

A right to contribution of co-tenants for eviction from partitioned estate accrues only when eviction takes place, and then the statute of limitations begins to run. Id.

Conveyances between tenants in common must contain words of perpetuity to pass a fee, as one tenant in common cannot convey to another in any other way, or by a conveyance whose operation is different from those used by feoffers between whom no such relationship exists; and if no words of perpetuity are used, an estate for life merely passes. Rector v. Waugh, 57 D. 251.

On conveyance between co-tenants with warranty, the warranty continues during the life of the grantee only if the deed contained no word of perpetuity; and if the title of the co-tenants proves to be bad, and subsequent to the conveyance the co-tenants making it obtain title to the land, this title will not, by virtue of the warranty, inure to the benefit of the grantee's heirs. Id.

The common law implied no warranty when partition was made between joint tenants and tenants in common. Id.

Partition of slaves by husband of remaindermen during life of life tenant, with the consent of the latter, will be presumed to be a partition of the life estate alone in the slaves, not of the life estate and remainder, since they could not completely divide the remainder until the death of the life tenant, owing to the existence of the wives' equities until that event. Pool v. Morris, 74 D. 68.

5. Conclusiveness and effect.—A partition deed in which all the heirs join constitutes as valid a division as one made by the order of the probate judge, provided all the grantors are of age, and the estate is in a condition to be legally divided. Hubbard v. Ricart, 23 D. 193.

Every partition as well as every exchange implies not only a warranty at the election of the party, but a condition entire, the breach of which gives an entry into the whole; with this difference, however, that a voucher to warranty of the part evicted affirms the partition by the acceptance of a compensation, while an entry for the condition broken defeats it. Feather v. Strohecker, 24 D. 342.

A minor to whom a tract of land has been devised is not bound by a partition made by other devisees of the same testator of land devised to them, and of his land, by which a portion of both tracts is set off to him, although upon attaining majority he exercised acts of ownership over the part so set off to him. Hemmick v. High, 27 D. 295.

Partition made by tenants of estates for Life is not binding on those entitled to estates in remainder. Boot v. Mix, 31 D. 235.

Mere coverture of one of the parties to an agreement for partition of real estate is not sufficient to invalidate it, where such agreement was made in the presence of her husband, assented to by him, consummated by an actual division, and possession taken and held according to it for fourteen years. Hardy v. Summers, 32 D. 167.

A parol partition carried into effect by possession in accordance therewith is binding between tenants in common whose titles are distinct. Ryeres v. Wheeler, 37 D. 243.

If A and B execute deeds of partition, and A is partially evicted by C, the partition fails as to C, and he holds in common with A and B; but purchasers from B may, in equity, compel C to accept his share from the land allotted to A, if sufficient in amount. Dawson v. Lawrence, 42 D. 210.

A parol agreement for partition of lands acquired by descent is good, if carried into effect; and if fair and equal, is binding upon all the parties thereto, even upon those who are femes covert, if their husbands join. And therefore, evidence tending to show that such an agreement was carried into execution is admissible in an action brought by one party to such partition against another party thereto, to recover an undivided part of the property alleged to have been so partitioned. Calhoun v. Hays, 42 D. 275.

Release by parties to alleged partition, executed to defendants in an action of ejectment brought against the latter by other parties to such partition, is admissible to show that such partition was carried into effect, although the parties who executed the release are not parties to the action. And it is also admissible as secondary evidence of the contents of another release, alleged to have been of the same tenor, and to have been executed by the plaintiffs, but to have been since lost. Id.

Where two tenants in common have partitioned their land by parol, and each has taken possession of his allotment, one of the co-tenants may, by a bill in chancery, compel a conveyance of the legal title, according to the terms of the partition; because, while the legal title might not be considered as having passed, unless after a possession sufficiently long to justify the presumption of a deed, yet such parol partition followed by a several possession would leave each co-tenant seized of the legal title of one half of his allotment, and the equitable title to the other half. Tomlin v. Hilyard, 92 D. 118.

Several occupation, in accordance with parol partition between tenants in common, is not assent by one tenant to a conveyance by his co-tenant, by metes and bounds, of the portion of the land thus assigned to the latter as his share; although if continued for twenty years, and under such circumstances as to make it adverse, it would establish the title. Ballou v. Hale, 93 D. 438.

Hills containing iron ore were held in common by two persons and the minor heirs of another former owner, a right to take ore therefrom for one furnace, existing in another person, his heirs and assigns. These owners were at the same time tenants in common of certain forges and furnaces, to which the ore-hills were appurtenant, from which ore was obtained for the manufacture of iron at the forges and furnaces. In 1786, the two owners and the guardians of the minor heirs of the other entered into a written agreement that amicable actions for partition of said furnaces, forges, and ore-hills be entered, and appointing certain persons to make the partition. The persons appointed to make partition reported that the agreement could not be carried out without great injustice. Afterwards, in 1787, the same parties entered into another agreement in writing, in which they designated certain persons to make partition of the forges and furnaces, and other real estate held by them in common, but providing that the ore-hills "shall remain together and undivided as a tenancy in common," one of the parties to be entitled to three sixths parts thereof, another to one sixth, and the said minors to the remaining two sixths parts thereof, and declaring that neither of the parties, their agents or workmen, should interfere with or interrupt either of the other parties at any mine-hole by them opened and occupied for the purpose of raising iron ore. The entry of amicable actions of partition to carry out the agreement was provided for, and they were entered. The persons appointed made report allotting the furnaces and forges, and reporting that a certain tract of land and said ore-hills do still remain undivided, to be held by the parties as tenants in common, according to their respective shares, and the covenants and articles of said agreements. The court, in 1787, confirmed this report, and the parties entered on the purparts respectively assigned to them, and they and those claiming under them have since held the same, the right reserved to ore for one furnace being also exercised at the time of the institution of this action. An action of partition to divide the ore-hills was brought in 1851, and the court held, — 1. That the partition thus made in 1787, by the agreement of the parties in interest, with the sanction of the court having jurisdiction, is binding on the successors in the title, not only because of the judgment of a court in partition under which they claim, but because the covenants in the agreement of 1787 were real and ran with the land, though the words "heirs and assigns" were not used; 2. That the agreement of 1787, and the judicial proceedings had pursuant to it, constitute an insuperable bar to this action;

3. The keeping of the mine-hills in common was the consideration for submitting to the partition of the rest of the estate, and the partition of the mine-hills in this action would destroy the foundation on which the former partition rests, and this cannot be permitted without a redivision of the whole of the estate; 4. While the laws of Pennsylvania now provide for the partition of any mineral lands held in common, whatever the peculiarities of their structure, neither the letter nor the policy of those laws demands the partition of an estate in circumstances such as attend these hills of ore. Coleman v. Coleman, 57 D. 641.

II. BY SUIT.

6. Jurisdictional questions. — 1. In general. — A proceeding for partition is analogous to a proceeding in rem. Pillsbury v. Dugan, 34 D. 427.

A county court has no power to divide real estate of a decedent, except in cases where the parties entitled cannot agree upon a division thereof. Hardy v. Summers, 32 D. 167.

A proceeding for partition is a special proceeding whose course and effect are prescribed by the statute, and although, after jurisdiction has attached, errors in the course of the cause cannot be collaterally shown to impeach the judgment therein, yet so far as the rights of an infant defendant are involved, the court has no jurisdiction except over the matter of partition, and has no power to render a decree divesting the infant's estate, not for the purpose of partition, but upon an adverse claim in the plaintiff, in a suit brought against such infant merely for partition. Waterman v. Lawrence, 79 D. 212.

The court has no jurisdiction to order partition of lands between heirs of a father, where the petition alleges that one heir is alive and that the mother is pregnant by the father. Gillespie v. Nabors, 31 R. 20.

Partition cannot be had of an estate in remainder. Wood v. Sugg, 49 R. 639.

2. Concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity. — Jurisdiction in making partition between tenants in common is concurrent at law and in equity. Beeler v. Bullitt, 13 D. 161.

Equity does not ordinarily possess concurrent jurisdiction with law, in cases of partition, in Georgia. If the remedy at law is full and complete, the party must resort to that forum. Rutherford v. Jones, 60 D. 655.

Partition is one of the subject-matters of concurrent jurisdiction of equity in England, and in such cases our courts are reluctant to oust the jurisdiction of equity. Id.

3. Jurisdiction of equity in partition is undoubted, and in many cases is indispensable. Howey v. Goings, 54 D. 427.

Jurisdiction of chancery is unquestionable in partition cases, where, in order to perfect the partition, it will be necessary to decree pecuniary compensation. Rutherford v. Jones, 60 D. 655.

Partition in equity is a matter of right, and not of discretion, in all cases where the complainant is entitled to partition at law, and can show a clear legal title. Wiseley v. Findlay, 15 D. 712.

Courts of equity will assume jurisdiction in cases of partition, and if in the exercise of that jurisdiction it becomes necessary to put a construction upon a devise in order to determine the case, the court will do so. Simmons v. Hendricks, 55 D. 439.

A party owning an undivided half-interest in land, but occupying the whole tract, and receiving all the rents and profits, cannot be compelled, in a suit in equity by a party owning half the property in severalty, to convey to the latter an undivided half of the premises, nor such portion thereof as he is entitled to possess in severalty; nor can the owner of the undivided half be coerced in equity to sue for partition and to account for the rents and profits, at least not by a court not possessing general equity powers, and among whose special powers this is not included. Soutter v. Atwood, 56 D. 647.

If it appears from the bill for partition that the owner of an undivided quarter of the property sought to be partitioned is deceased, and leaves him surviving a widow, it is a circumstance tending to induce the chancellor to retain the bill, as the widow may have a claim for dower which will require an adjustment in the course of the proceeding which could not be afforded by a court of law. Rutherford v. Jones, 60 D. 655.

A legislative act empowering a court of equity to decree partition of real property in a particular case is constitutional and valid in Maryland. Davis v. Helbig, 92 D. 646.

Two tenants in common, one of whom gave a mortgage of his undivided half for its purchase price, divided the common property by metes and bounds, executing mutual deeds. The owner of the unmortgaged half conveyed his share in severalty to the plaintiff, and also executed to him a deed of an undivided half of the whole tract. The mortgage of the undivided half was foreclosed, and under the foreclosure the defendant claimed. Helbig, the plaintiff became owner of one half by metes and bounds. The defendant is owner of an undivided half-interest. The plaintiff failed to secure a title sufficient to enable him to dispossess the defendant, who occupies the whole tract. The defendant is guilty of no fraud, and the court has no jurisdiction on that ground to compel them to partition the property and account for the rents and profits. Soutter v. Atwood, 56 D. 647.

4. — of probate courts, generally. — The authority conferred by statute upon the probate court to make partition of the real estate of a decedent whose estate is in course or settlement is merely incidental to the general probate jurisdiction over the estate; and if the grant of administration is void for want of jurisdiction, an order of partition is likewise void. Sigourney v. Sibley, 32 D. 248.

A court of probate having no jurisdiction over an estate, but in which a special administrator has been appointed by a decree appealed from, and who acts by force of the statute during the appeal, is not the court of probate in which "the estate is settled, or in the course of settlement," within the meaning of the statute. Id.

A probate court may partition real estate among heirs and devisees under the Maine statute, and may set off to a devisee of net profits his portion of the land devised. Earl v. Rowe, 56 D. 714.

The power of the probate court to partition decedent's realty among heirs and devisees, under that statute, is not limited to any particular time or number of years after the estate is settled. Id.

Jurisdiction of the probate court to partition decedent's realty is not restricted, under that statute, because the share or proportion may be uncertain, depending upon the construction or effect of any devise, unless it shall appear to the judge to be uncertain. Id.

Where a devise in trust for the benefit of a person non est juris is deprived of its beneficial character by circumstances or the inability of the courts to effectuate the trust in accordance with the testator's intent, the legislature may enact a law authorizing the probate court to make partition or sale of the lands for the benefit of the beneficiary, upon his petition setting forth the necessity of such a course, and giving such court, for that special purpose, the jurisdiction of the court of chancery; and although the probate court could not decree a sale in direct violation of the terms of the will, yet when it has brought all the interested parties before the court, the decree of such sale cannot be collaterally attacked for that reason, but the remedy is by appeal. The jurisdiction of the court of probate, however, is restricted to the exact powers conferred by the statute, and where that court neglected to order a conveyance under a sale in pursuance of its decree, and more than twelve years elapsed, and the purchaser conveyed to third persons, and conflicting claims to the purchase-money arose, — held, that the subpurchaser could come into the court of chancery to compel a conveyance and determine such conflicting rights. Todd v. Flournoy, 28 R. 753.

5. — of the orphans' court. — The orphans' court has not jurisdiction to decree a partition between the children and their father's co-tenant, and then between the children themselves. Feather v. Strohoecker, 24 D. 342.

An orphans' court has jurisdiction to decree partition of decedent's realty, notwithstanding a lapse of twenty-six years since his death, if there has been no adverse possession. Merklein v. Trapnell, 75 D. 634.

It is no objection to a decree of partition of decedent's realty that the heirs were not in the actual possession of the premises at the time of partition awarded, if the possession was vacant in fact; for in such case the possession is deemed to be in the heirs. Id.

The jurisdiction of the orphans' court in partition is limited by statute to the partition of a single estate. Snyder's Appeal, 78 D. 372.

Such jurisdiction operates on the title of decedent only, and not upon that of the heirs. It is because it is the land of a decedent, and not because it is the land of heirs, that this court is empowered to make partition. Id.

The orphans' court has no jurisdiction to decree partition, in one proceeding, of two estates held in common by the same parties, and as the heirs of two different persons. Id.

Jurisdiction of orphans' court over settlement of decedent's estate is not to be ousted or diminished by partition between the heirs. Dresher v. Allentown Water Co., 91 D. 150.

7. Jurisdiction where title is disputed.* — Partition is not a proper action to try title to land. Manners v. Manners, 35 D. 512; Brock v. Eastman, 67 D. 733. Contra, see Brownell v. Bradley, 42 D. 498.

In a partition suit the title is not meddled with, but the plaintiff must show a clear legal title; hence, if he prays a settlement of boundary and a decree for the delivery of land in the defendant's possession, it is not a proper case for partition in equity. Stuart v. Coalter, 15 D. 731.

Partition and adjustment of boundaries cannot be prayed in the same suit, where the defendants against whom the latter relief is sought are merely coterminous land-owners, not affected by the equity as to partition. Id.

Where parties bring partition before they have established their title to the premises to be divided, the court of equity in which the action is brought will retain the suit until a determination of the rights of the parties in an action at law. Manners v. Manners, 35 D. 512. S. P., Hovey v. Goings, 54 D. 427; Campbell v. Lowe, 66 D. 339; Hassam v. Day, 77 D. 684.

Equity will not proceed with partition when the defendant denies the legal title of the plaintiff, or claims a sole and adverse possession, until the plaintiff has re-established the unity of his possession with the defendant as a tenant in common. Ramsay v. Bell, 42 D. 163.

* Raising question of title to land in partition. see note, 30 D. 432.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A bill for partition will be retained while complainant tries legal title; but this rule applies only when the complainant states a case in his bill entitling him to the aid of the court, and does not apply where the bill denies the defendant's title, alleges that if he has any he is a tenant in common, and admits that defendant has for many years been in sole possession of the premises. Ib.

Where a party petitions, under the intestate act, for an inquest, his allegation of title as a tenant in common, if disputed, must be first established by ejectment in the common pleas; but if it be admitted, the decree founded on it must necessarily be conclusive. Herr v. Herr, 47 D. 416.

Possession of land by co-tenants is necessary before partition will be decreed by a court of equity. Weeks v. Weeks, 47 D. 358.

In partition of slaves, equity may try title as well as decree partition, if the tenants in common have possession among themselves. Ib.

To enable defendants in an equitable proceeding, such as a suit for partition, to defeat plaintiffs' title on ground of resulting trust, or equitable title in third person, it seems necessary for them to show such title to be in themselves, or that they have some valid defense to urge against it; in which latter case the holder of the title must be made a party to the suit before the aid of equity can be invoked. Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99.

In a suit for partition, defendant cannot impeach plaintiff's title for fraud if his own title is tainted with same fraud. Thus where A sued B for partition of land, an undivided one half of which had been conveyed by B's ancestor to A's ancestor, and B's defense was, that the purchase-money was paid by C, who was empresario of the colony, and that the conveyance was taken to the ancestor of A to avoid the law which forbade said empresario to take or receive any portion of said lands, and that the same was fraudulent and void, B could not impeach the title on the ground of fraud, in which, if it had been made to appear, his ancestor was equally implicated with his vendee. Ib.

When in a petition for partition, filed in a court of law, the defendant pleads sole seisin in himself, the court may proceed and try the issue thus arising. It is only when the petition is filed in a court of equity that the action of ejectment becomes necessary. Purvis v. Wilson, 69 D. 773.

Equity will not decree partition where the alleged titles of the parties are not clear, and much less set aside a prior partition, made in behalf of a party who has a clear title, at the instance of another party claiming a doubtful and controverted title. Hassam v. Day, 77 D. 684.

Formerly, if the legal title was disputed, chancery would send plaintiff to a court of law to have it established before decreeing a partition. But in Indiana, the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is now abolished by the code which governs actions for partition, and under the code all questions of title, and perhaps of possession, may be settled in a suit for partition. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 79 D. 448.

Proceedings in partition do not decide title or create any new title; and parties to such proceedings, made such by publication, and without actual notice, are not thereby estopped from setting up their legal title. McBain v. McBain, 86 D. 478.

8. Who may sue.*—Actual corporeal seisin is not necessary to enable a tenant in common to maintain a suit for partition; constructive seisin is sufficient, unless there is proof of an ouster. Barnard v. Pope, 7 D. 225.

Judgment against a tenant in common does not prevent partition; but such tenant, or any of the others, may sue for partition, and have the respective shares set out in severalty. Bavington v. Clarke, 21 D. 432.

Judgment, in such a case, binds only the part afterwards set out to the judgment debtor. Ib.

Partition without suit, in such a case, if fair, is valid. Ib.

The mortgagor's possession is not a disseisin which will bar the mortgagee's right to file a petition for a partition. Colton v. Smith, 22 D. 375.

A premature bill for partition was retained, with leave to apply to the court when the parties should become entitled thereto. Cole v. Oregon, 26 D. 208.

A tenant in common is entitled to a partition, however inconvenient or injurious it may be to make it. Hanson v. Willard, 28 D. 162; Higginbottom v. Short, 57 D. 198; Campbell v. Lowe, 66 D. 339.

Partition by metes and bounds, however, is not to be made in all cases. Hanson v. Willard, 28 D. 162.

Coparceners had a right to partition at common law; such right was given to joint tenants and tenants in common by statute. Purvis v. Wilson, 69 D. 773.

The executor and devisees of a deceased tenant in common, not asking for partition among themselves, may jointly file a bill in chancery to have their interests in the land set off from that of the co-tenant. Page v. Webster, 77 D. 446.

The distinction between joint tenancy, tenancy in common, and estate in coparcenary has been abolished in Texas, and the tenants are there treated all alike, simply as "part owners," and are all alike entitled to compulsory partition, and the rights of all are preserved upon any previous warranty of the title under which the tenants hold. Ross v. Armstrong, 78 D. 574.

* See monographic note on who may compel partition, 67 D. 708-712.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume 1.

The word "holding," as used in the Indiana statute concerning partition of lands, does not require actual occupancy, but is equivalent to owning or having title to lands, etc.: See 2 R. S., p. 329, sec. 1. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 79 D. 448.

One may have partition without having possession, or may have it even against an adverse claimant. Id.

Any person, not made a party, may appear and set up title in himself to premises sought to be partitioned, and where such title is set up, and found against such person, there seems to be no good reason why partition should not be made among those to whom the land belongs, although such person may have been in possession. Id.

Under the California practice, actions should be brought in the name of the real party in interest, and this applies to actions for partition; and a holder under a conveyance by one tenant in common of a specific parcel of the common lands, as well as the co-tenants of his grantor, should be made a party to such action. Gates v. Salmon, 95 D. 139.

A lessee of lands, the reversion in fee of which is in tenants in common, may, upon purchasing a part of the reversion, demand a partition even though it will necessarily result in a sale of the premises. Hill v. Reno, 14 R. 222.

The owner of land conveyed an undivided share of it by warranty deed which contained, after the description and before the habendum, this clause: "To remain in common and undivided." Held, that the clause was neither a condition nor a covenant, and that the vendor was not estopped to sue his grantees for partition. Spaulding v. Woodward, 16 R. 392.

9. Who may not. — Devisees cannot have partition of the present interest in the land devised, where it is vested in the executors in trust to pay them the rents and profits. Striker v. Mott, 22 D. 646.

Devisees cannot have partition of a future contingent estate in land which it is not certain will belong to them on the termination of the particular estate vested in the executors. Id.

A tenant in common of a reversion cannot apply for partition without the concurrence of the owners of the present estate. Id.

Heirs are not entitled to partition among themselves while the lien of the administrator for the payment of the intestate's debts remains upon the land; nor can they, until the lien is satisfied, convey the land so as to entitle their grantees to immediate possession. Hubbard v. Ricart, 23 D. 198.

One holding under a deed of an undivided half of a certain farm, in which deed the grantor reserves a life estate, cannot, during the life of the latter, compel partition against a grantee of the other undivided half of said farm, as a right of immediate possession is necessary to the maintenance of this proceeding. Nichols v. Nichols, 67 D. 699.

One who causes execution to be levied upon an undivided portion of a piece of property of which the owner is in the possession, claiming adversely to any title under the levy, cannot maintain partition, as, if the levy was valid, it could only give a right of entry, which is not sufficient to maintain a petition for partition. Brock v. Eastman, 67 D. 733.

Partition proceedings cannot be maintained, in Massachusetts, by a judgment creditor who levies his execution on real estate of the debtor, held in common with others, before the debtor's right of redemption has expired. Pelphs v. Palmer, 77 D. 378.

Partition will not be made of a reversionary interest in land covered by a license held by one of the tenants in common. Baldwin v. Aldrich, 80 D. 695.

A tenant for life cannot ask partition where he is in lawful possession, and has the permanency of the rents and profits of the entire estate. Johnson v. Johnson, 83 D. 676.

The Massachusetts statute provides that a petition for partition shall not be maintained by one who has only an estate in remainder or reversion, and of course his grantee cannot ask it. Id.

Where land is jointly held by one and his wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them, a conveyance to the husband, by the children, during the life of the wife, of an undivided share in the remainder, will not merge his life estate, or give him such a title as will enable him to maintain a petition for partition. Id.

10. What premises may be partitioned. — Partition may be had of a mill and mill privilege. Hanson v. Willard, 28 D. 162.

A saw-mill, mill-yard, and mill-pond are not partible, and therefore are not proper subjects for partition. Brown v. Turner, 15 D. 696.

Partition cannot be had in one suit of several tracts, by a tenant in common of all, where the ownership therein other than his is vested in persons who have, between themselves, no common interest in the separate tracts; therefore, where a tenant in common, owner of one third of an estate, brought suit to obtain partition, and it appeared that the other two-thirds interest had come to several, each of whom was owner of such interest in separate and distinct parts of the estate, his suit was dismissed. Matter of Prentiss, 30 D. 203.

Partition cannot be had of lands purchased with partnership funds and held as partnership assets, prior to a settlement of the partnership accounts. Baird v. Baird, 31 D. 399.

Courts of chancery cannot decree partition of personal chattels held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common. Gudgell v. Mead, 40 D. 120.

The whole tract of real estate held in common must be partitioned at one time, where partition of the same is sought to be enforced by legal process. Bigelow v. Littlefield, 83 D. 484.

One tenant in common cannot enforce partition of part only of the common estate. Ib.

A conveyance by one tenant in common of his interest in a part only of lands held by him in common does not authorize a co-tenant to enforce partition of such part against the grantee, leaving the residue of the estate unpartitioned. Ib.

It is always indispensable that the subject of every compulsory partition should be held in co-tenancy. Therefore, premises belonging in severalty to two, and no portion of them belonging jointly to both, are not subject to partition, either in equity or under the statute. McConnel v. Kibbe, 92 D. 93.

Partition of land, valuable chiefly as an acre-bed, refused, because the court could not ascertain the value of the different parts, and because the parties could obtain a less hazardous and more adequate remedy in chancery. Conant v. Smith, 15 D. 669.

11. Proper parties defendant. — In a partition suit, all persons interested are necessary parties. Batterton v. Chilca, 54 D. 539; Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99; De Uprey v. De Uprey, 87 D. 81.

Judgment of partition in a suit by a tenant against his co-tenant who has mortgaged his interest is not binding on the mortgagee not party to the suit. Colton v. Smith, 22 D. 375. Compare Whitton v. Whitton, 75 D. 163.

A reversioner must be a party when the complainant is an owner of an undivided interest in the present estate, and also in the reversion, or when some of the other reversioners have also an undivided present estate in fee. Striker v. Mott, 22 D. 646.

Vendees of one who, upon taking under a will, was compelled to relinquish the land which he had sold as his own, but which the testator had devised to others, will not be affected by any partition among the devisees to which they, the vendees, were not parties. Gore v. Stevens, 25 D. 141.

The husband need not be joined in a proceeding for partition of his wife's land in order to bind her interest. Pillsbury v. Dugan, 34 D. 427.

A co-tenant against whom partition is demanded is not strictly a party to the proceeding. Ib.

A petition for partition of several tracts against several defendants, all of whom are not interested in all the tracts, is bad for misjoinder, and will be dismissed on motion of one of the defendants. Brownell v. Bradley, 42 D. 498.

Infants may be made parties under the Missouri statute. Thornton v. Thornton, 72 D. 266.

If the owner of an undivided interest in real estate devise his interest in part of the land to one and in another part to another, both devisees are proper parties to a bill for partition. Whitton v. Whitton, 75 D. 163.

Where the wife claims a homestead right or an interest in the premises, she is not only a proper but a necessary party to the proceedings. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 87 D. 81.

12. Matters of defense. — The real owners of land sought to be partitioned may come in and resist the demandant's claim for partition, although he may have misdescribed them in his petition. Harman v. Kelley, 45 D. 552.

13. Adverse possession as a defense. — Evidence of an adverse possessory title to part of the premises sought to be partitioned is admissible to defeat the partition. Harman v. Kelley, 45 D. 552.

If one or more of many tenants in common be barred by the statute of limitations, and others be within the saving of the statute, it shall not operate against those who are within the saving of the statute to bar them; nor shall the partition given by those within the saving of the statute prevent the operation of the bar as to those without the saving of the statute; each one shall recover or be barred, as to his aliquot share or portion of the land, as he may be within or without the saving of the statute. Wade v. Johnson, 42 D. 422.

Tenants in common barred by statute of limitations as to part of the property cannot remove the bar as to such part by allotting it in partition to one of their number who is within the saving of the statute, and therefore not barred. Ib.

A bill in chancery lies for partition, notwithstanding adverse possession, unless it has been continued sufficiently long to bar a recovery under the statute of limitations. Howey v. Goings, 54 D. 427.

The defense of limitation is competent to show an adverse claim and holding as against any right or title in plaintiff. Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99.

Sole seisin in respondent may be established by a possession commenced twenty years before the trial, although less than twenty years before the commencement of the suit. Brackett v. Persons Unknown, 87 D. 548.

14. Process, notice, etc. — Partition among coparceners, made under an order of a county court, without legal notice to all interested, is invalid. Newby v. Perkins, 25 D. 160.

The statute requiring that before a partition of land can be had among heirs, written notice thereof must be given to all persons interested therein, and that the service of such notice shall be proved by affidavit, must be strictly pursued, and the sheriff's return, that he has "executed" such notice, cannot be substituted for such affidavit. Id.

Notice must be given, in case of partition among heirs and devisees, to all who do not join in the petition, or they will not be bound by the acts of the court. Vick v. Mayor etc. of Vicksburg, 31 D. 167.

A writ of partition will be granted, whether the subject-matter is susceptible of division or not. Steedman v. Weeks, 49 D. 660.

Actual partition by sale under judgment of partition may, under New York statutes (see 3 R. S., 5th ed., 602-620), bar future contingent interests of persons not in case without publication of notice to bring in unknown parties, and even where the claim of such future owners is as purchasers by grant or devise, not under any party to the suit. So held where the question was whether a purchaser at such sale should be required to take title. Mead v. Mitchell, 72 D. 455.

A grantee of one of the heirs, whose deed has not been recorded, is not entitled to notice of partition proceedings; nor is the record of a mortgage from the grantee to his grantor constructive notice of title in such grantee. Merklein v. Trappell, 75 D. 634.

A summons addressed "to the above-named defendants" is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Minnesota statute, where the names of the defendants are stated in the title of the case in the summons, and the complaint alleges that the defendants named are the only persons, except the plaintiffs, having or claiming any interest in the property. Martin v. Parker, 100 D. 188.

15. Petition.—In a petition for partition of lands, it need not be averred that the land lies in the county where suit is brought, if such suit is brought in a court of general and unlimited jurisdiction, as in a circuit court of Indiana. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 79 D. 448.

An objection to the petition on account of indefinite description of land sought to be partitioned cannot be taken by demurrer. Such uncertain description may, however, be obviated by a motion to require the pleading to be made definite and certain by amendment. Id.

Demandant in partition must set forth the ownership, and the state of the title, according to the truth, so that every person interested as owner of the land of which partition is demanded may have an opportunity to be heard. Harman v. Kelley, 45 D. 552.

16. Bill.—A bill in equity for partition must state the complainant's own title, and the title of the defendant, whereby it shall appear that they do claim to hold the land as co-tenants. Ramsay v. Bell, 42 D. 163.

Plaintiff need not set forth his title to the land in full. Defendant may, if necessary, in his plea or answer, deny his title to the whole or any part of the land, or he may deny the co-tenancy, in which case a preliminary trial would have to be had. Rutherford v. Jones, 60 D. 655.

A bill for partition of lands held in common is not multifarious, where it sets forth that defendant purchased the lands at a sale for taxes; that such sale is void; and prays discovery with respect thereto, and that the same be declared void. Page v. Webster, 77 D. 446.

A bill by executor and devisees, who ask no partition as between themselves, contains a sufficient statement of the respective interests of complainants where it sets forth that the undivided interest was devised to the latter in common, with the power, nevertheless, in the executor to sell and dispose of the same. Id.

An allegation as to "unknown owners" is sufficient if in the following words: "That such portions of said tract as do not belong to defendants and to your orators belong to unknown owners." Nash v. Church, 78 D. 678.

17. Complaint.—A complaint is good which contains only general allegations that the premises cannot be divided by metes and bounds without prejudice, and does not state the facts showing why such partition cannot be made. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 87 D. 81.

A complaint is good which is silent as to the particular mode of partition sought. Id.

Whether partition can or cannot be made by metes and bounds is the only necessary averment in a complaint for partition, as that is purely a question of fact and the ultimate fact to be found. The constituent facts, or those which lie behind, are probative, and need not be averred. Id.

Where the complaint alleges that the parties are co-tenants, the findings of the court must correspond with the allegations of the complaint only so far as to show that the parties hold and are in possession of the land as joint tenants or as tenants in common, and that one or more of them has an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years. Partition may be had, although either of the parties may have set forth his interests incorrectly. Id.

An allegation in the complaint, that one of the defendants had cut and converted to his own use a large amount of timber growing on the land, may be stricken out on motion, for the reason that it was directed against one only of the defendants. Oram v. Waggoner, 89 D. 493.

18. Plea or answer.—A plea that the respondent held an unexpired lease of the petitioner's interest for a term of years is not a sufficient answer. Hunt v. Hamilton, 20 D. 575.

A plea that the respondents, at the time of filing their plea, were not tenants in common with the petitioner is insufficient. Ib.

A plea that the premises are not partible is no sufficient defense to a petition which prays not only for partition, but that if the premises are not partible, that they may be assigned or sold pursuant to statute. Baldwin v. Aldrich, 80 D. 695.

Where a party sued in partition disclaims, in his answer, all interest in the land, except a homestead interest held by himself and wife, such disclaimer is not sufficient to entitle him to a dismissal of the action. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 87 D. 81.

Defendant cannot defeat the action, nor is he entitled to have it dismissed, by the mere force and effect of his answer, no matter what it contains. Ib.

Any question affecting the right of the plaintiff, or the rights of each and all of the parties in the land, may be put in issue, tried, and determined in the action. Ib.

19. Rules of evidence. — Demandant, to maintain his suit, must prove joint ownership of all the tenants, in the whole of the premises of which partition is sought. Harman v. Kelley, 45 D. 552.

Evidence that a certain deed under which petitioner claims is void for want of proper delivery is admissible for the purpose of defeating his title and right to maintain the proceeding. Nichols v. Nichols, 67 D. 699.

20. Appointment and powers of commissioners, or masters. — Where commissioners have been appointed to make partition between co-tenants, and they divide the property, but neglect to report to the court, and have the partition confirmed, and the co-tenants take possession of their allotted shares, and make improvements in pursuance of the partition, the title of each is complete, and it is error to instruct the jury that such possession must continue for the full period of the statute of limitations. Welch v. Thompson, 99 D. 470.

A party dissatisfied with the appraisal by commissioners, in partition of land to be assigned to another, may bring the property to a sale by securing and making a bid, offering a material advance in price over such appraised value. Moore v. Williamson, 73 D. 93.

21. Their report, and proceedings thereon. — Where the rights of infants appear upon the face of the master's report as to title, the court will correct an error into which the master has fallen as to the extent of their interests in the premises partitioned, although no formal exception has been pleaded to the report by their guardian ad litem. Safford v. Safford, 32 D. 633.

The filing of the petition and appointment of commissioners under the act of descents, is an ex parte proceeding, and the proceeding of the county court, in confirming or rejecting their return, is summary; and neither law nor custom requires the proofs exhibited by the parties to be reduced to writing, or in any way introduced into the record of the proceedings, so that an appeal to the court of last resort, even if permitted, would not avail the appellant. Hardy v. Summers, 32 D. 167.

The report of commissioners may be approved or disapproved by the court. Riggs v. Dickinson, 35 D. 113.

Inequality in value is a good ground for disapproving and setting aside the report of commissioners. Ib.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the partition reported by commissioners is unequal and ought to be disapproved. Ib.

Commissioners, in partitioning the estate of a decedent, are presumed to have appreciated advantages and disadvantages accruing from the fact that a dike upon one part of the property caused water, in time of flood, to overflow another part, and the dike may be maintained by the heir to whom the land is allotted, and by those claiming under him. Burwell v. Hobeon, 65 D. 247.

Where a chattel has, with assent of all concerned, been allotted to a party, who takes possession of it, a subsequent confirmation of the return of the commissioners has relation to the time of actual allotment completed, so as from that time to ratify in that party a title to the chattel which he then acquired. Whether before confirmation his title is ever more than inchoate, quere. Jackson v. Jennings, 94 D. 160.

Where a number of slaves have been partitioned among several heirs, and where, pending confirmation, the slaves are held by the administrator, and a slave allotted to one of the heirs dies, the loss should fall proportionately upon all the heirs, and a confirmation of the partition as originally made is erroneous. The measure of equalizing the allotment would be interest on the value of the slave as reported up to the time of the emancipation of all slaves, which in the mean time had occurred. Ib.

22. Rendition and effect of judgment or decree.* — A decree in partition binds a co-tenant who is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, if notice be given him of the pendency of the proceeding. Pillsbury v. Dugan, 34 D. 427.

The judgment is neither void nor voidable from the fact that it includes a parcel of land to which the tenants in common had no title. Austin v. Charlestown Female Seminary, 41 D. 497.

Although partition made under a decree by commissioners appointed for that purpose is invalid, still the decree without partition vests in the party named therein the exclusive title in the land set apart and conveyed to him by it, and constitutes him a tenant in common with the original grantee, and as such he has sufficient title to enable him to maintain an action of trespass to try title against a stranger. Grassmeyer v. Beeson, 70 D. 309.

* Effect of judgment in partition, see note, 40 D. 640-642.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The office of a decree in partition in the orphans' court is not to transfer title of lands from the decedent to his heirs, but merely to divide what descends to the heirs. Dresher v. Allentown Water Co., 91 D. 150.

The decree does not operate upon creditors of decedent, for they are not parties to the proceeding, but only upon the heirs. Ib.

The decree affects merely rights of parties to the proceeding, and establishes no more than that he to whom the land has been adjudged shall hold it in severalty as against his co-heirs. Ib.

A decree directing a sale of the property, instead of setting it off to one of the co-tenants upon his paying to the other the value of his interest, is proper. Horton v. Maffit, 100 D. 222.

23. Conclusiveness of judgment or decree.—Judgment of partition is a bar to a subsequent petition for a partition, where the parties and the questions put in issue are necessarily the same. Colton v. Smith, 22 D. 375.

A decree of partition cannot be collaterally impeached by a stranger. Grassmeyer v. Beeson, 70 D. 309.

Where a partition of real estate by a probate court has been acquiesced in by the heirs for twenty years, the proceedings of the court will be presumed to have been regular, and be held conclusive. Campbell v. Wallace, 37 D. 219.

A decree of partition by the orphans' court is as conclusive as a judgment of partition by a court of law. Herr v. Herr, 47 D. 416.

A decree of the orphans' court in partition of a decedent's realty awarding the land to one of the heirs is conclusive as to the title, and cannot be collaterally impeached, if the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and there be no fraud. Merklein v. Trapnell, 75 D. 634.

In a suit for partition, the finding and determination of a court of general jurisdiction, as to the existence and interests of parties unknown, as well as to the sufficiency of an affidavit authorizing the publication of notice under the statute, is binding in all collateral attacks upon the judgment, especially when the allegations of the complaint and the statement of facts in the affidavit are in substantial conformity with the statutory requirement. Nash v. Church, 78 D. 678.

An unknown owner, proceeded against by advertisement, in an action of partition, is bound by judgment therein, though in possession of the premises, claiming in severalty by paramount title, not a party by name, and without actual notice, where the statute makes the judgment binding and conclusive on unknown owners who have been served by publication. Ib.

Judgment in partition will bind one who claims title, unless he previously comes in and sets up his claim, if he has any. To demur is insufficient. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 79 D. 448.

The whole scope and tenor of the California statute relating to partition of lands show that the intention was to make the one judgment of partition final and conclusive on all persons interested in the property, or any part of it, of whom the court could acquire jurisdiction. Such actions, though regulated to a great extent by the statute, partake more fully of the principles and rules of equity than those of law, both in respect to the mode of procedure prescribed and the remedies provided. Gates v. Salmon, 95 D. 139.

A decree in partition is not a settlement of a title, and will not estop the defendant from having a legal investigation of his title in an action of ejectment. Nicely v. Boyles, 40 D. 638.

The statute of Iowa in reference to partition of lands, section 36, providing that all persons notified to appear are bound by the judgment, applies with its legitimate force and effect only where the proceedings are bona fide, and it was never intended to cover up proceedings mala fide. De Louis v. Meek, 50 D. 491.

A petitioner in partition proceedings alleging that a certain share of the premises is owned by persons therein described, who in fact are not the owners thereof, is not prevented thereby from subsequently purchasing such share from the true owner, and making a valid conveyance thereof, though the partition be made in accordance with the allegations of his petition. Richardson v. City of Cambridge, 79 D. 767.

24. When set aside.—Persons interested in land as tenants in common may make division thereof by consent and agreement among themselves, bona fide, so as to sever their interests, and thereupon, waiving the ordeal of trial by proof in court as to title, procure a decree of partition; but if there are owners who are not personally present, and do not participate in such consent, or who are not legally represented in the transaction, and whose interests or just rights may be injuriously affected or lost thereby, such persons may seek and find redress in equity. De Louis v. Meek, 50 D. 491.

Fraud in procuring a decree of partition will be relieved against in equity. Ib.

Negligence is no ground for refusing equitable relief against fraud of attorneys and petitioners in a petition for partition, in making a compromise and procuring a decree of partition to be entered and confirmed by practicing deception on the court. A party is not required to be on his guard against such fraudulent acts, so as to be liable for negligence in failing to prevent them. Id.

A bill for relief against a decree of partition on ground of fraud need only state every material fact upon which the complainants intend to offer evidence distinctly and clearly. A general and substantial charge of such a fact is sufficient. It is not necessary to charge minutely all the circumstances which may conduce to prove the general charge. These circumstances are for the matter of evidence, which need not be charged, to let them in as proofs. Id.

A judgment or decree in partition obtained by fraud may be impeached by an original bill filed without the leave of the court. Id.

A decree of the orphans' court for the partition of land may be impeached for fraud in an action between one who claims as a purchaser under such decree, with notice of the fraud, and an heir of the deceased. Mitchell v. Kintner, 47 D. 408.

Where there has been a partition between tenants in common in Texas, and there is failure of title, the remedy is in a court of chancery, either by setting aside the partition when improperly made, and it can be done without injustice to others, or by contribution when it is most proper. Ross v. Armstrong, 78 D. 574.

25. Necessity of a sale. — Where equitable partition cannot be made, owing to the nature of the property, equity will grant relief by decreeing a sale of the property and dividing its proceeds among the co-tenants. Higginbottom v. Short, 57 D. 198.

A sale of the premises is merely incidental, when permitted, and is resorted to only to prevent a sacrifice of the property by a division. Striker v. Mott, 22 D. 648. S. P., Dall v. Confidence S. Mfg. Co., 93 D. 419.

Where division in partition cannot be made without manifest injustice, the commissioners may recommend a sale, and the court will judge of the propriety of confirming such return. Steedman v. Weeks, 49 D. 680.

Plaintiff may be permitted to take the land at the valuation, after a judgment by default against non-resident defendants, and the court is not bound to order a sale. Dewar v. Spence, 30 D. 241.

In a partition proceeding at law, under the statutes of Georgia, the court cannot decree the threefold relief of subdividing some lots, allotting others entire, with or without pecuniary compensation, and ordering a sale of others. One of those methods contemplates a division in kind, and the other a sale, which two modes cannot be combined at law. Rutherford v. Jones, 80 D. 655.

Complainant on a bill averring that the land was incapable of division, that defendant refused to divide or unite in a sale, and that it was for the interest and advantage of the parties to have the same sold, and praying for a sale and for general relief, on proof of his title as tenant in common, is entitled to either a decree for a sale or for a partition, according to the evidence, and in such case, a dismissal of the bill because there was no proof that a sale would be advantageous to the parties is erroneous, and the party is entitled to relief under the general prayer, notwithstanding the averment that defendant refused to divide the property was inappropriate, in view of the averment that it did not admit of partition, and the case made by the bill is not vitiated thereby. Campbell v. Lowe, 66 D. 339.

Assignment or sale of premises owned in common will not be refused when they cannot be partitioned without great inconvenience to the parties interested, because the petitioner has not been hindered in the enjoyment of his share. Baldwin v. Aldrich, 80 D. 695.

Partition, assignment, or sale may be made of that part of premises owned in common, in Vermont, where upon the trial of a petition for partition, it appears that the parties are tenants in common of only a part of the premises described in the petition. Id.

Under the Nevada statute, if one of the co-tenants files an affidavit showing that the sale of an entire mining claim would be injurious to him, the court must divide the claim as prescribed by the statute. A sworn answer setting up the same matter takes the place of such affidavit, and is sufficient. Dall v. Confidence S. Mining Co., 93 D. 419.

In a suit for partition against a co-tenant who has removed an encumbrance from the common property, and has set up and proved such fact without filing a cross-bill for affirmative relief, a decree for sale of the premises, in the event of non-payment of his claim, cannot properly be rendered, but the decree should, under the Illinois statute of 1861, be that the petitioner take his allotment subject to the defendant's lien for one half of the money paid for the removal of the encumbrance. Tinsworth v. Stout, 95 D. 577.

26. Validity and effect of the sale.

— A sale in a partition suit will pass nothing but the title which was vested in parties to the proceeding. Allen v. Gault, 67 D. 485.

A sale of land for partition, by commissioners appointed by the probate court, is a judicial sale requiring confirmation, and within the statute of frauds until such confirmation takes place. Hutton v. Williams, 76 D. 297.

A note or memorandum of such sale made by one of the commissioners, not the auctioneer, and not thereunto lawfully authorized in writing by the purchaser, is not sufficient to take the sale out of the statute of frauds, as defined by sections 1551 and 1552 of the code of Alabama. Ib.

A sale of a deceased person's estate, to carry out partition thereof, must be made by the administrator, and if made by a commissioner appointed by the county court for the purpose, conveys no title. Rose v. Newman, 80 D. 646.

If a sale of lands for partition among heirs becomes necessary, and there be no administrator, there can be no sale until one is appointed. The estate is vested in the heirs, subject only to such disposition of it as may be necessary to be made by the administrator, under the orders of the court, to pay debts, make partition, and the like. Ib.

Commissioners for partition have power to sell one parcel of land with an easement in another part annexed to it, and to sell the servient parcel subject to the servitude. Rosenkrans v. Snover, 97 D. 668.

27. Deed to purchaser.—In a sale of property under the Ohio partition act of 1820, 2 Chase Stat. 1162, a deed of conveyance from the sheriff, duly executed, was made necessary to a complete execution of the power of sale, and indispensable to invest the purchaser with the legal title. And it must have been signed and sealed by the sheriff in the presence of witnesses, and such signing and sealing acknowledged by him in open court. Merritt v. Horne, 67 D. 298.

28. Rights of purchasers.—Partition by suit, or by agreement and interchange of deeds, in either case makes the partitioners in effect purchasers of their respective lots, and entitled to hold them as any other purchasers. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

Purchasers under an order of sale in partition take the land discharged from lien of a judgment rendered after the order of sale, although the judgment creditor may have the proceeds of the sale appropriated, upon due application to the court, to the payment of the judgment. Cradlebaugh v. Pritchett, 72 D. 610.

The title acquired under an order of sale for payment of decedent's debts will prevail over that of an heir under a decree in partition. Dresher v. Allentown Water Co., 91 D. 150.

Where commissioners, to make partition, give a deed for one parcel of land, containing a provision that no buildings shall be erected thereon to darken the windows of a building standing along the line upon an adjoining parcel, sold and conveyed by them at the same time, the purchaser takes subject to the easement for the benefit of the adjoining parcel, although the condition was not in the conditions of sale, and he objected to its being inserted in the deed. If he accepts the deed, he will be bound by the condition. Rosenkrans v. Snover, 97 D. 668.

29. Compelling purchaser to take title.—A right of action against a purchaser for the difference in amount of his bids is in the owners of the land, as well as in the commissioners, where land has been sold for partition by commissioners under an order of the probate court; and upon a failure of the purchaser to comply with his contract, the land is resold. Hutton v. Williams, 76 D. 297.

Where a feme covert is one of the joint owners of land sold for the purpose of partition, and upon a failure on the part of the purchaser to comply with his contract the land is again sold, whereby a right of action accrues to recover the difference in amount between the first and second sale, she is the sole party having such right of suit, as far as her interest is concerned; for her share in the recovery which may be had will belong to the corpus, and not to the income or profits, of her separate estate. Ib.

The right to resell at risk of purchaser failing to comply with his contract is an implied condition of a sale of land for partition by commissioners; and the difference between the greater price bid at the first sale and the less price realized at the second is, in the nature of damages, stipulated by the parties. Ib.

Where land is sold for partition, the Alabama statute does not make it the duty of commissioners conducting such sale to tender to the purchaser a bond or certificate of purchase. Ib.

30. Setting aside sale.—A sale of lands by the sheriff under an order of a court of record in an action of partition is in pursuance of a judgment of such court, and can be confirmed or set aside by the judgment of that court alone; and if the purchaser to whom the property is sold under such proceedings claims to have reason for setting aside the sale, he must apply for relief to the court having jurisdiction of the case, and by whose order the sale was made. Allen v. Gault, 67 D. 485.

After confirmation of a partition sale at which plaintiff became purchaser, the bid-dings will not be opened upon the offer by one of the defendants of double the price bid by the purchaser, on the ground that notice of the suit was given by publication, and that some of the defendants were minors. Houston v. Aycock, 73 D. 131.

31. Rents and profits, improvements, etc.—Co-tenants having made improvements are entitled to have the portions of the premises including the improvements set off to them if practicable, and if the premises must be sold, are entitled to the actual increase of price received at the sale in consequence of the improvements. Howey v. Goings, 54 D. 427. S. P., Nelson v. Clay, 23 D. 387; Louville v. Menard, 41 D. 161; Robinson v. McDonald, 62 D. 480; Martin- dale v. Alexander, 89 D. 458; Buck v. Martin, 53 R. 702; Appeal of Kelsey, 57 R. 444.

Upon such partition, if a portion of the improved land is allotted to the party not making the improvements, he is not liable to his co-tenant for the value of such improvement, nor is the latter liable to the former for rent of the improved land allotted to the former. Nelson v. Clay, 23 D. 387.

Proceedings for partition of realty under the Illinois statute of 1827 are summary and in rem, and act only on the legal rights of the parties in dissolving the tenancy, and the equitable right of one of them to the value of improvements erected on the common land is not thereby affected. Louville v. Menard, 41 D. 161.

Omission to dispose of a cross-bill claiming compensation for improvements, at the same time the decree for partition is made, is not error. Howey v. Goings, 54 D. 427.

Improvements are not allowed for accords to their cost, but according to the value which they have imparted to the premises. Moore v. Williamson, 73 D. 93.

Under the Indiana statute, equitable as well as legal rights of parties to partition are allowed to be settled in a single action. If several tenants in common are sued under that act by a co-tenant for partition, any one who has made improvements on the estate may set up, by cross-complaint, his equity for an allowance. Martindale v. Alexander, 89 D. 458.

On partition in equity, it does not appear to be necessary, to entitle a tenant in common to allowance for improvements, to show the assent of his co-tenants to such improvements, nor a promise on their part to contribute their share of the expenses, nor that they were requested to join in the improvements, and refused. Id.

Compensation cannot be allowed in a partition suit for cost of improvements on adjoining property, which incidentally enhance the value of the common property. Dall v. Confidence S. Min. Co., 93 D. 419.

Items of expense incurred by a tenant in common to gratify his taste, and to contribute to his convenience, but not for the preservation of the common property, cannot be allowed to him as an equitable lien upon such property on the hearing of a bill for a partition or sale of it. Israel v. Israel, 96 D. 571.

32. Owelty of partition.—A court of equity, in decreeing partition, may direct an accounting in a proper case, and require each of the co-tenants to pay his equitable proportion of the expenses incurred in the development or improvement of the joint property. Dall v. Confidence S. Min. Co., 93 D. 419.

Where there had been two partitions, and on final judgment the former was re-established, and it then appeared that the distributees under the second and rejected partition had alienated or sold a portion of the property, — held, that the distributees under the second partition should give an equivalent to the distributees under the first partition for the property so alienated or sold. Dunman v. Hartwell, 60 D. 176.

On a bill in equity for partition between two tenants in common, the estate of one being unencumbered, and that of the other being subject to various mortgages covering the mortgagor's undivided interest in various parcels, — held, 1. That a decree of partition could not extend any mortgage to property not described and included in such mortgage; 2. That the aggregate parcels covered by each single mortgage of the one tenant in common must, for purposes of partition, be considered as one separate estate. Green v. Arnold, 23 R. 466.

One of two tenants in common mortgaged his interest in the common estate to the other, and no entry or foreclosure has taken place. Held, the mortgagee can have partition in equity. When owelty is required to equalize partition between two tenants in common, the estate of one being mortgaged, it should, if to be paid by the unencumbered owner, be paid to the mortgagee of the other, and credited on the mortgage note. Id.

33. Incidental matters of practice. — Upon the partition of a tract of land among coparceners, by an order of a county court, no judgement for costs can be given for or against any of them, there being no contest. Newby v. Perkins, 25 D. 160.

Equity may, in a partition proceeding of numerous lots, if necessary, appoint a receiver to rent out the property in whole or in part, and pay the rent over to the co-tenants according to their respective rights, or may order the lots to be held and enjoyed by one for a certain length of time, and then by the others successively. Rutherford v. Jones, 60 D. 655.

A suit for partition is not properly tried, except by consent of parties, at the term at which the defendant is first bound to appear. And, where the defendant never appeared, his consent to the trial cannot be presumed. Thornton v. Thornton, 72 D. 266.

34. Review. — Under a statute permitting reviews in "civil causes," a petition for partition cannot be reviewed, as those words have reference only to those suits or actions which are commenced and prosecuted according to the course of the common law. Nichols v. Nichols, 67 D. 699.

Parties are entitled on a new trial of an action for partition of lands ordered by the court on appeal, to avail themselves of the documentary evidence used at the former trial, and on file in the court below, including the referee's report of the testimony, and the deeds, exhibits, etc., subject, however, to objection as when first offered. Gates v. Salmon, 95 D. 139.

V. LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

I. THE RELATION, AND HOW CONSTITUTED.

1. In General.

1. What constitutes a partnership, generally. — 1. Definition, and general *rules. — A partnership, in its most significant and extended sense, is a voluntary contract of two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or either or all of them, upon an agreement that the gain or loss shall be divided proportionably between them, and having for its object the advancement and protection of fair and open trade. Howell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376.

To constitute a partnership, there must be some joint adventure and an agreement to share in the profit of the undertaking. Loomis v. Marshall, 30 D. 596. But persons not partners as between themselves may become liable as such to third persons, by holding themselves out as such. Ellsworth v. Tarts, 62 D. 749.

Property jointly owned by the partners is not required to constitute a partnership. Champion v. Bostwick, 31 D. 376. Yet each partner must bring into the common stock something that is valuable. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

To constitute a partnership between the parties, there must be a joint ownership of the funds, and an agreement to participate in the profits or losses of the business. Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526.

The two leading principles of the contract of partnership are, a common interest in the stock of the company, and a personal responsibility for the partnership engagements. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

Partnership is not confined to commercial business. It may exist between attorneys, conveyancers, mechanics, stage-line proprietors, artisans, or farmers, as well as between merchants. It may as well exist between brokers and factors or agents, whose sole employment relates to the property and business of third persons, as among those who jointly own the property in which they deal. Id.

There must be a community of interest in the profits, and it must be mutual, by which is meant that each party has a specific interest as principal. Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

Community of loss and profit is the test of a partnership, even as between the partners. Houze v. Patterson, 25 R. 607.

What constitutes partnership, in view of the rights of purchasers, considered. Fascetti v. Osborn, 83 D. 278.

2. Effect of intention. — Whether a partnership exists inter se depends on the intention of the parties. Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526.

A partnership relation exists, although the conditions of partnership are not understood alike by the partners, when persons agree to become partners, and actually proceed to carry into execution the joint undertaking or business. Cook v. Carpenter, 80 D. 670.

* Contract to raise crops on shares, when constitutes partnership, see note, 57 R. 609-612.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

3. Capital furnished by one, and services by the other. — Where one furnishes the capital for an undertaking, and another puts in his services in consideration of a share of the profits indefinitely, there is a partnership between them, as regards the parties themselves, as well as third persons. Dob v. Halsey, 8 D. 293; Miller v. Hughes, 10 D. 719; Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

An agreement to carry on a farm, one furnishing the land, outfit, and necessary money, the other furnishing laborers and superintending, half the money furnished to be repaid and the profits to be divided between them, constitutes a partnership. Reynolds v. Pool, 37 R. 607. S. P., Brown v. Higginbotham, 27 D. 618.

2. What does not. — It does not constitute partnership, where by express understanding between the parties they are not to be partners, do not hold themselves out to the public as such, and the business is conducted in the name of one, while the other is to receive one half of the net profits, and in consequence is, in the calculation of such profits, to bear one half of the losses so long as they do not exceed the profits. Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

Persons associated for the purpose of doing a commission business as factors do not constitute "a particular partnership." Ward v. Brandt, 13 D. 352.

Several independent railway companies, whose lines connected, agreed each to carry over its own road the freight-cars of the others, marked "Green Line," without breaking bulk, at certain rates, each fixing and collecting its own rates over its own road, and having no interest in other freights. In fixing its own rates, on through freight, each company would ascertain the rates charged by the other companies, and add them to the rates for its own line. These were called "Green Line rates." There was no joint expense, or loss or profit, but if a loss could not be traced to any particular road, it was borne by all the carrying roads. Held, that this did not constitute a partnership, and the use of the words "Green Line," on bills of lading and a wharf-boat, did not estop the companies. Irvin v. Nashville etc. R. R. Co., 34 R. 116.

An agreement in a particular case construed, and held not to constitute a partnership. Chapline v. Conant, 100 D. 766.

The following agreements and acts have been held not to amount to a partnership: An agreement by a contractor for carrying the mail, with a subcontractor, that he shall perform one half the service, and be entitled to one half the compensation. Wilkinson v. Jett, 20 D. 493.

A joint indorsement of a promissory note. Sayre v. Frick, 42 D. 249.

An arrangement by which one party agrees to furnish the goods and pay all expenses, and another party agrees to transact the business for one half of the profits as compensation. Bradley v. White, 43 D. 435.

An agreement by the lessee of a hotel to pay one tenth of the gross receipts for rent. McDonnell v. Battle House Co., 42 R. 99; Beecher v. Bush, 40 R. 465.

An agreement to lend money and indorse to a certain amount for the purpose of the borrower's business, in consideration of a certain percentage of the net profits of that business. Boston & C. Smelting Co. v. Smith, 43 R. 3.

Where one raises a crop on another's land, the landlord furnishing teams and feed, and the tenant supplying the labor, with the agreement to divide the gross product equally. Day v. Stevens, 43 R. 732.

The loan of money, to be invested in trade, the borrower to have one half the net profits therefor. Culley v. Edwards, 51 R. 614.

3. Who will be deemed to be partners. — 1. In general. — To charge a person as a partner, it must appear either that he has permitted the use of his name as one of the firm, to give it credit, or that he has shared in the profit or loss. Osborne v. Brennan, 10 D. 614.

Persons may have all the rights and be subjected to all the responsibilities belonging to partnership, if there be such a joinder or union of interest and action as the law considers the equivalent of partnership. Jacobs v. Shorey, 97 D. 586.

Unincorporated persons taking a certain number of "shares," "for the purpose of starting a grocery store," are partners between themselves, although they called themselves "stockholders," and their opinion was, that there was no liability for losses beyond the amount paid for the shares. Farnum v. Patch, 49 R. 313.

2. As towards third persons. — Individuals may be liable as partners as to third persons, while as between themselves they are not. Allen v. Dunn, 33 D. 614; Grieff v. Boudousquie, 89 D. 698.

Persons transacting business together may be charged as partners for all debts contracted within the apparent scope of their business, whatever may be their contracts or stipulations with each other, by those dealing with them, and who have no knowledge of their agreements, or knowledge of any fact or circumstance which ought to put them on inquiry. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

The question whether two persons are partners as to third persons will be superseded by a determination of the fact that they are to be regarded as partners between themselves. Id.

The broad rule that "no partnership will be created as to third persons, if the whole transactions are clearly susceptible of a different interpretation, or exclude some of the essential ingredients of a partnership," is not law, because it falls little short, if at all, of the doctrine that no persons will be liable to third persons as partners unless they are partners as between themselves. Id.

One is responsible to third persons as partner if he lends his name as partner, or suffers his name to be used in the business, for he may induce third persons to give that credit to the firm which otherwise it would not receive nor perhaps deserve. Grieff v. Boudousquie, 89 D. 698.

A contract by which the owners of certain vessels unite in an association to carry passengers and freight for hire, each furnishing a certain capital to the association, and each receiving a certain proportion of the profits, constitutes the owners, as to third persons, commercial partners, and, as such, liable in solido for the debts of the association, although the contract provides that it is not a partnership, and that the associations shall not be bound for the debts of each other. Cooley v. Broad, 29 R. 332.

3. Illustrations. — Where three persons run a line of stages between two given points, and divide the line into three parts, each person owning and maintaining all the stock, and having absolute control of his part, but all agree that the moneys received on any part of the whole line shall be put into a common fund, and after deducting the expense of tolls, shall be divided between the three in proportion to the number of miles of the line operated by each, they are, as between themselves and third persons, partners, and are jointly liable for an injury to a passenger happening on any part of the line. Champion v. Bostwick, 31 D. 376.

N. and L. agreed that L. should advance twelve thousand dollars to commence erecting a house on land held by N. under lease; that N. should then convey a half-interest in the property to L.; that both should finish the building at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars each, and should divide the rents received from it thereafter. Held, that N. and L. were copartners. Laffan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

L. bought a stock of goods, hired a shop in which to carry on business, and permitted W. to carry it on in W.'s name, under an agreement that W. should pay all expenses of the business, and always keep a stock of goods on hand equal in value to the amount paid by L., and ultimately pay to L. that amount, and that L. should receive one half of the net profits of the business, and should have a right to secure himself by taking possession at any time. Held, that L. was liable for a debt incurred by W. for goods used in carrying on the business, to one who had sold them relying on the belief that L. was a partner in the business with W. Pratt v. Langdon, 93 D. 61.

Defendant loaned money to A, and took therefor a promissory note, payable, with interest, in three years, and an agreement that in consideration of the trouble and expense in procuring the money loaned, A would pay him, defendant, such further sum annually as, with the interest, would be equal to one sixth of the annual net profits of A's business. Held, that defendant was liable as partner to a business creditor of A. Parker v. Canfield, 9 R. 317.

Where two persons entered into a contract jointly, for the keeping of sheep for certain shares of the wool, — held, that they would be so far regarded as partners that a settlement made by one of them, in the name of both, would bind both. Stapleton v. King, 11 R. 109.

H. loaned money to a firm to be used in its business on the agreement that he was to receive one third of the profits half-yearly, and at the end of the year become a partner, if agreeable to the parties. He had no control over the business, and never in fact received any profits or interest on his loan. Held, that he was a partner as to creditors of the firm, and liable for its debts. Leggett v. Hyde, 17 R. 244.

Where several persons associated in a single joint adventure for the purchase and sale of goods on joint account, pro rata, purchasing such goods separately or jointly according to their convenience, and finally leaving all of the goods with one of their number for sale, and the latter afterward borrowed money, executing a note therefor in the name of the joint adventurers, as "A, B, & Co." by "C, as partner," and used the money so borrowed in the purchase of other goods for the common stock, and for expenses, — held, in an action on the note, that all were liable as partners, although, on a settlement and division of the profits of the adventure, C had received from the others a sum intended and sufficient for the payment of the note. Howze v. Patterson, 25 R. 607.

H. agreed to "loan and advance" to M. and L., under the firm name of N. Bros., five thousand dollars, from time to time, as the business might require; the money to remain a permanent fund not less than one year nor more than five years. In consideration of this, N. Bros. agreed to devote their time and skill to the business, to keep accounts, open to H.'s inspection, and pay him semi-annually three fifths of the profits, guaranteeing that they should amount to at least three thousand dollars annually. For security, H. was given a lien on all the firm property. The agreement might be continued by H. for ten years. N. Bros. were to contract no debts outside of the business, and not to draw on the firm property except for necessary support. A violation of the contract was to be "regarded as an end of the loan," and H. might then seize all the firm property to satisfy his advances. Held, that H. was a partner as to third persons. Rosenfeld v. Huight, 40 R. 770.

On a petition averring a joint adventure in real estate, by parol agreement, and that the deeds were to be taken in the name of the plaintiff, and to be held in trust for both parties, "who should have equal interests and share in the common venture," the plaintiff's investment, with interest, to be first returned to him, — held, that the parties were partners. Richards v. Grinnell, 50 R. 727.

4. Who will not be so considered. — If persons are not partners as between themselves, they cannot be so charged by a third person having knowledge of the fact, or having such knowledge that he is bound to inquire concerning it. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182; Pratt v. Langdon, 93 D. 61.

An agreement to furnish a full supply of wool to a manufacturer for a specified period, to be manufactured into cloth in a workmanlike manner, providing that the manufacturer is to devote his factory exclusively to that work for the prescribed period, and that the net proceeds of the goods, after deducting incidental expenses and charges of sale, are to be divided between the parties in a certain proportion, each of the parties to pay a certain proportion of the cost of the warp of certain kinds of cloth, and to bear the expense of insurance in proportion to their interest in the division of the profits, and also to share in any insurance paid upon a loss, according to the loss which each should sustain, does not constitute such parties partners so as to be liable as such to a laborer suing for compensation for services in the factory. Loomis v. Marshall, 20 D. 596.

Proprietors of several stage lines forming a continuous line of travel, who employ a common agent at each end of said route to receive money and give a through-ticket over the entire line, under an agreement with each other that each is to receive his fare for his part of the route out of the money paid to such common agent for such through-ticket, do not thereby become partners, either inter se or as to third persons, so as to render each of them liable to a person who loses a trunk upon any portion of said route. Ellsworth v. Tartt, 62 D. 749.

A manufacturing corporation cannot enter into partnership for any purpose with a private individual; much less could it enter into a partnership for the transaction of business other than that for which it was created. Whittemore Mills v. Upton, 71 D. 681.

Farmers are joint-owners, and not partners, where they purchase a thrashing-machine in common, which they use and operate together, and for which they give the vendors a note, signed by both individually. Iliff v. Brazill, 99 D. 645.

One who has not been held out as a partner cannot be chargeable as such, unless he has some ownership in or control over the profits as they accrue, and are not ascertained or divided into portions or dividends. Chapline v. Conant, 100 D. 766.

An agreement between two members of a partnership and a third person, with the knowledge and assent of the other partners, that the third person should share in a certain proportion in the profits and losses of the two contracting partners in the partnership business, does not make such third person a partner or liable for the partnership debts. Burnett v. Snyder, 37 R. 527.

The members of a Masonic lodge are presumptively not partners. Ash v. Guse, 39 R. 818.

An advance of money to purchase and erect buildings, for interest and one half the profits of sale, which the receivers guarantee at a certain amount, the advances and profits being secured by mortgage, does not constitute the party advancing a partner as to third persons. Curry v. Fowler, 41 R. 343.

Renting a saloon for a share of the profits of the business does not make the parties partners. Thayer v. Augustine, 54 R. 361.

A agreed to advance money to B from time to time, up to a certain amount, to enable B to carry on business, and B agreed to pay interest to A on the average balance advanced, and also to divide the profits after deducting a fixed sum for expenses; but A was not to bear any losses. Held, that A and B were not partners as to third persons. Smith v. Knight, 22 R. 94.

A partnership agreed with H. to manufacture two hundred wagons for him, he advancing fifty dollars on each, the wagons to be sold, and H. to receive one fourth of the profits, and interest on the advances at five and a quarter per cent. Held, that this did not make H. a partner. Richardson v. Hughitt, 32 R. 267.

5. Effect of agreements to share profits.* — Sharing the profits of a business constitutes partnership, ordinarily, though it gives no title to the capital stock. Bartlett v. Jones, 49 D. 606. Contra, Parchen v. Anderson, 51 R. 65.

One who shares in the profits of a partnership must also share the losses. Miller v. Hughes, 10 D. 719; Simpson v. Feltz, 16 D. 602.

Those who share the profits of a business are liable as partners to third persons under all agreements within the apparent scope of the business in which they are engaged, unless the limitations of their contracts are known to those with whom they deal, or are such as, from the facts known to them, they are bound to inquire. No other exception to the general rule can safely be admitted. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182. S. P., Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526; Sheridan v. Medara, 64 D. 464; Pratt v. Langdon, 93 D. 61.

Two men must be considered partners as to third persons, where they are jointly concerned in a transaction under an agreement to share between them indefinitely the profits of the business. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

One having no knowledge of any partnership, and dealing with a party who shares the profits with a third person, may charge such third person as a partner for all debts contracted within the apparent scope of the business of the party with whom they deal. Id.

A person participating with one partner in his share of the profits of a firm, as profits, under an agreement with him, is liable to the creditors of the firm as a partner, although, as regards the other members of the firm, he is not their copartner; but if such person, by his agreement, is only to receive from one partner compensation for his labor and services in proportion to the profits of the business of the firm, without any specific lien on the profits to the exclusion of other creditors, he is not liable for the debts of the firm. Fitch v. Harrington, 74 D. 641.

If a person transacts business apparently on his own account, and for his own benefit, another person, who is found to share the profits of the business with him, may be charged as a partner for all debts contracted by the former within the apparent scope of his business, without regard to any private agreements between them. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

The essence of the contract of partnership is that parties should be jointly concerned in profits and loss, or in profits only, in some honest and lawful business; the relation of partnership being established by the fact that they share the profits between them. Id.

That parties must share profits as profits, to render them liable as partners, is a distinction too thin to be satisfactory. Id.

The term "net income" cannot be understood to mean gross profits. Id.

Mere payment, or promise to pay, out of profits of a business enterprise a sum of money as a specific proportion of the profits does not necessarily constitute the payee a partner, and gives him no interest in the profits or right thereto, but only a personal claim for such share thereof after they are ascertained and may be divided. Chapins v. Conant, 100 D. 766.

An agreement to share in the losses as well as the profits of the business is not necessary to constitute a partnership as to third persons; an agreement to share in the profits alone is sufficient. Manhattan Brass etc. Co. v. Sears, 6 R. 177.

The question of liability of one sharing profits is a question of agency, whether he stands in the relation of principal to the one who contracted the obligation. Eastman v. Clark, 16 R. 192.

A loan of money to be used in the business of a firm, with an agreement that the lender shall share in the profits, renders him per se a partner as to creditors of the firm. Leggett v. Hyde, 17 R. 244.

A contract for a loan of money at legal rate of interest, six per cent, but in case debtor's business succeeds, the rate to be paid by him to be twenty-five per cent, is a usurious contract as to the borrower, but as to third persons raises between the debtor and creditor the relation of partners. Sheridan v. Medara, 64 D. 464.

In assumpsit against three, only one defended, and the question tried was whether he was a partner of the others. The jury was instructed to find that he was so, if he did business with them under an agreement either to share the profits or the gross receipts. Held, that the instruction was wrong. Eastman v. Clark, 16 R. 192.

6. Effect of agreements to share profits and losses. — Where two persons have a common interest in the profit and loss of the business carried on by them, they are partners as between themselves. Griffith v. Buffum, 54 D. 64; Brown v. Higginbotham, 27 D. 618. And such is the effect of an agreement, and the parties thereto become liable as partners, whereby one L. agrees to lease to W. & T., for eleven months, a steam saw-mill in which the latter are to make certain improvements and repairs, and to run the mill with due diligence, L. to advance one thousand dollars for making such improvements and repairs, and to bear one third of the expense of the same above that sum, the lumber when manufactured to be shipped to Chicago, to some one whom L. designates, to be sold, and the proceeds, after paying freight, to be applied as follows: Seventy-five cents per M. to be paid to L. on account of rent of the mill; one dollar and seventy-five cents per M. to be paid to W. & T. as expenses of manufacturing the lumber; from the residue, L. to be paid any expenses made by him for logs to stock the mill, with interest; and after all expenses for logs, and for manufacturing, shipping, and selling the lumber are paid, W. & T. are to pay L. one fourth of the net proceeds of the business. Whitney v. Ludington, 84 D. 734.

Several parties hired a theater for a term of years and carried it on under an agreement to divide the profits in a specified proportion at the end of each year, reserving a certain proportion to meet contingent losses. One of the parties mortgaged his interest in the leasehold to secure his private debt. Held, that the arrangement was a partnership, and the mortgage was subordinate to the partnership debts, and that the mortgagee, having notice of the equitable rights of the other parties, should not be protected as against their claims. Priest v. Chouteau, 55 R. 373.

A mere participation in profit and loss does not necessarily constitute a partnership as to antecedent creditors, but the parties must have an interest also in the property which is the subject of the business association. Clifton v. Howard, 58 R. 97.

7. Interest in profits in lieu of salary. — If a person is to receive for his services emoluments depending upon the profits and losses of the trade, he is to be considered a partner; but if he is to receive a certain and definite portion of the profits, he is not a partner. Simpson v. Feltz, 16 D. 602; Sodiber v. Applegate, 49 R. 252.

Sharing in the profits is the test of a partnership, but the party must share in such profits as a principal; for a stipulation to receive a sum of money in proportion to a quantum of the profits as a reward for one's services will not make him a partner. Loomis v. Marshall, 30 D. 596; Champion v. Bostwick, 31 D. 376; Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

An agreement with a clerk that he shall receive a proportion of the profits of a business, as a compensation in addition to a fixed salary, does not constitute him, as between the parties, a partner in the business, and he may therefore be sued at once, for funds of the house in his hands, which he refuses to turn over. St. Victor v. Daubert, 29 D. 447.

Interest in profits, as compensation, creates no partnership in the case of the superintendent and clerk of a firm so compensated, and the goods of the firm are not subject to execution for his individual debts. Bartlett v. Jones, 49 D. 606.

An agreement by a laborer to receive half the profits in lieu of wages does not necessarily constitute him joint owner or partner. Thus a miller employed by a mill-owner to care for, tend, and run the mill, and to receive half its profits as compensation, but with no agreement as to any definite time, has no such title or possession as to require him to be joined in an action by the owner for an injury to the mill, and plaintiff can recover the whole damages in his own name. Chandler v. Howland, 66 D. 487.

A person who receives a share of business profits, by way of salary, or compensation for services, is liable as a partner to third persons, unless the true character of the agreement is known, or the apparent relations of the parties is such as should put parties dealing with them upon inquiry. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

The weight of authority seems to establish that to constitute a partnership even as to third parties, each person must have an interest in the profits as profits, and not a stipulated portion of the profits as compensation for his labor, unless in cases of fraud, or where the parties, at least the one sought to be charged, have held themselves out as partners to third parties. Mary v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

An agreement between a partnership and laborers, that the latter are to have a share of a crop to be raised, as compensation for their services, does not make them members of the partnership, nor give them any right to contract debts against it; they need not, therefore, be made parties to a bill against it. Christian v. Crocker, 99 D. 223.

A person who is to receive a part of the profits of a business, either in whole or part pay for his services, may maintain a bill in equity for an account of these profits. Bentley v. Harris, 14 R. 695.

Where one furnishes money to be used in a certain business by the receiver for the former's benefit, the receiver to have part of the net profits as compensation for his services, this does not constitute them partners. Buzard v. Bank of Greenville, 60 R. 7.

A and B, copartners, agreed with their salesman C to associate his name with the firm, and to give him a percentage of the sales for his compensation, and that he should not be liable for the debts. They advertised in a newspaper that C was to have an interest in the establishment. Held, that a creditor of the firm could not recover against C without proof that previously to giving credit he knew of the publication, or that defendant held himself out as a partner, and that plaintiff trusted him as a partner. Vinson v. Beveridge, 36 R. 113.

8. What is a partnership transaction. — If goods be sold to and charged against one of the members of a partnership, the existence of the partnership not being disclosed, the firm is liable to the vendor, if the goods were furnished to it and for its benefit, and this although there be an agreement in writing with the vendor signed by the individual partner only. Reynolds v. Cleveland, 15 D. 369.

The fact that a draft drawn by a firm is payable to the order of one partner, and by him indorsed, is not evidence that it was not drawn by the firm in the usual course of business. Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown, 70 D. 142.

The presumption is that the drawing of a draft or bill in the name of a firm by one partner, and offering the same for discount, is a partnership transaction, even though the draft or bill was made payable to the order of one of the members of the firm. Id.

The presumption is not affected because the paper was discounted at the request of the partner who drew it in the name of the firm, and whose name was inserted as payee, and who indorsed it and drew the proceeds. Id.

Where a partner borrows money on the credit of his individual note, which is signed also by a surety, such borrowing does not create a partnership debt, though the money be applied to partnership purposes; and the principal of such surety is the individual partner, with whom he joins in the execution of the note, and not the partners generally. Peterson v. Roach, 30 R. 607.

9. What evidence is sufficient and admissible to prove partnership. — The existence of a partnership is best established by the production of the letters constituting it, but may be proved otherwise; yet if the partners themselves are seeking to prove the partnership, they should be required to bring forward the letters, unless they show a legal excuse for their non-production. Bonaffe v. Fenner, 45 D. 278.

An interlocutory decree on a bill for an accounting between partners is decisive as to the existence of the partnership, that being the point in issue, but not as to the extent of the liability. Reybold v. Dodd, 26 D. 401.

Whether the existence of certain facts constitute a partnership often depends upon the intention of the parties as between themselves, and evidence of such intent should be received when any doubt exists, in order to ascertain the rule applicable as to third parties. Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103.

Where two parties, sued as partners, ask instructions segregating the two instances tending to disprove a partnership, and excluding other evidence which might have led the jury to believe that a partnership existed, it should be refused, as calculated to mislead the jury. Folk v. Wilson, 83 D. 599.

Participation in the profits of a business, though cogent evidence of a partnership, is not necessarily decisive of the question. The evidence must show that the persons taking the profits shared them as principals in a joint business, in which each has an express or implied authority to bind the other. Harvey v. Childs, 22 R. 387. But such participation is competent evidence to show the relation of principal and agent between the persons taking the profits, and those carrying on the business. Eastman v. Clark, 16 R. 192.

To prove a partnership, the partnership-books alone are not competent evidence, but in connection with evidence tending to prove the partnership, an access to and knowledge of the books are competent. Bryce v. Joyns, 49 R. 94.

10. What evidence is insufficient. — General reputation is not sufficient to charge a particular person as a partner; there must be some admission of his or some overt act to prove it. Hunt v. Jucks, 1 D. 555; * Smith v. Griffith, 38 D. 639; Grafton Bank v. Moore, 38 D. 478; Inglebright v. Hammond, 53 D. 430; Macy v. Combs, 77 D. 103; Bowen v. Rutherford, 14 R. 25.

Where the question before a jury is whether B is liable as partner on a note signed by A & Co., evidence that A's credit was bad until he commenced business under the firm name of A & Co. is entirely irrelevant. Dutton v. Woodman, 57 D. 46.

Evidence admissible only on the assumption of the existence of a copartnership is clearly incompetent when offered for the purpose of proving the existence of the partnership. Id.

A newspaper paragraph stating that a certain person is a member of a certain partnership, but not purporting to be inserted by the partnership, is not admissible in evidence to charge such person as such partner, merely on proof that he was a subscriber to the paper at the time, and had made no public contradiction of the statement. Potter v. Greene, 69 D. 290.

In an action against two persons as partners to recover for goods sold, evidence that other persons, in selling the same class of goods, at the same place, had dealt with but one of these persons as an individual, and had never known the other in the transaction, where there is nothing to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of this dealing, is inadmissible, as such dealings do not constitute such a reputation as would affect others making contracts with them. Folk v. Wilson, 83 D. 599.

The existence of a partnership cannot be proved by reports of a mercantile agency or the oral declarations of third persons. Cool v. Slate Co., 38 R. 568.

Where a defendant proved that a person was frequently seen in the counting-house of the plaintiff, transacting business as a principal, and was generally supposed, believed, and understood to be a partner in the house of the plaintiff, which was carried on in the name of the plaintiff only, — held, that the evidence was not sufficient to prove that such person was a partner of the plaintiff. Bryden v. Taylor, 3 D. 554.

11. Declarations and admissions of person sought to be charged as partner. — Persons may be made liable as partners so far as third persons are concerned, by conversations, assertions, admissions, and acts tending to show that they are such, although such evidence might be insufficient to prove a partnership as between the parties themselves. Jacobs v. Shorey, 97 D. 586.

One obtaining goods from another on the representation that he is a member of a firm is liable therefor as a partner, without regard to the terms of the partnership, and even although there is no partnership. Reed v. Cremer, 56 R. 295.

Acts and declarations of a person not a partner are not admissible to charge him as a partner, without proof that they were brought home to the plaintiff's knowledge, and induced the giving of credit to the firm on the belief that he was a partner therein. Fitch v. Harrington, 74 D. 641.

A partner entering into a contract in the name of the firm cannot be admitted to say that he was not authorized to make it. Smith v. Kemper, 6 D. 708.

A declaration by defendant to plaintiff, in relation to a transaction of the company, that he knew nothing of it, as Little (one of the company) had transacted the business, is not sufficient as evidence of the partnership. Grafton Bank v. Moore, 38 D. 478.

13. — of his alleged copartners. — Declarations of one partner are admissible only to charge himself, and are incompetent to prove that any other person is a member of the firm. Grafton Bank v. Moore, 38 D. 478; Dixon v. Hood, 38 D. 461; McCorkle v. Doby, 47 D. 560.

Representations of a party who has made a sale that he was in partnership in the transaction with another person may be admitted in evidence, after it has been shown that the latter received the purchase-money and recognized and ratified the contract of sale. Drumright v. Philpot, 60 D. 738.

Testimony of a partner is incompetent to prove the existence of a partnership as between himself and his copartner, on the ground of interest, when, though joined as defendant, he is not a party to the suit, not being served with process. Wright v. Boynton, 72 D. 319.

Where certain evidence has been introduced, tending to establish a partnership between defendants, the declarations of one of them, out of the presence of the other, and not communicated to him, may be given in evidence to bind the latter. Folt v. Wilson, 83 D. 599.

A person cannot be estopped from denying that he is a member of a firm by the representations of one who is merely the agent of the firm. Phemer v. Lord, 85 D. 773.

Where parties are, or assume to be, partners, and jointly interested in the subject-matter in suit, declarations made by one relating thereto is evidence against both. Simons v. Vulcan Oil & M. Co., 100 D. 628.

13. Holding out, when constitutes partnership. — A person holding himself out as a partner, though in fact no partnership exists, is liable to a creditor who contracts with the firm. Crosier v. Kirker, 51 D. 724.

Persons who, by their dealings with others, and in other respects, hold themselves out to the world as partners, will be liable as such, notwithstanding private articles of dissolution of partnership entered into between the parties. Spears v. Toland, 10 D. 722. And the partnership may be established by any evidence showing that they so hold themselves out to the public, and were so regarded by the trading community, although one of them never received any part of the profits or sustained any of the losses incurred by the firm. Burr v. Byers, 52 D. 239.

In proceedings in insolvency by one person against another, alleging partnership between them, under the Massachusetts statute of 1838, chapter 163, section 21, petitioner must show the existence of an actual partnership inter sese. It is not sufficient to show that the parties had so held themselves out as to be liable to third persons as such. Whittenton Mills v. Upton, 71 D. 681.

A party is liable as a partner who, knowing that a partnership has been formed in his name by his agent, does not object, but acts as a partner, and the agent's acts will bind him, though contrary to instructions or beyond the limits of his authority. Wright v. Boynton, 72 D. 319.

Persons holding themselves out as partners are liable only to those who have acted upon the faith of the appearance thus produced. Bowie v. Maddox, 74 D. 61.

If one permits another to hold him out as a partner, or to use his name in business as such, he is liable as a partner on contracts thus made, although in fact he has no interest in the business of such partnership. Smith v. Hill, 12 R. 189.

One Harrington gave the plaintiff a note signed "Hill & Co., by Harrington." There never existed any such firm as "Hill & Co.," nor were Hill and Harrington ever partners; but some time before the note was given, Hill was informed that Harrington was using his name, and he thereupon told Harrington that he "must not use that name to injure him," and Harrington said he would not. Hill did not know of the giving of the note to plaintiff, nor did plaintiff know of the previous use by Harrington of Hill's name. Held, that Hill was liable on the note. Id.

2. Rights of Partners, and Herein of Partnership Property.

14. Rights of partners inter sese.*

1. Generally. — Partnership creates a several liability, and no two partners are jointly responsible to another. Portsmouth v. Donaldson, 72 D. 782.

Each partner contracts with the other for himself alone. (Affirming Whelan v. Watmough, 15 Serg. & R. 153.) Id.

The only restriction which the law places upon control of partnership affairs by a majority of the members of the firm is, that they act in good faith. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789.

* Confidential relations of partners, see note, 30 R. 461-463.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A sole managing partner's relation to the copartner is one of great confidence, and requires the utmost good faith; and proof must be clear to show that the copartner has waived any of his rights to property legally inuring to the partnership. Laffan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

One partner has no right to convert the partnership goods to his own purposes. Morrison v. Blodgett, 29 D. 653.

A partner taking goods of the firm by force, and delivering them to a third person, is not liable therefor to a copartner. Dana v. Gill, 20 D. 255.

Partners in a copyright may contract between themselves for the printing of the book by one of them in a particular manner, and the existence of such partnership cannot be set up to defeat a right of action growing out of the contract. Gould v. Banks, 24 D. 90.

Where a partnership is sued on an account for some items of which one member only is liable, and a separate judgment has been previously obtained against him on a security given by him alone for the amount of the entire account, upon which judgment a sum has been collected, credit may be so applied as to first extinguish the items with which he alone was chargeable. Lee v. Fontaine, 44 D. 505.

Where two, owning adjoining parcels of land, agree to erect a mill in partnership, the one furnishing the site, the other the water-power, and both contributing equally to the expense, and such agreement is carried into effect by the erection of the mill, and its use for some time on joint account, the proprietor of the site cannot afterwards keep the owner of the water-power out of a participation in the business and profits, and if he attempts to do so, the other may maintain ejectment for a moiety of the mill and the ground used along with it. Swarts v. Swarts, 45 D. 697.

One partner, by consent of his copartners, may have a separate exemption out of partnership property seized on execution against the firm. O'Gorman v. Fink, 46 R. 58.

2. Subrogation—Contribution—Indemnity.—A partner paying the partnership debts is subrogated to the rights of the creditors thus paid. Roulett v. Grieve's Syndics, 13 D. 296.

Where partners settle their business, and each takes certain firm accounts, and agrees to pay certain firm debts, and one is compelled to pay debts assumed by the other, the party paying may recover of the other without proving that he himself has paid all the debts which he assumed by his agreement. Such payment is not a condition precedent to his right to repayment from his partners. Martin v. Good, 74 D. 545.

A partner is bound to indemnify his copartner for any loss arising from his breach of their partnership contract, unless such contract is superseded or waived, in the course of their business, with the express assent of the copartner. Murphy v. Crafts, 71 D. 519.

3. Contributions to capital—Partner's lien.—Each partner has a lien on the property of the partnership for the amount of his interest in the partnership stock, and for advances made by him for the use of the firm. Allen v. Hawley, 63 D. 198.

Advance of the whole capital by a partner is not a fact from which the law will imply a promise of the other to repay any part of it during the continuance of the partnership. Williams v. Henshaw, 22 D. 366.

Where, in joint adventure, one furnishes money, and another labor, they are not partners inter se, in the technical sense, merely because they have a mutual interest in the profits. And he who contributes the labor is not liable to him who advances the money for any part of the capital lost in the venture. Heras v. Hall, 35 D. 178.

No lien exists in favor of a partner purchasing partnership real estate, to secure to him the excess over his share of the purchase-money that he may have paid therefor. Engles v. Engles, 38 D. 37.

Partners in lands have an equity against each other for the purpose of producing equality among themselves. This equity fastens itself to, and is a lien upon, their respective interests in the partnership lands; and neither partner, nor a creditor of his, nor a purchaser from him with notice, can deprive his copartner of such lien. Williams v. Love, 73 D. 191.

Where one partner furnishes the capital and the other his services and experience, the profits and losses to be shared equally, the latter partner is not entitled on dissolution to any part of the original capital. Shea v. Donahue, 54 R. 407.

One partner has no lien on a copartner's interest in the partnership property for a debt due to him from the copartner. Evans v. Bryan, 59 R. 233.

4. Sharing profits and losses.—Losses of a partnership must be equally borne, and profits equally divided, in the absence of any facts requiring a different division. Pirtle v. Penn, 28 D. 70.

Where one partner furnishes the manuscript of a book, and the other agrees to print and bind it, each is entitled to an equal share in the gross proceeds of the sale thereof. Id.

5. Right of one partner to deal on his own account.—A partner in a leasehold purchasing the fee in his own name, with his own money, the lessees being entitled to a refusal of the property, purchases for both, and the other partner becomes entitled to his share upon payment of his proportion of the purchase-money. Laffan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

If a partner in his own behalf enter into a transaction which is within the scope of the partnership business, his copartner may insist that it is a fraud upon him, and claim the benefit resulting from it; but this is a right which the partner alone can assert, and is not available to third parties for the purpose of fixing a liability upon the partnership when such claim has not been asserted. Lockwood v. Beckwith, 72 D. 69.

Partners are entitled to share in profits realized from an adventure of one member of the firm, in investing a large sum of Confederate currency belonging to the firm, but supposed to be worthless, in the purchase and shipping of cotton. Anderson v. Whitlock, 92 D. 489.

A bank may not set off an individual deposit against a partnership debt, and the partner may lawfully appropriate such deposit to a bona fide creditor by check. International Bank v. Jones, 59 R. 807.

15. Interests in firm property. — 1. General rules. — Partners by the contract of partnership acquire a joint interest in the effects of the partnership, and are constituted mutual agents for all purposes within the scope and objects of the partnership. Kinder v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

In a partnership existing without an agreement regulating its terms, partners are presumed to be equally interested. Reynold v. Dodd, 26 D. 401.

Where tenants in common of timber land are partners in the lumber business, they are partners in the timber on such land when converted into logs. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

Partnership effects are a fund to be applied first to the payment of the partnership debts; and the interest of a partner therein is only his share of the surplus after they are paid. Morrison v. Blodgett, 29 D. 653; Dyer v. Clark, 39 D. 697; Sutcliffe v. Dohrman, 51 D. 450; Nixon v. Nash, 80 D. 390; Arnold v. Wainwright, 80 D. 448; Penn v. Whitehead, 94 D. 478; Manhattan I. Co. v. Webster, 98 D. 332.

The relative interest of partners in the partnership fund is determined at the time of dissolution. Dyer v. Clark, 39 D. 697.

Possession of any part of the assets by either partner does not sever the joint property, nor vest a separate interest in him. Kinder v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

Evidence of the manner of doing business is competent as tending to show that the interests of the parties in the business were separate and that no partnership existed. Foye v. Leighton, 53 D. 231.

Steamboats owned by two or more parties are usually held by them as tenants in common, and are therefore not ordinarily subject to the law of partnership; but where owned by parties who are copartners, doing a general partnership business, they are, without express agreement or circumstances showing the contrary, partnership property, and within the jurisdiction of the court of chancery in a suit by one partner against his copartner for an accounting, dissolution, and sale. Allen v. Hawley, 63 D. 198.

The ownership of goods in which a partnership deals may belong to one of the partners exclusively, just as well as to a stranger, without in any way affecting the validity of the partnership. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

Persons may be partners as to profits of business carried on by them jointly, though as to all the property employed in the business they may be several owners. Id.

Each partner has a lien upon partnership property, to the end that he may insist that it be first applied to the payment of the firm debts. This interest of the individual partner in the firm assets is assignable, and may be taken in execution. Arnold v. Wainwright, 80 D. 448.

One party cannot, without the assent of his copartners, acquire for himself the exclusive ownership of firm property. Crosswell v. Lehman, 25 R. 684.

2. Transfers of one partner's interest. — A partner cannot, by selling his interest in the partnership to a third person, make him a partner against the will and consent of the other partners. Murray v. Bogert, 7 D. 466.

Property conveyed to a partnership vests in the company, and not in the individual copartners; and the transfer of such property by one of the partners passes only a contingent right to a part after the debts are paid and the copartnership is ended. Donaldson v. Bank of Cape Fear, 18 D. 577; Doner v. Stauffer, 21 D. 370; Coover's Appeal, 70 D. 149.

An interest in a partnership only passes to a person coming in right of a partner, be the transfer effected by whatever mode, and such interest cannot be tangible, cannot be made available, or be delivered but under an account between the partnership and the partner, and it is an item in the account that enough must be left for the partnership debts. Baker's Appeal, 59 D. 752.

The interest of a minority of the members of a firm in partnership property does not pass by a sale thereof by the majority, if the latter do not act in good faith. The latter's interest alone passes, and the purchaser would become tenant in common with the former. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789.

Where a partner mortgaged his interest in partnership premises to a bona fide mortgagee, without notice of any existing partnership debts, — held, that the mortgagee could hold as against creditors of the partnership. McDermot v. Lawrence, 10 D. 468. Compare Menagh v. Whitwell, 11 R. 683.

16. Rights of incoming partner. — Where an incoming buys out an outgoing partner, and agrees to pay the debts of the old firm, the former only, and not the creditors, can sue for a breach of such agreement. Lee v. Fontaine, 44 D. 505.

Partners cannot escape the effect of their contract not to carry on a certain trade, if the contract is otherwise valid, by merely taking in an additional partner. Beard v. Dennis, 63 D. 380.

A partnership cannot maintain an action for goods delivered in payment of an article sold to one partner for his private use, although the firm is thereafter, but before the goods were ordered and delivered, changed, without the knowledge of the defendants, by the introduction of a new partner, who was ignorant of the agreement. Tay v. Ladd, 77 D. 364.

17. — his liability upon previous contracts of the firm. — One who buys out the interest of one of the members of a partnership, and forms a new partnership with the remaining members, is not liable at law or in equity for debts previously contracted, unless he agrees to pay them, even though such debts be for goods forming part of the stock of the new partnership, the creditor having no lien upon the goods. Poindexter v. Waddy, 8 D. 749.

The managing member of a partnership agreed with an outside person that if he would take a retiring partner's interest and pay a balance due for his share of the capital stock, he should have a certain interest in the firm property free from liens. The money was so paid, but the other partners had no knowledge of the agreement for an unencumbered title. Afterward the partnership property was all sold under a prior mortgage. Held, that the new partner had no remedy against the firm. Love v. Payne, 38 R. 111.

18. Rights and liabilities of dormant partner.* — A judgment against one partner is a bar to a subsequent suit against both, though the new defendant was a dormant partner at the time of the contract, and was not discovered until after the judgment. Smith v. Black, 11 D. 686; Moale v. Hollins, 33 D. 684; Hov v. Kane, 54 D. 152.

Action in the case of a dormant partnership may be brought in the name of the acting partner, or in the name of all the partners; but the action in either form is without prejudice to the defendant's defense by offset or otherwise. Hiliker v. Loop, 26 D. 286.

A dormant partner is an allowable but not an essential party to an action. Desha v. Holland, 48 D. 261.

Partnership property received by a dormant partner from an ostensible partner is subject to judgments against the latter alone, and the dormant partner is bound to disclose and account for it, and may be restrained from disposing of it in the mean time. Hov v. Kane, 54 D. 152.

A dormant partner to whom a vendor gives no credit, and whose responsibility constituted no part of the consideration moving him to sell, is liable to the whole extent of engagement in matters which, according to the usual course of dealing, have reference to the business transacted by the firm. Brooks v. Washington, 56 D. 142.

Third persons entering into a secret agreement between members of a firm to share profits are liable as partners. Thus dormant partners who participate in the profits of trade and conceal their names are equally liable, when discovered, as if their names had appeared in the firm, although they were not known to be partners at the time of the creation of the debt. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

Where there is a dormant partner, a credit will not be presumed to have been given on the sole and separate responsibility of the ostensible partner, but will bind all for whom the partner acts, if done in their business and for their benefit, and the dormant partner may be sued when discovered. Richardson v. Farmer, 88 D. 129.

19. Real estate as partnership property. — 1. In general.* — Lands may be held in partnership. Sumner v. Hampton, 32 D. 722.

There is no partnership in realty, but partners are tenants in common in land. Baker v. Wheeler, 24 D. 66.

Partners, though owning real estate as partners, still own it as tenants in common. Dillon v. Brown, 71 D. 700.

A court of equity leaves legal title of partnership realty undisturbed, except so far as necessary to protect the equitable rights of the partners. Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305.

Partnership realty is treated as personality in equity, if the partners have, by agreement or otherwise, impressed upon it that character. Roberts v. McCarty, 68 D. 604; Arnold v. Wainwright, 80 D. 448; Summey v. Patton, 86 D. 451; Ware v. Owens, 94 D. 642.

Where two purchase land in equal partnership, although one pays more than half the money, he is not entitled to a conveyance of more than half the land. Farmer v. Samuel, 14 D. 106.

A partner purchasing partnership land under execution against the partners does not thereby extinguish his copartner's interest therein, but the purchase is no more than a bare payment. Id.

Realty purchased by two jointly is not partnership property, though they are to carry on the business of milling therewith. Wheatley v. Calhoun, 37 D. 654.

* Dormant partners, who are, powers and liabilities of, see note, 56 D. 147-151.

* Real estate, when impressed with characteristics of partnership property, see notes, 18 D. 646-648; 86 D. 197-201.

For Index to Notes to American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The purchase being on individual responsibility in such a case, the payment of one of the installments out of the partnership funds does not convert the realty into partnership property. Ib.

The legal title of realty conveyed to partners for the benefit of the firm, or in payment of debts, vests in the grantees as joint tenants, in England, and as tenants in common in New York. Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305.

Land standing on books of an old partnership as partnership property, and carried into a new firm formed from the old as a part of its capital, is partnership property of the new firm. Andrews v. Brown, 56 D. 252.

Partnership realty is held by partners as tenants in common, and the estate of one of the partners therein may be encumbered by a mortgage given by him for his separate debt and sold on an individual judgment, the purchaser taking a title discharged from the partnership debts. Cummings's Appeal, 64 D. 695.

A mill and lot are partnership property, though purchased with individual funds of two persons, each paying half and taking a conveyance to himself of his undivided share, if it is bought with a view to a partnership between them, which is subsequently formed, and is brought into and used by the firm and repaired and improved at the joint expense of the partners. Roberts v. McCarty, 68 D. 604.

The owner of the legal title to partnership lands cannot be forced to part with it until the copartner's debt to him is paid and he is freed from liability for him. If two persons are joint owners of lands, — one having the legal title, the other a mere equity in the land, — and the latter is indebted to the former, the one who has the legal title cannot be forced to part with it until his debt is discharged and he is freed from liability for his copartner. Williams v. Love, 73 D. 191.

A purchaser, mortgagee, or attaching creditor of an equitable interest in partnership lands must take it encumbered with the equity existing against the person having such equitable interest; for the purchaser of an equitable title must always abide by the case of the person from whom he buys. Ib.

Where the holder of an equitable interest in partnership land mortgages it to a third person, and the mortgagee becomes indebted to the holder of the legal title, and assigns his claim upon the mortgagor, together with his lien, the land becomes subjected to an additional equity against the mortgagee by reason of his indebtedness, and his assignee, occupying the same ground, must yield to the superior equity of the person holding the legal title. Ib.

Real estate acquired by a partnership is held by partners as tenants in common; but the surviving partners may dispose of it so far as necessary to pay the debts of the firm, and to discharge any balance due them on final settlement. Buffum v. Buffum, 77 D. 249.

Whether land is to be deemed part of partnership stock depends upon the agreement of the partners, which agreement may be either express or implied. Arnold v. Wainwright, 80 D. 448.

Lands may be converted into partnership stock by parol agreement of the partners, or by such facts and circumstances attending its acquisition or use as will raise an implication that the partners so intended. The legal estate will be controlled by the terms of the conveyance, but equity will subject the lands to the same liabilities imposed upon the other partnership estate, and restrict the partners to the same extent in their disposition of them as obtains in regard to personality. Ib.

If land is acquired as a substratum of partnership, or is brought in and used by it for partnership purposes, there will be a trust by operation of law for the partners as tenants, in common although a trust may not have been declared in writing, and the ownership may not be apparently in all the members of the firm, or if in all, may apparently be in them, not as partners, but as joint tenants. Ib.

Each partner is entitled to regard the entire partnership estate as held for his indemnity as against the joint debts, and as security for the ultimate balance which may be due him for his own share of the partnership effects. Ib.

The rule that equity regards land held by partnership as personal estate prevails, notwithstanding the legal title may, by the death of the party holding it, have been cast by descent upon his heirs at law, or that the estate may have been conveyed to the partnership by such deed as would, under the statute, make them tenants in common; nor does it make any difference that the deed makes no reference upon its face to the grantees as partners. Ib.

Under the Minnesota statute, a trust arises in favor of a partnership when lands are conveyed to the individual members of the firm as tenants in common, or otherwise than as partners; nor does the recognition and enforcement of such trust conflict with the statute of frauds. Ib.

Under that statute, if a conveyance of land to partners makes no reference to the land as partnership stock, but vests the title in several of the members as tenants in common, then the trust which arises between the partners cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee without notice, but will be enforced against a purchaser or mortgagee from one partner, or his representative, who has notice, actual or constructive, that the land is partnership property. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

No title to land passes, either in law or equity, by parol agreement made before a firm exists, to put it into the firm or to consider it as firm property. McCormick's Appeal, 98 D. 191.

A firm are estopped from claiming that a lot is firm property, a lease of which they took from one of the partners, who had purchased the lot in his own name, and on which the firm erected buildings for the purpose of carrying on their business. Stemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 255.

2. Land purchased with partnership funds. — The title to real estate bought with partnership funds vests in the separate partners as joint owners, and any one may sell his undivided share. Baca v. Ramoe, 29 D. 463.

Partners are joint tenants, and not tenants in common, of lands purchased with partnership funds. Baird v. Baird, 31 D. 399.

Realty conveyed to partners as co-tenants is partnership property, in equity, where it is purchased with partnership funds for the use of the firm. Tillinghast v. Champlin, 67 D. 510. S. P., Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305; Lang v. Waring, 60 D. 533; Roberts v. McCarty, 68 D. 604; Willis v. Freeman, 82 D. 619. In such a case it is unnecessary that there should be an agreement among the partners that the land should be partnership property. Jarvis v. Brooks, 59 D. 359.

Land purchased with partnership funds, by one partner in his own name, is held in trust for the partnership. Evans v. Gibson, 77 D. 565. S. P., Moreau v. Safarans, 67 D. 582; Dyer v. Clark, 39 D. 697; Arnold v. Wainwright, 80 D. 448.

Lands purchased with partnership funds are subject to a right of dower where the purchase of the lands was not in pursuit of the partnership business, and it is not necessary to have recourse to the land in order to pay the firm debts, and where, moreover, there is no special agreement between the parties that the land shall be considered as personalty. Markham v. Merrett, 40 D. 76.

A decree concerning real estate, held by one partner as trustee for firm, will not be set aside as irregular and void because the other partners were not made parties; but such decree operates upon the trustee alone, and will be modified, if otherwise, to that effect. Moreau v. Safarans, 67 D. 582.

A partnership may have a resulting trust in real estate when firm funds have paid for it, or a constructive trust in it, when it has been acquired after the formation of the partnership. McCormick's Appeal, 98 D. 191.

3. Proving a partnership in land.† — Real estate can only become partnership property by deed, or other writing properly recorded, indicating an intention to make it such. Hale v. Henric, 27 D. 289; Ridgway's Appeal, 53 D. 586; McCormick's Appeal, 98 D. 191.

It is not competent to show by parol that real estate conveyed to two persons as tenants in common was purchased and paid for by them as partners, and was partnership property. Ridgway's Appeal, 53 D. 586.

4. Effect of the death of a partner. — The title to land obtained in the name of one of the partners, the other having died, and a sale made by him, to persons with notice, does not affect the rights of the heirs of the other partner; the right does not survive. Hart v. Hawkins, 6 D. 666.

A deceased partner's share of the surplus of partnership realty, after the payment of the firm debts and the adjustment of the mutual equities of the partners, is regarded in American courts of equity as realty, and descends to the heir; but the rule seems to be otherwise in England. Tillinghast v. Champlin, 67 D. 510; Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305; Yeatman v. Woods, 27 D. 452; Summey v. Patton, 86 D. 451; Foster's Appeal, 15 R. 553.

A partner's lien upon partnership lands may be enforced by his personal representatives after his death, where inequality between the partners, or indebtedness from one to the other, arose from transactions occurring in the lifetime of such partner; as it is immaterial whether the amount of such inequality or indebtedness was ascertained at the death of the partner in whose favor this inequality existed. Williams v. Love, 73 D. 191.

The personal representative, heirs, or devisees of one holding the legal title and equitable lien on partnership land for satisfaction of indebtedness to him, may enforce such equitable lien, if the party holding it dies before its enforcement. Id.

Nothing but the interest of which a partner died seized passes by sale of partnership real estate under the order of the orphans' court for the payment of his debts, although the legal title was in him alone. McCormick's Appeal, 98 D. 191.

5. Liability for firm debts. — Real estate purchased by a firm as partnership property is liable to the payment of the partnership debts. Divine v. Michem, 41 D. 241.

Real estate belonging to a firm is considered as personal property in equity, to the extent that it is liable to pay the debts of the firm and then to distribution between the partners, in the same manner as if it had been personal instead of real estate. Andrews v. Brown, 56 D. 252.

Land purchased and held for partnership purposes is partnership property, although not necessary for the purposes of the firm, and judgments against the firm for partnership debts are payable out of its proceeds, in preference to judgments against the partners

* Real estate purchased with funds of a firm, when firm property, see note, 27 R. 270, 271.

6. — for individual debts. — A judgment lien of a separate creditor of a partner on his share of partnership realty is subordinate to the prior equitable lien of a copartner who has paid all the debts of the firm. Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 306.

Where land had been conveyed to a partnership by a deed expressing on its face that it is to be holden as partnership stock, a judgment subsequently entered against an individual member is not a lien upon it or any interest in it, so as to preclude the firm from disposing of the property and making a title to the purchaser clear of such encumbrance. Meily v. Wood, 10 R. 719.

Real estate was purchased by G. S. and J. G. in their individual names. Subsequently they formed a partnership with J. S., under the name of G. S. & Co. The cash payment on account of purchase-money of the real estate, and the first installment, were paid before J. S. became a partner. He acquiesced in the subsequent appropriation of the firm funds to the payment of the balance, and to expenditures made in improvements, knowing that it stood in the individual names of G. S. and J. G. It was agreed by parol that J. S. was to have one third of the real estate as soon as there was a final settlement. Held, that there was no resulting trust for the partnership, and the real estate having been sold under execution, the fund arising from the sale should go to the individual creditors of G. S. and J. G., instead of the creditors of the firm. Lefevre's Appeal, 8 R. 229.

30. Conveyances by or between partners. — 1. By the firm, or in invitum. — Partners must grant or demise their real estate as other tenants in common are required to do. Dillon v. Brown, 71 D. 700.

A grant or demise of real estate owned by partners must be made by each and all of them. Id.

Each partner must exonerate the other from a moiety of a joint debt. No act falling short of a complete exoneration of one partner and his property, from so much of the liability as he is entitled to be exonerated from, will operate as a discharge of the other from his obligation in that regard. Downs v. Jackson, 86 D. 289.

A sale en masse of lands belonging to partners in severalty for the discharge of a joint partnership debt does not discharge any part of the property sold nor the parties from their respective duties, namely, to each pay a moiety of the debt. Id.

Where there is a sale en masse of lands belonging to partners in severalty, to discharge a joint partnership debt, neither can obtain a discharge of his property without paying the whole amount of the purchase-money with interest, and each of them has the same right after the sale, within the time allowed to redeem the lands for that purpose as he had before that time, to pay the debt to discharge himself from personal liability. Id.

Where lands owned by partners in severalty are sold en masse under execution, to discharge a partnership debt, and one of the partners redeems the lands, he is entitled in equity to recover from the other one moiety of the money paid by him with interest thereon from the time of its payment. Id.

Partners may convey firm property to secure a debt due from an individual member of the firm, as firm creditors and individual creditors stand upon an equality as regards the partnership effects. Purman v. Fisher, 94 D. 210.

2. By one partner. — The principles and rules of law applicable to partnerships, and which govern and regulate the disposition of the partnership property, do not apply to real estate. One partner can convey no more than his own interest in houses or other real estate, even where they are held for purposes of the partnership. Coles v. Coles, 8 D. 231.

A conveyance by a tenant in common, and partner, of his moiety of the common land upon which he is carrying on the farming business in partnership with his co-tenant, dissolves the partnership and renders his grantee tenant in common with the other partner in the partnership property. Mumford v. McKay, 24 D. 34.

The grantee takes his grantor's undivided share of the surplus of the partnership property after the partnership debts and the claims of the copartner are satisfied. Id.

The grantee may maintain trover against his co-tenant, in such a case, where the latter sells the whole of the joint property, unless the defendant can show that there were outstanding partnership debts, and the burden of doing so rests upon him. Id.

A partner selling his right in real estate bought with partnership funds is liable to an account to his copartners for the price paid. Baca v. Ramos, 29 D. 463.

A sale by a partner to a copartner of his interest in the partnership bars him of his right to demand partition of the real estate, purchased with the partnership funds. Id.

Real estate held by a partnership cannot be alienated by one of the partners, without a breach of trust, unless made to one who had no notice, actual or constructive, of such trust. Dyer v. Clark, 39 D. 697.

A bona fide purchaser of a partner's legal title in partnership realty, conveyed to the partners as tenants in common, having no notice of the equitable rights of the copartners or partnership creditors in the land as partnership property, will be protected in equity as well as at law. Tillinghast v. Champlin, 67 D. 510; Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 306.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A lease by one partner of partnership realty, to be binding on the other partners, must be made in the prosecution of the partnership business, and where the making of the lease is in the exercise of an authority necessarily implied from the nature and object of the partnership. Mussey v. Holt, 55 D. 234.

A partner has no power to convey real estate of the firm, either by deed or assignment, nor to make contracts, written or verbal, concerning it, specifically enforceable against his copartners. Ruffner v. McConnell, 63 D. 362.

One partner or tenant in common cannot grant or demise more than his undivided interest in the common estate, unless he is authorized by his co-tenants or copartners to grant or demise their interests also. Dillon v. Brown, 71 D. 700.

A sealed lease executed by one partner only, in the name of the firm, does not pass the estate of other partners without evidence of previous authority or subsequent ratification by them, although the lease was for a term which required no seal. Id.

21. Suits by partners against third persons. — In an action by partners, if all the partners do not join, it is a ground of nonsuit at the trial. Dob v. Halsey, 8 D. 293.

In the case of a sale by one of several joint owners, the purchaser not knowing that others were interested, the action for the purchase-money may be in the name of all the joint owners, or of the one who made the sale. Hilliker v. Loop, 26 D. 286.

A plea in abatement, setting forth a partnership between the plaintiff and one other, and judgment thereon, does not estop the defendant from insisting that two others were partners with the plaintiff. Id.

Non-joinder of proper parties may be pleaded in abatement, or made the ground for a nonsuit. Id.

A dormant partner need not be joined by the ostensible partner in an action upon a contract entered into by him in his own name. Goble v. Gale, 41 D. 219.

Damages for a joint injury only can be recovered by a mercantile firm suing for injury done to their joint business, and in such a suit the private feelings of the partners are not a proper subject of inquiry. Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59.

Loss of mercantile character and credit of a firm may be proved by reputation, and compensated in an action on the case. Id.

Under general averments in a declaration, it is proper to show as sources of injury the general loss of credit and mercantile character of the firm, but not the loss of any particular customer. Id.

Partners suing must all be entitled to recover, to maintain an action at law. Cochran v. Cunningham, 50 D. 186.

An act barring one partner bars all from bringing an action in the partnership name. Id.

Recovery by a partner suing alone for an injury to partnership property, and making the copartner who refuses to join as plaintiff a defendant, must be entire for the whole injury. Nightingale v. Scannell, 65 D. 525.

A firm composed of three persons can maintain trespass against an officer who has attached their goods on a writ against two of them only, and who has, under the statute, sold the entire property in the goods attached. And they may recover the full value of the goods sold, though it leave the judgment to satisfy which the property was sold in no part satisfied. Moore v. Pennell, 83 D. 500.

An action is not maintainable in favor of a copartnership upon a written contract entered into by one of the partners, deceased, in his individual name only. Mead v. Tomlinson, 2 D. 62.

Where the same person is partner in two firms, and a note is made by one firm to the other, an action cannot be maintained thereon by the latter firm against the partner in the other, who does not belong to both firms. Banks v. Mitchell, 29 D. 106.

A firm cannot demand payment, in the same action, of two promissory notes given by the debtor, and both dated at the same place, on the same day, and both payable to such firm at the same time, when it is shown that the firm was composed of different persons at the time when the indebtedness was created, which forms the consideration of the notes. Dyas v. Dinkgrave, 77 D. 196.

An old and new firm are considered in law as distinct and separate persons, with distinct and separate rights and obligations, and cannot, as creditors, join in the same action their separate and distinct demands against a debtor. Id.

3. Interpretation of Partnership Articles.

22. In general. — Written articles of copartnership are not necessary to constitute a partnership in all its incidents. Buffum v. Buffum, 77 D. 249.

A parol agreement for a partnership for the purpose of dealing in lands is not within the statute of frauds, and is valid. Holmes v. McCray, 19 R. 735.*

Shares of partners are presumed by law to be equal, where nothing appears to the contrary; and the terms of a contract of partnership will be deduced by law from the facts agreed in the pleadings of the parties, where there is no evidence aliunde. Pirrie v. Penn, 28 D. 70.

23. Validity and effect of partnership agreements. — Those dealing with

* Oral agreement to form partnership for purchase of real estate, whether within statute of frauds, see note, 60 R. 379, 380.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

parties connected in business are bound by their agreements with each other, if at the time they know the nature of those agreements, or have knowledge of such facts or circumstances as would lead a man of common prudence to make inquiry in relation to them. Bromley v. Elliot, 75 D. 182.

A secret agreement of parties relative to their connection in business is binding between themselves, but will not control their responsibility to others ignorant of such agreement. Ib.

An agreement contained in articles of partnership, if made bona fide and for a valuable consideration, is valid and effectual to transfer the title to partnership property, where it is agreed that upon the death of one of the partners the title to the property shall vest in the survivor, who shall thereupon become indebted, as therein stipulated, to the representatives of the deceased. Gaut v. Reed, 76 D. 94.

24. Interpretation of particular agreements. — Where by agreement contained in articles of partnership, made bona fide and for a valuable consideration, the title to the property upon the death of one partner vests in the survivor, and he becomes indebted as therein stipulated to the representatives of the deceased, he has a right to dispose of the property, by a bona fide sale and transfer, to any person, and as well to the representatives of the deceased as to a stranger. Gaut v. Reed, 76 D. 94.

Articles of copartnership between A, B, C, and D, for the transaction of a commission business, provided that A and B should contribute the whole capital in unequal proportions; that A should contribute "such time as he may be able to give"; that B, C, and D should each contribute all their time to the business; that each partner should receive one fourth of the net profits; and that A and B should receive interest on the capital contributed by them. The partnership was afterward dissolved by mutual consent, the business of the firm closed by B, and it resulted in a loss. Held, on a bill in equity by B against the other partners, that the capital constituted a debt of the partnership to which all the partners were bound to contribute equally, and that one of them being insolvent, the loss was to be borne equally by the other three. Whitcomb v. Converse, 20 R. 311.

4. The Firm Name.

25. Adoption of and right to use firm name. — A partnership drawing a bill in one firm name upon itself in another, payable to its own order, and indorsing it in the former name and accepting it in the latter, is liable thereon, without notice of non-payment, where it does business in both names. Bank of Rochester v. Montooth, 43 D. 681.

An action is not maintainable against a partnership on a note signed "A B, Ag't," on the principle that "A B, Ag't," was the firm name under which the partners had chosen to transact business, where the only evidence to establish that fact is, that the firm, while conducting the business of furniture dealers, owns a manufactory in another town, at which the business is conducted by A B under the name of "A B, Ag't"; that in the course of the conduct of such business, A B signed the note sued on, giving it in payment for goods delivered to workmen upon his order; that in a previous instance of a similar claim on a like note, the firm had paid it; and that the partners on that and other occasions said that they would settle or be responsible for all claims for anything that went into their business at the manufactory. Williams v. Robbins, 77 D. 396.

A partnership style, as A B & Co., is not a good name of purchase in a conveyance of realty sufficient to pass the legal title to all the members of the firm. Winter v. Stock, 89 D. 57.

An obligation under seal, executed by all the members of a firm in and for its business, and for its benefit, binds the firm, although the firm name is not mentioned, and although it appears upon its face to be simply the obligation of the partners contracted in their individual names. Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Juillard, 31 R. 488.

On the dissolution of the firm of M. & S., S. bought M.'s interest in certain of the firm property, and assumed the rent of the old stand, where he continued the business, while M. opened an office for the same business in another part of the city, as it was understood he was to do. M. removed his name from the old firm sign, but S. replaced it, placing over it "S., successor to," in small and almost imperceptible letters. Held, that S. should be restrained from such use of M.'s name. Morgan v. Schuyler, 35 R. 543.

C. W. D. & Co., a copartnership which had acquired an extensive trade and reputation as dealers in seeds, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the assignee sold the stock to the plaintiff company, which continued the business at the old stand, renting the building from the owner. Among the stock so purchased was a large number of wrappers, sacks, etc., marked with the name of C. W. D. & Co. One of the firm of C. W. D. & Co. was also a member of the plaintiff company. Afterward, C. W. D. organized a corporation under the name of C. W. D. & Co., and engaged in the same business in the same city. The plaintiff claimed, but never exercised, the right to use the name of C. W. D. & Co. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from using that name, and receiving mail matter

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I. thus directed. Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 59 R. 445.

26. Using fictitious firm name.—A statute prohibiting the use of names in firms of persons not interested, and requiring that "& Co." shall represent an actual partner, does not apply to a case where those words represented the wife of the person whose full name appears. Zimmerman v. Erhard, 38 R. 396.

Where one who has carried on business alone, under a firm name, sells the business to his son, who continues the business under the same name, the former is liable for goods purchased by the latter from an actual dealer with the former, who has no knowledge or notice of the transfer. Ellierson v. Leeds, 49 R. 458.

The plaintiff alone was doing business in the name of "Wood Brothers," in violation of a statute which prohibits the use of fictitious names in firms. A carriage was purchased by plaintiff in said firm name, and was shipped by him at Buffalo on defendant's railroad, marked "Wood Brothers," for delivery "to the party entitled to the same," at New York, and was injured in transit. Held, that the statute being highly penal, its operation would not be extended by implication, and that the plaintiff could maintain an action for the injury. Wood v. Erie R'y Co., 23 R. 125.

A bond was executed to "John Gay and Charles Gay, Jr., doing business as Gay Brothers & Co." They were, as the obligors knew, the only partners. Held, not within the statute prohibiting the transaction of business in the name of a partner not interested, and requiring the designation "& Co." to represent an actual partner, under penalty as a misdemeanor for non-observance. Gay v. Seibold, 49 R. 533.

A firm in Philadelphia having a branch house in New York orally leased part of its premises situated in New York. The firm was doing business under the name of Kohn, Adler, & Co., although there was no Adler in the firm. Held, that the leasing was not "transacting business," within the meaning of the New York penal statute forbidding the transaction of business in the name of a partner not interested in the firm. Sparrow v. Kohn, 58 R. 726.

27. Right to sue or be sued in firm name.—A copartnership cannot maintain an action under the title of "Proprietors of Mexican Mill" as plaintiffs, for such title does not name a natural or artificial person authorized to sue. As there is no plaintiff, there is no action, and the proceeding may be dismissed at any time before or after appeal. Proprietors etc. v. Yellow Jacket S. M. Co., 97 D. 510.

A judgment by confession against McIndoe and Shuter, partners, etc., if irregular, is not void, where the parties constituting such firm have executed a warrant of attorney containing the full names of the judgment debtors, and authorizing such confession of judgment, and where they have in their answer to the action released all errors that might intervene in entering up judgment, or in issuing execution in the cause. McIndoe v. Hazelton, 88 D. 701.

A defect in such judgment by confession, by reason of not giving the full names of the parties constituting such firm, must be disregarded under Wisconsin Revised Statutes, 1858, chapter 125, sections 37, 40; or if not, it was certainly cured by the statute of amendments before the code (R. S. 1849, c. 10, sec. 70, subd. 10), making such a judgment good where the full names of the judgment debtors had been once rightly alleged in any of the pleadings or proceedings, as in this case. Id.

An omission in such judgment of the full names of the parties constituting such firm may be amended under section 8, chapter 100, of the Revised Statutes, 1849, by a warrant of attorney which the parties constituting such firm have executed over their full names, authorizing confession of judgment, and which has become a part of the record. Id.

Whether judgment recovered against a partnership in their firm name alone becomes a lien on the firm property has never been decided in Iowa. But the judgment plaintiff may, by scire facias, make the individual property of the members of the firm liable to the judgment. Markham v. Buckingham, 89 D. 590.

A partnership may be sued in the individual names of its members, as well as in the partnership name. Id.

II. RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

1. In General.

28. Law of place.—The liability of partners on a contract entered into with a third person is governed by the lex loci contractus. Baldwin v. Gray, 16 D. 169.

29. Creditor's lien.—A lien on partnership property for the payment of partnership liabilities arises at its acquisition, both between the partners and in favor of their creditors. Sumner v. Hampson, 32 D. 722.

The lien of partnership creditors for payment of their debts is not upon the partnership property, but is derived from one of the partners who has a lien upon the partnership property for the payment of the partnership debts; and such lien by a partner, being derivative, ceases when he has divested himself of his interest. If the means by which he has divested himself of this interest is fraudulent, the creditors may be relieved in a court of chancery. Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573.

A judgment against a firm is a lien on realty of partners, whether owned in common or in severalty, and such lien, once attached, is not divested by any subsequent judgment of a separate creditor, or otherwise. Cummings's Appeal, 64 D. 695.

Partnership creditors have no lien, while partners are administering their own funds, on the joint property for the payment of their claims, nor have creditors of individual partners any lien upon their separate property, or any priority of payment out of it. Tillinghast v. Champion, 67 D. 510.

The lien acquired by partnership creditors in joint assets cannot be defeated by any subsequent disposition of the property by the several partners. Coover's Appeal, 70 D. 149.

Partnership creditors have no equity, strictly speaking, against partnership effects, nor have they a lien on the partnership effects for their debts. All they can do is to prosecute their claims to judgments against the partners, and procure executions to be issued thereupon, to be levied upon the partnership effects, upon the separate effects of each partner, or upon both. White v. Parish, 73 D. 204.

Partners may make a bona fide sale of their property at any time before their creditors acquire a lien; but a sale directly or indirectly to one of the partners, with a stipulation that he will pay the firm debts, is not such a bona fide sale so as to divest the property of its character as firm property, primarily liable for firm debts. Conroy v. Woods, 73 D. 605.

Where a partner buys the interest of copartners in the firm, agreeing to pay the firm debts, the property of the firm remains bound for such debts just as before the sale. Id.

30. Release by creditors.—Where a partnership is indebted, and the partners severally covenant to pay, each his proportion of the debts, and the creditor thereupon releases the partners from their joint liability, the original contract or debt is merged. Le Page v. McCrea, 19 D. 469.

An agreement by a creditor of a firm to release one partner from liability, or covenant not to sue him for twenty years, on his giving security for the payment of a portion of the debt, does not operate to release or discharge the other partners. Roberts v. Strang, 82 D. 729.

A promise by a creditor of the firm to release one partner and look to the other two for payment of his claim, where the released partner is not shown to have acted upon the faith of the promise, or to have released any security, is without consideration, and does not release the latter from liability. Fogg v. Hambell, 89 D. 561.

31. Attachments and executions.—A creditor of one of the partners of a firm may attach such partner's interest in a specific portion of a stock of goods belonging to the firm, and is not required, in order to render the attachment regular, to take the partner's interest in the entire stock of goods. Fogg v. Lawry, 28 R. 19.

* Levy on property of firm for partner's private debts, see note, 29 D. 663, 664.

To attach the partner's interest in the firm goods, they must be taken into possession. Reed v. Shepardon, 19 D. 697.

An officer taking firm goods into possession under an attachment against an individual partner is not liable as a trespasser, though the firm be insolvent. Id.

For the private debt of a partner, partnership property cannot be seized under attachment or execution. Morrison v. Blodgett, 29 D. 653.

An attachment of a partner's property for a firm debt will lie, and is not defeated by a subsequent assignment by such partner in trust for his creditors, under the Massachusetts statute of 1836, though it is otherwise under the statute of 1838. Allen v. Wells, 33 D. 757.

A debtor of a partnership cannot be garnished in an action brought to recover the separate debt of one of its members. Winston v. Boring, 34 D. 768; People's Bank v. Shryock, 30 R. 476.

Where the creditors of a partnership have levied their execution on lands belonging to one of the partners, and their title has become absolute by lapse of the time prescribed by statute, a creditor of the individual partner cannot defeat their title by levying his attachment or execution on the same lands. Bowler v. Smith, 2 R. 189.

32. Set-off.—A partner cannot set off a debt due the firm, in an action against him for an individual debt, as a general rule. Craig v. Henderson, 44 D. 193.

33. Subrogation.—A separate judgment creditor of a partner is not entitled to be substituted to the rights of a judgment creditor of the partnership who has obtained satisfaction out of such partner's estate, to enable such separate creditor to proceed against the other partner, where there is nothing to show the latter partner indebted to his copartner whose property was taken to pay the firm debt. Sterling v. Brightbill, 30 D. 304.

2. Power of One Partner to Bind Another, or the Firm.

34. In general.—By virtue of the partnership relation, each partner is constituted the general agent of his copartners, and has power authorizing him to act as once as principal and their agent. So long as the relation exists, he has the power to bind the partnership in all matters within the scope of partnership dealings or falling within the ordinary business and transactions of the firm. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789; Crosthwait v. Ross, 34 D.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume 1.

613; Warder v. Needgate, 52 D. 567; Savings Fund Soc. v. Savings Bank, 78 D. 390. And in all transactions which from their nature appear to the world to be legitimately connected with the business of the partnership in which they are openly engaged, although in reality they exceed the terms of the partnership, one partner may bind the firm. Heirn v. McCaughan, 66 D. 588; Barker v. Mann, 96 D. 373.

Partners have equal authority over the partnership affairs, and one cannot, by any private instructions, limit the power of the other to bind him in a partnership transaction. Miller v. Hughes, 10 D. 719.

A partner's authority, even in a partnership not purely commercial, is regulated by the usages of trade. Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382.

The presumption regarding one who deals with a partner in a matter not within the scope of the partnership is, that such person dealt with the partner on the latter's private and individual account, notwithstanding the partnership name was used. Crosthwait v. Ross, 34 D. 613.

A debt due from one partner is not a valid set-off against a debt due to the firm. Warder v. Needgate, 52 D. 567.

An agreement with an individual partner that a debt due from him should be an offset against one due to the firm cannot bind the other partner unless he assents. Id.

The fact that money which was obtained on the personal credit of one member of a firm was used by the firm and for its exclusive benefit will not of itself make the firm liable to the creditor for such debt, but would be a good consideration to support a subsequent promise by the firm to pay the debt. Siegel v. Chidsey, 70 D. 124.

Demand, to charge a partnership, need be made on but one of the partners. Hunter v. Hempstead, 13 D. 468.

Notice to one of the partners of a firm, of a prior unrecorded deed, is notice to all the partners, and will render void a subsequent conveyance of the same land to the firm. Barney v. Currier, 6 D. 739.

Notice of demand and protest upon one member of a firm dissolved is sufficient to bind all the other members, if due notice of the dissolution has not been given. Nott v. Downing, 26 D. 491.

Notice to one partner that sheep purchased by him for the firm are diseased is notice to his copartners, and they are liable for damages occasioned by a sale of them without disclosing the defect, after the withdrawal of such partner from the firm, though they have no actual knowledge of such defect. Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 28 D. 476.

Service of a citation upon one partner during the existence of the partnership is a service upon all. Gaiennis v. Akin, 36 D. 804.

One partner has no implied power to enter appearance in a suit for his copartner, but only for the partnership. Phelps v. Brewer, 57 D. 56; Haslet v. Street, 13 D. 724.*

35. By contracts, generally.—Where a partnership is limited to a particular trade or business, one partner cannot bind his copartner by any contract not relating to such trade or business, and third persons will be presumed to have knowledge of the limited nature of the partnership from the circumstances connected with the business of the firm. Livingston v. Roosevelt, 4 D. 273. S. F., Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789.

The implied authority of one partner to bind his copartner by contract may be revoked by the refusal of the latter to be thus bound, communicated to the person in whose favor the contract is to be made. And it makes no difference that the partner revoking is a secret partner, and that the partnership was unknown to the opposite party. Leavitt v. Peck, 8 D. 157.

One partner is not bound by a contract entered into by his copartner, after giving actual notice to the party proposing to make it that he will not be bound thereby, although the fruits of the contract have been enjoyed by the partnership, of which he is a member. Monroe v. Conner, 32 D. 148.

If a commercial partnership be formed, and by the articles of copartnership only such real estate as is necessary for convenience in carrying on trade is to be purchased, a purchase by one partner of 20,638 arpents does not bind the firm. Brook v. Hamilton, 13 D. 328.

Where a contract which is required by law to be in writing is made with one of two partners, in his individual capacity, the other partner cannot be sued for the consideration. Harris v. Miller, 33 D. 138.

An agreement by one partner to deliver property to the sheriff on request, or pay a debt of his copartner for which it had been seized under execution, is valid; and it is no defense to an action thereon by the sheriff, that the property was partnership property and had been applied to the use of the firm. Burrall v. Acker, 35 D. 582.

A contract of a partner for his own benefit cannot bind the firm, unless the other members have assented to it. Warder v. Needgate, 52 D. 567.

Goods furnished a partner individually are not payment of the debt due the partnership, though the partner receiving them agrees that they shall be. Such an agreement does not bind the firm. Id.

A member of a mining partnership is in legal contemplation a principal of the firm, and general agent for all the copartners in the transaction of the copartnership business, without having had general, special, or limited powers conferred upon him, and the firm is liable to a person whom he employs to labor for it. Burgan v. Lyell, 55 D. 53.

Persons are liable as partners for services rendered for the partnership, and it is wholly immaterial what the arrangement as to the several duties of each may have been between the persons themselves, and which one employed or engaged the services of the plaintiff. Coons v. Renick, 60 D. 230.

A partner who, without authority, agrees to indemnify a surety on an injunction bond, given in a suit prosecuted for the benefit of his firm, does not thereby bind the firm unless his copartners subsequently ratify his act. White v. Davidson, 63 D. 699.

A contract made by a copartner in the name of the firm prima facie binds the firm, unless it is outside the business of the firm. Stockwell v. Dillingham, 79 D. 621.

Where a partner contracts a debt, representing to the creditor that it is for the benefit of the firm, the firm is liable, whether such representation is true or false, if the transaction is within the scope of the partnership business. Id.

A partner alone is liable upon all contracts made by himself upon his own exclusive credit; and the partnership, although the contract is for their proper use and benefit, or is applied thereto, will in no manner be liable therefor. North Penn. Coal Co.'s Appeal, 84 D. 487.

The liability of one partner for the contracts of another, when not estopped from denying the liability, is founded on the relation they sustain of being each principal and agent in the joint business. That relation is therefore the true test of a partnership, and the liability rests on the ground that it was incurred on the express or implied authority of the party sought to be charged. Harvey v. Childs, 22 R. 387.

One partner, without the consent, express or implied, of his copartners, cannot apply a claim of the firm to the payment of his individual debt, even to retain the debtor's custom for the firm. Cotthausen v. Judd, 28 R. 539.

Several plaintiffs were commission merchants dealing in cattle. One of the plaintiffs, without the knowledge of his other partners, agreed with the defendant, in the name of the firm, to advance money, with which the defendant was to purchase cattle to be sold by the plaintiffs on commission, the profits to be divided between the plaintiffs and defendant. Transactions under this agreement resulted in loss. No settlement or accounting having been had, — held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action upon an implied contract to pay commissions. Frye v. Sanders, 30 R. 421.

36. By purchases of goods. — Where one partner purchases goods on his single credit for the use of the partnership, if the seller does not know at the time of the existence of the partnership, he may, when he discovers it, hold the firm liable. Griffith v. Buffum, 54 D. 64.

If credit be given exclusively to one partner, and it appears that it was not intended that the other should be held or looked to for payment, the latter cannot be made liable. Smith v. Durrett, 2 D. 714; Huntington v. Lyman, 12 D. 716.

It is not necessary to secure a person giving credit to a partnership that he should know or believe that each individual of the firm would approve the transaction; but it is necessary that he should not know that the debt attempted to be secured was not the debt of the partnership, or the property sold was not to inure to their benefit, in the absence of all proof of the assent or approbation of the party to be charged. Huntington v. Lyman, 12 D. 716.

Goods purchased by one partner, in his own name and upon his own credit, although used in the business, are not liable to be seized for a private debt of the other partner, contracted in his own name, and entirely disconnected with the business. Allen v. Dunn, 33 D. 614.

A partner cannot maintain an action in the firm name to recover certain firm moneys of a person to whom they were paid by another partner for the value of certain goods received by the latter, with a knowledge of the fact that they were stolen, though such payment was made in order to prevent a prosecution of the latter for felony, and without the knowledge or consent of his copartner. Johnson v. Byerly, 75 D. 764.

A partner ratifies the act of his copartner, not within the scope and usage of the partnership, in purchasing property on the firm credit, by obtaining possession and selling it as firm property. Porter v. Curry, 99 D. 520.

37. By sales of goods.* — One partner has power to sell all the goods of the partnership at a single sale, though the object of the partnership was to sell by retail. Arnold v. Brown, 35 D. 296.

A sale made by one partner is not invalid because the purchaser, as part payment, pays one of such partner's private debts. Id.

A bona fide sale of all the partnership effects made by one partner to another, at the dissolution of the partnership, is valid, and the property so sold becomes the separate estate of the purchaser, although the firm and both partners are at the time insolvent. Howe v. Lawrence, 57 D. 68.

One partner may sell the entire stock of the firm to pay its debts in good faith, and may do it on Sunday, it not being in the usual business of sales, and being a work of necessity. Schneider v. Sansom, 50 R. 521.

*Power of partner to make sale of all property of firm, see notes, 30 D. 290, 291; 30 R. 532-537.

Where a ship at sea belonging to a partnership was sold by one of the partners at home, and subsequently sold and possession delivered by the other partner abroad, under whose control she then was, and who had no knowledge of the prior sale, — held, that the second sale passed the title as against the former. Lamb v. Durant, 7 D. 31.

Where one partner sold all the goods of the firm, and against the will of his copartner broke into the store with the purchaser to whom he delivered the goods, — held, that either partner had a right to sell all the goods, and that, unless some of them had been destroyed, trespass would not lie against a partner at the suit of a copartner. Montjoy v. Holden, 12 D. 331.

A, one of several partners, having a dispute with his copartners as to the firm accounts, stored cotton belonging to the firm, without their assent, with a warehouseman, taking a receipt in his own name, and informing his partners that he had done so to force a settlement; B, one of the latter, induced certain reputable cotton buyers to send an order to the warehouseman to turn out the cotton for shipment, and the warehouseman, supposing the order to be given in good faith, delivered the cotton, in accordance with a custom of warehousemen, without requiring production of A's receipt, and the cotton buyers delivered it to B, who sold it on his own account. In an action by A against the warehouseman for damages, — held, that he could not recover. Croswell v. Lehman, 25 R. 684.

33. — or other disposal of partnership assets. — 1. In general. — A partner possesses authority, independently of articles or express stipulations regulating his power in behalf of the firm, to dispose of the partnership property and effects for any and all purposes within the scope and objects of the partnership and in the course of its trade and business. Wright v. Boynton, 72 D. 319; Woodward v. Coving, 66 D. 211.

A partner may transfer the whole stock in trade of the partnership bona fide in payment of debts of the firm, especially where his copartner has absconded, and the fact that the assignment is under seal is immaterial. Deckard v. Case, 30 D. 287.

Employment of the partner who made the transfer, and the resumption of business at the shop formerly occupied by the firm, if not a part of the consideration of the transfer, and not mala fide, will not render such transfer fraudulent as against other creditors of the firm. Ib.

A dedication of partnership property by a managing partner to street purposes, to render the remaining portion more valuable, inures to the benefit or detriment of all the partners in proportion to their shares. Lafsan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

2. In payment of individual debt.* —

Where a creditor of one partner knowingly receives partnership property in payment of the debt, he thereby becomes a debtor to the partnership for the price, and cannot set off the partner's debt against such claim. Dob v. Halsey, 8 D. 293.

A transfer of partnership property in satisfaction of a private debt of one of the firm, after the failure of the partnership, is fraudulent and void as to the partnership creditors. Yale v. Yale, 33 D. 393.

Where a partnership has so intrusted one partner with the partnership goods that he is enabled to deal with them as apparently his own, and to induce the public to believe them to be his, a sale by him of such goods, in payment of his private debt, to one who has no knowledge or notice that they are partnership goods, is valid as against the partnership and its creditors. Locke v. Lewis, 26 R. 631.

A confession of judgment by partners to a creditor, on promise to pay the individual debt of a member of the firm for money borrowed by him and used by and for the exclusive benefit of the firm, is not the application of partnership effects to the private debt of a member of the firm, but the honest assumption by the partners of a debt created for their joint benefit, and which in equity and conscience they are equally bound to pay. Siegel v. Chidsey, 70 D. 124.

Assumption by a firm of debt of a member for money borrowed for exclusive use of the firm is not a fraudulent transaction as to the partners, because they all assent to it, and not as to the firm creditors, if they have no lien on the partnership effects, because their equities must be worked out through the partners themselves. Ib.

As against a general creditor of a solvent partnership, one of the firm, with the consent of his copartners, may in good faith make an absolute transfer of the entire partnership assets in payment of his individual debt. Schmidlapp v. Currie, 30 R. 530.

Where one partner pays his individual debt, to the knowledge of his creditors, out of the funds of his insolvent firm, without the assent of his copartners, the money may be attached by a creditor of the firm. Johnson v. Hersey, 35 R. 303.

One partner, individually indebted to a person owing the firm, may not apply the debt due the firm to the payment of his own debt, without consent or ratification by his copartners, and the debtor to the firm is still liable therefor. Thomas v. Stetson, 49 R. 143.

A member of an insolvent firm may, with the consent of his partner, use the assets of such firm to pay premiums on a policy of insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife, to whom he is in good faith indebted, and partnership creditors cannot set aside the transaction unless they show fraud. Hansover Nat. Bank v. Klein, 60 R. 47.

A member of a mercantile partnership delivered goods of the partnership to his physician, by agreement, on account of his individual debt due and to become due to him. The physician knew that the goods belonged to the partnership. The other partner knew nothing of the agreement at the time, but subsequently learning it, he offered the physician to allow his account as a credit if he would pay the balance of the firm account in cash, but this offer was not accepted. In an action by him against the physician, — held, 1. That the agreement was not binding on the plaintiff; 2. That the unaccepted offer was not a ratification of it. Hurt v. Clarke, 28 R. 751.

39. By mortgage of firm property. — One partner has a right to encumber the entire interest in personal property of the partnership for the security of the debts. Donald v. Hewitt, 73 D. 431.

One partner may mortgage or pledge all the goods of the firm. The mortgage is not the less effective because unnecessarily made under seal. Tapley v. Butterfield, 35 D. 374.

Where one of three partners executes, in the firm name, with the consent of his copartners, a mortgage on land owned by one of the other partners, for the purpose of securing a partnership debt, such mortgage will be valid as against a party who, with actual notice thereof, takes a subsequent mortgage of the same property from the partner in whose name the title stands. Wilson v. Hunter, 80 D. 795.

40. By receiving or transferring negotiable paper, generally. — In all contracts concerning negotiable paper, the act of one partner binds all, even though he sign his individual name, if it appear on the face of the paper to be on partnership account, and to be intended to have a joint operation. Crozier v. Kirker, 51 D. 724.

A note assigned by one member of a partnership does not pass such an interest in it that the assignee can set it off in a suit on a bill single executed by himself to the assignor, who assigned it after maturity to the plaintiff. McIntire v. McLaurin, 36 D. 300.

The transfer by a partner of notes due the partnership in payment of an individual debt, at a time when the insolvency of the partnership was not known, does not indicate fraud. Huntton v. Dow, 70 D. 404.

Attorneys at law who are partners in the practice of their profession have no authority to bind the firm by becoming parties to negotiable instruments, unless such authority is given by the terms of partnership, or expressly given or recognized by both, or may be implied from the general habits of the partners in their business transactions. Friend v. Duryee, 35 R. 89.

The members of a firm engaged in the insurance, real estate, and collecting business have no implied power to bind each other by commercial paper in the name of the firm. Such power can only arise from consent, ratification, custom, or necessity. Deardorf v. Thacher, 47 R. 95.

41. By making a bill or note. — 1. In general. — Every partner has implied authority to bind his copartner by the making of notes and the drawing and accepting of bills for commercial purposes consistent with the object of the partnership; and to rebut this presumption of authority there must be proof of fraud, or a knowledge of the want of authority, or notice to the party seeking to charge the firm that the other partners would not be responsible for the acts of their copartners. Crozier v. Kirker, 51 D. 724.

Drawing, accepting, or indorsing bills or notes by one partner in the name of the firm or in their behalf renders all the firm liable to a bona fide holder, although the other partners were ignorant of the transaction. Flemming v. Prescott, 45 D. 766.

One partner has no authority in the name of the firm to guarantee the debts of others, nor to make or indorse notes or bills for the accommodation of others, unless such authority has been specially conferred, or may be inferred from the common course of business of the firm, or the previous course of dealing between the parties. Sweetser v. French, 48 D. 666.

Authority of a partner to make a guaranty, or to make or indorse notes or bills for the accommodation of others, need not be shown by direct positive proof, but may be inferred from the common course of the business of the firm, or the previous course of dealing between the parties. Ratification by the other partners may also be presumed from their acts or omissions after their knowledge of the act done in the name of the firm. Ib.

Actual knowledge that negotiable paper was given without consent of certain partners is a good defense to the non-consenting partners. Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown, 70 D. 142.

In an action against a firm on negotiable paper drawn and discounted by a partner in name of firm, it is not error to reject evidence showing that the partner having the paper discounted appropriated the proceeds to his own use. Ib.

In an action against a partnership, evidence having no tendency to disprove existence of partnership, as that the partners held the real estate used in their partnership transactions as tenants in common, or that the counsel of one of the partners advised him not to enter into the partnership, or that the partner having the paper discounted did not pay over to the other partner his proportion of the profits of the concern, is not admissible for that purpose. Id.

Whether a partner has revoked the implied authority of his copartner is a question of fact. Therefore, it was held in an action on a promissory note against two persons, as partners, that the fact that one of them was a dormant partner merely, and had refused to give a joint note with the other, did not necessarily constitute a revocation of the partner's implied authority, but was evidence only of such revocation. Leavitt v. Peck, 8 D. 157.

2. Bills, and orders for money. — A bill drawn by a partner contrary to the partnership agreement is binding on the firm, as against third persons taking it without notice of the agreement, if drawn in the firm name for a partnership demand. Bank of Rochester v. Montecuth, 43 D. 681.

A partner has no right, without consent of his copartner, to give an order in the firm name, to his own separate creditor, on a debtor of the partnership; and the fact that his copartner knew of such order before it was executed, and did not give notice of his dissent thereto, to such creditor, will not prevent the firm from recovering from him the amount of the order. McKinney v. Bright, 55 D. 512.

3. Promissory note — Firm liable. — A mercantile partnership is liable on a promissory note signed by one of its members, in the firm name, without the knowledge or consent of his copartners, although the note was given for the debt of a third person unconnected with the partnership business. Hawes v. Dunston, 19 D. 663.

A promissory note given by a person who is engaged with three others in manufacturing paper, for material which was used in making paper, is binding upon all of such persons, although it appears that the only authority the person had to sign such persons' names to said note was an agreement entered into by all of said parties, providing what each person should do in the management of said business, and the authority given to him who signed the note was "to collect the stock and market the paper." Doak v. Swan, 22 D. 233.

A note executed in the firm name by one member thereof is prima facie obligatory upon the firm, and it is incumbent upon a party denying the firm's liability to prove that it was not executed for the benefit of the firm or in its business. Hamilton v. Summers, 54 D. 609.

The fact that the payee believed that the borrowed money for which the note was given was to be applied to an individual purpose will not prevent the note from binding the firm, if the money borrowed was actually used for a partnership purpose. Id.

To bind a partner by a note drawn by a copartner in his own name, it must appear that such name was the style of the firm. Macklin v. Crutcher, 99 D. 680.

In an action against a firm upon its promissory note made by a partner, brought by a transferee from payee, — held, 1. That the presumption was that the note was for the benefit of the firm; 2. But defendants might show that it was made in fraud of the firm, to the knowledge of payee; and 3. That thereupon the presumption would be that the transferee was not a bona fide holder for value. Carrier v. Cameron, 18 R. 192.

4. — firm not liable. — A partner has no power to bind his copartners, without their assent, by signing the firm name as sureties on the note of a third person, and the burden is on the creditor to prove the assent. Foot v. Sabin, 10 D. 208.

A promissory note signed by a person in whose name a copartnership is carried on does not, although in the hands of an innocent holder, prima facie bind his copartners; and the burden of proving that the note was given for the use of the copartnership is upon the holder. Manufacturers' Bank v. Winslip, 16 D. 369.

A note given by one partner in his individual name cannot be enforced against the partnership, though made in consideration of property of which the firm had the benefit. Holmes v. Burton, 31 D. 621.

A debt is not paid by a note given by one of the partners, in the firm name, without authority. And the creditor may resort to his original cause of action, even after he has brought suit on the note, particularly if he was ignorant of the invalidity of the note at the time when he brought his action on it. Lee v. Fontaine, 44 D. 505.

A partner is not liable upon the individual note of a copartner given upon the purchase of goods for the use of the firm; though he may be liable upon the implied contract, unless the note was accepted in discharge of the partnership liability. Macklin v. Crutcher, 99 D. 680.

5. Two firms with common partner. — One who is a member of several firms may draw and indorse the same paper as the representative of each; and this is no ground for suspicion that his indorsement of the name of one firm is in bad faith to the other as maker of the note. Miller v. Consolidation Bank, 88 D. 475.

Where a partner in two firms made and indorsed, in the name of one of them, a note payable to its own order, and then indorsed the name of the other firm, there is nothing on the face of the paper to indicate that the note was not drawn by the first firm in their usual course of business in a partnership transaction with the second firm; and the bank discounting it is not put upon notice as to the good faith of the common partner in executing it by the mere fact that the note and indorsements are all in his handwriting. Ib.

A note made under the following circumstances was held to be the property of the firm, and not chargeable to the individual member who signed it; viz.: G. B. McFarland, the testator of defendant in error, and Brown, the plaintiff in error, were partners in a store under the firm name of McFarland & Co., and they were partners with one Caldwell in a smelting furnace, under the name of Phoenix Furnace. The latter firm owed the former firm one thousand two hundred dollars, which was represented by an individual note of McFarland, drawn in favor of Brown. Brown claimed a right to charge the whole of this note against McFarland's estate, but the claim was disallowed. Brown v. McFarland, 80 D. 598.

A., who was a member of the firm of M. & Co., and also of W. & Co., made his individual note to the order of W. & Co.; it was indorsed by W. & Co., and A. then indorsed it with the firm name of M. & Co., and it was put for negotiation for W. & Co., into the hands of a note-broker, who sold it to plaintiff. W. & Co. were in the vinegar business, and M. & Co. in a business not requiring the use of vinegar. Held, that these circumstances were not sufficient to put plaintiff on inquiry as to the character of the paper, and the fact that the indorsement of M. & Co. was in fraud of the firm did not relieve such firm from liability. Moorehead v. Gilmore, 18 R. 485.

6. Non-trading partnerships.—One partner can bind his copartners by note in the name of the firm in those partnerships only that are engaged in a trade or concern in which the issuing or transfer of bills is necessary or usual, unless express authority for the purpose is given. Lanier v. McCabe, 48 D. 173.

One partner in a non-trading partnership cannot bind his copartner by a bill or note drawn, accepted, or indorsed by him, in the name of the firm, not even for a debt which the firm owes, unless he have express authority therefor from his copartner, or unless the giving of such instrument is necessary to the carrying on of the firm business, or is usual in similar partnerships; and the burden is upon the holder of the note to prove such authority, necessity, or usage. Smith v. Sloan, 19 R. 757.

One member of a firm of attorneys cannot, without special authority, bind his copartner by a promissory note executed in the firm name, even though it be given for a firm debt, unless it affirmatively appear that it was necessary to the carrying on of the firm business, or was usual in similar partnerships. Ib.

One member of a partnership formed for conducting a theater has no implied power to bind his partner by a note in the firm name, in the absence of necessity, usage, or ratification; and the burden of proof is on the holder. Pease v. Cole, 55 R. 53.

42. By accepting a bill.—An acceptance by one member of a firm of a bill of exchange which represents a private debt of his own binds the firm, if the holder of the bill was ignorant of the nature of its consideration. Potter v. Dillon, 37 D. 185.

If one partner draws a bill of exchange on the firm in payment of his own individual debt, and accepts it in the name of the partners, without the consent or knowledge of his copartner, the other partner is not liable, and an action cannot be sustained against him upon such acceptance. Brown v. Duncanson, 1 D. 409.

A firm is bound by an acceptance in an agent's name, which it has adopted as a firm name by an agreement of the partners to do business under the name of such agent, where it does not appear that the agent was doing business also on his own account; but if that fact appears, it must be shown that he accepted the bill on account of the partnership, in order to bind it. Bank of Rochester v. Monteath, 43 D. 681.

A partnership is bound by the accommodation acceptance or indorsement of one partner in the name of the firm. Flemming v. Prescott, 45 D. 766.

Acceptance of a bill of exchange, drawn on a partnership, by one member of a firm, in his own name, does not bind the firm. One partner has general power to bind the firm, but only by use of the firm name. Heenan v. Nash, 83 D. 790.

An individual member of firm, who accepts bill of exchange, drawn upon the firm, in his own name, does not become individually liable, nor does he bind the firm. Ib.

43. By indorsing a bill or note.—Where partners are sued as indorsers, the indorsement being made by one of the firm, his copartner is not liable unless shown to be a party to the contract. Wilson v. Williams, 28 D. 518.

Notice that the indorsement was not on account of a partnership transaction will defeat the holder's right of recovery against the firm. Ib.

That the plaintiffs parted with their goods in the usual course of trade, and on the credit of the indorsement, will not help them. Ib.

In such case, the question involved is one of contract, not of fraud, and the holder of the paper is not entitled to have the question of fraud submitted to the jury. Ib.

To bind a partner by the unauthorized acts of a copartner, on the ground of assent, there must be more than slight and inconclusive evidence of such assent. Ib.

A partner's indorsement of the firm name for his private purposes, without the consent or knowledge of his copartners, will, after the note has passed to a bona fide holder, bind the firm; but not where the holder's ignorance that it was so indorsed without authority arises from his gross negligence. New York Fire Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 13 D. 109.

Where a partner indorses the firm name as surety for a third person, without the consent or knowledge of his copartners, the firm is not bound, and it lies with the indorsee to prove the partner's authority for so using the partnership name, and the mere fact that the indorsee had no knowledge, express or implied, of the partner's want of authority, will not be sufficient to charge the firm. New York Fire Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 13 D. 109; Andrews v. Planters' Bank, 45 D. 300.

Authority of a partner to bind his copartner by signing the partnership name to a note, as sureties of a third person, may be presumed from circumstances. Andrews v. Planters' Bank, 45 D. 300.

The presumption of authority in such a case, arising from the fact that such partner had been in the habit of using the firm name in such a mode, is rebutted by proof that such other partner was not the acting partner, and that when such a use of the firm name came to his knowledge, he denied that any such authority was reposed in his copartner. Id.

An accommodation indorsement of a bill by one member of a firm is not sufficient to charge the other member of the firm, in the absence of proof of an express or implied authority, independent of the authority conferred by the partnership. Chenoweth v. Chamberlin, 43 D. 145. And in such case the burden of proving the authority or consent of the copartner rests on the creditor or holder of the note. Hendrie v. Berkowitz, 99 D. 251; Sweetser v. French, 48 D. 666.

Where a third person finds a note, indorsed by a member of a firm in the firm name, in the hands of the maker, this is notice to him that the firm indorsement was for the accommodation of the maker. Hendrie v. Berkowitz, 99 D. 251.

44. By giving bill or note of firm for individual debt. — A note given in the name of a firm by one partner for his own private debts, and known to be so given by the person taking it, does not bind the other partners, unless they were previously consulted, and consented to the transaction. Lanier v. McCabe, 48 D. 173; Livingston v. Roosevelt, 4 D. 273; Taylor v. Hillyer, 26 D. 430.

Where one of two partners gives the firm note for his private debt, without the consent of his copartner, the latter is not bound thereby, even though the debt be for goods which have been subsequently applied to the use of the firm. Poindexter v. Waddy, 8 D. 749.

A subsequent verbal promise by one partner, to pay a note given by another for the latter's individual debt, is void under the statute of frauds. Taylor v. Hillyer, 26 D. 430.

Evidence of knowledge of a former abuse of the partnership signature, for private purposes, by a partner, on the part of a plaintiff suing on a note made in the firm name by such partner, and contested by the other partners as being made for the private use of such partner, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, is admissible as tending to show scienter. Eastman v. Cooper, 26 D. 600.

A partner's use of the firm name for a purpose entirely distinct from the partnership business is prima facie evidence that the act was unauthorized and a fraud upon the partnership, and such evidence must be rebutted by one seeking to hold the other partners bound by the contract, by showing their assent thereto. Eastman v. Cooper, 26 D. 600. S. P., Mechanics' etc. Ins. Co. v. Richardson, 39 R. 290.

All the partners are liable on a note indorsed in the firm name, though transferred by one partner for his individual benefit, if it is sued upon by an indorsee who shows that he acquired it before maturity and for value. Bank of St. Albans v. Gilliland, 35 D. 566. S. P., Bedlon v. Charchill, 40 R. 345.

A note of a firm given for a private debt of one partner is good against the firm in the hands of a bona fide holder; the right of the individual partner's creditor depending, however, on the consent of all the partners. Haldeman v. Bank of Middletown, 70 D. 142.

A partnership for the practice of medicine does not authorize one of the partners to bind the firm by a note given in the name of the partnership for money borrowed for the private and individual use of the partner by whom the note was given. Crosthwaite v. Ross, 34 D. 613.

A company formed to operate a steam saw-mill is not a partnership having the right to issue bills. And a note signed by one stockholder in such company, and by another indorsed over to the latter's creditor, in payment of his own individual debt, is, in effect, the note of those two stockholders only. Lanier v. McCabe, 48 D. 173.

A member of a publishing partnership executed his note for his individual debt, and indorsed it in the firm name to a bona fide holder. Held, that the firm were not prima facie liable upon it. Pooley v. Whitmore, 27 R. 733.

One member of a firm of livery-stable keepers cannot bind the firm by a note in the firm name for his private debt, in the absence of express authority, necessity, or custom. Levi v. Latham, 48 R. 361.

A partner made his promissory note and

* Partner's power to bind firm as surety on commercial paper, see note, 13 D. 115-118.

indorsed it in the firm name without his copartner's knowledge or consent, in payment of an individual debt to defendant, who took the note with knowledge of the facts, and in order to bind the firm, indorsed it before maturity to a bona fide holder for value. The note was paid out of the firm assets. Held, that defendant was guilty of a fraud for which he was liable in damages, but that the fraud was not upon the firm, but upon the individual partners, who did not consent to the indorsement of the note, and that the cause of action against the defendant did not pass to plaintiffs by a general assignment of the assets of the firm, or by a conveyance to plaintiffs of the firm interest of a partner injured by the fraud. Calkins v. Smith, 8 R. 575.

One partner, without the knowledge or consent of his copartners, and not in the partnership business, executed a promissory note in his individual name, and for his own benefit, adding the firm name under his own. There being a conflict of evidence whether the payee was informed, at the time of its negotiation, that it was an individual transaction, — held, that the jury might consider the circumstance that the note purported to be the partner's individual obligation, with the firm name underneath his own, in determining that disputed question of fact. Sherwood v. Snow, 26 R. 155.

45. By sealed instruments. — 1. Generally. — A partner has no power to bind his copartner by an instrument under seal, without special authority. Trimble v. Coons, 12 D. 411.

The law of partnership is part of the law merchant, which has respect exclusively to the business of commerce; and as sealed instruments do not ordinarily enter into such business, the authority of a partner does not extend to their execution. Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382.

The mere partnership relation will not authorize one partner to execute an instrument under seal, whereby a new and original obligation is created, which will be binding on the firm. McDonald v. Eggleston, 60 D. 203.

A sealed instrument signed by a partner with the firm name, even though given in a partnership transaction and for the partnership benefit, does not bind his copartners. Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382.

While as a general proposition one partner cannot bind another by deed, yet in the regular course of business, as in the execution of a charter-party, he may do so. Stratton v. Newell, 4 D. 705.

Where a partner undertakes to bind his copartners by an instrument in writing, without express authority, he will be personally liable on such contract. Skinner v. Dayton, 10 D. 286.

A sealed contract executed by one partner in the name of the firm, without previous authority or subsequent ratification by his copartner, does not bind the latter. Van Deusen v. Blum, 29 D. 582.

Such partners are liable on a quantum meruit and quantum valebat for labor and materials furnished to the firm before its dissolution, in attempted execution of such invalid contract, it being for a purpose within the scope of the partnership, though the work is not completed until after the dissolution. Id.

Partners executing under seal, in the name of the firm, an instrument which does not require to be sealed, does not render it void. It may be treated as a valid writing by parol. Tapley v. Butterfield, 35 D. 374.

A partner has no authority to bind his firm by an instrument under seal, even where the seal is not essential to the validity of the instrument. Schmertz v. Shreeve, 1 R. 439.

But where the contract is independent of the instrument, and has been executed on behalf of the firm, the making, for the purposes of evidence, of an instrument, under seal, by a partner, will not vitiate such contract. Id.

2. Bonds. — Money borrowed by a partner upon his individual credit, and for which he gives his separate bond, is not chargeable to the partnership, though it comes to its use. Willis v. Hill, 31 D. 412. Otherwise, however, if there be a dormant partner. North Penn. Coal Co.'s Appeal, 84 D. 487.

A bond given by one member of a firm for a partnership debt is binding only on the party executing the bond, and not on the partnership. McNaughton v. Partridge, 38 D. 731.

One partner cannot bind copartner by a forthcoming bond to which he has signed the latter's name without authority, and a statutory judgment on such bond is invalid as to the partner not signing. Doe v. Typper, 43 D. 483.

Where there is no antecedent debt, and the bond of one partner is taken, at the time money is loaned to a partnership, as the consideration for loaning the money, it can hardly be treated as a collateral security. It must be considered as all one transaction, and the bond is the only security contemplated in the absence of strong and positive evidence to show an agreement to the contrary by all the parties. North Penn. Coal Co.'s Appeal, 84 D. 487.

Where a partner buys real estate in his own name and gives his individual bonds and mortgage in part payment therefor, the firm is not liable to the seller for the unpaid purchase-money, though it appears by the firm books that the land was bought on firm account, and a declaration of trust was afterwards executed by the purchaser, but not recorded, declaring that the money paid was partnership funds, and that the land was held by him in trust as partnership property Id.

In a bond given for the purpose of obtaining a dissolution of an attachment of partnership property, both partners were named as principals, but the bond was executed by only one of them, in the name of the firm. Held, that it could not be enforced against a surety without proof of the assent of the other partner to its execution. Russell v. Annable, 12 R. 665.

3. Deeds. — One partner cannot execute a deed in the firm name so as to bind his copartner. Gerard v. Basse, 1 D. 226; Robinson v. Crowder, 17 D. 762; Doe v. Tupper, 43 D. 483.

An assignment by one partner, by deed, of all the interest of the firm in a bond, passes the firm's right. Morse v. Bellows, 28 D. 372.

Deeds professing to transfer property of an absent partner, or to incur liabilities, are regarded as absolutely void as against the partner who did not join, but valid as to those who sign. Doe v. Tupper, 43 D. 483.

A partner may bind his copartner by deed, if the deed conveys only such property as could be conveyed without the deed. Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526.

The execution of a deed purporting to be executed by a partnership, but acknowledged by one of the firm alone, is not proved unless a previous authorization or subsequent ratification by his copartners is shown. Shirley v. Fearn, 69 D. 375.

Partner's power to bind copartners by deed discussed, arguendo. Worrall v. Munn, 55 D. 330.

4. Various other instruments. — If one partner execute a deed of release under his hand and seal, in the firm name, of a debt due the firm, it extinguishes the debt, and the release is binding on the firm. Pierce v. Hooker, 3 D. 467.

A mortgage given to three partners to secure payment of a debt due the firm may be transferred by an assignment of such debt, executed by one of the partners in the name of the firm. And the fact that a seal is appended to the name of the firm does not invalidate the assignment. Dubois's Appeal, 80 D. 478.

One partner may bind the partnership by a sealed note executed in the firm name, for a loan of money for the partnership business, so far at least as to warrant a recovery under the common counts, by bringing in the instrument to be canceled. Walek v. Lennon, 38 R. 75.

A partnership formed to continue until a certain date leased premises for a term to expire at the same date, and made valuable improvements thereon. During the term one partner, without the knowledge of the others, took a renewal of the lease in his own name for a term to begin at the expiration of the partnership term. Held, that the new lease inured to the benefit of the firm, and that the partner was in equity a trustee of the lease for the partnership. Mitchell v. Reed, 19 R. 252.

5. Previous authority, or subsequent ratification. — One partner or member of an association cannot execute a deed or writing under seal so as to bind his copartners without express authority therefor; but such authority may be given by parol. However, if by their subsequent acts the copartners ratify a contract made without such authority, they will be compelled to contribute ratably to any damages that may have been recovered at law on such contract against the partner executing it. Skinner v. Dayton, 10 D. 286.

A partner present and assenting to the execution of a sealed instrument by his copartner in the firm name is bound thereby. Fitchthorn v. Boyer, 30 D. 300; Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382. Such presence and assent may be proved by any evidence satisfactory to the jury, such as the admissions of the party. Fitchthorn v. Boyer, 30 D. 300. S. P., McDonald v. Eggleston, 60 D. 303.

Circumstances, if tending to show previous authority or subsequent ratification by copartners of a partner's act in executing an instrument under seal in the name of the firm, should be submitted to the jury. McDonald v. Eggleston, 60 D. 303.

One may adopt a seal affixed by another, without his authority, or even against his will, and by delivery make the instrument his deed. Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382.

One partner may, by virtue of parol authority from his copartners, bind them by an instrument under seal, although as a general rule an authority to bind another by an instrument under seal must itself be created by a like instrument. Wilson v. Hunter, 80 D. 795. Contra, see Hart v. Withers, 21 D. 382; Turbeville v. Ryan, 34 D. 622.

A partner may bind his copartner by contract under seal, in the name and for the use of the firm, in the course of the partnership business, if the copartner assents to the contract before its execution, or afterwards ratifies and adopts it; and such assent or adoption may be by parol. Bond v. Aitkin, 40 D. 550. S. P., Cady v. Shepherd, 22 D. 379; Price v. Alexander, 52 D. 526; Drumright v. Philpot, 60 D. 738; McDonald v. Eggleston, 60 D. 303.

46. By confession of judgment. — A confession of judgment by one partner binds him, but not his copartner. Bitzer v. Shunk, 37 D. 469; North v. Mudge, 81 D. 441.

Fraud upon the partnership by one of two partners will be relieved against in a court of equity. So where a partner gave notes in the name of the firm, and afterwards confessed judgment thereon, equity will relieve the copartner from such judgment, it appearing that he had no knowledge of the proceedings until the judgment had been obtained. Morgan v. Scott, 12 D. 35.

A partner has no authority to confess judgment for his copartner, either before or after dissolution; and where judgment is so confessed after dissolution by one partner, it will be set aside as against the copartner, and an execution against him will be quashed. Morgan v. Richardson, 57 D. 235.

47. By admissions or declarations.* — The answer and admission of one partner upon process of garnishment, where both have been regularly served with process, will bind the other. Anderson v. Wanner 37 D. 170.

An admission of one partner that he has no right of action is competent evidence to show the fact admitted by him. Cochran v. Crenshaw, 50 D. 186.

Acknowledgment or part payment of a debt by one partner amounts to a promise binding on the firm. Burgan v. Lyell, 55 D. 53.

A partner's declarations are evidence against the copartner in an action against the latter upon a partnership liability. Fickett v. Swift, 66 D. 214.

Where the authority of an agent or partner depends upon some fact outside the terms of his power, and which, from its nature, rests peculiarly within his knowledge, his principal or firm is bound by his representation, though false, as to the existence of such fact. Griswold v. Haven, 82 D. 360.

Where one of a firm of warehousemen falsely represented to a person who advanced money on the faith of such representation that he had on storage with the firm a certain quantity of grain, the innocent partners were held bound by such representation and by the firm receipts given by the former for such money, and responsible therefor. Id.

Where a partner falsely represented that he had grain on storage with his firm of warehousemen, and sold the same, giving the firm receipt for the price, the purchaser suing for conversion of the grain was entitled to recover, though evidence was improperly received which showed that the grain never had existence. Id.

A payment on a joint and several promissory note, by one of the makers, who were partners when they signed the note, will take it out of the statute of limitations as to the others, if the note is a partnership debt and the payment is made out of partnership funds, although the partners had discontinued the partnership style and were conducting the business as a corporation at the time of such payment; and parol evidence is admissible to show these facts. Mix v. Shattuck, 23 R. 511.

Acts and declarations of a partner actually engaged in a transaction in his own name do not bind the partnership so as to affix a liability upon it. Lockwood v. Beckwith, 72 D. 69.

48. By entries in books of account. — Entries made in books of a partnership, to which plaintiff had no access, are not binding upon him. Folt v. Wilson, 83 D. 599.

49. By receiving payment. — Payment to a partner is payment to the firm, unless expressly forbidden by the other partners. Gregg v. James, 12 D. 151.

Receipt of money by an agent is prima facie evidence of its receipt by the principal; and its receipt by a partner is prima facie evidence that it was received for the benefit and use of the firm. Simons v. Vulcan Oil & M. Co., 100 D. 623.

50. By compromising firm claim. — Where one of two partners releases a debt due the partnership, though he has no authority to release more than his own moiety of the debt, the debt is, however, discharged. Salmon v. Davis, 5 D. 410.

51. By assignment for benefit of creditors.* — An assignment under seal, of the effects of the firm, by one or more of the partners for the payment of the firm debts, binds the rest. Robinson v. Crowder, 17 D. 762.

Whether one of the partners, during the existence of the partnership, may, against the consent of his copartners, assign the partnership effects in the name of the firm for the payment of a firm debt, whereby a preference is created, quære. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

Either of the partners before the dissolution of the firm, or all of them afterwards, may appropriate the partnership funds to the payment of one creditor in preference to another. Id.

A deed of assignment executed by one partner only cannot be avoided on that ground, when the property has been delivered to the assignee. Hennessy v. Western Bank, 40 D. 560.

One partner has no implied authority to make a general assignment of the partnership property for the benefit of the partnership creditors, and such assignment is void, unless the other partners are absent or incapable of expressing assent or dissent. Loeb v. Pierpoint, 43 R. 122. But their subsequent ratification will make it effectual except as to persons who have acquired rights immediately. Coleman v. Darling, 57 R. 253.

Where one partner absconds, leaving the partnership insolvent, the other may make a general assignment of the partnership property, including lands, for the benefit of creditors. Sullivan v. Smith, 48 R. 354.

* Assignment for benefit of creditors, whether one partner may make, see note, 45 R. 356-361. See also ASSIGNMENTS, etc., §.

* See also EVIDENCE, 144.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

An assignment by partners which stipulates for a release is invalid, unless it transfers the separate estate of each of the partners, and this although it may not affirmatively appear that the partner who failed to execute the deed of assignment had any separate property. Hennessey v. Western Bank, 40 D. 560; Wilson's Accounts, 45 D. 701.

An express ratification of the assignment by the partner who did not sign the deed at the time of its execution by the other members of the firm can, if made after the expiration of the time given for the execution of releases, have no operation whatever as against creditors who did not choose to accept the terms proposed in the assignment. Wilson's Accounts, 45 D. 701.

52. By submission to arbitration. — Though one partner cannot bind his copartner, by a writing under seal, to submit to an award, yet if after the award is made such partner accepts the amount awarded and indorses a receipt in full on the award, it bars the copartnership claim, being in the nature of a release, or an accord and satisfaction. Buchanan v. Curry, 10 D. 200.

53. By wrongful acts, frauds, etc. — 1. Negligence. — Where physicians are in partnership, all are liable in damages for the professional negligence of one of the firm. Hyrne v. Erwin, 55 R. 15; Whittaker v. Collins, 57 R. 55.

2. Fraud. — For the fraud or deceit of one partner within the scope of his general partnership authority, the partnership is liable in damages. Locke v. Stearns, 35 D. 382.

Acts of one partner in effecting a fraudulent purchase of lands at sheriff's sale is binding on all the partners. Blight v. Tobin, 18 D. 219.

A partner cannot maintain trespass against a purchaser from copartner of all the partnership goods, though the sale was made in fraud of his rights; the remedy in such a case is in equity. Wells v. Mitchell, 35 D. 757.

Members of a partnership firm are answerable for a false warranty made by one of such members, in a sale of partnership property, within the scope of his authority; and they are equally liable for a fraud under the same circumstances, especially where they share in the profits. Morehouse v. Northrop, 89 D. 211.

A partner who receives and participates in use or sale of goods obtained by fraud of copartner will be held to have adopted the fraudulent act, and will be placed in the same situation in reference to the rights of the vendors of the goods as if he had directed his copartner to procure them, or had originally concurred with him in the transaction. Jacobs v. Shorey, 97 D. 586.

A partner on a note signed by the firm by means of a forged indorsement, of which his copartner was ignorant, obtained money from a bank, which was placed to the credit of the firm. Before the maturity of the note it was discovered that the indorsement was forged. Held, that the amount could be recovered immediately, in an action which would well lie against both partners. Manufacturers' Bank v. Gore, 8 D. 83.

N. and S. jointly owned a chattel, and agreed that N. should take possession and sell it for their joint benefit. N. did so, and sold it by means of false and fraudulent representations, dividing the profits equally with S. Held, in an action against both for the fraud, by the vendee, that both were liable, although the representations were made in the absence of S., there being no proof that he, on learning that they had been made, had repudiated the contract, or had ever offered to restore any part of the consideration. And the liability of the defendants would have been the same had they been regarded as partners. Morehouse v. Northrop, 89 D. 211.

Defendants entered into a written agreement to purchase, lease, and take refusals of lands on their joint account, and to sell, lease, or work the lands so obtained, all losses, expenses, gains, and profits to be divided equally among the parties to the agreement. There was evidence that this agreement had previously been in existence by parol. R., one of the defendants, represented to plaintiffs that the lands were oil-producing, whereas the indications of oil had been produced by petroleum poured on the lands through the connivance of J., another of the defendants. R. was cognizant of the fraud, but it did not appear that D., another defendant, knew of it. Plaintiffs purchased the lands, and after discovering the fraud, brought an action against defendants. Held, that the agreement entered into by defendants was a partnership, and was valid even when existing by parol; also that D. was liable with J. and R. for their fraudulent acts and representations in the transaction of the partnership enterprise. Chester v. Dickerson, 13 R. 550.

3. Conversion. — Conversion committed by one partner, of property which has been delivered to him for purposes connected with the business of the partnership, is deemed to be the act of the firm, unless repudiated by the other partners. Nisbet v. Patton, 26 D. 122.

The refusal by one partner to deliver goods upon demand, which have been received by the firm, is evidence of a conversion by all the partners. Holbrook v. Wight, 35 D. 607.

4. Other torts. — Partners are liable for a tort committed by one of their number, or by his servant or agent, in the prosecution of the partnership business. Champion v. Bostwick, 31 D. 376.

Partners are individually liable for tortious acts of the firm, its agents and servants, and a partner may be sued therefor individually. Stockton v. Frey, 45 D. 138.

One partner is not chargeable with the tort of his copartner, done without his knowledge, when the wrongful act was wholly unconnected with the partnership business, but where it is connected with the business of the firm, and incident to it as the business is carried on, the tort of one partner is considered the joint and several tort of all, and the partner doing the act is considered as the agent of the other partners. Heirn v. McCaugham, 66 D. 588.

One partner is not liable for a malicious prosecution by his copartner, where he did not know of or consent to it, and it did not benefit the firm. Rosenkrans v. Barker, 56 R. 169.

2. What Acts of One Partner will Release the Firm.

54. In general. — A discharge of one partner by proceedings in insolvency does not release the others. Russell v. Rogers, 13 D. 326.

Payment by a partner, under a compromise, of a specific sum in satisfaction of a partnership debt, discharges it, and it cannot be kept alive by an agreement between the creditor and the paying partner to enable the latter to collect it from his copartner. Le Page v. McOrea, 19 D. 469.

A partner may pay a debt of his firm out of his individual property, even at the expense of his individual creditors. Gallagher's Appeal, 60 R. 350.

55. Individual note for firm debt.* — The acceptance of the note of one partner for a firm debt, and balancing the firm accounts therewith, does not release the firm. Patashall v. Aphorp, 1 D. 3.

Where a partner gave his individual note, taking up a promissory note issued by the firm the firm liability is thereby discharged. Arnold v. Camp, 7 D. 328; Crooker v. Crooker, 63 D. 509.

The individual note of one partner given to a firm creditor, and payable at the maturity of the firm debt, is merely a promise by one partner to pay the firm debt, is not a collateral security for the debt, and the creditor is not barred for suing the firm because of his laches in not collecting the note before the maker's insolvency. Tyner v. Stoops, 71 D. 341.

Admission by a firm creditor that by taking individual notes of one partner he had discharged the firm is not evidence of an agreement to discharge the firm, when made after the maker's insolvency, and indicating his own conclusion as to the effect of his taking the note. Id.

Taking the individual note of one member of a firm for the price of goods sold the firm does not exempt the other member from liability therefor, unless there was an agreement and understanding to that effect. Folk v. Wilson, 83 D. 599.

Where the partners are all known, and the existence of the partnership brought home to those dealing with them, the latter may take the individual credit of any member of the firm if they so choose. Parties have a right to make their own contracts, to assume extraordinary liabilities, or to take inferior securities where they might have insisted on greater ones. Richardson v. Farmer, 88 D. 129.

A partner is exonerated, if an individual note of a copartner is accepted as a merger and discharge of the partnership liability. Mackin v. Crutcher, 99 D. 680.

A creditor of a dissolved partnership accepted the note of one of the partners for a portion of his demand, in discharge of the maker from liability for the partnership debt. Held, an effectual release. Luddington v. Bell, 33 R. 601.

56. Personal bond for firm debt. — A bond given by one partner for a simple contract debt due to a creditor of the firm, and accepted by him, is, in law, a release of the other partner, and an extinction of the simple contract debt at law and in equity. Williams v. Hodgson, 3 D. 563.

Such a bond, although not binding on the party who does not join in its execution, is, however, obligatory on the one executing it. Id.

The bond of one partner, taken at the time money is loaned to the partnership, and as the consideration for such loan, is an extinguishment of the debt, and not a collateral security. Bond v. Aitkin, 40 D. 550.

III. SUITS BETWEEN PARTNERS.

57. In general.* — An assignment of all partnership demands to one of the firm, including a claim against such assignor, does not entitle the firm to sue such assignor. Burley v. Harris, 29 D. 650.

A partner in a single adventure or transaction to be performed for a stipulated price has an action of assumpsit for his share against the other partner, who has received the whole sum due after the work was finished, and it is not necessary to resort to account render. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 55 D. 585.

An indorsement of a note payable to a firm, or order, by one partner in his individual name, does not authorize the other partner to sue thereon in his own name. Estabrook v. Smith, 66 D. 443.

58. Suit at law, generally. — No action at law lies by one partner against another where there has been no settlement of the partnership accounts, and no promise by the defendant to pay the balance struck. Mur- ray v. Bogert, 7 D. 486; Course v. Prince, 12 D. 649; Dana v. Gill, 20 D. 255; Burley v. Harris, 29 D. 650; Graham v. Holt, 40 D. 408; Bonnaffe v. Fenner, 45 D. 278.

One partner has no right to sue his copartner at law, to pay his portion of a contribution. Kennedy v. McFaddon, 5 D. 434; Lawrence v. Clark, 35 D. 133.

A partnership cannot sue one of its members at law. Burley v. Harris, 29 D. 650.

An action at law cannot be sustained by a partnership against one of its members for advances made to the latter by the firm. Thompson v. Steamboat J. D. Morton, 59 D. 653.

One partner cannot maintain an action at law against the other to recover a sum of money advanced by him to be invested, under an agreement before witnesses that the profits arising from the investment, if any, should be shared equally by the partners, and in the absence of proof that the money advanced was a loan, or that the partnership was limited to any part of the adventure, or that it was limited to any particular time, or that it was dissolved. The remedy is by bill in equity for an account on dissolution, and decree for any balance found due. Neubrau v. Snider, 88 D. 667.

A partner may sue at law a copartner for the excess contributed over and above his proportion of the joint stock. Bumpass v. Webb, 18 D. 34.

An exception to the rule that a partner cannot sue his copartner for a sum of money due on account of the partnership exists where the sum of money sought to be recovered is separated from the partnership account. Bonnaffe v. Fenner, 45 D. 278.

The making of a promissory note by several partners in favor of another partner is an acknowledgment of the separation of the sum from the partnership account, and such partner may recover at law against his copartners upon it. Id.

One partner can maintain an action at law against another partner for a breach of the partnership agreements, and need not join other partners as defendants if they have sold out before the cause of action arose. Vance v. Blair, 51 D. 467.

A partner may sue his copartner at law for damages caused by his willfully dissolving the partnership before the expiration of the term fixed by the articles for its continuance. Bagley v. Smith, 61 D. 756.

Damages recoverable by one partner for his copartner's wrongful dissolution of the partnership include anticipated profits for the residue of the term fixed by the articles. Id.

A partner cannot maintain an action of account render against his two copartners jointly, without showing joint liability to account. Portsmouth v. Donaldson, 72 D. 782.

Two partners cannot maintain a joint action of account against a third to recover their share of the net profits received by him, in the absence of an independent promise or of an adjustment of the partnership matters. Farrar v. Pearson, 8 R. 439.

Assumpsit will not lie by one partner against a copartner, as a general rule, it seems, in respect to any matter connected with the partnership transactions, or which involves the consideration of their partnership dealings. Bruce v. Hastings, 96 D. 592.

That there are outstanding debts does not necessarily defeat an action of assumpsit by one partner against another, as the plaintiff may show that these debts are incapable of collection. Williams v. Henshaw, 23 D. 614.

But where a new trial is granted for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to prove that the outstanding debts are not collectible, he cannot assume that all the debts had been paid, and on this theory recover the balance stated. Id.

On articles of partnership, the partner's remedy for violation of covenants therein contained is in covenant. Dana v. Gill, 20 D. 255.

An action at law lies for breach of an agreement to form a partnership. An action at law lies for breach of a covenant in a partnership agreement, where the damages belong exclusively to the partner claiming, and can be assessed without an accounting of the business. Hill v. Palmer, 43 R. 703; Duncan v. Lyon, 8 D. 513.

59. Action at law for balance due. — Assumpsit between partners will lie, generally, where, after a balance struck, a partner has promised to pay. Dana v. Gill, 20 D. 255.

No express promise to pay such balance is essential. These principles were applied between part owners of a vessel which had been engaged in a whaling voyage. Fanning v. Chadwick, 15 D. 233.

In Massachusetts this principle extends to all cases in which the rendition of the judgment will be an entire termination of the partnership transactions. Rule is not inapplicable because of debts due the firm, if it be shown that the debts are not collectible, or that the plaintiff has assigned them to the defendant; but the assignment must be before action brought. Williams v. Henshaw, 22 D. 366.

After dissolution of the partnership, where there has been no settlement, and no agreement with or notice to his partner, a copartner cannot, by assuming all the outstanding debts, maintain assumpsit for any balance which may be due. Williams v. Henshaw, 23 D. 614.

When a settlement has been had and a balance struck, an action at law will lie for recovery of such balance, but as to matters of partnership account subsequently accruing ing, a settlement can only be compelled by suit in chancery. De Jarnette v. McQueen, 68 D. 164.

A partner has a lien on partnership realty for a balance found due him from his copartner upon a settlement at a dissolution of the firm, and such lien takes precedence of an assignment for creditors made by his copartner. Roberts v. McCarty, 68 D. 604.

The mere fact that a partnership once existed does not, it seems, render void a judgment obtained in the county court of Illinois by the administrator of one partner against the administrator of the other. If the defendant chose to submit to the jurisdiction, the power of the court to pronounce a judgment for the balance it might find due cannot be denied on the ground that that court has no jurisdiction in matters of partnership. Gild v. Bailey, 92 D. 190.

60. Right to relief in equity. — One partner may sue the other for his share of the profits, during the continuance of the partnership, if the articles thereof provide for a division of profits before its determination. Rondeau v. Pedesclaux, 23 D. 463.

Where an agreement had been made for a partnership between plaintiff and defendant, by which defendant was to contribute an amount of money and plaintiff only his services, — held, that an action would not lie to compel the performance of the agreement. Buck v. Smith, 18 R. 84.

61. Suits to compel accounting, generally. — Equity will not entertain a bill for an account, even between partners, when the transaction is plain and simple, not involving a statement of complicated partnership accounts, and having no feature taking it out of the jurisdiction of a court of law. Lesley v. Eosson, 77 D. 679.

A bill for an account between partners will not lie for the breach of a particular stipulation of the articles of partnership, for which an adequate remedy at law by recovery of damages exists. Kinloch v. Hamlin, 27 D. 441.

When an illegal partnership enterprise has been completed, one partner cannot refuse to account to the other for the profits on the ground of the illegality of the partnership objects. Pfeuffer v. Malby, 38 R. 631.

One partner may be compelled to account to his copartners for profits derived from clandestine dealing with third parties in fraud or to the disadvantage of the copartners. Kilbourn v. Latta, 60 R. 373.

A former partner is not a necessary party in a suit between the partners for an accounting, when he has sold out all interest in the firm. Hoswell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376.

A bill in equity by one partner against one of his copartners for an account, alleging that the other partners are not within the jurisdiction of the court, that they have received their full share of the partnership effects, that the defendant has received more than his share and the complainant less, is not demurrable for a non-joinder of the other partners. Towle v. Pierce, 46 D. 679.

A bill for an account between partners may be maintained, in a proper case, without a prayer for dissolution. Pirle v. Penn, 28 D. 70.

A partner cannot have a partial account, but accounts between partners must embrace all partnership transactions. Baird v. Baird, 31 D. 399.

A bill in equity need not state with as much certainty and particularity the facts of the case, where it alleges that the complainant and defendant are copartners; that the defendant has all the partnership books in his possession and under his control, and refuses to permit the complainant to examine them, and prays for an account, as would be necessary if the complainant had access to the books. Towle v. Pierce, 46 D. 679.

Evidence of profits realized during the continuance of a partnership may be received, as aiding to estimate profits which would have been realized thereafter had the firm been continued. Bagley v. Smith, 61 D. 756.

An agreement for dissolution of a partnership between A, B, and C provided that A should continue the business, paying B and C for their respective interests, for the arbitration of disputes, and for an account of stock. This account was taken, and certain goods, supposed to belong to a third party, were excluded. Arbitrators were selected, and decided all matters of difference, but the question about those goods was not submitted to them. A settled with B and C on the basis of that account. In a subsequent dispute between the partners and the third party, the referee to whom it was submitted decided that a large portion of those goods belonged to the late firm. Held, that the account was not conclusive; that B and C might show that those goods were the property of the firm; that the award of the arbitrators was no bar; that A could not prove his readiness and willingness to refer this claim to the arbitrators; and that the award, and the personal testimony of the referee that the ownership of those goods was in dispute before, and decided by him, were admissible. Evans v. Clapp, 25 R. 52.

62. Injunction. — Specific execution of a partnership contract will be decreed by a court of equity, which will sometimes enjoin a partner from persisting in conduct jeopardizing the rights or derogating from the authority of his copartner. Pirle v. Penn, 28 D. 70.

An order granting an injunction restraining defendant from collecting debts, making sales, etc., is proper in a suit for a dissolution and an accounting by one partner against his copartner, upon motion made, without notice, if the circumstances shown are such that the giving of notice might in all probability "accelerate the injury." Allen v. Hawley, 63 D. 198.

63. Receiver. — A receiver will be appointed by chancery to settle up the affairs of a partnership whenever it is made to appear, by a bill filed by one partner, that there is a breach of duty or a violation of the agreement of partnership on the part of the others. Allen v. Hawley, 63 D. 198.

Chancery has no power to appoint a receiver to carry on the business of a copartnership. Such power would not be intended by an order "to take charge of the steamer Quincy, to prevent injuries, . . . to repair said boat so as to put her in condition for sale, or such disposition of her as may be ordered by the parties, or as the court may order. The expense of repair, and the like, to be repaid by proper use of said boat." Id.

A court of equity, in a suit between partners, will not appoint a receiver, or provide for interim management of the partnership, when there is no prayer for a dissolution. Pirtle v. Penn, 28 D. 70.

The disposition of a fund in the hands of a receiver, in a suit to dissolve a partnership and distribute its assets, cannot be affected by any action of the parties to the suit so as to deprive the court of power to control it. Adams v. Haskell, 65 D. 491.

A partnership receiver, appointed in a suit by a representative of a deceased partner against the surviving partner to compel a settlement of the affairs of the partnership, and the application of its property to its debts, is an officer of the court, invested with the whole equitable title to the firm assets without an assignment; represents, in any suit affecting the partnership property, the interests therein of all parties to the suit in which he was appointed, if not of persons who are not parties; is clothed with all the rights and equities of the deceased partner for the purposes of his trust; and may sue, without leave, in this country, to obtain possession of the partnership property for the purpose of applying it to the partnership debts, and need not, on a bill filed for that purpose, join the representative of the deceased partner as a party. Tillinghast v. Champlin, 67 D. 510.

64. What are proper charges and credits. — Where one partner holds exclusive possession of the partnership property, and refuses to let in the other partner, he will be accountable in a court of equity to such partner or his grantee for one half the rents and profits of the property so withheld. Adams v. Kable, 44 D. 772.

Where one partner occupies, with his family, premises belonging to the firm, he is justly chargeable, at the dissolution of the partnership, with the reasonable rent thereof, although there was no special agreement to that effect. Holden v. Peace, 45 D. 514.

Advances to the firm and advances from it to one of its members do not constitute debts, strictly speaking, but are only items in the account between the partners in the winding up of the concern. Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573.

In taking a partnership account upon dissolution, the capital stock should not be taken into account until a balance is struck, and then, if there is any fund on hand, each should be allowed to withdraw his capital, or a ratable part of it. Phelan v. Hutchinson, 93 D. 602.

In taking such account debts due from one of the partners to the firm should not be deducted out of the assets of the firm. They should be deducted out of the portion coming to him after a balance has been struck. Id.

Upon the settlement of a partnership, where two partners are equal in interest, one half of any balance of loss or profit is the extent of the liability of one to the other, after having first applied the partnership assets to the exoneration of the partnership liabilities; and as to individual transactions, the whole balance is the amount of the indebtedness of one to the other. Chambers v. Crook, 94 D. 637.

A partner who neglects and refuses, without reasonable cause, to perform personal services which he has stipulated to render the partnership, is liable to account to the firm for the value of the services in the settlement of the partnership accounts. Marsh's Appeal, 8 R. 206.

Where several persons entered into articles of agreement, forming a partnership, and one of the partners, by verbal agreement, assumed to render certain services which he neglected to perform, — held, that he was chargeable with the value of his services on the settlement of the firm accounts. Id.

A statement of partnership accounts, prepared by clerks to aid in a settlement between the partners, is prima facie evidence, binding as to items mutually assented to at the time, but not as to disputed items. Rehill v. McTague, 60 R. 341.

65. When interest will be allowed. — In the settlement of partnership accounts between partners, there is no general rule as to interest, but the allowance or refusal thereof depends upon the circumstances of each case. Gyger's Appeal, 1 R. 382.

A partner who has advanced money to the firm is entitled to interest thereon from the time of the advancement. Hodges v. Parker, 44 D. 331.

A partner receiving monthly rents is

* Partner, when may be charged with interest in partnership account, see note, 45 D. 518-520. See also INTEREST, 2.

chargeable with interest from date of receipt until paid over to the partnership. Lafan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

Where, in settling up the accounts of a dissolved partnership, interest is charged upon notes and accounts upon a wrong principle, the calculation will not be disturbed if no substantial injury is done. Phelan v. Hutchinson, 93 D. 602.

66. When it will not be. — One partner cannot be charged interest on a balance due by him each year, unless there has been a special agreement to that effect. Holden v. Pease, 45 D. 514.

In the absence of a special agreement, interest cannot be charged on a partnership account, except upon a balance due at the time of the dissolution of the firm, and until a settlement of the accounts be made. Id.

A partner advancing funds will not be allowed compound interest. Lafan v. Naglee, 70 D. 678.

67. Right to compensation for special services. — One partner cannot maintain an action against his copartner for personal services rendered for the copartnership. Causten v. Burke, 18 D. 297.

A partner is not entitled to compensation for services in conducting the partnership business, beyond his share of the profits, unless there is a stipulation to that effect. Anderson v. Taylor, 38 D. 689; Reynold v. Dodd, 26 D. 401.

A partner may recover compensation for his services in the firm business if there was an implied agreement therefor. Emerson v. Durand, 54 R. 593.

68. — or capital. — An express promise from one partner to another in respect to contributing to the common stock or making advances thereto may be enforced in an action at law, but an implied promise cannot. Townsend v. Gooley, 32 D. 514.

Assumpsit may be maintained by one partner of a ship against another, to recover the excess contributed by him in building the ship, over and above his share, although there has been no liquidation of their accounts, nor balance ascertained, nor any express promise to pay such excess. Marshall v. Winslow, 25 D. 264.

IV. DISSOLUTION.

1. How a Partnership may be Dissolved.

69. In general. — Although one partner exaggerated the value of property which he put into the firm as capital, this is no ground of dissolution. So of discourtesy to customers, not causing any serious injury. Where unfriendly relations are alleged, they must be so serious as to prevent the success of the business, and the complainant must himself be without fault. Gerard v. Gateau, 25 R. 438.

70. By act of the parties. — To dissolve a partnership at will, in equity, two things are necessary: 1. The renunciation of the partnership must be in good faith; and 2. It must be made at a reasonable time. Howell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376.

A partner cannot dissolve a firm during the absence and without the knowledge of the other partner, when the latter was absent with the consent of the dissolving partner. Id.

Dissolution of a partnership is not produced by the voluntary absence or absconding of one of the partners. Arnold v. Brown, 35 D. 296.

An order of sale of partnership property upon a dissolution of the partnership will be made by a court of chancery where there is no provision for its disposition in the partnership agreement. Allen v. Hawley, 63 D. 198.

A transaction whereby managing members of an embarrassed firm unite in forming a manufacturing corporation under the general law, and then transfer to it the property of the partnership, is fraudulent as to existing creditors, and the property so transferred may be taken in execution as that of the former firm; the creditors of the new corporation have no priority of claim to the property in its possession. Booth v. Bunce, 88 D. 372.

It is in the power of one partner at any time to withdraw, and thus cause a technical dissolution of the firm, subject to liability to his copartners if the act was wrongful. Stemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 255.

71. By death. — Death, as a general rule, dissolves a partnership. Powell v. North, 56 D. 513.

The effect of dissolution of partnership by death of one of the members is to vest the legal title to the choses in action and the debts in the surviving partners as joint tenants under the law merchant. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

Death of a partner does not terminate the employment of an agent of the firm, hired by express contract, for a definite period, so as to defeat his claim for compensation for the full period. Ferreira v. Sayres, 40 D. 496.

72. By bankruptcy or insolvency. — The bankruptcy of one partner dissolves the copartnership, and the assignee of the bankrupt and the insolvent partner become tenants in common or joint owners of the partnership property, and must unite in suits respecting the same. Halsey v. Norton, 7 R. 745.

Insolvency of one or of both partners does not operate as a dissolution of the firm, though perhaps this result would follow from such bankruptcy or legal insolvency as

* See monographic note on the causes for and effect of dissolution, 98 D. 260-271.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

results in an assignment of all the insolvent's effects. Arnold v. Brown, 35 D. 296.

Insolvency does not of itself work dissolution of partnership, nor divest partners of their authority over firm property. Siegel v. Chidecy, 70 D. 124.

73. By assignment of interest. — If a partner, in contemplation of insolvency, dissolves the partnership by a general assignment of his interest and property in the firm, makes an assignment of his individual property, and authorizes the assignee to dispose of the same, and pay the proceeds over to his individual creditors, the funds in the assignee's hands must be distributed pro rata among his own creditors and those of the firm from which he has retired. Miller v. Metill, 67 D. 305.

Where a partner, in contemplation of insolvency, has dissolved the partnership by assignment to a trustee, and the partnership property is by agreement divided between the retiring partner and his associates so as to leave the property as it was before the partnership, on consideration that the remaining copartners will pay the partnership debts; and the copartners form a firm of their own, but in contemplation of their own insolvency assign all their own individual and partnership property to a trustee, with directions to pay the partnership debts, — the funds in the hands of the trustee of the latter firm must be distributed pro rata among the creditors of both the former and the latter firms; and if any balance of the funds of the latter firm remains after paying the debts of both firms, the same may be adjusted to reimburse the retiring partner, in view of the agreement that the latter firm would pay the debts of the former. Id.

74. By war. — A commercial copartnership between a resident of the North and a citizen of the South was dissolved by the war of the rebellion. Woods v. Wilder, 3 R. 684; Hubbard v. Mattheus, 13 R. 562.

75. By decree of the court. — Equity has jurisdiction to decree dissolution of a partnership during the term for which it was originally entered into, and to declare it void ab initio, where there was fraud, imposition, misrepresentation, or oppression in the original agreement. Fogg v. Johnston, 62 D. 771.

Equity may decree dissolution of a partnership for causes arising subsequent to its formation, such as misconduct, fraud, or violation of duty of one partner, his incapacity or inability to contribute his skill, labor, or diligence, or to perform his obligations or duties, or for the existence of a state of facts rendering it impracticable to accomplish the purposes of the partnership. Fogg v. Johnston, 62 D. 771; Hoswell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376.

Equity will dissolve a partnership at the complaint of one who was induced to enter into a partnership with another through his misrepresentations as to his skill as a machinist and engineer, and because of the misconduct and violation of duty of the latter. Fogg v. Johnston, 62 D. 771.

Equity, upon dissolving a partnership, may fix the date of the dissolution at the time of the abandonment by the aggrieved party, and notice thereof given by him. Id.

If equity makes a final decree dissolving a partnership, and applying its effects to the payment of its debts, without judicially ascertaining the joint liabilities which the receiver is directed to pay, this may still be done, with proper notice to the defendants. Hubbard v. Curtis, 74 D. 283.

A bill to enjoin sale of partnership property under execution against individual partner, and for a dissolution and settlement of the partnership to ascertain the interest of the debtor partner in the firm, may be filed either by such debtor partner, by the other partners, by the joint creditors, by the separate creditors, or by the purchaser of the partnership property, if that has been sold. Id.

A wide discretion is vested in courts of equity on the subject of dissolution of partnership, and on what terms. A dissolution will not be decreed on slight grounds. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 255.

Equity will decree dissolution of a partnership when it can no longer be carried on with comfort and advantage to all concerned. But where a valuable business has grown up by the labors and contributions of all, the courts should not appoint a receiver, but should be careful to preserve the partnership, and put all the partners on a fair and equal footing in competing for it. Id.

76. Necessity of notice of dissolution. — Partners are by law liable to be jointly charged for all credits given at the request of either partner, relating to the copartnership business, until public notice is given of a dissolution; and on a joint contract, if only one be sued, it is matter of abatement, but no advantage can be taken of it under the general issue. Bradley v. Camp, 1 D. 13.

Credit must be regarded as given to a partnership where goods were delivered before any publication of its dissolution and the retiring partner remained in the store as clerk, but with the old sign up. Amidown v. Osgood, 58 D. 171.

77. What is sufficient notice. — Evidence of the mere notoriety of the dissolution of a partnership is not admissible to affect a party with notice of that fact, it not appearing that such party had any actual knowledge thereof, or that notice of the dissolution had been published in any newspaper. Pitcher v. Barrows, 28 D. 306.

* Notice of dissolution, what sufficient, and when necessary, see note, 26 D. 290-293

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Actual notice of dissolution is required in order to exonerate a retiring partner as to those who have dealt upon the credit of the firm after its dissolution, but before notice thereof had been published. Amidown v. Osgood, 58 D. 171.

Notice of dissolution must be actual as to those who have had previous dealings with the firm, and notice by publication is required as to others, in order to exonerate a retiring partner. Id.

Notice of dissolution was published in a newspaper, and a copy thereof, with a red line drawn about the notice, was mailed to an actual dealer residing in another place. Held, not alone sufficient to charge such dealer with notice. Haynes v. Carter, 27 R. 747.

A partnership indorsed the note of third persons to the plaintiff for value. At maturity the note was renewed by the check of third persons indorsed by the partnership and others. Pending the running of the note the partnership had been dissolved, and notice thereof had been published in the newspapers, but there was no proof that the plaintiff took or read them, and there was no proof of actual notice to him of the dissolution. Held, that he could recover against the partnership on the check. Ross v. Coffeld, 36 R. 389.

78. Who entitled to actual notice. — Public notice of the dissolution of the partnership, published in the newspapers, is sufficient as to strangers; but customers of the firm are entitled to special notice, or at least entitled to have knowledge of the notice brought home to them. Nott v. Douming, 25 D. 491; Graves v. Merry, 16 D. 471; Prennis v. Sinclair, 26 D. 238; Watkinson v. Bank of Pa., 34 D. 521; Johnson v. Totten, 58 D. 412.

After a dissolution, a person having had previous dealings with a copartnership, but who had no notice of the dissolution, public or otherwise, may hold the partners liable on an acceptance in the name of the firm given by one of them. Ketcham v. Clark, 5 D. 197.

Continuous dealings between a partnership and a distant correspondent for some time entitles the latter to actual notice of the dissolution of the former, to avoid a liability of all the members of the firm for subsequent dealings carried on by one of the partners in the name of the firm, although without the knowledge or consent of the late partners. Scheiffelin v. Stevens, 84 D. 355.

A retiring dormant partner is bound to give notice of dissolution only to those who knew of his connection with the firm. Nussbaumer v. Berker, 29 R. 53.

Agents, clerks, and salesmen of one with whom a firm has had dealings are not entitled to actual notice of its dissolution. Richardson v. Snider, 37 R. 168.

79. Advertisement of notice. — Notice of dissolution published in the newspapers is sufficient as to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm. Graves v. Merry, 16 D. 471; Lansing v. Gaine, 3 D. 422.

A customer taking a newspaper in which a notice of the dissolution is printed is not affected with knowledge of such notice. Watkinson v. Bank of Pa., 34 D. 521.

The court cannot determine who is a customer, and cannot reject proof of notice published in a newspaper because the party sought to be affected is a customer; the determination of that question is within the province of the jury. Id.

Publication of notice of dissolution in a newspaper is sufficient notice of such dissolution, to one taking a promissory note upon the faith of the firm's subsequent indorsement. Galliot v. Planters' etc. Bank, 36 D. 256.

Publication of dissolution in a local newspaper is not actual notice of such dissolution to a distant correspondent of the firm, nor is it evidence from which actual notice could be inferred. Scheiffelin v. Stevens, 84 D. 355.

80. Notice by mail. — Mailing notice of dissolution of partnership, properly directed, is not alone sufficient to relieve a retiring partner from liability to one who has had actual dealings with the partnership; it raises a presumption of notice, which may be repelled by proof that the notice was not in fact received. Austin v. Holland, 25 R. 246.

2. Consequences of Dissolution.

a. In General.

81. As between the partners. — Partners are bound in solido. All debts of the firm must be paid before either partner is entitled to a division of the assets, or to payment of any claim held by him against the partnership. Ward v. Brandt, 13 D. 352.

A division of profits realized after dissolution will not be decreed unless the business is continued with the joint stock and on the joint capital. Reybold v. Dodd, 26 D. 401.

A new partnership undertaking to pay the debts of the old firm, which comprised some of the same members, will not be permitted to deny a receipt given for the goods of such new firm, attached for a debt of the first partnership, nor to allege that such debt was but an individual debt. Morrison v. Blodgett, 29 D. 653.

Where a partnership is furnished with a signed blank, to be filled by the partners as a note, to be used in their business, and the blank is not used during the continuance of the firm, but after the dissolution one of the partners fills it up, all the partners will be liable to repay the signer the amount that he may have been obliged to pay thereby. Roberts v. Adams, 33 D. 291.

A partner dissolving the partnership with an unfair design, and for his own private advantage, is liable to his copartners for the damages suffered thereby. Howell v. Harvey, 39 D. 376.

Where one partner, during the absence of the other, buys large quantities of goods, and then dissolves the partnership to the other's prejudice, he will be liable to the latter for his share in the proceeds. Id.

A covenant of indemnity against "all claims" against a dissolved firm, executed by the liquidating partner's assignee for benefit of creditors, to the other partner, on the latter's assigning all his interest in the partnership effects to such assignee, does not cover a debt of the firm not appearing on the partnership books, or otherwise known to the assignee, but known to the partner taking such indemnity, who kept the books and neglected to enter such claim. Case v. Cushman, 39 D. 47.

In equity, by the very law of partnership, the partnership effects are pledged to each separate partner, until he is released from all partnership obligations; but this lien is solely under the control of the partners, and if the partnership is dissolved, this lien is gone; while the partnership continues, this equitable lien existing for the benefit and security of the separate partners may be reached in a court of equity by the creditors, as the only mode of fully carrying into effect the stipulations of the parties at the time of forming the association. Bardwell v. Perry, 47 D. 687.

The effect of dissolution is, that from the moment the partnership terminates, the partners become distinct persons with respect to each other, and that consequently one partner can have no power to subject by his acts or declarations his former associates to new obligations, burdens, or responsibilities. Ellicott v. Nichols, 48 D. 546.

The power of adjusting the unsettled affairs of the partnership survives the dissolution, as a necessary power; yet with this qualification, and subject to this exception, those who were formerly partners stand to each other after the dissolution as if the association had never been formed. Id.

After dissolution inter vivos, the joint interest of partners continues in the partnership property, and the mutual agency continues, with some restrictions, until the affairs of the partnership are administered. Kinsler v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

Dissolution of a mining copartnership by one of the partners silently withdrawing or assigning his interest to another will not relieve such partner from liability for work done before or debts contracted after thus silently withdrawing or resigning. Burgan v. Lyell, 55 D. 53.

A partner's engagement to pay partnership debts is but a personal contract, and creates no lien where it is entered into by him on a sale to him of his partner's interest; and such partner need not appropriate the partnership assets to the payment of partnership liabilities. Baker's Appeal, 59 D. 752.

Each partner has the same rights after dissolution, in the fulfillment of outstanding engagements and in the settlement of business of the firm generally, as he had before. The different partners' rights are not changed, and unless the partnership articles stipulate to the contrary, a majority of the partners, if they act fairly and in good faith, may conduct the partnership business, notwithstanding the dissent of a minority. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789.

Where, after dissolution, parties formerly composing the firm give a note in their individual capacity for a partnership liability, this does not change their character of joint and several makers, nor convert the liability into an individual debt as between the partners; and upon payment of the note by one, the others are not liable to him for contribution. De Jarnette v. McQueen, 68 D. 164.

On dissolution, either partner may continue to use the trade-marks, unless he has specifically transferred or expressly divested himself of such right. Hazard v. Caswell, 45 R. 198.

On dissolution of a partnership between lawyers, each is entitled to share in the fees collected from the unfinished business. Oement v. McElrath, 58 R. 17.

82. As towards third persons. — A firm note executed during the existence of the partnership, but not delivered until after the dissolution of the firm, does not bind the partnership. Woodford v. Dornin, 21 D. 573.

To hold a partnership upon an indorsement made after dissolution, of which public notice has been given, the indorsee must show that they came within the exception of customers of the firm who are entitled to particular notice. Nott v. Downing, 26 D. 491.

A judgment against a partner who was not personally served with process in an action brought after dissolution is void. Galemie v. Akin, 36 D. 604.

A dissolved firm continues in existence for many purposes. Fereira v. Sayres, 40 D. 496.

Creditors of a partnership may pursue remedies at law and secure preferences or liens upon partnership assets after suit brought by one partner for a dissolution and before a decree of dissolution. Adams v. Woods, 68 D. 313.

83. Power of one partner to bind the others after dissolution. — 1. In general. — A partner's acts after dissolution of the partnership will bind the other partners unless notice of the dissolution be given. Price v. Tacey, 14 D. 81.

One partner, after dissolution, cannot, without express authority, create or revive a debt against his late partners. Wilson v. Torbert, 21 D. 632.

Payment by one partner of debts of the partnership, with money held by him as agent of another, makes all the members of the partnership liable to the latter for the amount so paid, although such payment was made after the partnership had been dissolved. Brown v. Higginbotham, 27 D. 618.

Service of a citation after dissolution does not bind the partners who are not served personally, nor will the fact that the partner served had been given a general power to settle the partnership accounts render the service upon him valid as to the others. Gaensie v. Akin, 36 D. 604.

A partner cannot bind the firm after dissolution by his individual act in the partnership name, without express authority for that purpose. Gallott v. Planters' etc. Bank, 26 D. 256.

One partner, after dissolution, may waive notice of demand and non-payment of a note indorsed by the firm and discounted for it. Seldner v. Mount Jackson Nat. Bank, 59 R. 190.

2. By contracts, generally.—Dissolution works absolute revocation of all implied authority in either of the partners to bind the other to new engagements, contracts, or promises, made to or with persons having notice of the dissolution, although springing out of or founded upon the indebtedness of the firm. Palmer v. Dodge, 62 D. 271; Hurst v. Hill, 63 D. 705.

After dissolution, one of the partners cannot impose new obligations upon the firm, or vary the character or form of those already existing. White v. Tudor, 76 D. 126.

Money borrowed by a partner will be presumed to have been borrowed for the partnership, which will be liable therefor if it has been applied to its use. The principle applies as well after a partnership has been dissolved as before. Estate of Davis, 34 D. 574.

Where partners contract with a third person to perform a piece of work, and the latter, after the dissolution of the firm, enters into an agreement with one of the partners that he shall be exonerated from liability for the part of the work already done, but without any promise by the other partner to assume the liability, the contract made with the first partner is void for want of consideration; but if the second partner had made a new promise, it would have been a valid release for a consideration, one debt being substituted for the other. Colliver v. Moulton, 98 D. 370.

Where partners agree with a third person to perform a piece of work, they remain joint contractors as to such third party after the dissolution of the partnership. Either of them may countermand the work before completion, but they remain joint contractors as to the part done, and liable in damages to the third party for his loss on the remainder of the contract. Id.

Delivery of goods, after dissolution, at a place designated by one of the firm, different from the place specified in the contract, is binding, and will render the other partner liable in an action for the purchase price. Cady v. Shepherd, 22 D. 379.

After partnership dissolved, one partner may yet assign all of the interest of the firm in a bond. Morse v. Bellows, 28 D. 372.

After dissolution, one of the partners cannot bind the others, without their consent, by settling accounts with or allowing credits to customers of the firm. Rootes v. Wellford, 6 D. 510.

On the dissolution of a firm by death of a member, neither survivor can, without the co-survivor's consent, assign the whole interest in the partnership effects to trustees for the benefit of preferred creditors. Hgbarts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

3. By making a bill or note.—Where a partner, after dissolution, issues notes in the name of the firm, the other partner is not liable thereon; for the power to bind the firm ceases with the partnership. Lansing v. Gaine, 3 D. 422; Woodworth v. Downer, 37 D. 611; Haddock v. Crocheron, 5 R. 244; Smith v. Sheldon, 24 R. 529.

Giving a forged note in payment, by a partner to a creditor of the firm, after its dissolution, does not extinguish the original liability of the partnership. Pope v. Nance, 18 D. 60.

Where a partnership note is given and renewed after the dissolution of the partnership, by the remaining partner, in the old firm name, it will not bind the retiring partner, neither does its acceptance discharge the pre-existing debt; not being valid as to the retiring partner, the consideration fails, and the old debt remains. Parker v. Cousins, 44 D. 388. S. P., Hurst v. Hill, 63 D. 705. The renewal of the note being in the firm name is strong inference that the promisee did not intend to release the other partner, and hold alone liable the partner who executed it. Parker v. Cousins, 44 D. 388.

A surety on a promissory note given by one of the members of a dissolved partnership, in the name of the firm, and to renew a debt of such partnership, must look to such member alone for indemnity, as he cannot hold the other for it. Palmer v. Dodge, 62 D. 271.

A note made after dissolution by one of the partners, in the firm name, to payees, who have had previous dealings with the partnership and have no actual notice of the dissolution, is binding on all the partners. Graves v. Merry, 16 D. 471.

Indorsees having actual notice of the dissolution may recover on such note against all the partners if it was valid in the hands of the payee, for want of such notice. Ib.

A partner's authority after dissolution to sign the firm name to notes for partnership debts may be implied from circumstances. Ib.

An express admission by the other partners that the firm is bound, or a failure on their part to object to such a note as being made without authority, when it is brought to their notice, will warrant a presumption that it was executed with their knowledge and consent. Ib.

After the dissolution of a partnership, A, one of the partners, without authority, gave a new note in the name of the firm, in renewal of an old six-per-cent partnership note, and without intent to defraud, made it to bear ten per cent interest, and included it in an individual liability of B, another partner. D, another partner, subsequently promised to pay the new note, supposing it to be a simple renewal of the old note. In an action on the new note, — held, that as the considerations were several, D was liable for the amount of the old note, with interest at six per cent. Wilson v. Forder, 5 R. 627.

4. By accepting or indorsing negotiable paper. — A partner after dissolution cannot bind the firm or his copartners, without special authority, by accepting a bill drawn on the firm. Commercial Bank v. Perry, 43 D. 168.

Where a bill is accepted without authority by a partner after dissolution of the firm upon which it is drawn, and is by the acceptance made payable at a certain bank, a demand there is not a demand upon the drawee, so as to charge the drawer. Ib.

One partner cannot, after dissolution, indorse a note in the name of the firm, even to pay a prior debt of the firm. White v. Tudor, 76 D. 126; Nott v. Downing, 26 D. 491; Humphries v. Chastain, 48 D. 247.

5. By admissions and declarations. — An admission by a partner after dissolution is not evidence against his former copartners. Brady v. Hill, 13 D. 503; Baker v. Starkpoole, 18 D. 508; Hamilton v. Summers, 54 D. 509.

Admissions of a partner after dissolution, not relating to the previous business of the firm, are not evidence against the partners. Taylor v. Hillyer, 26 D. 430.

A partner's admissions after dissolution, in regard to a partnership demand, are competent though not conclusive evidence. Oady v. Shepherd, 22 D. 379.

An admission by one partner, after dissolution, that a particular debt of the firm was not paid, though a receipt had been given therefor, is evidence against his copartner, particularly where such admission is made by the active partner, who has been constituted agent to settle up the firm business. Bridge v. Gray, 25 D. 358.

After dissolution, the admission of a debt by one partner is not sufficient of itself to charge the other partners, and no act can be done by one which is binding on the rest, except under special circumstances. Chardon v. Olphant, 6 D. 572.

The acknowledgment by one partner of a partnership debt, after the dissolution of the partnership, does not deprive the other partner of the benefit of the statute of limitations. Lewy v. Cadet, 17 D. 650; Ellcott v. Nichols, 48 D. 546; Van Keuren v. Parmelee, 51 D. 322.

After dissolution, a partner cannot bind the firm by an acknowledgment of a debt, whether the statute of limitations has operated to bar it or not. Moss v. Donelson, 36 D. 309.

The implied agency of a partner to bind his copartner by a new promise ceases at dissolution. Van Keuren v. Parmelee, 51 D. 322.

Declarations of a partner after dissolution cannot charge the partnership with a debt; though if the existence of the debt and the original liability be proved otherwise, such declarations would be sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. Willis v. Hill, 31 D. 412; Greenleaf v. Quincy, 28 D. 145. But such acknowledgment is entitled to little weight if not honestly made, but rather with a design to charge the copartner. Austin v. Boastwick, 25 D. 42.

An acknowledgment by one partner, after a dissolution of the partnership, will prevent the operation of the statute of limitations upon a firm debt. McIntire v. Oliver, 11 D. 760; Austin v. Boastwick, 25 D. 42.

Admissions of one of the makers of a firm note after dissolution of the partnership, but before the statute of limitations has run, will remove the bar of the statute as to all the makers. Beardsley v. Hall, 4 R. 74.

An acknowledgment by one partner operates against all, to take a debt out of the statute of limitations, whether made before or after the dissolution of the copartnership, or before or after the statute has run upon the demand. Wheelock v. Doolittle, 46 D. 163.

Declarations of a partner after dissolution bind himself only. Barringer v. Sneed, 20 D. 74.

Admissions and declarations of a partner after dissolution are admissible in evidence against himself; so under the Pennsylvania statute, where one firm sues another and he is a member of both. Tassey v. Church, 39 D. 65.

A promise by one partner after dissolution of the partnership, and before a suit is barred by the statute of limitations, to pay a partnership debt, does not prevent the running of the statute as to the other partners, although the creditor was ignorant of the dissolution. Tate v. Clements, 26 R. 709.

Payment of interest on a note drawn by a firm, by one of the members, after the dissolution of the firm, but within six years after the maturity of such note, will renew it as against the statute of limitations; nor will the fact that one of the firm is a married woman alter the effect of such renewal. Merritt v. Day, 20 R. 302.

Where, after dissolution of a partnership, one of the late partners, without the knowledge or authority of the other, made payments upon a debt against which the statute of limitations had run, — held, that such payments did not revive the debt as against his late copartner. Mayberry v. Willoughby, 25 R. 491.

84. Validity of special agreements upon dissolution. — A promise made to the retiring partner by his former copartner and others, forming with the latter a new partnership, that such new firm will pay the debts of the old one, is founded on a sufficient consideration, and is not within the statute of frauds. Les v. Fontaine, 44 D. 605.

Upon a voluntary dissolution, the partners may agree that the partnership property may be the property of one of the members, and if such agreement be bona fide, it will be given full effect. Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573; Allen v. Center Valley Co., 54 D. 333; White v. Parish, 73 D. 204.

A bona fide transfer by a going partnership, of firm property, to a corporation, taking in payment stock of the corporation to be held by the partners individually, not made in contemplation of insolvency or to defeat creditors, cannot be impeached by partnership creditors on a bill filed against the corporation and attaching creditors of the individual partners, nor have the joint creditors any priority over separate creditors with respect to the stock received by the partners in payment, although the assets at the time of the transfer were barely equal to the joint debts. Allen v. Center Valley Co., 54 D. 333.

Where partners dissolve the firm, and orally agree that one of them shall take the joint property and pay the joint debts, and the one who takes the property for this purpose fails to pay the debts, another partner may voluntarily pay them, and maintain an action against the former to recover the amounts so paid by him. Hunt v. Rogers, 83 D. 704.

85. Their interpretation. — An agreement to "quit even," although it might have the effect of mutual acquittance as to all liabilities subsisting between partners at the time of its adoption, does not destroy the relation of partners, nor their liability as to all subsequently accruing items of partnership account. De Jarnette v. McQueen, 68 D. 164.

An agreement between partners, upon dissolution, that one of them shall take the joint property, and pay the joint debts, is not within the statute of frauds. It is not, within the statute, a collateral agreement to pay the debt of another. Hunt v. Rogers, 83 D. 704.

An agreement by one to wind up the business and pay the other his share of the fees collected is valid, and is not within the statute of frauds, although it was not expected that the business could be wound up in a year. Oement v. McElrath, 58 R. 17.

b. Rights and Liabilities of Surviving and Liquidating Partners.

86. Powers and duties of surviving partner. — 1. *In general. — After the dissolution of a partnership, a surviving partner cannot make any contract which will bind the effects of the firm against creditors, or those entitled to a share of the funds. Hence a debtor of an insolvent firm cannot, in an action against him by the assignee, set off the amount of a protested bill of exchange, indorsed for accommodation by one of the partners in the firm name, after the dissolution, which has been discounted by the defendant. White v. Union Ins. Co., 9 D. 728.

Upon a dissolution by death of one partner, the survivors may give a preference with the consent of the personal representative of the decedent. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

When a partnership is dissolved by death of one or more of the partners, the legal title to all the personal property and choses in action belonging to the firm becomes vested in the survivor exclusively, for the purpose of paying the debts and then dividing the net balance amongst those entitled, giving to the representatives of the deceased partner the same interest he would have taken had he been in life and the firm had been dissolved, not by death, but by mutual consent. Andrews v. Brown, 56 D. 252; Kinsler v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

The jus accrescendi among partners means that the survivor holds the partnership funds for the settlement of the partnership concerns, and the balance for equitable distribution among the personal representatives of the decedent and the survivor. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236. S. P., Moffatt v. Thomson, 57 D. 737.

Partnership funds coming into the hands of a surviving partner who has been appointed administrator of the deceased partner come to him as survivor, and not as administrator. Pearson v. Keedy, 43 D. 160.

The heir of a deceased partner holds the legal title to real property belonging to the firm, subservient to or in trust for the surviving partner, who is charged with the payment of the debts. Andrews v. Brown, 56 D. 252.

A surviving partner has a right in equity to dispose of real property belonging to the firm for the payment of the debts, where the firm is insolvent, and the deed will convey the equity of the heir of a deceased partner, who may be compelled to make a conveyance. Id.

A surviving partner cannot set off a private debt due him by the deceased copartner against his share of assets collected since the dissolution of the copartnership; the effect of such set-off would be to give a preference among creditors of equal degree, which is in opposition to the South Carolina act of 1789. Moffatt v. Thomson, 57 D. 737.

Surviving partner is entitled to assets of firm for purpose of paying its debts. As such survivor, he may maintain actions at law for the purpose of collecting debts due the firm, to the exclusion of the administrator of the deceased partner. Shields v. Fuller, 65 D. 293.

A surviving partner, appointed receiver of the partnership affairs at his own instance, is not entitled to compensation as such receiver. Barry v. Jones, 27 R. 742.

2. Power to transfer property.—An assignment by a surviving partner of the partnership effects transfers to the assignee that partner's interest, and makes the assignee a tenant in common with the other surviving partner. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 238.

A surviving partner may dispose of partnership realty for the payment of partnership debts, and of any balance due him as a partner, if the legal title is vested in him, and if not, equity will assist him by compelling a conveyance of the legal title to himself or to a purchaser from him. Tillinghast v. Champkin, 67 D. 510.

A purchaser of partnership realty from a surviving partner, though he knows it to be partnership property, and that there are partnership debts to be paid out of it, if he honestly buys it and pays for it, without knowledge or notice of any facts indicating an intent by the surviving partner to misapply the funds, will be protected, although such surviving partner does in fact appropriate the money to his own use, leaving the debts unpaid; but where he purchases either the whole of such realty or the surviving partner's undivided legal interest therein, knowing it to be partnership property, and that the firm is nearly or quite insolvent, and receives the conveyance, and pays the purchase-money secretly and at night, under circumstances indicating knowledge of the fraudulent designs of the surviving partner, who immediately absconds, leaving the firm debts unpaid, such purchaser takes the property subject to the trusts under which it was held by his vendor. Id.

The sole survivor of a firm may effectually transfer a promissory note, payable to the late firm, by indorsement. Johnson v. Bernheimer, 25 R. 427.

A surviving partner of an insolvent firm may not mortgage partnership property to secure one creditor in preference to others. Anderson v. Norton, 54 R. 400.

3. Power to assign for benefit of creditors.—Upon the dissolution of a partnership by the death of one of the partners, the surviving partner can make a valid assignment of the partnership effects, for the benefit of the creditors of the firm. White v. Union Ins. Co., 9 D. 726.

A surviving partner who has bought the interest of a deceased partner may make an assignment of the merchandise for the benefit of his creditors, and the claimants under this assignment have a right to its proceeds, and also to all the debts which were created after the purchase made by the surviving partner. Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573.

The surviving partner has a right to apply the assets of the firm to the payment of partnership debts. He may prefer one creditor to another, and if he makes an assignment for the benefit of part of the creditors, they may under it entirely satisfy their debts. This does not increase the liability of the estate of the deceased partner, as it makes no difference to it whether the assets are distributed ratably or applied to the payment of some debts to the exclusion of others. Id.

The surviving partner of an insolvent firm may make a general assignment for creditors without preferences. Salisbury v. Ellison, 49 R. 347.

87. Powers and duties of partner authorized to liquidate.—A dissolved partnership remains in force for closing the business, and for that purpose, the partner winding up the concern has the same power to bind the firm as he had before. Houser v. Irvine, 38 D. 768.

No power to bind his copartner to new engagements, contracts, or promises can be inferred from an authority given by one partner to the other to settle, liquidate, and close up the affairs of the partnership. Palmer v. Dodge, 62 D. 271.

The liquidating partner has no power to extend time for payment of obligations of firm, to increase their amounts, or to obligate the firm to persons to whom it was not bound at the dissolution of the partnership. Id.

Where a partner upon dissolution of the firm takes all notes and accounts into possession, and assumes control in regard to making collections and settling up the business, he is to be treated as a collecting agent, and should be charged with all notes and accounts which he has collected, or might with reasonable diligence have collected; but he is not to be charged with those not proved to be solvent, and which it is not shown could have been collected with reasonable diligence. Phelan v. Hutchinson, 93 D. 602.

Where a partnership which is afterwards dissolved by the death of one of its members has indorsed a note or bill, notice of dishonor must be given to the surviving member, in order to bind the firm, especially when he is its liquidator or representative. Notice to the executor of the deceased partner, who does not represent and has no power to administer the partnership affairs, is not sufficient. Slocumb v. De Lisardi, 99 D. 740.

The admissions of a partner, made while engaged in the adjustment of unsettled partnership business, after the dissolution of the firm, may be given in evidence to charge the other partners in relation to such business. Feigley v. Whitaker, 10 R. 778.

A partner intrusted with the settlement of a dissolved partnership may bind the partnership by borrowing money to meet its accruing liabilities, and by actually applying the money borrowed in discharge of such liabilities. Estate of Davis, 34 D. 574.

Payment by a liquidating partner, within six years, on a note given by him after the dissolution, in the firm name, for a firm debt, is evidence of a new promise by all the partners, and takes the case out of the statute of limitations as to all. Houser v. Irvine, 38 D. 768.

A settling partner of a dissolved firm may set off a debt due the firm in an action against him, where his copartners have assigned the effects to him with full power to collect and pay debts, etc. Craig v. Henderson, 44 D. 193.

General authority to one partner, upon dissolution, to settle the business of the firm, does not authorize him to give a note in the name of the firm for a firm debt, or to renew one given before the dissolution. White v. Tudor, 76 D. 126. S. P., Perrin v. Keene, 26 D. 759; Smith v. Shelden, 24 R. 529; Haddock v. Crocheron, 5 R. 244.

Where a settling partner, after dissolution, gives a draft in payment of a partnership debt, he cannot waive protest so as to bind his former dormant copartner. Mauney v. Coit, 30 R. 80.

A surviving partner is not entitled to compensation for winding up the partnership business. Beatty v. Wray, 57 D. 677; Brown v. McFarland, 80 D. 598. But see Phelan v. Hutchinson, 93 D. 602.

88. Suits by surviving partner.—In assumpsit by a surviving partner, upon a promise alleged to have been made to both partners, upon the plea of the statute of limitations, it is competent for the plaintiff to give evidence of an acknowledgment to himself alone, after the decease of his partner, of a debt due to the partnership. Barney v. Smith, 7 D. 679.

All property and responsibilities of a partnership, by the death of a partner, devolve on the surviving partner, and in a suit in relation thereto, the personal representative of the deceased partner need not be made a party. Jones v. Hardesty, 32 D. 180.

Death of a partner must be proved in an action by the surviving partner to recover a debt due the firm, although it need not be alleged. Ludden v. Colby, 40 D. 173.

A surviving partner of two different firms may join in one action counts for sums due him as the surviving partner of each of said firms, and a count for money due him in his individual capacity. Adams v. Hackett, 59 D. 376.

The surviving partner cannot recover unless the firm could have sustained an action in the lifetime of the deceased partner. Thompson v. Steamboat J. D. Morton, 59 D. 658.

The surviving partner cannot maintain a proceeding in rem against a vessel of which the deceased partner was the owner, for materials and labor furnished by the firm, for these are advances by a copartnership to a member of the firm, and a plea setting forth these facts will be good in bar of the action. Id.

Although one partner cannot maintain an action at law against his copartner, a surviving partner may well maintain such an action against the administrator of his deceased partner who has wrongfully obtained possession of property belonging to the partnership, as such survivor has the exclusive right to the use of it. Shields v. Fuller, 65 D. 293.

Where the administrator of estate of deceased partner is sued by the survivor to recover money improperly collected by said administrator upon partnership accounts, if he attempts to show that the partnership was dissolved before the death of his intestate, he must show that the accounts were so divided as to vest the title to them in each partner individually. Id.

Where a partner had died, and the surviving partners had continued to trade under the firm name, and then an account between a debtor and the firm was stated, from which it appeared that a balance was due by the debtor for goods sold in the lifetime of the deceased partner, — held, that the surviving partners could recover this balance without alleging the death of the other partner and the survivorship, as the stating of the account was in the nature of a new promise to the survivor. Holmes v. De Camp, 3 D. 293.

A surviving partner who has been appointed one of the administrators of the deceased partner cannot maintain a bill for an accounting against his co-administrator, especially when the bill charges fraud against the deceased. His only remedy is to have the letters of administration revoked. Smith v. Bryson, 93 D. 610.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

89. Liabilities of surviving partner. — The effects of a deceased partner cannot be pursued at law or in equity while the surviving partner is solvent. Alsop v. Mather, 81 D. 703.

Admissions of a surviving partner, direct or indirect, are evidence against him in a suit against him, although the judgment would not affect the question of contribution between him and the representatives of the deceased partner. Hamilton v. Summers, 54 D. 509.

A proceeding in a district court cannot be supported as a creditor's bill which seeks to subject partnership property to a demand by proceeding against a surviving partner, and where the decree in such proceeding makes the court take upon itself the administration and settlement of the partnership concerns out of the hands of the surviving partner and the representatives of the deceased, and places the partnership effects in the hands of the officers of the court, to be applied in payment of the claims of creditors, when established by suit. Gaut v. Reed, 76 D. 94.

If one partner dies pending an action against the firm, the action may be continued against the surviving members of the firm. Childs v. Hyde, 77 D. 113.

A surviving member of a partnership owning real property is trustee for the purposes of winding up the affairs of the firm, and must account and pay over to the administrator of the deceased partner the value and profits of the use and occupation thereof. Smith v. Walker, 99 D. 415.

Such surviving partner must account and pay over to the administrator of deceased partner all the profits of the realty and personality of the firm which rightfully belong to the estate, although he has purchased the interest of the heirs, or the community interest of the surviving wife of the deceased partner; it is for the probate court to distribute the estate to the parties entitled. Id.

90. Liabilities of liquidating partner. — A partner who is appointed by a firm to settle up the business of the firm after dissolution, and who continues the business of the firm upon his own account, is not liable to account to the firm for the value of the "good-will" thereof. Gyger's Appeal, 1 R. 282.

Where a partnership is dissolved, and one partner purchases the interest of the other in the partnership property, and assumes and agrees to pay the partnership debts, he thereby becomes in equity the principal debtor as to such debts, and the other his surety, and a creditor having notice of such agreement is bound by such relationship. Colgrove v. Tallman, 23 R. 90; Smith v. Sheldon, 24 R. 529.

Where a creditor with such notice is requested by the surety to collect his claim of the partner who has assumed the debts, and he neglects or refuses to do so, the surety is discharged, provided the principal was at the time solvent. Colgrove v. Tallman, 23 R. 90.

91. Rights and duties of retiring partner. — 1. General rules. — A retiring partner remains liable for all the existing debts of the firm, to the same extent as if he had not retired. An agreement between him and the remaining partners, or with the new firm that succeeds, that they will assume and pay all such debts, while valid as between the partners, has no effect upon the creditors of the old firm unless they become parties thereto. Rasson v. Taylor, 27 R. 464; Winston v. Taylor, 75 D. 112.

A retiring partner has no lien on the partnership property when he sells his interest in the firm assets to his copartners, and takes their covenant to indemnify and save him harmless from the liabilities of the firm. He cannot maintain any proceeding in equity to subject such assets to the satisfaction of such debt, especially after they have gone into the hands of a subvendee. Smith v. Edwards, 46 D. 71; Miller v. Estill, 67 D. 305.

On dissolution of partnership, an assignment by retiring partner, bona fide, of all his interest in the stock and effects to the remaining partner vests the same in the latter as his individual property, and it will be distributable accordingly, notwithstanding his subsequent insolvency; and this rule applies as well to limited as to general partnerships. Upon v. Arnold, 63 D. 302.

Where one partner takes partnership property on consideration that he will pay the debts of the partnership, the retiring partner's lien upon the partnership effects is gone; though if the agreement be to take the partnership property and pay the partnership debts therewith, a court of equity would, perhaps, enforce a proper application of the assets of the firm in behalf of the retiring partner. Miller v. Estill, 67 D. 305.

A debtor colluding with the outgoing partner cannot obtain from him a discharge of his debt. Burley v. Harris, 29 D. 650.

Where a firm receives stock to be pastured for an indefinite time, if one of the firm retires he may absolve himself from further liability upon the contract by requiring the owner to remove his stock. If owner permitted stock to remain after a reasonable time, it would operate as a release to the retiring partner. Such defense, however, ought to be clearly made out. Winston v. Taylor, 75 D. 112.

A partner retiring from the firm must give notice of retirement, or he will be liable to creditors of the continuing firm on contracts made by them after his retirement. Williams v. Bowers, 76 D. 489.

A partner who gives no notice of his retirement is liable to an attorney employed by the firm before his retirement to defend a suit against the firm for fees for services rendered in such suit after his retirement. Ib.

An agreement to discharge a retiring partner will not be inferred from the mere acceptance of the note of the continuing partners for the joint debt. Nightingale v. Chafes, 23 R. 531.

Where a partnership is dissolved, one partner taking all the property and assuming all the debts, all the partners are still liable on an acceptance previously given for goods, although the vendor may have promised to release the retiring partners and look to the other alone, there being no new consideration for such promise. Eagle Mfg. Co. v. Jennings, 44 R. 668.

In an action against a retired partner for a debt contracted by the remaining members, in the same firm name, on the ground of the want of notice or knowledge of the dissolution, the account as entered on the ledger of the new firm is not evidence against the defendant. Pringle v. Leverick, 49 R. 522.

2. Illustrations. — T. and H. were, in 1861, partners in business in Washington; D. C. In May of that year H. went to Richmond, Virginia, where he remained during the war. At the time, the debts of the firm, a considerable portion of which was due to T., very largely exceeded the assets. T. compromised with the other creditors, took the goods and assets of the firm, and continued the business in his own name. Held, 1. That the partners being domiciled in hostile states, the war dissolved the partnership; and 2. That the retention of the partnership property by T., it being shown that there would be nothing due to H. after the payment of debts which were compromised by T., did not give H. a right to a share in the profits made by T. after the dissolution. Taylor v. Hutchinson, 18 R. 689.

It is not a uniform rule that when upon the dissolution of a firm by the withdrawal of a partner, the stock of the firm is carried over into the new business, and not sold at auction, the outgoing partner is entitled to an account and a share in the profits. Ib.

After the dissolution of a partnership, a creditor of the firm, with knowledge that one of the partners had taken the firm assets and assumed the firm debts, took from him the firm note for the debt, payable one day from date, with interest. Held, 1. That the outgoing partners were not liable on the note as partners; and 2. That, as sureties, they were discharged by the new contract, it having been entered into without their knowledge or consent. Smith v. Sheldon, 24 R. 529.

One partner retired from the firm, selling his interest to the remaining partner, he agreeing to pay the firm debts, and having sufficient property to do so. That property having been wasted, a firm creditor, being unable to enforce his claim, filed a bill to reach property which the outgoing partner had withdrawn from the firm when he retired. Held, that he had no equitable lien thereon. Hollis v. Staley, 27 R. 759.

R. held the promissory note of the firm of T. G. & Co. After it was given, some members of the firm retired, leaving assets sufficient to pay all debts, and taking the obligation of the succeeding new firm to pay all debts and save the retiring partners harmless. Held, that unless R., by some valid contract, express or implied, had made himself a party to this new arrangement, or had so acted as to be estopped, his rights on the note against all the members of the old firm remained unchanged; that while, as between the partners themselves, the relation of principal and surety existed, yet as to the payee of the note, all were principals and joint debtors, although notice of such obligation was brought home to him. Rawson v. Taylor, 27 R. 464.

Where the payee of such note has received from the new firm a chattel mortgage of the partnership property sufficient, if applied, to satisfy the debt, he may, with the assent of the retiring partners, release the mortgage, and return the property or its avails to the new firm, without impairing his rights against all the joint obligors on the note, even though he had notice of the subsequent contract between the partners. Ib.

92. Carrying on business after dissolution. — Until the affairs of a partnership are settled, and outstanding engagements made good, it continues, in legal contemplation, so far, at least, as respects winding them up. Brown v. Higginbotham, 27 D. 618; Kinsler v. McCanta, 53 D. 711.

Where a testator, by his will, directs that a partnership, of which he was a member, should be continued after his death, and the profits at the end of a specified time distributed among his devisees, the creditors of the partnership have no lien on the general assets of the estate of the deceased in the hands of his devisees. Pitkin v. Pitkin, 18 D. 111.

The remedy of such creditors is by claim against the executor, to be pursued like other general claims against the testator's estate, and not in chancery. Ib.

Equity has power to authorize continuance of a partnership, after death of a partner, in behalf of the infant children of the deceased partner. Powell v. North, 56 D. 513.

A partnership has a limited existence after dissolution, for the purpose of fulfilling engagements made during its existence; consequently the late members of a firm, by selling butter consigned to the firm of which they were recently members, after its dissolution, by one having no notice of such fact, become liable to the consignor as partners. Johnson v. Totten, 58 D. 412.

A partnership has a limited existence after dissolution, for purpose of making good all outstanding engagements, of taking and settling all accounts, and collecting all the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of its dissolution, for the benefit of all interested. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 65 D. 789.

The personal representative of a deceased partner may carry on business for and bind his estate where the articles of copartnership contained a covenant to that effect. A covenant for the continuation of a partnership for a reasonable period after the death of one of the partners is binding on his estate, if assented to and carried out by his personal representatives. Laughlin v. Lorens, 86 D. 592.

Where on the death of a partner the business of the firm is closed by the creation of a new firm, composed of the surviving partner and the representatives of the deceased partner, the creditors of the new firm become clothed with those equities of that firm against the estate of the decedent, which arose out of the payment by the new firm of the debts of the old firm. Id.

c. Application of Assets to Debts.

93. Marshaling assets.—A partnership creditor having a lien on the separate property of one of its members must, if the firm is insolvent, exhaust his separate lien, before he comes in with other creditors for a share of the partnership effects. White v. Dougherty, 17 D. 803.

Joint creditors who have been partially paid out of the joint estate cannot share equitable assets with joint creditors who have received nothing, until the latter have been paid sufficient to put them on an equality with the former. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

Copartnership effects upon the firm's insolvency are in equity considered a trust fund for the payment of the partnership debts. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

Partnership property must be first applied to firm debts, and to equalize the claims of the partners in relation to the fund; and the separate interest of each partner is only his share after the debts are paid and his partners' claims are satisfied. Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305.

After the dissolution of a firm by the death or bankruptcy of one or more of its members, partnership property will, in equity, first be applied to the payment of the firm debts, and the separate property of each member will be first applied to paying his individual debts. Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 49 D. 160.

Separate estate of partners must be first distributed to separate creditors, under the Massachusetts statute, although there may be no solvent partner and no joint estate to which the joint creditors can resort. Hove v. Lawrence, 57 D. 68.

An individual creditor of a partner may, in equity, compel a partnership creditor to resort first to the partnership assets for payment, since the claim of the individual creditor applies only to the private property of his debtor, including whatever balance may remain to him out of the firm assets after its affairs are wound up, while the partnership creditor is entitled to payment not only out of the firm property, but also out of the private property of the individual partner. Gadsden v. Carson, 70 D. 207.

The lien of a judgment rendered after the death of a partner, for a partnership debt, upon the individual real estate of the surviving partner, if it has legal priority, will not be disturbed in favor of a junior judgment against the survivor for a debt of his own, even though the junior judgment cannot be otherwise satisfied, and the senior judgment might be enforced against the estate of the deceased partner. Meech v. Allen, 72 D. 465.

94. Rights of the partners.—Partnership property is primarily liable to pay partnership debts; and the surplus, if any, belongs to the partners. Miller v. Etill, 67 D. 305.

Each partner is liable in solido for firm debts, and has an equity to have all the firm assets applied, in the first instance, to their payment. It is through this equity that the firm creditors have a priority over separate creditors to be paid out of the partnership funds. Manhattan I. Co. v. Webster, 98 D. 332. S. P., Pearson v. Keedy, 43 D. 160; Allen v. Center Valley Co., 54 D. 333; Miller v. Etill, 67 D. 305; Happgood v. Cornwall, 98 D. 516.

A partner's lien is limited to advances for partnership purposes, and does not exist for a private debt due by a copartner. Moffatt v. Thomson, 57 D. 737.

The right to confine a partner, or those claiming under him, to an interest in the surplus, after payment of the partnership debts, is an equity resting, not in the creditors of the firm, but in the remaining partners alone, who may insist upon it or waive it at their pleasure, leaving the creditors to the personal responsibility of the partners who contracted the debts. The creditors have no lien on the partnership property, and must work out their preference through the medium of the partners whose interests remain undisposed of. Baker's Appeal, 59 D. 752.

A transfer of interest by a portion of the partners to others does not discharge the original partners, nor impose upon the subsequent firm any new liabilities to the creditors of the first. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Partners who have attached the property of a copartner for a partnership debt, for which all are jointly liable, may be enjoined from enforcing their attachment against an attachment subsequently levied upon the property by an individual creditor. Price v. Cutts, 74 D. 52.

A partner may apply or compel application of partnership property to firm debts while any partnership property remains; and it would seem, if he is backward, firm creditors may compel him to allow them to use his name for this purpose. Backus v. Murphy, 80 D. 531.

The equity of partnership creditors to have partnership property applied to firm debts is extinguished by a sale of the property on execution against an individual partner, the effect of which is to exhaust the firm assets and dissolve the partnership. Id.

Where one copartner has paid more than his share of partnership debts, he has a claim upon the partnership property which, in equity, is superior to the claims of the separate creditors of his copartners. Crooker v. Crooker, 83 D. 509.

One copartner who has paid more than his share of partnership debts can sustain a bill enjoining separate creditors of his copartner from satisfying their judgments against such indebted copartner out of the partnership property. Id.

An assignment by one partner of his interest in partnership property in trust to pay all his individual and partnership debts is inferior to the implied lien of the copartner on the partnership property, which inures to the benefit of the partnership creditors. Bank of Kentucky v. Herndon, 89 D. 630.

All the members of a firm may agree to an appropriation of firm property in payment of an individual debt of one partner, and his creditor takes the property discharged of any claim or equity of the partnership creditors, since the members of the firm have expressly parted with their lien, and the firm creditors have none except through the partners. Hapgood v. Cornwell, 95 D. 516.

A partner purchasing the entire interest of copartners may use firm property in payment of his individual debt, and his creditor will take it discharged of any claim or equity of the firm creditors. Nor will it invalidate the transaction that the purchase is made with the express intention of turning over the goods to the creditor of the purchasing partner. Id.

The assets of a partnership were sold, on dissolution, at public auction, to a person who subsequently conveyed them to one of the partners, in pursuance of a secret arrangement made before the sale. The other partner was also present, and bid. Held, that the purchasing partner must account to the other therefor, as if no sale had taken place. Jones v. Dexter, 39 R. 459.

95. Rights of the creditors, generally.—A partner's interest in partnership property is his share after the firm debts are paid, and an individual creditor of such partner can only acquire a lien on such interest. If the partnership is insolvent, there is no interest upon which he can acquire a lien. White v. Dougherty, 17 D. 802.

Partnership creditors are entitled to prove their whole debts, notwithstanding any securities they may have from third persons who stand in the situation of mere sureties for the partnership. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

The sureties in such a case have an equity that the creditor should prove his demand against the estate of the principal debtors, and against the separate estate of each, as far as it can be done for their indemnity. Id.

Partnership creditors have no specific lien upon firm assets for the payment of their claims, either legal or equitable. Allen v. Center Valley Co., 54 D. 333.

Creditors of a partnership have a quasi lien upon its property, upon the death or bankruptcy of one or all the partners, which may be made effective by proper proceedings in chancery. Ketchum v. Durkee, 45 D. 412.

A creditor of a firm, upon the death of one partner, cannot go into chancery, as a matter of course, to coerce satisfaction of a legal demand out of the effects of the firm in the hands of the survivor, but only upon the insolvency of the latter, and the consequent inefficiency of the legal remedy. Pearson v. Keedy, 43 D. 160.

Whether, as the insolvency of the surviving partner is the sole ground of the creditor's right to go into chancery, a bill can be entertained that does not show the inefficiency of the legal remedy by a judgment and return of "no property" against the survivor, quere. Id.

Insolvency of the surviving partner and the insufficiency of the legal remedy being the only ground upon which a creditor of a partnership can go into equity, it is necessary that this fact should be clearly and explicitly stated in the bill. Id.

Where a bill does not show a case for equity jurisdiction, it does not operate as a lis pendens, though process be served, so as to affect the choses in action sought to be subjected, or to overreach, on that ground alone, the settlement thereof made between the survivor and the debtors of the firm. Id.

Partnership obligations are treated as joint and several in equity. In the event of the death of one partner, the firm creditors may proceed at law against the survivors, and in equity against the estate of the decedent. Ladd v. Grinwold, 46 D. 443; Camp v. Grant, 54 D. 321.

The claim of creditors of a firm to partnership realty is superior to a wife's right of dower and to the legal title of the heirs at law of a deceased partner. Andrews v. Brown, 56 D. 252.

Creditors of a partnership have no lien on partnership property, and can invoke the rule that the partnership property shall be primarily liable only through right of partners to have joint property applied to pay joint debts. Miller v. Estill, 67 D. 305; Coover's Appeal, 70 D. 149; Backus v. Murphy, 80 D. 531.

When the right of partners themselves to apply partnership property in extinguishment of partnership debts is gone, the right of partnership creditors thus to apply it is also divested. Miller v. Estill, 67 D. 305.

A creditor may attack a proceeding for dissolution of partnership at any time before final distribution of the assets, on the ground that it was instituted to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors. Adams v. Woods, 68 D. 313.

Individual creditors of a partner have not such exclusive right to payment out of his individual property as to render fraudulent an assignment of it for the benefit of the firm creditors. Gadsden v. Carson, 70 D. 207.

Where the surviving partner of a firm becomes insolvent, and his individual creditors levy attachments on the partnership property, the partnership creditors may come into equity to enforce their right to priority of payment out of the partnership assets. Farley v. Moog, 58 R. 585.

A partner in an insolvent firm sold his interest to his copartner, who assumed the firm debts. The latter deeded all the firm property to secure a debt of his own accruing previous to the dissolution. Held, that a creditor of the firm was entitled to payment out of such property before the individual creditor, and as to the firm creditor such deed was void. Phelps v. McNeely, 27 R. 378.

Respective rights of the partnership creditors and the creditors of its individual members considered. Allen v. Wells, 33 D. 757.

96. Firm creditors, when confined to partnership assets. — The partnership contract imposes precisely the same obligation upon each separate partner that a sole and separate contract does; there is no express or implied contract resulting from the law of partnership that the separate estate shall go to pay separate debts exclusively, but as the partnership creditors, in equity, have a prior lien upon the partnership funds, chancery will compel them to exhaust that remedy before resorting to the separate estate; beyond this, both sets of creditors stand precisely equal, both at law and in equity. Bardwell v. Perry, 47 D. 687.

Partnership creditors cannot resort to the separate estate of their debtor until the separate creditors have been satisfied. Morgan v. His Creditors, 20 D. 262; Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

Judgment obtained by one firm against another firm, constituted in part of the same members, cannot be enforced by levy upon the separate property of an individual member of the defendant firm. Tassey v. Church, 40 D. 575.

97. — when they may share in individual assets. — Joint creditors may, at law, pursue both the joint and separate estate, to the extent of each, for the satisfaction of their joint demands, which are at law considered both joint and several. McCulloh v. Dashiell, 18 D. 271.

Partnership creditors, in equity, can only look to the surplus of their debtor's separate estate after the payment of his separate debts. McCulloh v. Dashiell, 18 D. 271; Bailey v. Kennedy, 29 D. 351.

Courts of equity do not, as against separate creditors, treat a joint debt as joint and several; yet where the claims of joint creditors do not come into conflict with the separate creditors, but only with the interests of the representatives of a deceased partner, equity will, as against such representatives, decree to joint creditors a satisfaction of their claims by considering them joint and several. McCulloh v. Dashiell, 18 D. 271.

Where a partner is liable not only as such, but also as indorser for the firm, his separate estate is considered legal assets for the payment of the demand; but the partnership estate, being primarily liable, must first be resorted to for payment. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

A judgment creditor of a firm may levy upon the separate property of any member thereof, though he is insolvent and unable to pay his individual debts. Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 49 D. 160.

A partnership creditor, after exhausting partnership funds, is entitled equally with individual creditors to payment of an unsatisfied balance of his debt out of the private property of a partner. Gadsden v. Carson, 70 D. 207.

Notes payable to a partnership transferred by a partner in payment of an individual debt cannot be reached by firm creditors on trustee process against the transferee; but if there was fraud in the transaction, a bill in equity is the proper remedy. Huntton v. Dow, 70 D. 404.

The rule that individual creditors must first be paid out of separate property of each member of firm before partnership creditors

* Separate property of partner, when liable for partnership debts, see note, 18 D. 280-283.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

can resort to it has no application in a proceeding by a firm creditor to cancel an invalid assignment of such property made for the benefit of creditors of the same class. Loring v. Pairo, 77 D. 108.

Where it is shown that two persons are engaged in commercial business as partners, and debts have been contracted by the firm, they will be liable for the payment thereof in solido. Gumbel v. Abrams, 96 D. 426.

98. Individual creditors, when confined to separate assets. — Creditors of the several partners cannot claim a dividend out of the joint estate until all the partnership creditors are paid, and then they are permitted to come in upon the surplus. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781. S. P., McCulloch v. Dashiell, 18 D. 271; Bowden v. Schatzell, 23 D. 170; Winston v. Ewing, 34 D. 768; Dyer v. Clark, 39 D. 697; Cummings's Appeal, 64 D. 695. If the partnership is insolvent, the firm creditors have a right to have all the property applied to the payment of their debts. Willis v. Freeman, 82 D. 619.

Advancements made by one partner to the firm, and all other firm debts, must be first discharged out of the firm property, whether real or personal, before recourse can be had to the same by the individual creditors of a partner. Divine v. Mitchum, 41 D. 241.

The sheriff can sell and deliver no part of partnership goods, under an execution at the suit of a judgment creditor of one partner, but only the contingent interest of the debtor partner in the stock and profits after settlement of partnership accounts and payment of partnership creditors. Deal v. Bogue, 67 D. 702.

Equity will restrain a sale of partnership property under execution against an individual partner, until the settlement of the partnership affairs to ascertain whether the debtor partner has a real and valuable interest over and above the liabilities of the firm. But if such sale is not restrained, the purchaser thereof takes subject to the settlement of the partnership, and if there is no surplus belonging to the debtor, he takes nothing, and the property is taken from him by the joint creditors. Hubbard v. Curtis, 74 D. 283.

The object of staying a sale of partnership property under execution against individual partner, until an account is taken between such partner and the partnership is to ascertain and protect the rights of the joint creditors, not to preserve the interests of the other partners. Nor is such account taken solely to ascertain whether there is a surplus interest in the debtor partner; but it being found that the joint effects are not sufficient, or only sufficient, to meet the demands of the joint creditors, the object is to protect these and direct the funds to their payment. Id.

Insolvency of a partnership need not be positively averred in a bill for injunction to restrain the sale of partnership property under an execution against an individual partner; it is sufficient if, with the facts stated and the averments of the bill, an alleged insolvency is apparent. Id.

The fact that complainant asks a perpetual injunction to stay such sale, and not merely a stay to ascertain the debtor's interest in the partnership, is no objection to his bill. For the court having cognizance of the case to take an account of the partnership affairs, finding it insolvent in fact, must necessarily make the injunction perpetual in the end, since, in such case, there is no interest remaining in the debtor to sell. Id.

Judgment taken against a survivor, not as surviving partner, but as upon his sole, individual contract and liability, does not give plaintiff any right against the partnership effects; especially when the pleadings show that they were not sufficient to satisfy the partnership debts. Gaut v. Reed, 76 D. 94.

Where a partner buys real estate upon his own individual security, but asserts that it is partnership property, and his firm fails, and the land is sold by their assignee, the partnership creditors alone are entitled to share in the proceeds, and not the vendors, who can claim only against the purchasing partner. North Penn. Coal Co.'s Appeal, 84 D. 487.

The doctrine that the separate debt of one partner shall not be paid out of the partnership property till all the partnership debts are paid applies only where the principles of equity are brought to interfere in the distribution of the partnership property among the creditors. Midnight v. Smith, 88 D. 233.

99. — when they may share in firm assets. — Partnership property may be attached for a partner's individual debt, after a dissolution of the firm, and the appointment of a receiver, in a suit between the partners, to collect and dispose of the assets. Schatzell v. Bolton, 13 D. 748.

A separate creditor of an individual surviving partner may attach, by way of execution, a debt due the partnership, of which that individual was a member, before a settlement of the partnership and ascertainment of the debtor partner's interests. Berry v. Harris, 85 D. 639.

Separate creditors of a partner, where there is no insolvency, may levy upon the partnership estate of their debtor; but in case of bankruptcy, the partnership estate is first applied to partnership debts. Morgan v. His Creditors, 20 D. 262.

Partnership property is as much liable to judgments for individual as for partnership debts of the only ostensible partner. How v. Kane, 54 D. 152.

Whether, after taking judgment against one of the partners, a party can maintain an action on a note as the joint contract of the firm, is a question upon which there is some diversity of opinion. The great weight of authority seems to be against a second recovery. Gaut v. Reed, 78 D. 94.

Equity will not aid a party to subject partnership property to the payment of a judgment upon a note against the maker only and individually. Id.

The interest of a partner in tangible property of a firm is liable to seizure upon execution in favor of his separate creditor. Nixon v. Nash, 80 D. 390.

A levy and sale on execution of partnership property for an individual debt of one partner must be of an undivided interest in the chattel corresponding to the debtor's share in the firm; but the purchaser at the sale acquires only the beneficial interest of the debtor partner therein. Nixon v. Nash, 80 D. 390; Sutcliffe v. Dokrman, 51 D. 450.

Equity will restrain the sale of the entire partnership property in satisfaction of the individual debt of one partner. Sutcliffe v. Dokrman, 51 D. 450.

A separate creditor of a partner who has levied execution on tangible property of the partnership may file a petition in equity against the other partners, before a sale upon execution, for an account of the partnership, and the ascertainment of his debtor's interest in the property seized. Nixon v. Nash, 80 D. 390.

Upon levy of execution by creditor of an individual partner upon tangible property of firm, it is the right of the creditor and of the other copartners, should either desire, to invoke the equity powers of the court to adjust the partnership business, and to stay proceedings under the execution till the beneficial interest of the debtor partner in the goods seized has been ascertained; but if they do not so elect, the officer must sell the apparent interest of the debtor in the chattels levied on, and upon such sale redeliver the same to the other partners and the purchaser, who will then be owners in common, subject to a lien in favor of the other partners and the joint creditors, upon the interest of the debtor partner in the hands of the purchaser, for any balance due upon final adjustment of the partnership account. Id.

A creditor of a member of a firm which afterwards becomes insolvent, who has attached his debtor's interest in some partnership property, prior to such insolvency, cannot have his lien divested by it. This is so, although judgment was not rendered until after the insolvency. Willis v. Freeman, 82 D. 619.

An individual creditor is guilty of no fraud in requesting his debtor to procure the consent of his copartners, either by purchase or otherwise, to a surrender of partnership property in payment of the individual debt. Hagood v. Cornwell, 95 D. 516.

An individual creditor who takes firm property in payment of his debt and for an additional valuable consideration paid, after his debtor has purchased the interest of his copartners, and without notice of an agreement by the purchasing partner with his copartners to pay firm debts, is a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, and cannot be required to surrender the goods to the firm creditors or to account for their proceeds. Id.

100. When all creditors may share pari passu. — At law both separate and joint creditors may attach either separate or joint property and sell it upon execution in satisfaction of their judgments, without regard to the equities of the debtors. Bardwell v. Perry, 47 D. 687.

Partnership and separate creditors of a deceased partner take pari passu, where the surviving partners are insolvent and there is no joint fund to which the partnership creditors can resort. Emanuel v. Bird, 54 D. 200.

Where joint creditors were to look to the separate property of the debtors respectively for payment, and where the surviving debtor was insolvent, and the fund to be distributed was equitable assets, it would be a matter of course to permit the creditors to come in upon the fund with the separate creditors of the decedent on an equality, at least as to one half the debt; otherwise as to legal assets. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

101. Priority. — 1. In general. — Partnership creditors are entitled to priority of payment out of the partnership effects, and the separate creditors of the individual partners may claim a priority of payment out of their separate assets. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236; Morgan v. His Creditors, 20 D. 262; Ladd v. Griswold, 46 D. 443.

Joint creditors of an insolvent partnership are entitled to a preference over separate creditors of the individual partners in payment out of the property of the firm; and the separate creditors of an individual partner have a like preference over the partnership creditors in payment out of such partner's estate, in case of his death or bankruptcy. Payne v. Matthews, 29 D. 738.

A partner having paid more than his share of debts of the firm has a paramount claim in equity upon the partnership property as against separate creditors of his copartners. Buchan v. Sumner, 47 D. 305.

Partnership creditors have an equitable lien in case a firm is dissolved by death of a partner, or in case of the bankruptcy or insolvency of one or all the partners, upon the joint property of the firm, and separate creditors have a similar lien and priority as to the separate property of the partners. Tillinghast v. Champlin, 67 D. 510.

Equity has jurisdiction of a conflict between individual and firm creditors. Georg v. Woods, 73 D. 605.

Creditors of a firm are entitled to be first satisfied from partnership funds, and the separate creditors from the individual funds; but this rule is applied only where there is a deficiency in one of the funds. Absolute insolvency is not, however, required; for if a firm is barely solvent, and no more, having just sufficient to pay its creditors, the creditors of individual partners cannot come in. And so it will be of the separate fund. Hubbard v. Curtis, 74 D. 233.

2. Of firm creditors over individual creditors.—Creditors of a partnership have in equity a lien upon the partnership property, and they are entitled to have their claims satisfied out of the partnership effects, in preference to the creditors of an individual member of the firm. White v. Dougherty, 17 D. 802. S. P., Doner v. Stauffer, 21 D. 370; Grosvenor v. Austin, 25 D. 743.

Partnership creditors, in order to avail themselves of their rights of priority, in case of conflicting attachments with individual creditors, require nothing more than a valid execution properly levied. Jarvis v. Brooks, 59 D. 359.

Subsequent attachment by creditors of a partnership who have attached property of firm takes precedence of a prior attachment by creditors of the individual members of the firm who have attached the same property. Jarvis v. Brooks, 59 D. 359; Conroy v. Woods, 73 D. 606; Bullock v. Hubbard, 83 D. 130. Contra, see Reed v. Sheperdson, 19 D. 697.

An attachment of a partner's separate property for a firm debt has precedence at law over a subsequent attachment of such property for his individual debt. Allen v. Wells, 33 D. 757.

Where executions are issued against individual partners for separate debts, and also against firm for partnership debts, and by agreement of the execution creditors the firm property is all sold at the same time, the firm creditors are entitled to preference, and are entitled to all the proceeds, where necessary to satisfy their claims, and the rule is the same though the individual executions were prior in date. Crocker's Appeal, 70 D. 149.

Creditors holding partnership notes of firm, after dissolution thereof, have priority of claim upon partnership property, over creditors holding the individual notes of each partner for his share of indebtedness. Crocker v. Crocker, 83 D. 509.

Where the payee of a note made by a copartnership during its existence, and for a copartnership debt, exchanges it, after a dissolution of the firm, for the several note of each partner for his share of the original note, he has simply a precedence over partnership creditors as to the separate property of each member, which a court of equity will enforce; and no priority of claim upon the partnership property. Id.

Joint creditors have no preference, unless the partners are individually involved, except in the single case of a joint commission. Doner v. Stauffer, 21 D. 370.

Creditors of a solvent partnership, in the event of one partner selling all its assets to the other, have no prior right to satisfaction out of such assets over the creditors of the partner to whom such sale was made. Ketchum v. Durkee, 45 D. 412. S. P., Ladd v. Griswold, 45 D. 443.

Partners have no lien upon partnership funds for the payment of the partnership liabilities before individual debts, where the scope of the partnership is so extensive and covers so much of the property of the individual partners, and the relations of the partners towards each other, with respect to the firm property, are such that the parties, by their very articles of compact, must have contemplated a community of goods and of all other interests, rather than a partnership. Rice v. Barnard, 50 D. 54.

Joint creditors have no priority over separate creditors in such a case. Id.

Partnership creditors have priority of right in partnership property, but this does not import that the partnership creditors may step in and take precedence of an individual creditor at any and all times and under all circumstances; for to enable the court to apply the rule, the case must be such that the court may marshal the debts and effects, and thus ascertain the amount of the assets and liabilities, and whether the entire assets, or what part of them, is necessary to pay joint creditors. Scudder v. Delashmut, 71 D. 428.

A joint creditor cannot come in by his attachment alone and oust the separate creditor from his prior attachment or other lien; for the joint creditor has no lien which he can enforce in this manner. Id.

Where B. & L. are partners, and B. & L. as a partnership are also a member of two other firms, B., L., S., & D., and B., L., & S., the creditors of B. & L. are entitled to a preference in the payment of their debts over the creditors of B., L., S., & D., and B., L., & S., out of money which is the proceeds of the property of B. & L., and this in the order of the priority of their several attachment liens. Bullock v. Hubbard, 83 D. 130.

3. Of separate creditors over firm creditors.—Separate creditors of a decedent are not entitled to preference over creditors of a firm of which he was a member. Grosvenor v. Austin, 25 D. 743.

Separate creditors of a partner have no priority respecting his separate estate in right of payment over creditors of the partnership, it seems. Camp v. Grant, 54 D. 321.

An individual creditor of a partner obtains no priority over firm property by the fact that he obtains judgment, issues execution, and levies thereon, as against firm creditors who have not yet obtained judgment. Conroy v. Woods, 73 D. 605.

102. Rights of creditors against estate of deceased partner.*—Securities held by partnership creditors should be first applied toward the discharge of their respective claims, before they can resort to equitable assets of a deceased partner. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

The separate estate of a deceased partner is liable at law only to the claims of separate creditors; in equity, creditors of the partnership, by alleging the insolvency of the surviving partners, may resort to a deceased partner's estate. Id.

A creditor of the partnership is always entitled to whatever he can obtain out of the fund in the hands of the surviving partner, without relinquishing his security against the separate estate of the deceased partner. Id.

A creditor before judgment may sustain a bill against a deceased partner's administrator to compel the distribution of the estate. Grosvener v. Austin, 25 D. 743.

Where a firm is dissolved, leaving one of the partners largely indebted to the concern, and the latter afterwards dies insolvent, his solvent surviving partner, having been compelled to pay debts of the firm out of his own property, is entitled to share in the deceased partner's estate for the balance due him, equally with other creditors having unliquidated demands or accounts, etc., constituting debts of the fourth class under the statutes. Payne v. Matthews, 29 D. 738.

Such demand may be liquidated by the surrogate in settling the estate, or by a decree of the court of chancery after a reference. Id.

In equity, a partnership debt is considered joint and several, and upon the death of any member of the firm the creditor may proceed directly against the estate of the deceased partner. This rule has been adopted by our statute; and in consequence, in Arkansas, a partnership creditor is entitled to an allowance in the probate court of a partnership debt which he has presented to the representative of a deceased partner. McLain v. Carson, 37 D. 777.

At common law, a partnership debt is the joint debt of the partners, and the death of any member of the firm extinguishes the debt as to him; and the remedy of the creditor is confined to one against the survivors. Id.

Partnership debts may be presented against the estate of a deceased partner, under the Connecticut statute, and allowed equally with separate debts, whether the surviving partner is solvent and within the jurisdiction of the court or not. Camp v. Grant, 54 D. 321.

* Death of partner, proceedings to enforce partnership liability against his representatives, see note, 77 D. 114-117.

Heirs of a deceased partner have such interest in the firm's real estate as to give them the privilege, when sued for a divestiture of title by a derivative purchaser from the surviving partner, of showing that the alleged equity is founded in a wrongful conversion of the partnership effects, which a court of equity would not sanction; and it is no answer to their right to defend, that the firm is insolvent, and the whole of the assets is required to pay its debts. Lang v. Waring, 60 D. 533.

Heirs of a deceased partner will not be compelled, in equity, to convey real estate of firm to a purchaser from the surviving partner in all cases of disposition by him, however unfair, inequitable, or unauthorized; and if the disposition be for a grossly inadequate consideration, and made under such circumstances as were well calculated to cause it to be sold for an almost nominal sum, the court ought not to lend its aid to perfect the purchase, especially when its aid is invoked by one whose conduct has contributed, in all probability, to bring about the sacrifice. Id.

Where, under an agreement contained in articles of partnership, the title to the partnership property, upon the death of one partner, vests in the survivor, who transfers it, bona fide, to the representatives of the deceased, if the partnership was insolvent, the assignment, though honestly intended to discharge a debt due to such representatives growing out of the partnership business, might not affect the rights of creditors to have the property subjected to the satisfaction of their demands; but if it becomes necessary to proceed against the estate of the deceased partner, payment can only be enforced through the probate court. Gass v. Reed, 76 D. 94.

In equity, every partnership debt is joint and several. Therefore the creditor may, at the same time, sue the survivor, as such, and proceed against the estate of the deceased partner. Id.

In case of the death of one partner, a creditor of the firm may resort to his estate without first exhausting his remedy against the surviving partners. Doggett v. Dill, 48 R. 565.

103. Position of representative of deceased partner.—Representatives of a deceased partner cannot be sued at law for the partnership debts; the suit must be brought against the survivors, into whose hands the partnership effects pass by survivorship, for the payment of these debts. Wilder v. Keeler, 23 D. 781.

The representative of a deceased partner cannot be sued while there is a surviving partner. Burgwin v. Hostler, 1 D. 582.

A deceased partner's representative may insist that the partnership effects shall be applied to the debts of the firm. Egberts v.

Wood, 24 D. 236; Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573.

A deceased partner's representative has no interest in the question as to what debts shall be paid first, where the partnership funds are insufficient to pay the whole. Egberts v. Wood, 24 D. 236.

Upon the decease of a partner, and the consequent dissolution of the partnership, the surviving partner must account with the representatives of the deceased for his share of the partnership funds, whether the same consist of real or personal assets. Dyer v. Clark, 30 D. 697.

The representative of a deceased partner has no legal interest or title in the choses in action which may have been in the possession of the deceased partner at the time of his death, and is liable to an action by the surviving partner for the recovery of them. Kinsler v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

Payment of a judgment against the surviving partners by the executor of the deceased partner operates as a satisfaction of the judgment, and the executor cannot, by taking an assignment of the judgment, keep it alive to coerce payment from the surviving partners. Hogan v. Reynolds, 56 D. 236.

Personal representatives of a deceased partner become tenants in common with the survivor, of all the partnership property or effects in possession, while the choses in action vest in the survivor, who has the right to control the partnership effects for the purpose of paying the debts and settling up the business. Wilson v. Soper, 56 D. 573.

The administrator of a deceased partner, being tenant in common with the survivor, has power to dispose of an undivided moiety of the stock of goods on hand, and thus vest the surviving partner with the title to the whole stock. Id.

A contract made by representatives of a deceased partner, without authority, and touching matters over which the surviving partner had entire control, will be considered as wholly inoperative to affect the rights and estate of the firm when it is declared inoperative as to the surviving partner. Lockwood v. Mitchell, 70 D. 78.

Where one partner sells his interest in partnership to his copartner, upon consideration that the latter pay all the partnership debts, and upon other considerations, such property becomes the separate property of the copartner. Upon his death, it goes to his administrator, and the seller cannot claim it as surviving partner, to be used in paying partnership debts which he was forced to pay. His remedy is against his deceased partner's estate under the agreement. White v. Parish, 73 D. 204.

The executor of a deceased partner cannot employ the surviving partner to wind up the affairs of the firm at a fixed compensation, unless he is expressly authorized to do so by his testator's will. Brown v. McFarland, 80 D. 598.

104. Liability to creditors, of representative of deceased partner.* — Creditors of a firm had no remedy against representatives of a deceased partner, at the common law, on the dissolution of the firm by the death of one of its members, but were compelled to look to the survivors alone for the payment of their debts. Emanuel v. Bird, 54 D. 200.

In equity, partnership debts are considered joint and several, and the joint creditors have the right to proceed against the estate of the deceased partner if the survivors are insolvent. Id.

In an action upon a firm liability, the administrator of a deceased partner cannot be joined as a defendant with the surviving partners. Childs v. Hyde, 77 D. 113.

An action will lie against the representatives of a deceased partner for the recovery of a partnership debt after the recovery of a judgment therefor against the survivor, and the return of an execution thereon unsatisfied, notwithstanding it may be shown that the survivor had property out of which the execution might have been satisfied, which was not discovered by the sheriff. Pope v. Cole, 14 R. 198.

Where articles of partnership simply provide that on the death of one partner, his capital shall be left in the business until the close of the partnership term, the executor of the deceased partner is not personally liable for the partnership debts when he does not personally engage in the business. Wald v. Davenport, 57 R. 552.

V. LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

105. Rights and powers of special partner. — Authority of one special partner to bind another ceases when the particular purpose of the partnership is concluded. Benley v. White, 38 D. 186.

Where a limited partnership is formed for the purpose of purchasing a drove of horses for a distant market, and after making sundry purchases, on joint account, one partner is placed in charge of the horses, and begins driving them to the market for which they were destined, he has no authority thereafter, while on his journey to the market, to make additional purchases, and bind the other partner thereby. Id.

The special partner is not deprived of his interest in a limited partnership by a levy thereon under an attachment, nor is he thereby deprived of the right to an account, or prevented from collecting any surplus over such claims as the sheriff has upon it. Harris v. Murray, 86 D. 268.

106. His liabilities, generally. — When a partnership is formed for a special purpose, and is limited, and a partner gives the firm notes for his individual obligation, the other partner is not liable, if the notes are issued without his knowledge or consent, and the person receiving them is aware that they are not issued for a firm debt. Lanning v. Gaine, 3 D. 422.

The interest of a special partner in a limited partnership cannot be levied upon and sold under an execution issued in an attachment suit brought against the members of the partnership. Harris v. Murray, 86 D. 268.

A partner in commendam does not become responsible for liabilities created by the active partner after the expiration of such partnership, from the fact that he fails to have a settlement of its affairs; nor is such partner liable as a general partner if he allows his money to remain in the firm after its expiration, believing himself to be a partner in commendam, and liable only for the amount invested, unless he has done or permitted some act which could have induced creditors to believe him to be a general partner. Slocumb v. De Licardi, 99 D. 740.

The defendant, S., resided in Cuba, and was a special partner of a firm organized and doing business there. The provisions of the Spanish law relative to limited partnerships had been so far complied with as to limit his liability to the amount of capital which he had contributed. The firm became indebted to the plaintiffs, citizens of this state. S. had no personal connection with the transactions. In an action upon such indebtedness, — held, that the contract of partnership was to be interpreted and regulated by the laws of Spain; that the liability of S. and the authority of the acting partner to bind him were to be determined by those laws; and that he was entitled to set up his limited liability as a defense. King v. Sarria, 25 R. 128.

107. When liable as general partner. — Under the statute for the formation of limited partnerships, which requires the capital of the special partner to be paid in actual cash on the formation, and provides that if there is any false statement in the certificate and affidavits of formation, the special partner shall be liable as a general partner, a partnership was formed, by a certificate and affidavits dated and filed December 23, 1870, to commence January 1, 1871; the affidavits and certificates stated that the special partner's capital had been actually and in good faith paid in cash; in fact, the special partner gave his checks for the amount, dated December 31, 1870, which were paid January 2, 1871. Held, that the statements were false within the meaning of the statute, and the special partner was liable as a general partner for the debts of the firm. Durant v. Abendroth, 25 R. 158.

On the formation of a limited partnership the special partner gave his certified check for ten thousand dollars, the amount of his capital, which was deposited to the credit of the new firm. Afterward, on the same day, the firm gave him their checks on the same bank for some seven thousand six hundred dollars, the amount appearing to his credit on the books of a former firm composed of the same members. Held, that this was not an actual cash contribution as required by the statute, and the special partner was liable as a general partner. Lineweaver v. Slagle, 54 R. 775.

PARTY-WALLS.

[Includes the title to and relative rights and liabilities of adjoining land-owners, as affected by the existence of a wall between their lots, built for their common use, at their common expense.]

1. What is a party-wall.* — A description in a notice of sale of premises as the "Collins Hotel" does not import, ex vi termini, that the walls are party-walls, or of a different character. Hendricks v. Stark, 93 D. 549.

The plaintiff bought a lot of the defendant, agreeing to erect a building on it, and it was also agreed that when the defendant should build on his own adjacent lot, he should construct a stairway to the second story to serve for both buildings, and to stand one half on the land of each party. The plaintiff built his wall twenty inches from the line, and the defendant not only used it for the stairway, but for the independent support of his own building. Held, that the wall became a party-wall, and defendant was liable for one half the cost. Melony v. Dixon, 54 R. 1.

2. Right to build or increase dimensions. — Either owner of a party-wall may increase the thickness, length, or height of his own part of it, if he can do so without injury to the other part. Andrus v. Haseltine, 46 R. 635. But the party making the addition does it at his peril. And if injury results he is liable for all damages. He must insure the safety of the operation. Brooks v. Curtis, 10 R. 545. And where the original agreement was for a dead wall, there can be no windows or other openings in the part so raised. Dauenhauer v. Desine, 32 R. 627.

The owner of two adjoining lots conveyed one to B. and the other to S., each deed containing an agreement that the division wall between the houses then standing should, notwithstanding a deviation from the true dividing line, remain undisturbed "so long as the said houses shall endure." Held, that the true construction of the deeds was, that whenever the grantee, or person claiming under him, should find it necessary, either by reason of the decaying or dilapidated condition of his house, or its unsuitness for the locality, to remove it and to erect in its stead a more substantial structure, suitable to the place, and required for the business wants and purposes of the locality, he had the right to remove the old division wall and erect a new building on his lot, extending to the true dividing line. Glenn v. Davis, 6 R. 389.

3. Rights of adjoining owners in use of wall. — Where parties construct a wall for the support of their houses, on the line of their respective lots, and continue to occupy the same for more than twenty-one years, under an agreement containing no express stipulation as to the continuance or termination of such joint use of the wall, one of the parties may, if he desires to remove the building upon his lot, in order to erect another thereon, notify the other of his intention to remove that portion of the wall standing upon his land, and upon the other party's refusing to suffer or permit such removal, he may proceed to take the wall down, using due and proper care to prevent injury to that part of the wall standing upon the lot of the other party, without being liable in an action therefor. Hieatt v. Morris, 78 D. 280.

Where two owners of realty build adjoining houses at the same time, in such a manner that an alley is left between them, one of the walls of which rests on the property of each owner respectively, the two walls coming together at the top in an arch, above and upon which, on the division line between their property, is erected a party-wall, into which the houses on each side are built, the manner of construction implies an agreement or contract between the owners that each shall have a right of support or easement in the land of the other, so far as necessary to maintain the alley for mutual use, and the party-wall for common support of the two houses, and that the uninterrupted enjoyment of such right for a period of more than fifty years raises a presumption of mutual grants for such enjoyment for the time the two houses shall be capable of sale and beneficial occupation, operating to preclude any authority or right of either of the parties to interfere with the alleys or walls without the consent of the other, unless he can do so without injury to the latter's possession. Dowling v. Hennings, 83 D. 545.

The upper owner of a tenement has a right to have his portion thereof supported by the division walls between him and the lower owner. And for the removal of such support by the lower owner, the upper owner may maintain an action, without showing special damage. McConnel v. Kibbe, 85 D. 265.

Owners of adjoining premises are not tenants in common of a party-wall, but each owns in severalty the part thereof on his side of the line, with an easement of support from the other part. Bloch v. Isham, 92 D. 287.

The right of an adjoining owner to use a party-wall does not constitute such an encumbrance upon the premises or defect in the title thereof as will relieve the vendee from his contract for the purchase thereof. Hendricks v. Stark, 93 D. 549.

Where a wall of a house stands wholly upon the land of another, and is essential to the support of the house, the latter cannot remove or impair it, both owners having bought from the common owner, and with knowledge of the situation of the wall. Henry v. Koch, 44 R. 484.

4. Contribution between them. — Where there was an old party-wall between two owners, and one, being desirous to build a new house on his lot, pulled down the old house, and with it the party-wall, which was ruinous, and rebuilt it with his new house, the owner of the adjoining house and lot is bound to contribute ratably to the expense of the new wall; but he is not bound to contribute to building the new wall higher than the old; nor if materials more costly or of a different nature are used, is he bound to pay any part of the extra expense. Campbell v. Mesier, 8 D. 570.

A party building on his own land and thereby using the wall of another is not liable to the owner for one half the cost of the wall. Abrahams v. Krausler, 66 D. 698.

In Philadelphia, by statute, one who builds a wall partly on his own ground, and partly on the ground of an adjoining owner, must bear the entire expense, but he has a contingent claim against such adjoining owner that the latter shall pay for his share of the wall before using it. Roberts v. Bye, 72 D. 710.

Where it is agreed between the builder and his contractor that the latter is to look to the adjoining owner of a party-wall for half his compensation, as the wall is part of the building, the legal title to which is in the builder, he becomes trustee for the contractor. If he sells his building to a purchaser with notice, the latter becomes substituted as trustee. To recover his compensation in such case, the contractor must bring his action against the adjoining owner, when the claim accrues by the latter's using the wall, in the name of his trustee. But if the builder sells to a bona fide purchaser without notice, the latter takes the property divested of the trust, and then the contractor's remedy is an action for money had and received, against the builder. Ib.

In an action to recover the value of one half of a party-wall erected by the plaintiff, partly on his estate and partly on that of the defendant, the jury may, in the absence of an express agreement as to payment on the defendant's part, infer a promise to pay, if the plaintiff undertook and completed the wall with the expectation that the defendant would pay him for it, and the defendant had reason to know that the plaintiff was so acting with that expectation, and allowed him so to act without objection. Day v. Caton, 20 R. 347.

One owner of a party-wall who adds to it for his own use may maintain an action of contribution against the other owner, who has used such additions, for one half the value of the additions when made. Sanders v. Martin, 31 R. 598.

In case a party-wall is destroyed by fire, there is no implied obligation to contribute toward rebuilding it. Antomarchi v. Russell, 35 R. 40.

Plaintiff and defendant owning adjoining lots entered into a parol agreement to jointly build a party-wall, and in pursuance thereof built a portion of the wall, when defendant refused to proceed further. Whereupon the plaintiff, who had prepared materials and planned a building in reliance upon the performance of the agreement, proceeded to complete the wall after due notice to the defendant. Held, 1. That the parol contract having been partly executed, the parties were estopped from denying the existence of the easement thereby created; and 2. That plaintiff was not limited to an action for specific performance, but could recover of defendant one half the cost of the wall. Rindge v. Baker, 15 R. 475.

5. Conveyances, and rights of purchasers.—Conveyances of adjoining buildings having a party-wall, to different grantees, the center line of the wall being made the boundary between them, give to each grantee a right to have his building supported by means of his neighbor's half of the wall. When either building becomes, by age and decay, so dilapidated that rebuilding becomes necessary, its owner may, for that purpose, and on reasonable notice to the adjoining tenant, and using proper care and skill, take down and rebuild the party-wall, without incurring liability to the other tenant. Partridge v. Gilbert, 69 D. 632.

A covenant to pay the owner of an adjoining lot one half the cost of a party-wall erected by him when the covenantor should use the wall is a personal covenant, and does not pass to the grantee of the covenantee. Bloch v. Isham, 92 D. 287; Cole v. Hughes, 13 R. 811. Contra, Sharp v. Cheatham, 57 R. 433; Richardson v. Tobey, 23 R. 283.

The sale and conveyance of land by the owner amounts to a revocation of an oral agreement between him and an adjoining owner, whereby the latter was to build on the line between the lands a party-wall, and the former was to pay one half the cost thereof, provided the adjoining owner has notice of the sale, and has not at the time commenced the erection of the wall. Rice v. Roberts, 1 R. 195.

Where A and B agreed upon a party-wall, to be built at the expense of A, and for one half of which B was to reimburse him before using the wall, and that the agreements should be taken as covenants running with the land, — held, that the covenant for reimbursement did not run with the lot of A. Gibson v. Holden, 56 R. 146.

6. Controversies relative to party-walls. — If a party's wall is used by another to the owner's injury, his remedy is an action for damages resulting from such injury. Abraham v. Krautler, 66 D. 698.

Action on the case is the proper remedy by one tenant in common of a party-wall against his co-tenant, where an injury to the wall, and the house of the plaintiff, of which it forms a part, has been occasioned by the negligent and unskillful manner in which his co-tenant has made an excavation on his own lot. Moody v. McClelland, 84 D. 770.

7. Termination of the easement. — Where houses having a party-wall are accidentally destroyed by fire, leaving the wall standing, the easement in the wall ceases, and either owner may dispose as he pleases of the part on his ground. Hofman v. Kuhn, 34 R. 491.

1. Powers of the states respecting patent rights. — State statutes regulating or limiting the sale of patent rights are void. Helm v. First Nat. Bank, 13 R. 395; Grover & B. S. M. Co. v. Butler, 21 R. 200; Hollida v. Hunt, 22 R. 63; Crittenden v. White, 23 R. 676. But a provision regulating the sale of articles is not void, because such articles are patented. Patterson v. Com., 21 R. 220. Contra, Grover & B. S. M. Co. v. Butler, 21 R. 200; Wood Moving Machine Co. v. Caldwell, 23 R. 641.

The use of a patented article devoted to public use is subject to control by state legislation when the public welfare demands it. State v. Telephone Co., 38 R. 583.

A state statute providing that any person taking a written obligation, the consideration whereof is a patent right, shall, before such obligation is signed by the maker, insert in the body thereof "given for a patent right," is unconstitutional, as interfering with the exclusive power of Congress to regulate patents. Helm v. First Nat. Bank, 13 R. 395; Crittenden v. White, 23 R. 676; Hollida v. Hunt, 22 R. 63; Cranston v. Smith, 26 R. 514. Contra, see New v. Walker, 58 R. 40.

A state statute requiring vendors of patent rights to file with the county clerk an authenticated copy of the letters, with an affidavit that they are genuine and have not been revoked or annulled, and that the vendors have authority to sell, is valid. Breechbill v. Randall, 52 R. 695; New v. Walker, 58 R. 40.

A state statute required foreign corporations, as a condition precedent to the transaction of their business in any county of the state, to deposit in the office of the county clerk a power of attorney, authorizing their agents to transact business for them, and the service of process on said corporations by service on such agents. Held, not to apply to corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of articles covered by letters patent. Grover & B. S. M. Co. v. Butler, 21 R. 200.

A state statute provided for the inspection of illuminating oils, and forbade the sale of any that would not stand a prescribed test. Held, that the prohibition was constitutional as applied to oils patented under the laws of the United States, as well as in other cases. Patterson v. Com., 21 R. 220.

2. What may be the subject of a patent. — An invention, to be the subject of a patent, must be useful for some beneficial purpose. Dickinson v. Hall, 25 D. 390.

A valid patent may be obtained upon a new combination of existing principles or machines. Holliday v. Rheem, 57 D. 628.

3. What constitutes invention. — An instruction that if there is anything new in an invention a patent obtained upon it is valid, is erroneous. Holliday v. Rheem, 57 D. 628.

In a joint invention each party should invent or discover something essential to the whole result. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248.

4. The requisite utility. — A "useful invention," within the meaning of the patent act, is one that may be applied to some practical and statutory use named in the patent; but it is not necessary that it should be of such general utility as to supersede all other inventions used to accomplish the same purpose. Rouse v. Blanchard, 86 D. 783.

The question as to whether an invention is useful must be left to the jury, under proper instructions, in an action upon a note, the consideration of which is the right to make and sell a patented invention. Id.

In an action upon a note given for a patent right, the defense to which is failure of consideration, it is error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, at defendant's request, that if the article patented is "impracticable to be used for the purpose for which it was patented, then the defense of failure of consideration is established." Id.

In such an action it is error to instruct the jury, at plaintiff's request, "that if the invention patented is useful in some measure and for some purpose the patent is not void." It is too broad, and calculated to mislead the jury. So where the jury are told "that if the invention can be applied to any beneficial purpose, it may be deemed a useful invention," the charge is objectionable. Id.

The expression "useful for some beneficial purpose," found in the patent decisions, is to be taken in a general sense as applicable to all patents, and not as implying in a particular case, where the thing invented is worthless for the purpose intended, but of possible useful application to some other, that the patent may nevertheless be valid. Id.

5. Rights of patentees, generally. — An inventor loses his right to a patent, if he suffers the invention to go into public use before he makes application for a patent; and this, although the articles used were manufactured by himself or his agents. Earl v. Page, 26 D. 711.

One joint owner of a patent right cannot maintain a bill in equity against another joint owner, to compel an accounting for a portion of the profits of sales of the patented article, in the absence of any special agreement. Voe v. Singer, 81 D. 696.

An inventor may grant the use of his invention, within the limits prescribed by the law, before the patent is issued, provided he does not thereby forfeit his right, or abandon his discovery to the public. Stemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248.

The right of a patentee is not invalidated by reason of mere suggestions or assistance received from others. To effect this, the suggestions must furnish all the information to enable the alleged inventor to construct the improvement, or use the new process completely and perfectly. Id.

A patent right is a reward granted by the public for the skill and ingenuity of the inventor. No one but the inventor can have this exclusive right, and he may assign it after the patent has been issued. Id.

The right of an inventor in his patent may be reached and sold upon proceedings supplementary to execution. Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 40 R. 120.

An inventor or discoverer of a secret process of manufacture, whether patentable or not, has property therein which equity will protect against one who, in violation of contract and breach of confidence, undertakes to apply it to his own use, or to disclose it to third persons, and as against third persons having notice of such relations, although he may not have an exclusive right to it as against the public, or against those who in good faith acquire knowledge of it. Peabody v. Norfolk, 96 D. 664.

A salary agreed to be paid an employee is sufficient consideration for his promise not to disclose the employer's inventions and discoveries as well as for his promise to serve as engineer, where the employee agreed to serve the employer as engineer in his factory, and particularly in the construction and running of the machinery, and not to give any person information, directly or indirectly, in regard to any portion of the machinery, and by all means in his power to prevent others from obtaining any information in regard to it such as would enable them to use it, and the employer agreed to pay the employee an annual salary "in full compensation for the above-described services." Id.

An employee's agreement never to disclose his employer's inventions and discoveries confidentially imparted to him will be enforced in equity, although, perhaps, the employee's agreement to serve as engineer may not be specifically enforced. Id.

A secret of trade or manufacture does not lose its character as such by being confidentially disclosed to agents or servants, without whose assistance it could not be made of any value. Id.

An inventor or discoverer of a secret process of manufacture is none the less entitled to protection against those who, in or with knowledge of, violation of, contract and breach of confidence, undertake to disclose it or to reap the benefit of it, from the fact that the process is liable to be inspected by the assessor of internal revenue or other public officer, or from the danger of divulging the secret in the course of a judicial investigation. Id.

Executors of an inventor or discoverer of a secret process of manufacture succeed to his rights, and may maintain a bill in equity to prevent its disclosure in violation of contract and breach of confidence. Id.

At the suit of the owner of a patent for vulcanized rubber, A, a dentist, was enjoined from using the preparation. Believing that A disregarded the injunction, the owner employed B to ascertain. B procured C to apply to A for a set of teeth upon a plate of vulcanized rubber. A made the teeth upon such plate, delivered them to C, and received pay therefor. B and C reported the facts to the owner, and on their affidavits, proceedings for contempt were commenced against A. Held, that B and C were not liable for a conspiracy to induce A to violate the injunction; that the owner of the patent had a right to resort to this method of learning the facts; and that the communications of B and C to the owner of the patent were privileged. Knowles v. Peck, 19 R. 542.

6. Proceedings to obtain a patent.*

— An inventor, to entitle himself to a patent, must give, in his specification, a true description of his invention, and state clearly and accurately what he claims as his invention. Davis v. Bell, 31 D. 202.

Ambiguity in any material part of such description will render the patent void. Id.

The specification must state what is new and what is old, in such a manner as to show clearly what is claimed as a new invention, and if it seeks to cover more than is new, the patent will be void. Id.

7. Surrender and abandonment.†

An invention may be surrendered or dedicated to public use, and when once abandoned it can never be resumed. McCay v. Burr, 47 D. 441.

8. Assignments.— A conveyance of an exclusive right to fabricate and use a patented invention within a certain district carries with it the right to vend the same, without express words. Belius v. Hays, 9 D. 385.

The assignment of a particular interest in a patent right, or a conveyance of a right to use an invention in a limited territory, is not required to be recorded in the patent-office. Stevens v. Head, 31 D. 617.

* Specifications for, what must contain, see note, 81 D. 204-206.

† Abandonment of invention, when occurs, see note, 47 D. 443-451.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The vendee of a right to use a patented invention, who has not been disturbed in the exercise of such right, must show that the vendor had no right to convey, if he seeks to recover against him on the ground that there was no right conveyed. Id.

A purchaser of a patented article, knowing that the vendor had no right either to manufacture or sell the same, cannot recover from the vendor the money paid. Bell v. Bowney, 56 D. 601.

The assignment of a right to construct and use a worthless patented invention constitutes no consideration for a promissory note. Rove v. Blanchard, 86 D. 783.

Where the plaintiff alleges that he and the defendant were the joint inventors of certain machines, and as such entered into certain covenants, pleas that neither party was the inventor, or that separate patents to them previous to the agreement were void, or a subsequent joint patent was void, were held bad. Stearns v. Barrett, 11 D. 223.

Where the defendant pleads that each party, supposing himself the inventor, procured a patent and entered into the agreement expecting to enjoy the exclusive right within his district, and that the patents were void, a replication traversing that they entered into the agreement under that supposition and expectation was held sufficient. Id.

A stipulation in the agreement that the defendant might use the machines in the plaintiff's district upon certain conditions, need not be stated in the declaration, as it is matter of defense. Id.

Letters patent of the United States, owned by an insolvent debtor, pass to his assignee in insolvency. Barton v. White, 59 R. 84.

9. Licenses.—A license to use an invention, which is limited to individuals, is not an abandonment of the invention. McCay v. Burr, 47 D. 441.

The use of an invention by special permission of the patentee is not a use of it by the public. Id.

A license to an employer to use an invention is implied, where his employee, while receiving wages, experiments at his employer's expense, constructs the article invented, and permits his employer to use it without compensation paid or demanded, and then obtains a patent therefor. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248.

A manufacturing company was preparing to put upon the market a new machine. Its superintendent, knowing this intention, voluntarily disclosed to the company a device of his own, and by direction of the company, with its materials and at its expense, voluntarily applied his device to the machines. Held, that this did not imply an agreement for the absolute assignment to the company of a patent for the device, but implied a perpetual license to the company to apply the device at those works, and sell the machines anywhere. Fuller & J. Mfg. Co. v. Bartlett, 60 R. 838.

10. Interpretation and validity of letters patent.—A patent may be valid, although some parts of the machine described were not the original invention of the patentee. Holliday v. Rheem, 57 D. 628.

If anything be included in a patent which is not new, or if the patent covers any material or substantial part of a machine which the patentee did not invent or discover, the patent is void. Id.

One who obtains a patent upon two appliances upon a water-wheel, when said patent is attacked must show that each of said appliances is new, or his patent is void. Id.

A joint patent taken out on the sole invention of one is void, as is likewise a sole patent taken out on an invention of more than one. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248.

In an action brought in a state court to recover the price agreed to be paid for a patent right, the defendant may, for the purpose of showing want or failure of consideration, prove that the patent is void for want of novelty. Rice v. Garnhart, 17 R. 448.

11. Jurisdiction of suits involving patents, generally.—The federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction where the question of the validity of a patent is directly involved, and the state courts have no cognizance thereof either at law or in equity. But when patent rights come in question collaterally, their validity may become a subject of inquiry in the state courts. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248; Nash v. Lull, 3 R. 435.

State courts are competent, either at law or in equity, to enforce a contract or a trust, the subject of which is a patent, where the validity of the patent is not directly in question, and may pass upon that when it arises ex necessitate, as by way of defense to an action on a contract. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248.

A state court has jurisdiction of an equitable action on a bond conditional upon the validity of a patent. Middlebrook v. Broadbents, 7 R. 457. Also, to compel performance of an agreement to assign a patent. Binnay v. Annan, 9 R. 10; Fuller & J. Mfg. Co. v. Bartlett, 60 R. 838. But a court of equity cannot decree the assignment of a patent on the ground that plaintiff, and not the patentee, is the true original inventor, in whole or in part. Slemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248. Also, of an action to rescind a contract for the sale of a patent right, brought on the ground of the false and fraudulent representations of the vendor as to its value. Page v. Dickerson, 9 R. 532.

In a suit by the owner of a patent against a licensee for breach of contract to pay royalties, a state court may not restrain the defendant from the use of the patent during the suit. Hat Sweat Mfg. Co. v. Reinohl, 55 R. 793.

Plaintiffs alleged that they were the owners of a valuable right secured by letters patent, and were carrying on a profitable trade in making and selling the article patented; that defendant had printed and issued a circular, claiming therein to be the real patentee of said right and the only one authorized to make and sell articles of the kind made by plaintiffs, and cautioning all persons against purchasing plaintiffs' articles, — thereby injuring plaintiffs. Defendant's answer set up its letters patent, and alleged that plaintiffs' trade was an infringement thereof. The trial court found the issuing of the circular, that it was injurious to plaintiffs, but that it was issued in good faith. Held, that an injunction to restrain the publication of the circular and for damages caused by it was not within the jurisdiction of a state court. Hovey v. Rubber Tip Pencil Co., 15 R. 470.

12. — of suits for infringement. — A state court has no jurisdiction of an action by the owner of a patent to recover compensation for its use from one who has used it without his consent. De Witt v. Elmira Nobles Mfg. Co., 23 R. 73.

13. Actions for damages. — Unless the inventor has patented his medicines, he has no cause of action against another who prepares the same kind of medicines, and calls them by the same generic name, if he does not offer and sell them as the preparation of the inventor. Thomson v. Winchester, 31 D. 135.

But if another puts up an inferior article, and sells it as the plaintiff's preparation, it is a fraud upon him, for which he may recover without proving special damage. Id.

14. Matters of defense. — A party entering into an agreement for the purchase of a patent right is not bound to go on with the contract if the patent turns out to be invalid, but this is an equitable defense which must be specially and distinctly pleaded, and in such a case, the court should instruct the jury with reference to the validity of conflicting patents, whether the patentees are before the court or not. Bellas v. Hays, 9 D. 385.

In an action brought in a state court to recover the price agreed to be paid for a patent right, the defendant may, for the purpose of showing want or failure of consideration, prove that the patent is void for want of novelty. Rice v. Garnhart, 17 R. 448.

Plaintiff, being joint owner with defendant of certain letters patent which both supposed to be valid, conveyed to the defendant the exclusive right to manufacture the patented articles, and defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a certain royalty therefor. Held, in an action for the royalty, that the invalidity of the patent was no defense for the time the defendant had actually enjoyed the patent under the license unmolested. Mareton v. Sweet, 23 R. 43. S. P., Jones v. Burnham, 24 R. 10.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

II. PAYMENTS OTHER THAN IN MONEY.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Obligation to make payment. — The law requires a man to devote the whole of his property, with some trivial exceptions, to the payment of his debts. Trimble v. Turner, 53 D. 90.

All property, real and personal, of a debtor, is liable, both during his lifetime and afterwards, for the payment of his debts, which liability is to be made effectual by special provisions of the law for that purpose. Ticknor v. Harris, 40 D. 186.

2. What amounts to a payment. — Money credited on account by him who receives it will be considered intended as a payment, unless it is shown to have been delivered as a loan; but it is otherwise as it respects personal property, though delivered at a fixed valuation. Norton v. Larco, 89 D. 70.

The assignment and receipt of goods to be applied to a particular debt constitute one entire contract. Raymond v. Roberts, 16 D. 602.

Parol evidence affecting such contract is admissible to prove that there were other goods, not mentioned therein, sold at the same time, to be applied upon the same debt, but not to contradict the contract by showing that part of the goods embraced in the assignment were not included in the receipt fixing the price agreed on. Id.

The holders of certain gold-warrants accepted payment thereof in treasury notes under protest, and surrendered the warrants. Held, that the payees could not afterward recover the difference between the value of the notes and gold coin. Gilman v. County of Douglas, 3 R. 237.

3. What does not. — An executory agreement to apply the value of certain services and materials to the part payment of a debt, when the amount to be applied is uncertain and unliquidated, is not a payment so as to be admissible under the general issue in assumpsit. Manville v. Gay, 60 D. 379.

Where husband and wife deed away wife's land, receive therefor a promissory note, and the wife agrees, with the husband's assent, that the makers of the note shall furnish her family with goods and apply them upon the note, articles delivered to the family, under this agreement, constitute a payment upon the note; but not so as to goods delivered under the husband's order, to persons not members of the family. Barber v. Slade, 73 D. 299.

The burden of proof under an agreement that makers of a note shall furnish goods for family use, and to be applied in payment thereof, is on the makers, when sued, to show what goods were delivered for such use. Id.

A usurious extension of the time of payment of a valid debt does not impair the creditor's right to recover therefor. The surrender and cancellation of a security will not operate as a bar to a recovery, unless the intent of the transaction was to release or discharge the indebtedness. Winsted Bank v. Webb, 100 D. 435.

Defendant proposed to pay his note to plaintiff, but at plaintiff's request the note was renewed, upon the understanding that it should be deposited in bank for collection. Subsequently defendant deposited in his own name the amount of the note in the bank, which was burned, with the contents, before the note had matured or been deposited. Held, that defendant was liable for the amount of the note. Moss v. Price, 8 R. 609.

The holder of a second mortgage took up a note which was secured by a first mortgage on the same premises. Held, that he did not thereby pay the note or release the maker and indorser from their obligation to pay. Mattison v. Marks, 18 R. 197.

4. Who may receive payment, generally. — It is payment in law when the hand which is to pay is the hand also to receive. Linscigler v. Gourley, 94 D. 51.

A payment by a debtor to an administrator duly appointed is valid, and a bar to an action to compel a second payment, although the supposed intestate is alive at the time, and letters of administration are subsequently revoked for this reason. Roderigas v. East River Saving Inst., 20 R. 555.

Payment by a debtor to the nominal creditor, not the real creditor, and known to be such, is not a performance of one of the conditions of a bond by payment of the debt, nor would the payment of the entire debt to a part owner have that effect, when there was knowledge of an equitable interest in another to a portion of it. Hobson v. Watson, 56 D. 632.

Payment of interest on a state bond to one not the true owner does not discharge the state if the latter has not authorized the payment. People v. Smith, 92 D. 109.

If a state custodian of money pays inter-

out on a state bond to one simulating the true owner, it will be no bar to a recovery by the latter, because it is no payment. Ib.

A state disbursing officer must assure himself of the identity of the payee in a state bond; if through negligence in this respect payment of interest has been made to the wrong person, the state remains liable to pay the interest to the party entitled to it. People v. Smith, 92 D. 109. S. P., Dutcher v. Beckwith, 92 D. 232.

5. — of bill or note. — Plaintiff, under an assignment duly executed, held a mortgage to secure notes made by defendant, payable to the order of the assignor at the E. bank. On the day the notes were due, defendant had on deposit in the E. bank money sufficient to pay them, and which, he had told the bank officers when depositing it, was to meet the notes. At maturity plaintiff presented the notes, which were not indorsed by the assignor, at the E. bank, but the bank officers refused to pay them, on the ground that they were not indorsed, and likewise refused when the notes, assignment, and mortgage were subsequently presented. Held, that the bank officers could not insist upon the indorsement of the notes as a condition of payment, and that plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage. Pease v. Warren, 18 R. 58.

6. Time and place of payment. — 1. Time. — Money payable in a reasonable time cannot be divided at the election of the payor so as to make it payable at different times, reasonable time being indivisible. O'Donnell v. Leeman, 69 D. 54.

An agreement to pay in specific articles at a time fixed compels the debtor to become the first actor, and to tender the articles to save himself from default. Deel v. Berry, 73 D. 236.

If a debt is to be paid in services, and the time of performance is specified, the promisor must be the first actor. Ib.

Where a note is to be paid by a certain day in services or money, the maker has until the maturity of the note to make his election, but if not then made, he becomes liable as for a demand in money. Ib.

It is a general rule of the common law, followed in chancery, that sums of money, payable periodically at fixed times, are not apportionable during the intervening periods. Dexter v. Phillips, 23 R. 261.

In the absence of express statute or agreement, no apportionment can be made between the days of payment in rents of real estate, or in the interest on bonds of the United States, with or without coupons, and whether the principal is payable at a time fixed or at the option of the government, the option not having been exercised; or in the interest on bonds or certificates of a state, county, city, town, or railroad corporation, not issued separately for the payment of specific debts, but usually bought and held by way of investment; or in the interest on a note of the receiver of a railroad, or on the certificate of a voluntary association, as a social club, if such note or certificate creates no personal or corporate liability, but is to be satisfied, at a future day, only out of a fund held upon a special trust, the terms of which are not shown to take it out of the general rule. Ib.

But interest upon promissory notes of individuals or of incorporated companies, such as are usually given for money lent, whether secured or not by mortgage or pledge, is apportionable between the days upon which it is stipulated to be paid. Ib.

2. Place. — Where a man is to pay money or deliver property at a valuation, he is not bound to carry the property to the creditor, but the latter should receive it at the debtor's house. Dandridge v. Harris, 1 D. 465; Grant v. Groshon, 3 D. 725.

If no place for the payment of money is specified, the party who is to make the payment must seek the other party, if within the state. Hops v. Tuttle, 46 D. 309.

Where ponderous articles are to be delivered by promisor at time specified, but place unknown, he must request the promisee to designate a convenient place of delivery. Deel v. Berry, 73 D. 236.

Though a debtor be bound to seek and pay his creditor, yet if an employer has an established place where he pays those employed, and where he has reason to expect they will call for their hire, mere neglect to pay elsewhere, without evidence of a demand and refusal, will not justify those employed in abandoning the contract of service. Dockham v. Smith, 18 R. 495.

Where the payee of a money obligation specifying no place of payment is out of the state when the payment is to be made, the debtor is not obliged to follow him, but readiness within the state will be as effectual as actual payment to save a forfeiture. Hale v. Patton, 19 R. 168.

A mortgage was conditioned to be due and payable, should any installment of interest remain unpaid for thirty days. Eight days after an installment of interest became due, the mortgagee, who was a single man residing in the house of his mother, left the state, and remained absent during the residue of the thirty days. Held, that the mortgagor was not required to tender the interest at the house of the mother in the absence of notice that she was authorized to receive it, and that there was no forfeiture. Ib.

A corporation legally issued its bonds, payable to the plaintiff or her assigns, on a certain day, at a specified bank, and before their maturity deposited sufficient funds, and directed the bank to pay them on presentment. The bank was then solvent, but subsequently became insolvent, with sufficient of the funds on hand to pay the bonds. The plaintiff did not present them to the bank until after its failure, and had no knowledge of the arrangement between the obligors and the bank. Held, that the obligors were liable upon the bonds in spite of the failure of the bank. Adams v. Hackenack Imp. Comm., 43 R. 406.

7. Manner of making payment. — Agreements to pay in specific articles are presumed to be made in favor of the debtor, and he may in all cases put in money in lieu of the articles. Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410.

Decisions on contracts to pay in specific articles, in the several states, reviewed and discussed. Id.

8. Payment to creditor of creditor. — A balance due on land is paid by purchaser's note to vendor's creditor for a debt of equal amount, with the vendor as surety, given under an oral agreement made after sale and bond to convey on payment, and after a sale by the purchaser, of which the vendor has notice, the agreement being that the note shall be given in payment, that the vendor shall hold the title as security, and that if he is compelled to pay the note, the original debt shall be still due, and the vendor can make no claim for such balance against the deceased purchaser's estate, though after paying the note he may claim as surety. Davis v. Smith, 48 D. 279.

A person voluntarily paying the debt of another must see that all conditions of section 240 of the California practice act are fulfilled. There must be a judgment and an execution against property, and the person making the payment must be indebted at the instant to him against whom the execution runs, and therefore he is bound to know of an assignment of his indebtedness. Brown v. Ayres, 91 D. 656.

9. Part payment and its effect, generally.* — Payment of part of a claim, though tendered in satisfaction, is no defense to an action for the balance, where the claim is liquidated; otherwise where it is unliquidated. Donohue v. Woodbury, 52 D. 771. S. P., Shaw v. Clark, 27 D. 578; Obernado v. Union Bank, 1 R. 31.

A parol agreement to accept part of a debt in satisfaction of the whole is not binding although such part payment is made, unless such agreement is made on a new consideration. There is a new consideration sufficient to support the agreement, if the part payment is made before the debt is due or in any manner more advantageous to the creditor than the payment to which he was entitled by the terms of his original contract. Spence v. Russell, 46 D. 345.

* Payment of a sum less than that due, whether may release entire contract, see note, 54 D. 123-124.

Any partial payment made by a co-trespasser in satisfaction of the damages sustained by reason of the joint trespass inures to the benefit of the other, and in an action against the latter, must be considered by the jury in determining the amount of their verdict. Snow v. Chandler, 34 D. 140.

Acceptance, without verbal assent, of a sum expressly tendered in full payment of an unliquidated demand is an assent de facto, and binding, though through inattention the terms of the tender were not heard, if by ordinary care they might have been heard. Donohue v. Woodbury, 52 D. 777.

A debtor who has paid money on account of a debt cannot, on a subsequent recovery by the creditor of a judgment against him for the whole amount of the debt, maintain an action against the creditor to recover back the money so paid. Fuller v. Shattuck, 74 D. 622.

A partial payment on a contract cannot be recovered by a party who has made default in the fulfillment of the contract. Asbrook v. Hite, 75 D. 468.

An agreement by a creditor to accept, in satisfaction and discharge of a liquidated debt, a sum less than the full amount due, provided that no other creditor shall receive more than a like per cent on his claim, is void. Parkins v. Lockwood, 1 R. 103.

10. The presumption of payment, generally. — The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, in cases to which the statute of limitations does not apply, may create the belief of payment, but is of itself insufficient to justify a verdict solely on that ground. Smithpeter v. Leon, 53 D. 732.

11. When inferred from circumstances. — The presumption of payment does not arise from the failure of the claimant to include the debt in the schedule filed by him on a cession of his goods when he was ignorant of his rights at the time the schedule was made. Tremoulet v. Cenas, 17 D. 195.

12. When lapse of time will raise the presumption.* — Payment is presumed after twenty years have elapsed since the rent sued for became due. Bailey v. Jackson, 8 D. 309.

A presumption of payment of a mortgage may arise from lapse of time, without payment of interest or demand, but the length of time has not been settled. Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 23 D. 748.

Twenty years would seem to be sufficient for that purpose in analogy to the law relating to bonds. Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 23 D. 748; Howland v. Shurtleff, 35 D. 384.

Lapse of time may be set up to show that

* Presumption of payment from lapse of time less than period of limitation, see note, 58 D. 590, 591.

no debt existed, as well as to raise a presumption of payment. Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 23 D. 748.

Non-claim for twenty years is strong evidence of the non-existence of a debt, where the parties have every opportunity of knowing and asserting the claim, and there are no explanatory circumstances. Ib.

A stronger case is required to establish the non-existence of a debt from lapse of time, than to raise the presumption of its payment. Ib.

Where sixteen years have been allowed to pass since the execution of a bond due on demand, the jury may presume its payment. Atkinson v. Dance, 30 D. 422.

The presumption of payment after lapse of twenty years of is one fact, and not of law, though equally as important as if it were; but it shifts the burden of proof, and though the court cannot make such a presumption, yet a new trial will usually be granted if the jury disregards it. Stover v. Duren, 51 D. 634.

The presumption of payment raised from definite time no more permits a jury to give to a shorter time a force beyond its natural efficacy in producing belief that the bar under the statute of limitations permits a near approach to the statutory period to avail; and a verdict found in contravention of the principle herein stated will be set aside. Smithpeter v. Isom, 53 D. 732.

Lapse of time affords strong corroboration of testimony that there was a settlement and adjustment of a claim between partners. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 55 D. 585.

Whether or not a note has been paid is a question for the jury, and lapse of time so long as fourteen years is a circumstance which should be left to them in determining this question. Its production by the payee after this lapse of time does not rebut any presumptions arising from this circumstance. Walker v. Emerson, 73 D. 207.

13. When it will not. — Courts are never at liberty to presume payment from mere lapse of time, in any period less than that which is fixed by the statute of limitations. Grafton Bank v. Doe, 47 D. 697; Adair v. Adair, 71 D. 779.

The inference is that a note barred by statute is unpaid when the creditor comes into equity to enforce a mortgage given to secure the same, and it appears that there is no fact other than the lapse of time to warrant a presumption of payment, and that the debtor had no property other than the land mortgaged. Belknap v. Gleason, 27 D. 721.

14. How the presumption may be rebutted. — The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is not an absolute bar, but may be rebutted by circumstances explaining the delay, as by showing that the plaintiff was ignorant of the defendant's residence; that the plaintiff, being an alien, had been prevented from suing by the existence of war, etc. Bailey v. Jackson, 8 D. 309.

The presumption may be repelled by a variety of circumstances, as where it appears that the parties are near relations, and that the mortgagor was not in a situation to pay either principal or interest. Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 23 D. 748.

Insolvency or near relationship has been held sufficient to repel the presumption. Ib.

Relationship between the parties will repel the presumption arising from lapse of time that there is no debt, where to exact payment might have occasioned distress. Ib.

An indorsement of a credit on a bond made by the obligee within the period that raises a presumption of payment may be considered as a circumstance tending to rebut such presumption, because when made, the indorsement was against his interest. Dabney v. Dabney, 40 D. 761.

The lapse of twenty years raises a presumption of payment of a sealed note, which although not conclusive can only be rebutted by such facts as would revive an unsealed and barred note. The existence of a stay law, the pendency of the civil war, and the lunacy of the plaintiff would not be sufficient. Boyce v. Lake, 43 R. 618.

15. What evidence is sufficient to prove payment. — The debtor's possession of his bond is evidence of its satisfaction by himself. Craig v. Craig, 24 D. 390.

Possession of a bond by one of several obligors is not evidence that he has paid the whole. Ib.

16. What is insufficient. — Payment of money to a third person must be proved by the examination of witnesses. The receipts of such persons, made after the cause of action against the defendant accrued, are inadmissible. Davis v. Shreve, 14 D. 66.

The fact that the debtor has had means of paying his debt is not evidence tending to show that he has paid it. Atwood v. Scott, 96 D. 728.

The fact that the debtor has not had means with which to pay his debt is admissible evidence tending to show that he has not paid it. Ib.

On trial of an action for money lent, evidence that defendant had money in his possession at a certain time is inadmissible to corroborate his testimony that at a time soon afterwards he repaid the plaintiff. Ib.

17. Under what plea payment may be given in evidence. — Evidence of payment of a debt is not admissible unless payment is specially pleaded. Landry v. Bismont, 36 D. 606.

Payment, complete or partial, must be pleaded, being "new matter constituting a defense," under the New York code of procedure, section 149, and it cannot be shown (either in bar or mitigation of recovery) under a general denial. McKyring v. Bull, 69 D. 696.

18. Effect of payment, generally. — Payment of a debt by one who is not a party to the contract, although made without the assent of the debtor, extinguishes the debt. Harrison v. Hicks, 27 D. 635.

8. advanced money to a railway company to enable it to pay its past due coupons, under an agreement that he should hold the coupons thus paid as security. The property of the railway was afterward sold under the mortgage given to secure the bonds and coupons, and the proceeds being less than the indebtedness, S., as holder of such coupons, claimed a pro rata share with the holders of other bonds and coupons. Held, that as the bondholders were ignorant of the arrangement between S. and the company, the coupons when paid became, as to them, extinguished, and that S. was not entitled to share. Union Trust Co. v. Monticello etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 541.

19. Effect of voluntary payments. — Money voluntarily paid, with full knowledge of all the facts, although no obligation to make such payment existed, cannot be recovered back. B. & S. R. R. Co. v. Faunce, 46 D. 656. S. P., Stevens v. Head, 31 D. 617; Clafin v. McDonough, 84 D. 54; Elston v. City of Chicago, 89 D. 361; Lester v. Mayor etc. of Baltimore, 96 D. 642; Kenneth v. South Car. A. R. Co., 98 D. 382; Gibson v. Bingham, 5 R. 289.

The rule does not apply where the parties are not upon equal terms in the transaction. City of Marshall v. Snediker 78 D. 634.

A payment is not voluntary when made in consequence of a mistaken view of facts. B. & S. R. R. Co. v. Faunce, 4 D. 656.

Money voluntarily paid by mistake cannot be recovered back, where the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. In such case the loss must fall upon the person who occasioned it. Boas v. Upacgrove, 47 D. 425.

Money voluntarily paid for the use of another does not impose a liability on such one to repay unless the payment was made at his request. Kenan v. Holloway, 50 D. 162.

Money paid on a note given for a much larger sum, and not indorsed thereon, cannot be recovered back, where the promisor was sued on the note, and filed a specification of defense stating the payment of such sum, but subsequently withdrew his appearance, suffered a default, and the plaintiff took judgment for the whole amount of the note without deducting the payment. Jordan v. Phelps, 50 D. 747.

A voluntary payment of an unjust demand attempted to be enforced by legal proceedings cannot be recovered back, though made under protest, unless there is fraud on the part of the payee, and he knows the claim to be unjust. Benson v. Monroe, 64 D. 716.

A voluntary payment of a judgment by the debtor is binding upon him if made with full knowledge of the facts affecting its validity, but otherwise if made in ignorance of these facts. Knox County Bank v. Doty, 75 D. 479.

Payment of a judgment is not voluntary when it is made to release property held under execution or to prevent property from being seized. Id.

Money voluntarily paid upon a claim of right with full knowledge of all the facts cannot be recovered back merely because the party at the time of payment was ignorant of or mistook the law as to his liability. The illegality of the demand paid constitutes of itself no ground for relief, but there must be, in addition, some compulsion or coercion attending its assertion, which controls the conduct of the party making the payment. Brumagin v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176; Elston v. City of Chicago, 89 D. 361.

The rule that "money voluntarily paid upon claim of right cannot be recovered back" has exceptions. Brumagin v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176.

A voluntary payment of an illegal demand, with knowledge of its illegality, and without an immediate and urgent necessity, unless to redeem or preserve person or goods, is not the subject of action for money had and received. Clafin v. McDonough, 84 D. 54.

Assumpsit for money had and received will not lie against a railroad company to recover charges for transportation in excess of those which by law the carrier is permitted to exact when such charges are paid voluntarily without objection or protest, or notice of discontent, and after the service has been fully performed and the property is out of the possession of and beyond the control of the carrier. Kenneth v. South Car. R. R. Co., 98 D. 382.

A lease provided that the lessee should keep the premises repaired, except in case of fire, and in case the premises should be rendered unfit for tenancy by fire, there should be a just and proportionate abatement of the rent. The premises were rendered unfit for tenancy by fire, but the lessor demanding the rent, the lessee paid it under protest. Held, that he could not recover it back. Regan v. Baldwin, 30 R. 689.

Where the defendant in a suit, with full knowledge of the facts, voluntarily pays part of the demand, and judgment is rendered against him for the balance, which is conclusively reversed on appeal, he cannot recover the part so paid. Beard v. Beard, 52 R. 219.

Excessive charges for freight paid to a railroad company for a long course of years voluntarily and without objection may not be recovered. Killmer v. New York Central etc. R. R. Co., 53 R. 194.

void, — held, that in the absence of fraud, he could not recover back the purchase price. Schwabenbach v. Odorless Excav. App. Co., 57 R. 301.

A recovery back of money paid has been denied in the following instances: Money voluntarily paid to the city authorities, as a license, in pursuance of an ordinance which is adjudged to be void. Robinson v. Charleston, 45 D. 739. S. P., Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176; Town of Ligonier v. Ackerman, 15 R. 323; Noyes v. State, 32 R. 710.

Money voluntarily paid in satisfaction of a judgment, which the payer believed to be a lien upon his land. Boas v. Updegrove, 47 D. 425.

A payment voluntarily made, with knowledge of the facts, by a vendee, for property illegally sold to him. Boutelle v. Melendy, 49 D. 152.

Money voluntarily paid for losses in stock-jobbing transactions, in violation of statute. Wyman v. Fiske, 80 D. 66.

30. Effect of compulsory payments.

— 1. What payment is compulsory. — No distinction exists between a compulsory and a voluntary payment, with respect to the rights which the one or the other confers upon a partner. Lawrence v. Clark, 35 D. 133.

Money exacted by a sheriff, colore officii, in excess of his lawful fees, as a condition precedent to the return of a runaway slave, may be recovered back. Alston v. Durant, 49 D. 596.

The law raises an obligation to refund money paid upon compulsion, and the form of action is assumpsit for money had and received. McMillan v. Richards, 70 D. 655.

To constitute such compulsion or coercion as will render a payment involuntary, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, by the party exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of the party making the payment, from which the latter has no means of immediate relief but by advancing the money. Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176. S. P., Kenneth v. South Car. R. R. Co., 98 D. 382.

A payment of money is compulsory when made through necessity to obtain possession of goods illegally withheld, where the detention is fraught with great immediate hardship or irreparable injury, and the money paid may be recovered back in an action of assumpsit. Cobb v. Charter, 87 D. 178.

Where a person detains another's chest of tools and implements of trade, necessary for upholding life, until they are redeemed by the payment of money to which he had no shadow of right, the money so paid may be recovered back without making any demand therefor. Id.

* See monographic note on what constitutes a compulsory payment, 45 D. 155-171. See also note, 51 R. 820-833.

Where a person having possession of another's chest of tools refuses to deliver them to the owner on demand, except upon his paying, without any obligation, the debt of another person, and the owner thereupon leaves money with a third person to be paid when the chest should be sent to the owner, which money is accordingly paid by such third person after the goods are so sent, there is a sufficient demand for the chest to maintain an action for the recovery back of the money so paid. Id.

Money paid under mistake of fact, under circumstances of fraud or extortion, or as a necessary means to obtain the possession of goods wrongfully withheld, may be recovered in an action therefor. Lester v. Mayor etc. of Baltimore, 96 D. 542.

Payment of a water license fee under threat of cutting the water off is not voluntary, and any excessive charge may be recovered without tender. Weatlake v. St. Louis, 48 R. 4.

2. What is not. — Payment is not regarded as compulsory unless made to relieve the person or property from an actual and existing duress imposed upon him by the party to whom the money is paid. Elston v. City of Chicago, 89 D. 361; Mayor of Baltimore v. Lefferman, 45 D. 145.

Where judgment is rendered against land for an assessment, and the owner of the land pays it without the issuance of any precept or execution, such payment is a voluntary payment, and not one made under compulsion. Elston v. City of Chicago, 89 D. 361.

To justify recovering back money paid, where all the facts were known to the party paying, such payment must not have been simply an unwilling payment, but a compulsory one, and the compulsion must have been illegal, unjust, or oppressive. Dickerman v. Lord, 89 D. 579.

The fact that a party is sued by attachment, upon a claim which is not due, in a state where the plaintiff resides, but which is foreign to the residence of the defendant, will not, in the absence of any element of fraud or other means of oppression, where he pays such claim under protest, make such payment compulsory in such a sense that it can be recovered back. Id.

Payment under a menace of suit or distress-warrant is not compulsory, and cannot be recovered back. Hence where, under an unconstitutional statute, a city passes an ordinance providing that lot-owners shall improve their lots in a particular way upon notice from the proper authority, or the city will make the improvements and issue warrants to collect the expense from the owners, as paving taxes are collected, and the plaintiff, upon receiving notice to improve his lot or that the city will do so, and charge the expense to him as provided by the ordinance, accordingly makes the improvement, and uses the city for the amount expended, as an involuntary payment, he cannot recover. Mayor of Baltimore v. Lefferman, 45 D. 145.

Money paid rather than resort to litigation, and under the supposition that the claim, which subsequently turned out to be unauthorized by law, was enforceable against him or his property, cannot be recovered as money paid under compulsion. Lester v. Mayor etc. of Baltimore, 96 D. 542.

A payment made under the belief that it is demanded contrary to law, and under the apprehension of legal proceedings, is not compulsory. To entitle a person to recover back money so paid, it must have been exacted under a threat of prosecution, and paid under protest. Town of Ligonier v. Ackerman, 15 R. 323.

3. Payment under protest. — The object of protest is to take from the payment its voluntary character, and thus conserve to the party a right of action to recover back the money. It has no application to voluntary payments. McMillan v. Richards, 70 D. 656; Brumagin v. Tillinghast, 79 D. 176.

Protest does not prevent a payment being a discharge of the demand upon which it is made, so far as such demand is legal. McMillan v. Richards, 70 D. 655.

Payment under protest of an illegal tax, on demand by the sheriff, to prevent levy and sale, is not voluntary, although there was no present threat of levy. Farcher v. Marathon County, 33 R. 745.

If one, to procure the transportation of goods by railroad, pays illegal rates under protest, he may recover them, even although by arrangement the payments were made monthly. Peters v. Railroad Co., 51 R. 814.

21. When money paid may be recovered back. — Where a party is compelled by operation of law to pay a debt, which in equity and good faith another party should have kept him from paying, the party so paying may recover from such other party the amount paid. Ticonic Bank v. Smiley, 46 D. 593.

Money unlawfully exacted, under a claim of right, by one who has possession of the property of another and makes the payment of his demand a condition of its return, may be recovered. Alston v. Durant, 49 D. 596.

Money paid for another's use creates a liability on that party if it is beneficial to him, or if he takes advantage of it. He becomes the agent by virtue of the adoption of the act. Kenan v. Holloway, 50 D. 162.

Where one person is compelled to pay money which another is bound by law to pay, a promise by the latter is raised by law to reimburse the person paying. Winchester v. Beards, 51 D. 702.

cess to pay money which another is bound by law to pay, it cannot be required that the former shall have exhausted every possible means of litigation in resisting the payment, before he shall be entitled to his action for money paid. Id.

II. PAYMENTS OTHER THAN IN MONEY.

22. In general. — Payment does not import delivery of money; it may be made in property or other securities. Ryan v. Dunlap, 63 D. 334.

Money is a generic term, and covers everything which by consent is made to represent property, and passes as such currently from hand to hand. Crutchfield v. Robins, 42 D. 417.

A deed of land from a debtor to his creditor will operate as a payment to the extent of the land, though there is no agreed price for the land. Buffum v. Green, 20 D. 562.

An agreement without consideration to pay a different compensation, and one of a character not more certain than that originally stipulated, in discharge of a liability upon a completed contract, is not binding, nor does it discharge the original contract. Randolph v. Perry, 27 D. 659.

Payment can be made in money only, under the Tennessee act of 1807, authorizing payment of money on a judgment rendered to be made to the clerk of the court. A receipt given by the clerk, the consideration of which is anything but money, as debts due by himself, choses in action, or property, is not a satisfaction of the judgment, and no hindrance to its collection. Crutchfield v. Robins, 42 D. 417.

If the payee of a note, after it falls due, surrenders it to the maker on receiving from him a certificate of deposit, payable in current funds for a part of the amount due, and the remainder in cash, and upon presentation of the certificate at the bank five or six days afterwards, the bank refuses payment on account of having failed in the mean time, the payee may recover the amount against the maker of the note, unless it appears that he expressly agreed to take the certificate in payment of his debt. Lindsey v. McClelland, 86 D. 786.

23. Forged paper. — Payment by a forged note does not extinguish the debt. Eagle Bank v. Smith, 13 D. 37.

Where the note of a third person, received by the creditor in payment of his claim, proves to be forged, he cannot maintain an action on the original consideration, unless, as soon as the forgery is discovered, he offers to return the note, or unless he has exhausted his remedies upon it with due diligence. Pope v. Nance, 12 D. 51.

One who receives a counterfeit note from an innocent person and keeps it six months after knowing its true character, without giving any notice thereof, is guilty of gross negligence and must sustain the loss. Raymond v. Baar, 15 D. 603.

The vendor sold and delivered cattle, and received payment in bank notes, which he afterwards paid away to a third party, who discovered one of the notes to be forged. Neither the vendor nor vendee knew that the note was bad. In an action brought by the vendor against the vendee, on the original contract, for cattle sold and delivered, —held, that a forged note or bill which proves worthless is no payment, and that the party may treat it as a nullity, and resort to the original contract. Markle v. Hatfield, 3 D. 446.

24. Spurious coin. — Gold coin issued by a private individual is not money, and the same rules of law must be applied thereto which apply to other chattels. Chapman v. Cole, 71 D. 739.

One receiving counterfeit money is bound to use due diligence in ascertaining its character, and in notifying the giver, provided the latter was ignorant of its character, and paid it in good faith. Atwood v. Cornwall, 15 R. 219.

25. Bank notes, generally. — Current, convertible bank notes are money; and a payment made in them, whether to the principal or his agent, is a good payment. Oratchfield v. Robins, 42 D. 417. And the loss falls upon the receiver where the bank suspends immediately after payment. Ware v. Street, 75 D. 755.

Payment in bank notes circulating and received as money, there being no fraud, cannot be avoided by demand, refusal, and notice of tender to the payor, bank notes not standing on the same ground with negotiable paper. Id.

Payment into court in notes of a bank is good payment as between it and its debtor, no matter when they were procured by him. Northampton Bank v. Balliet, 42 D. 297.

There is no implied warranty of the value of current money of the country passing from hand to hand in the course of trade. Edmunds v. Digges, 42 D. 561.

A person passing bank notes guarantees only that they are genuine, and not counterfeit. Id.

A representation that notes can be exchanged for legal tenders at par does not constitute an express warranty. Id.

The maker of a note due a bank has the right to pay it in bills issued by the bank. Blount v. Windley, 12 R. 616.

26. Uncurrent or depreciated bank notes. — Acceptance in payment of a debt of the notes of an insolvent bank, the fact of the insolvency being at the time unknown to either party, operates as a discharge of the debt. Lowrey v. Murrell, 27 D. 651; Bayard v. Shunk, 37 D. 441. Contra, see Ontario Bank v. Lightbody, 27 D. 179; Wainwright v. Webster, 34 D. 707; Westfall v. Braley, 75 D. 809. And no action can be afterwards brought on the debt, unless, perhaps, where the payee presents the bills to the bank, and upon refusal to pay them, gives due notice to the person from whom he received them. Scruggs v. Gass, 29 D. 114.

Notes of an insolvent bank received on general deposit by another bank, after the first had suspended, both it and the depositor being at the time in ignorance of the fact of suspension, will render it liable to the depositor for the face value of the notes received. Corbit v. Bank of Smyrna, 30 D. 635.

Payment in worthless or badly depreciated bank bills is not a valid payment. And a person receiving such bills, without fault or negligence on his part, in payment of a pre-existing debt, may treat the payment as void, and resort to his original cause of action. Glman v. Peck, 34 D. 702.

An action on book-account may be maintained in such a case. Id.

The receipt of depreciated currency by some business men, in payment of demands, does not prove that all creditors in the locality have agreed to receive the same. Marine Bank v. Chandler, 81 D. 249.

A general agreement to receive depreciated paper in business transactions may be abandoned by common consent of the parties, and after abandonment, one abandoning party cannot hold the other to it. Id.

27. Confederate notes. — Where payments have been made upon a promissory note in confederate money, and a credit therefor indorsed upon the note by the holder, who was of lawful age, and not the victim of fraud, the sums so indorsed will be allowed as payments on the note. Freeman v. Bass, 89 D. 255. S. P., Ritchie v. Sweet, 5 R. 245.

Where payments were made during the late war on a promissory note in Georgia, this is not prima facie evidence that the payments were made in confederate money. Freeman v. Bass, 89 D. 255.

Payment of a debt in confederate notes received by the creditor under duress is void, whether or not the debtor knew of the duress. Emerson v. Lee, 89 D. 648.

To recover upon a debt, the amount of which has been received in confederate notes under duress, the plaintiff must allege and prove that he retained and tendered back the identical notes received by him. Id.

In 1864 the county of Greenbrier was under the domination of the so-called Confederate States government. Treasury notes of said government were tendered in payment of a bond to a creditor who was loyal to the Union, and had not demanded the debt, and he refused to accept them. He was then told that he was "obliged to take them un-

A check deposited as money operates as payment of the bill for which it was given from the moment the deposit is made. Ib.

The holder of a check may as well employ his banker, as agent to collect it, as any other person; and if the holder deposits the check with his banker for collection, such deposit is the same, in legal effect, as handing the check to a messenger for the same purpose. Ib.

It is a question for the jury whether a certified check taken in payment of a note or draft is an absolute or only a conditional discharge of the debt. Andrews v. German Nat. Bank, 24 R. 300.

30. When it will not be so deemed. — A note is not an extinguishment or payment of a precedent debt, unless there is an express agreement to accept it as payment, and to take the risk of the solvency of the maker. Tobey v. Barber, 4 D. 326; Reed v. Van Ostrand, 19 D. 529; Estate of Davis, 34 D. 574; Weymouth v. Sanborn, 80 D. 144. And the burden of proof is on the debtor to show that it was so given and received. Nor does it make any difference that the makers of the note so given are fewer in number than the original debtors. Nightingale v. Chassee, 23 R. 531. Unless the creditor parts with the note, or is guilty of laches in not presenting it for payment in due time. It simply postpones payment of the old debt until a default is made in the payment of the note. Mitchell v. Hockett, 85 D. 151. And a receipt, stating the note to be "in full," for goods sold, is not evidence of such an agreement. Muldon v. Whitlock, 13 D. 533; McMurray v. Taylor, 77 D. 611. Upon non-payment the creditors may sue on the original contract. Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Smith, 14 D. 268; Costello v. Cave, 27 D. 404; Steamboat Charlotte v. Hammond, 43 D. 536; Larrabee v. Talbot, 46 D. 637; Blunt v. Walker, 78 D. 709; if the note remains in the creditor's hands unpaid, and can be produced to be canceled. Gleason v. Smith, 20 D. 452; McMurray v. Taylor, 77 D. 611.

Taking a note for goods sold and delivered does not extinguish the original cause of action. Wyman v. Rae, 37 D. 70; or prevent the vendor from retaining the goods until payment, in case of the buyer's insolvency while the note is yet unnegotiated. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754.

A new note given without any new consideration to the same person, and for the same sum as an old one, is not deemed a satisfaction thereof, unless so received and accepted, and whether it was so received and accepted or not is a question of fact for the jury. Hart v. Boller, 16 D. 536. S. P., Moses v. Trice, 8 R. 609.

Where an indorser gives his own note to the holder of a promissory note as security for the debt, the original note is not extinguished unless the last note was received in satisfaction of the first. Clopper v. Union Bank, 16 D. 294.

Giving a negotiable note is not a payment of money between the maker and payee so as to support an action for money had and received, on failure of the consideration. Reed v. Van Ostrand, 19 D. 529.

An agreement at the making of a note, that it shall be set off against a note due the maker from the payee (which is not present), so far as the smaller will pay the larger, is executory, and does not, pro tanto, extinguish either note. Cary v. Bancroft, 25 D. 393.

Notes of an insolvent bank, or of an insolvent individual, received as consideration of a contemporaneous contract, will operate as payment or satisfaction; but if received on a precedent debt, they will not be a discharge, in the absence of a special agreement. Corbit v. Bank of Smyrna, 30 D. 635.

Where the separate note of one joint debtor is taken, the onus is on the other debtors to show that it was taken with the intention of extinguishing the joint debt. Estate of Davis, 34 D. 574; Tyner v. Scoops, 71 D. 341.

A debt is not extinguished by a note given by some of the debtors, with other parties as sureties, for a larger amount, unless it appears to have been so intended and accepted, the presumption being, it seems, that it was intended as collateral security only. Jones v. Johnson, 38 D. 760.

Promissory notes accepted by a landlord in lieu of rent due on a written lease do not extinguish the original debt, but operate to suspend his right of distress during the time allowed for the payment of the notes. Judge ada. Fiske, 42 D. 380.

The plaintiff sold and delivered certain goods to the defendant for a stipulated price, a part of which was paid in cash, and agreed to accept in payment of the balance a note of a third party, and ran the risk of its being paid, relying upon the representations of the defendant that the note was good, and would be paid at maturity. The note was not paid at maturity, and proved worthless, the drawers having failed several days before it became due. On the day of its maturity the plaintiff notified the defendant of its non-payment, and the failure of the makers, and demanded of him payment of the balance due on the goods sold. Held, that if the agreement to accept the note as payment was induced by the fraudulent representations of the defendant, such fraud rendered the receipt given by the plaintiff invalid, and he had the right to affirm the sale and sue in assumpsit for the price of the goods. Hoopes v. Strasburger, 11 R. 533.

A bill of exchange given for a pre-existing debt is not payment, unless it is so expressly agreed by the parties. Murray v. Gouverneur, 1 D. 177.

A draft of agent on principal, given as the price of a purchase made by the agent in the name of the principal, is not an extinguishment of the debt, unless the draft was accepted or paid by the principal. Taylor v. Conner, 97 D. 419.

A negotiable town order transferred by a debtor to his creditor, for the purpose of paying his debt, and received for that purpose, — both parties acting in good faith, — will not operate as a payment, if, at the time, it was worthless for the reason that the drawers and acceptor had no authority to make or accept it. Hussey v. Sibley, 22 R. 557.

A bank check is not payment of a pre-existing debt until cashed, without an agreement to receive it as such, any more than a promissory note is a payment of such a debt. Barnet v. Smith, 64 D. 290.

The bare reception of a check from drawee for amount of a bill will not, ordinarily, be considered as a payment, but only as a means of payment; and this is so, whether the bill is surrendered to the drawee at the time of receiving the check, or is retained by the holder until payment is consummated. Strong v. King, 85 D. 336.

The deposit of a check for collection does not operate as payment of a bill for which the check was given. Ib.

A tax-payer gave his check for his taxes to the collector. It was not presented for several days, and meantime the bank failed. The bank was insolvent when the check was drawn, and it was not shown that the check would have been paid if promptly presented. Held, that the check was not payment. Koomes v. District of Columbia, 54 R. 278.

31. Taking the bill or note of a third person in payment. — The taking of the negotiable note of a third person for an existing debt is prima facie payment, and the burden of proving an agreement to the contrary is on the creditor. Smith v. Bettger, 34 R. 256.

If a vendor of goods at the time of sale received from the purchaser the note of a third person (such note not being forged, and there being no fraud on the part of the purchaser), such note will be deemed to have been accepted by the vendor in payment and satisfaction, unless the contrary be expressly proved. Whitbeck v. Van Ness, 6 D. 583; Gibson v. Toley, 7 R. 397.

Where the note of some who are liable for goods sold is taken, and a receipt given "in full," if the others, relying upon such receipt, are prejudiced in their dealings with the makers, they will be discharged. Muldon v. Whitlock, 13 D. 533.

Giving one's note, in discharge of a third person's debt to the payee, is equivalent to a payment of money to the use of such third person. Reed v. Van Ostrand, 19 D. 529.

The original debt is discharged if the debtor effects a compromise, and gives the note to a third person in payment of the sum fixed by the compromise. Stafford v. Bacon, 37 D. 366.

The liquidation of a debt or account by a note, though by a note of a third person, unless expressly received in payment, does not discharge the debt or open account. Barelli v. Brown, 10 D. 683; Palapoco Ins. Co. v. Smith, 14 D. 268; Berry v. Griffin, 69 D. 123; Taylor v. Conner, 97 D. 419. Where such a note was taken as payment, and a receipt in full given by the vendor, — held, a question of fact for the jury, whether there was such a special agreement or not. Johnson v. Weed, 6 D. 279.

Rendering bills to some of those for whose benefit and at whose credit goods were furnished, and taking the note of those to whom the bills were rendered, will not discharge the others. Muldon v. Whitlock, 13 D. 533.

Acceptance of the note of a third person, for an antecedent debt, does not operate as payment, unless the creditor is guilty of laches in presentment. Glenn v. Smith, 20 D. 452.

A book-account is not merged in a note given by a stranger as surety with some of the original debtors as principals, and for a larger sum than was then due; for merger occurs only where the debt is one and the parties are identical. Jones v. Johnson, 38 D. 760.

An action for goods sold and delivered is not barred by an agent, who was authorized to receive the vendee's note for the price, receiving a note of a less amount, signed by the vendee as agent of a third person, under the vendee's representations that it was the latter's note for the price, and delivering the same to the vendor, who did not consent to accept it as payment; nor does it affect the rights of the vendor that he retained the note until the commencement of the action without taking measures to enforce its collection, or giving notice of its non-payment, or offering to return it. Hatch v. Barnum, 56 D. 59.

Where a debtor delivers to his creditor the note of a third person drawn to the creditor's order, without indorsing it, the presumption is that the note is not absolute payment, but only collateral security, and the debtor continues liable without notice of dishonor, unless the neglect to give such notice has occasioned him loss. Hunter v. Moul, 42 R. 610.

A check of a third person, given and accepted in payment of a demand, and by both parties supposed to be good, but proving worthless, is not payment. Fleig v. Sleeh, 54 R. 800.

Where A, having an account against a corporation, settled with B, their agent, and took B's note for the amount which was afterwards credited to B, upon the adjustment of his accounts with the corporation, — held, that A's demand against the corporation was extinguished. Wright v. Crockery Ware Co., 8 D. 68.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where a debtor remitted to his creditor, in payment, a draft of one third person upon another, and at the maturity thereof the creditor surrendered the draft to the drawee in exchange for the latter's check, and the drawee failed before the check could be collected in the ordinary course of business, and no notice of dishonor or protest of the draft was ever given to the drawer, — held, that the debt was paid. Whitney v. Eason, 96 D. 762.

The defendants who were indebted to the plaintiffs tendered the note of third parties, which was accepted in payment of the indebtedness. At the time of such acceptance the makers of the note were insolvent, but both plaintiff and defendant were ignorant of the fact. Held, no payment, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of indebtedness for which the note had been given. Roberts v. Fisher, 3 R. 680.

Plaintiff sold a number of hogs to defendant, to be paid for on delivery. On the delivery, defendant's agent, who made the purchase, said he would have to go to the bank to get the money to pay for the hogs, and asked plaintiff which he preferred, the currency or a draft. Plaintiff replied that he preferred a draft, and permitted defendant's agent to ship the hogs, with the understanding that the draft should be procured as soon as possible. The draft of a third person was procured and accepted by plaintiff, on the same day, without defendant's indorsement. The draft was dishonored; and subsequently, plaintiff tendered it to defendants and demanded the money, which was refused, whereupon plaintiff brought action for the contract price. Held, that the draft must be deemed to have been received in payment, and that the action could not be maintained. Gibson v. Tobey, 7 R. 397.

32. Taking non-negotiable securities in payment. — A payment is equivalent to and will be treated as payment in cash, when made in property or securities, if such payment is received as a full satisfaction of the demand. Ralston v. Wood, 58 D. 604.

The execution of a mortgage by an indorser to the holder, to secure the payment of a promissory note made for the indorser's accommodation, does not extinguish the note. Clopper v. Union Bank, 16 D. 294.

33. Right of creditor to sue on original cause of action. — An action will not lie upon an account which has been adjusted by the parties, and where a note has been given for the balance. Apthorp v. Shepard, 1 D. 6; if there was no fraud or deception in giving the note. Hutchins v. Olcott, 24 D. 634; unless plaintiff proves the loss of the note, or produces and cancels it at the trial.

Holmes v. De Camp, 3 D. 293; Glenn v. Smith, 20 D. 452.

Where a note has been given, its production is generally required in an action on the original cause, for the security of the defendant, and not from any rule of evidence which would prevent the introduction of evidence of indebtedness without the production of the note. Wyman v. Rae, 37 D. 70.

Where the party is not bound to produce a promissory note, evidence offered with a view to account for its non-production is unnecessary and inadmissible. Id.

Evidence of indebtedness without the production of the note is admissible in such a case. Id.

Where a note or bill has been taken in satisfaction of a precedent debt, the creditor cannot proceed in an action for such debt without showing that he has used due diligence to obtain acceptance or payment. Cochran v. Wheeler, 26 D. 732.

A plaintiff counting on a note is not precluded from surrendering it so as not to amount to payment, and from recovering on a count for goods sold constituting the consideration, if he cannot recover on the note. Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 51 D. 59.

The holder of a note taken in payment of a precedent debt, at the maturity of the note, may, at his election, proceed either on the note or on the original cause of action. Mudd v. Harper, 54 D. 644.

A debtor does not satisfy his debt by giving his own notes, payable at a future day. If the new notes are not paid, whether valid or usurious, the creditor may proceed upon and recover for the original indebtedness, as if such notes had not been given, surrendering them on the trial. Winsted Bank v. Webb, 100 D. 435.

An action to recover a penalty imposed by statute will not lie outside of the state which enacted the law. First Nat. Bank v. Price, 3 R. 204.

2. Amount recoverable. — A statute provides a penalty against any railroad company for failure during any trip to announce the stopping-places. Held, that only one penalty can be recovered up to the time of suit. Parks v. Nashville etc. Ry Co., 49 R. 655.

3. Enforcement by action qui tam. — Actions strictly popular, and not compensatory, are not criminal prosecutions, but civil suits. Spicer v. Rees, 28 D. 648.

Actions to recover damages by way of a penalty are not criminal prosecutions, but strictly civil in their nature. Id.

When a penal statute provides that a penalty may be recovered by indictment or civil action, one moiety to go to the state, and the other to the prosecutor, it must appear of record who the prosecutor is, in order to entitle him to his share of the penalty; otherwise the whole penalty goes to the state. *State v. Pension money invested by the pensioner in a homestead is not exempt from the claims of prior creditors. Robton v. Walker, 56 R. 878.

Under the statute exempting pension money "in course of transmission," the money is not exempt where the pensioner sells the pension draft to a bank, and is credited in his general account with the proceeds, and portions of the same are from time to time checked out by him. Cruss v. White, 41 R. 408.

Where a pensioner receives pension drafts from the government, and transfers them or their proceeds to another, upon his agreement to convey land to the pensioner's wife, and the land is so conveyed, — held, that it is not subject to the lien of judgments against the pensioner existing at the time the drafts were received by him. *Hissom v. 2. Compensation of pension agents. — An attorney having received the statutory fee for procuring a pension cannot maintain an action against a third person, by whom he was originally employed, upon his agreement to pay him the reasonable value of his services. Wolcott v. Frisell, 45 R. 272.

3. Recovery back of illegal fees. — Where an agent takes from a pensioner a fee in excess of the statutory allowance for obtaining his pension money, the pensioner may recover the excess from him, although both parties acted innocently, and the agent has paid the amount to his principal. *Smart v. PERJURY.

[Includes the criminal offense of willfully swearing falsely in a material matter, after being sworn to tell the truth, by an oath judicially administered.]

Words charging, when actionable, see SLANDER, 7.

1. Jurisdiction.—Perjury committed by swearing falsely before the register of the United States land-office, in a proceeding touching the public land, is an offense against the laws of the United States solely, and is not punishable in the state courts. People v. Kelly, 99 D. 360.

A state court has no jurisdiction of the offense of perjury committed before a United States commissioner during the investigation of a charge of violating the laws of the United States. Ross v. State, 21 R. 278.

2. What false swearing is perjury.—Perjury is limited exclusively to oaths administered in some judicial proceeding, at the common law. State v. Dayton, 53 D. 270.

Perjury is not obviated by a subsequent admission of the party upon cross or further examination, of the truth of the matter previously falsely denied. Martin v. Miller, 28 D. 342.

The meaning of the word "deposition," as used in twenty-third section of act for punishing crimes, is limited to the written testimony of a witness given in the course of a judicial proceeding either at law or in equity, and it is not used as synonymous with "affidavit" or "oath." State v. Dayton, 53 D. 270.

The taking of a false affidavit is perjury within the provisions of the act relative to oaths and affirmations. Ib.

Where an affidavit falsely charges that a felony has been committed by some person, and was made for the purpose of obtaining a search-warrant for the discovery of the property alleged to have been stolen, the affiant is guilty of perjury, though no particular individual is charged with the offense. Carter v. State, 34 D. 116.

A witness is guilty of perjury who testifies falsely to a material fact, although he was not competent as a witness in the case, or to prove the particular fact concerning which he testified. So held, in an action for divorce on the ground of adultery, where the husband, his wife having borne a child, testified falsely that he had had no sexual intercourse with her during their marriage. Chamberlain v. People, 80 D. 255.

Swearing to a false affidavit relative to an application to be thereafter made in a state court for naturalization under the laws of the United States is perjury, and indictable in the courts of the state. State v. Whittemore, 9 R. 196.

Where a witness voluntarily testifies to matters concerning which he might refuse to answer on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate him, he may be punished for perjury if his testimony is willfully false. Mackin v. People, 56 R. 167.

3. What is not.—Where the prisoner handed to an officer, authorized to take and certify affidavits, an affidavit previously signed by him, and reciting that he had been duly sworn, and the officer affixed his own signature to the jurat without any words or formalities, — held, that perjury could not be predicated of the transaction. O'Reilly v. People, 40 R. 525.

4. The power to administer the oath.—The authority of an officer taking an oath need not be averred with time and place, in an indictment of the affiant for perjury, if every material act done to constitute the offense is averred with time and place. State v. Dayton, 53 D. 270.

Perjury cannot be predicated of an affidavit sworn before a notary public professing to act in the city of New York, but who was a non-resident of the state at that time and at the time of his appointment. Lambert v. People, 32 R. 293.

5. The materiality of the evidence given.†—Perjury is false swearing, willfully and knowingly, in the course of a judicial proceeding, as to some matter relevant to the issue; it does not exist where there is false swearing to matter immaterial. Martin v. Miller, 28 D. 342.

Perjury may be committed by swearing falsely to a collateral issue before a court. It is not essential that the fact sworn to should be material to the main issue in the case. State v. Shupe, 85 D. 435. And although the particular fact as to which the witness is alleged to have sworn falsely need not be material per se, it must have a direct and immediate connection with some material fact, so as to give weight to the testimony. State v. Hattavony, 10 D. 580.

Where a witness swore to a particular fact which was material, and that he was present when it occurred, and afterwards, when asked where he lived at the time, testified that he lived near the parties, which was proved to be false, — held, that this was too remote from the issue to constitute perjury. Ib.

An affidavit is material so as to sustain an indictment for perjury under it when taken under an act providing that a certain bank that had suspended shall not resume operations until the affidavit as to its capital had been filed. State v. Dayton, 53 D. 270.

A false affidavit may sustain an indictment for perjury, though unavailing from other causes, if the oath was material when it was taken. Ib.

An affidavit differing from the phraseology of a statute prescribing it will, if false, sustain an indictment for perjury where it is identical in meaning with the statute, and was filed to comply with the law. Ib.

An affiant is guilty of perjury if he willfully states in an affidavit for continuance matters which are false, and material to the establishment of one of the essential parts of such affidavit, although the matters stated as to the other parts are wholly immaterial. State v. Shupe, 85 D. 485.

It is necessary that the indictment should aver that the facts respecting which the testimony was given were material; or such materiality must clearly appear from the other facts set forth in the indictment. Com. v. Knight, 7 D. 72; People v. Collier, 48 D. 699; or it may appear from the matters shown upon the record. State v. Dayton, 53 D. 270.

6. What indictments are sufficient.* — In an indictment for perjury, the style of the court before which the perjury is alleged to have been committed must be correctly set out. State v. Street, 3 D. 682. But it is not necessary that it should appear whether the witness was subpoenaed or whether he attended voluntarily, or that the false testimony was given in answer to a specific interrogatory. Com. v. Knight, 7 D. 72.

It is sufficient to allege, in such an indictment, that the perjury was committed in the trial of an issue duly joined, without an express allegation that the cause of action was within the jurisdiction of the court. Com. v. Knight, 7 D. 72. But see Com. v. Pickering, 56 D. 158.

An indictment charging generally that the false oath was material to the trial of the issue upon which it was taken, without showing particularly how it was material, is sufficient. State v. Mumford, 17 D. 573.

The indictment must not only allege the materiality of the evidence given by the accused, but must also show that the court had jurisdiction of the case in which the alleged perjury was committed. Com. v. Pickering, 56 D. 158.

An indictment for perjury which avers that the defendant did "then and there, in due form of law, take his corporal oath," without stating that he was sworn on the Gospels, or by uplifted hand, is sufficiently certain. Republica v. Newell, 2 D. 381.

An indictment for perjury at common law which states that the defendant "did, voluntarily, and of his own free will and accord, propose to purge himself upon oath of the said contempt," negating, by express averments, the truth of the oath, and concluding that the defendant "did knowingly, falsely, wickedly, maliciously, and corruptly commit willful and corrupt perjury," etc., is good. Ib.

7. What are insufficient. — A general averment of the falsity of the testimony is insufficient; each fact falsely sworn to must be distinctly negated. State v. Mumford, 17 D. 573.

The indictment must show particularly to what falsehood the defendant has sworn; it is too indefinite to say that the defendant made oath to a false schedule in bankruptcy, where that schedule relates to a great variety of facts. United States v. Morgan, 41 D. 234.

The materiality of a false allegation is not sufficiently averred in an indictment for perjury, by an averment that "it became and was material to ascertain the truth of the matter hereinafter alleged to have been sworn to," immediately preceding the statement of the matters alleged to have been falsely sworn to. People v. Collier, 48 D. 699.

The innuendo in an indictment for perjury is bad, when there is nothing previously stated to which it can refer. Ib.

The rules regulating the mode in which indictments for perjury are to be framed are not changed by Michigan Revised Statutes of 1838, page 630, although this statute embraces cases which were not before embraced by the law. Ib.

8. Admissibility and sufficiency of the evidence to convict.* — The evidence of one witness is not sufficient to convict of perjury, as the case is then in equilibrium, oath weighing against oath. Nesbit v. Stuck, 58 D. 706.

Upon the trial of an indictment S. testified to certain facts. Afterward he stated that he had sworn falsely, and, upon re-examination, testified to directly contradictory facts. Upon an indictment for perjury, — held, that his own statements were not sufficient to convict him of perjury. Schwartz v. Com., 21 R. 365.

Under the statute which permits a conviction of perjury on the testimony "of one credible witness corroborated strongly by other evidence as to the falsity," the other evidence may be circumstantial merely, but it must relate to a material matter, and taken together it must produce a deep conviction upon the minds of the court and jury. Hernandez v. State, 51 R. 295.

* Sufficiency of the indictment, see note, 55 D. 494-495.

* Evidence to convict, see note, 55 D. 499, 500.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

9. Civil action for injuries caused by perjured testimony. — No civil action lies for injury caused by perjury, except in cases in which it is expressly given by statute. Parker v. Huntington, 68 D. 455; Phelps v. Stearns, 64 D. 61.

An action will not lie against a witness for giving false testimony in another case. Dunlap v. Glidden, 52 D. 625; Cunningham v. Brown, 46 D. 140; Guaman v. Hearsey, 26 R. 104.

No action lies for procuring or giving false testimony, so long as the judgment procured thereby remains. Stevens v. Rowe, 47 R. 231.

A creditor has no action for perjury against his debtor who, being committed to jail on execution, committed perjury at the examination on his application to be admitted to take the poor-debtor's oath, by which he obtained his discharge. Phelps v. Stearns, 64 D. 61.

10. Subornation of perjury.* — No action will lie against a person for suborning a witness to swear falsely in a cause in another state, in consequence of which a judgment was given against the defendant in the latter state, contrary to the truth and justice of the case. Smith v. Lewis, 3 D. 489.

An action lies for suborning witnesses to falsely defame plaintiff's character in a suit to which neither the plaintiff nor defendant was a party. Rice v. Coolidge, 23 R. 279.

1. How distinguished from realty.

— "Movable property" attends the person, and is therefore called "personal" as distinguished from fixed or real property. McLean v. Hardin, 69 D. 740.

Grain growing upon land does not pass by a description of personal property in a will. Kinsman v. Kinsman, 1 D. 37.

A house built on another's land with his consent is the personal property of the one who builds it, and may be taken on execution against him. Jewett v. Partridge, 28 D. 173.

Slabs, sawdust, shavings, and other refuse used to fill up low or marshy ground are realty, but slabs and pieces of lumber suitable for firewood, piled up on land, and intended to be used and removed as firewood, are personality. Jenkins v. McCurdy, 33 R. 841.

2. What chattels are property, so as to be proper subjects of replevin or trover.—An action of trover will lie for wild geese which have been tamed and strayed away, but without regaining their natural liberty. Amory v. Flynn, 6 D. 316.

Turpentine in boxes cut into trees is personal property. Branch v. Morrison, 69 D. 770.

One who plants oysters in tidal waters on land of the state may maintain trespass against another who carries them away. Metzger v. Post, 43 R. 341.

3. The title and ownership. — 1. In general.—Ownership of personal property, when proved, is presumed to continue until some alienation is shown; and ownership is not lost by permitting another to be in possession. Magee v. Scott, 55 D. 49.

A contracted with B to build a vessel, the former to furnish the timber requisite to complete the frame, and the latter to advance the money, and also to furnish the materials for the joiners' work; and the vessel, while standing on land hired by A, and in an unfinished state, was seized on an execution issued against A, and sold to C, who afterwards completed the vessel and sold her to D. In an action of trover brought by B against D, — held, that the property in the vessel was in D, and that B could not have any property in the vessel until she was completed and delivered to him. Merritt v. Johnson, 5 D. 289.

2. Ownership presumed from possession.—Possession alone is presumptive evidence of the ownership of a chattel, and if not opposed is sufficient; and the evidence is still stronger if the possession is accompanied by the exercise of complete acts of ownership for a length of time. Moon v. Hawks, 16 D. 725; Magee v. Scott, 55 D. 49; Avery v. Clemons, 46 D. 323. But the prima facie case may be rebutted by circumstances attending the possession, or by positive proof. Bergen v. Riggs, 85 D. 304; especially to repel the charges of fraud, and to protect the true owner's rights. Staples v. Bradbury, 23 D. 494. And if another person desires to make out a title, he has the burden of proof to show how he came by it, and to explain why it is not in his own custody. Dick v. Cooper, 64 D. 652.

The presumption of ownership arising from the possession of a horse is overcome by the unexplained existence of the government brand upon the horse. Bergen v. Riggs, 85 D. 304.

3. — from adverse possession. — Four years' adverse possession of personal property gives a good title thereto, even though the origin of such possession may have been fraudulent. Gregg v. Bigham, 26 D. 181.

* Owner not answerable for damages caused by his property when in charge of another, see note, 27 K 702-704.

Prima facie presumption of title and ownership is raised by proof of uninterrupted adverse possession of personal property for twenty years, and such presumption can only be overturned by proof that such possession was not inconsistent with plaintiff's right, or explaining or excusing such long acquiescence on some ground other than proof of original defect of title in the possessor. McArthur v. Carrie, 70 D. 529.

Acts of ownership by the possessor of chattels, inconsistent with another's ownership, must be brought to the knowledge of the true owner to divest him of title. McMahon v. Sloan, 51 D. 601.

4. Authority of one in mere possession to sell. — Mere possession of another's property is not such evidence of ownership or authority to sell that third persons have a right, as against the true owner, to rely thereon. Spraight v. Hawley, 100 D. 452.

Possession of personal property is only prima facie evidence of ownership, and never prevails against the true owner, except with reference to negotiable instruments and whatever comes under the general denomination of currency. With this exception, the effect of possession as evidence of ownership is subordinate to the principles that no one can be divested of his property without his consent, and that no one can transfer a better title than he has himself. Wright v. Solomon, 79 D. 196; Spraight v. Hawley, 100 D. 452.

A son's possession and apparent ownership of cattle by the father's consent will not prevent the father's representatives from showing, as against a purchaser from the son, that there was no authority to sell. Staples v. Bradbury, 23 D. 494.

The consent of the owner to the disposition of his property may be inferred from acts as well as given in direct terms. It may be inferred when the owner gives such evidence of the authority of disposal as usually accompanies such authority, according to the custom of trade and the general understanding of business men. Wright v. Solomon, 79 D. 196.

Selling a part of a number of chattels received at the same time and under the same circumstances is proper evidence to go to the jury upon the question of ownership of the residue. Moon v. Hawks, 16 D. 725.

5. Joint possession. — Where two persons are in joint possession of property, the title being in one, the law will refer the possession to him who has the title. Bragg v. Massie, 79 D. 82.

A joint owner is bound to that care which prudent men ordinarily have of their property. Guillot v. Dossat, 6 D. 702.

4. Effect of the law of place. — 1. In general. — The validity of every transfer, alienation, or disposition of personal property depends upon the law of the owner's domicile. Petersen v. Chemical Bank, 88 D. 298; Minor v. Cardwell, 90 D. 390.

The character of property, as real or personal, is to be determined by the laws of the state into which it is removed. Minor v. Cardwell, 90 D. 390.

An involuntary transfer of movable property abroad, by process at home, does not divest the title in prejudice of creditors domiciled at the place of actual situs. Speed v. May, 55 D. 540.

A voluntary transfer of movable property by act of owner divests title in it wherever it may be. Ib.

2. The situs of personalty.—Personal property has no situs other than that of the person having its possession, ownership, custody, or control. Molynex v. Seymour, 76 D. 662; Speed v. May, 55 D. 540. But this principle has no proper application where an attempt is made to take it from him against his consent, but applies only where the claim of the owner ceases by his death intestate, or by his voluntary transfer. Owen v. Miller, 75 D. 502.

The law of the actual situs of personalty protects claims of creditors domiciled there only against transfer by operation of law. Speed v. May, 55 D. 540.

The situs of bank stock secured on real property is the same as that of the property upon which it forms a charge. Packwood's Succession, 43 D. 230.

5. *Conveyances, and other transfers of title.—The title of goods is transferred to a defendant upon recovery in trespass or trover by the plaintiff of the value of the specific chattels of which the possession has been acquired by tort. Admson v. Miller, 59 D. 663.

The payment by a carrier for goods lost in transitu transfers property in them to the carrier. Hagerstown Bank v. Adams Exp. Co., 84 D. 499.

Growing trees are severed in law from the land, and become personal property without an actual severance, so that they may thereafter be sold like any other personal property, where the owner of the lands, by a valid deed, sells the trees to a third person, or, it seems, where he sells the land, reserving the trees. Kingsley v. Holbrook, 86 D. 173.

A sale of standing trees in contemplation of their immediate separation from the soil, by either the vendor or vendee, is a constructive severance of them, and they pass as chattels; and the contract is not within the statute of frauds, though no definite time is fixed for their removal. The phrase "in contemplation of immediate separation from the soil," is used to distinguish a sale of standing trees, or growing crops, which passes no interest in the land except a license to enter upon it for the purpose of removing them, from a contract conferring an exclusive right to the land, for a time, for the purpose of making a profit out of the growth upon it. Byassee v. Reese, 83 D. 481.

The selection and marking of trees sold as chattels by the purchaser, with the knowledge and consent of the vendor, is a constructive delivery, and the title vests in the purchaser as against the vendor. Ib.

A bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration paid, who acquires title to land before he has notice of a sale of the standing trees, is entitled to them, and the purchaser of the trees must look to his vendor for damages. Ib.

Defendants purchased of J., and paid for, a quantity of linseed. At the time of the purchase, J. did not have the linseed; but three days afterward he procured a quantity of plaintiffs by fraudulent representations, and delivered it to defendants with the bill of lading. Held, that the plaintiffs could recover the linseed of the defendants. Bernard v. Campbell, 14 R. 289.

A sale of ice, already formed in a pond, is a valid sale of personal property. Higgins v. Kusterer, 32 R. 160.

Whether courts, independently of positive legislation or local established regulations in regard to the transfer of personal property, can discriminate in favor of their own citizens and maintain their consistency in holding that personal property has no locality, quære. Walters v. Whitlock, 76 D. 607.

6. *Rights of owner wrongfully dispossessed.—The owner of property tortiously taken or converted, if it can be identified and a delivery had, is entitled to recover it, notwithstanding any change of form or addition to its value which may have been made by the labor of the wrong-doer. Weymouth v. Chicago etc. Ry Co., 84 D. 763.

Accordingly, a trespasser who cuts down trees and converts the lumber into shingles acquires no title. Betts v. Lee, 4 D. 368; Strubbee v. Trustees Cincinnati Ry, 39 R. 251. Where, however, the property has been so changed in its character as to have lost its identity, it ceases to have the same legal existence, and the owner cannot pursue it against third persons. Cross v. Marston, 44 D. 353.

Where a person, without the consent or knowledge of the owner, entered on land and cut timber which he made into coal, he cannot maintain trover for the coal which remained in possession of the owner of the timber. Curtis v. Groat, 5 D. 204.

One wrongfully dispossessed of his goods may retake them wherever he can find them, provided it be not done in a riotous or forcible manner. Bobb v. Bosworth, 12 D. 273.

A forcible attempt to retake goods may be repelled by force, and if the one making such forcible attempt wound the other, an action for the battery will lie in favor of the latter, although the first may have had the better claim to the property. Ib.

The owner of a chattel wrongfully taken from his possession and placed upon the land of another may lawfully enter and retake it, and is not liable even for nominal damages for so doing. Chambers v. Bedell, 37 D. 508.

The owner has the right of recaption of his personal property, and may, without any prior request, take it from one who improperly detains it; but unless it was seized or attempted to be seized forcibly, the owner cannot justify more than gently laying his hands on the wrong-doer for its recovery. Scribner v. Beach, 47 D. 265.

Where a trespasser carries away a bar or pole of another person, and uses it in constructing a staging for his own use, the owner may recapture it at any time without giving notice to the trespasser of its removal from the staging. And if such trespasser sustains damage by reason of the falling of the staging, owing to the removal of the pole without notice to him, the owner is not liable therefor. His loss in such case is damnum absque injuria. White v. Twitchell, 60 D. 294.

Where the owner of a colt exchanges it for a mare on condition that the exchange shall be permanent, provided the title to the mare shall, upon inquiry, prove good, otherwise the owner of the colt to have the right to reclaim it wherever found, and it proves, upon inquiry, that the mare was stolen by the party offering to exchange her, the owner of the colt may reclaim it from one who purchased it from the thief, without notice of the terms upon which the latter held it, and such purchaser cannot maintain trover for the recovery of the colt from its original owner. Stevens v. Ellis, 77 D. 240.

The mere naked possession of personal property in a vendor will not prevail against the true owner, who may follow his property and reclaim it wherever found. Fawcett v. Osborn, 83 D. 278.

7. Abandonment and relinquishment.—Property found to be derelict, in a strict maritime sense, does not imply that the owner is divested of all right in such property. Wyman v. Hurlburt, 40 D. 461.

Abandonment of property divests the owner of his title therein, and the finder who reduces the same to possession after such abandonment is not guilty of conversion. Ib.

The law will imply an abandonment of a wreck without the positive testimony of an owner of the boat and cargo in affirmation of the fact, where such wreck is covered by an island formed upon it, on which trees have grown to the height of thirty or forty feet, and the owners, after recovering a portion of the cargo, have abandoned the remainder. Eads v. Brazelton, 79 D. 88.

The finder of wreck as such is entitled to the property as owner, or to its possession as salvor, and will be protected from the interference of third persons. Ib.

Property is abandoned when it is thrown away or is voluntarily forsaken by the owner. It then becomes the property of the first occupant, subject to the superior claim of the owner, except that in salvage cases, by the admiralty law, the finder may retain possession until paid his compensation, or until the property is submitted to legal jurisdiction for the ascertainment of compensation. Ib.

Occupation or possession of property lost, abandoned, or without an owner, as a wreck, must depend upon an actual taking of the property with the intent to reduce it to possession. This possession need not be an absolute or perpetual appropriation of the property to the use of the finder, nor need the act of taking possession be manual; still, marking trees that extend across the wreck, or affixing temporary buoys to it, are not such acts of possession as the law will notice and protect as indicating a desire or intention to appropriate the property. Ib.

8. Rights of finders.—The finder of a lottery ticket purporting to be payable to the holder cannot sustain an action thereon. McLaughlin v. Waite, 21 D. 232.

The finder of a chose in action cannot maintain any action against the maker to recover the amount due thereon. Ib.

Payment to the finder of a chose in action purporting to be payable to the bearer or holder will not protect the obligor against an action by the true owner, if he knew that the person whom he paid was not such owner. Ib.

The finder of lost property acquires a right, upon return of the property to its owner, to any reward that may have been offered by the owner for a return. Deslandes v. Wilson, 25 D. 187.

If no reward is offered for finding of lost property, the finder thereof is entitled to no reward or remuneration. Watts v. Ward, 62 D. 299.

The finder of lost property cannot be allowed to judge as to how much his demand for trouble and expense in finding the property shall be, and then how much he ought to use the property to satisfy such demand. Ib.

The reward must be ratably apportioned, in case part only of the lost property is found and returned. Deslonde v. Wilson, 25 D. 187.

The finder of stray horses which die while being used by him in the ordinary course of his business is liable to the owner thereof for their value. Watts v. Ward, 62 D. 299.

The finder of lost property is entitled to it as against all the world except the real owner, and ordinarily the place where it is found is of no consequence. Durfee v. Jones, 23 R. 528.

A bought an old safe, and afterward offered it to B, who refused to purchase it. It was then left with B for sale, B having permission to use it. B found between the outer casing and the lining a roll of bank bills belonging to some person unknown, whereupon A first demanded the money, and then demanded the safe and its contents as they were when B received them. The safe was returned, but the money retained by B. In assumpsit brought by A against B for the money found,—held, that as against A, B was entitled to retain the money. Ib.

A servant in a hotel found a roll of bank notes in the public parlor, and informed her master, who suggested that it belonged to a transient guest, and received the money from her to give to him. It proved not to belong to the guest, and the servant demanded it from the master, who refused to return it. Held, that she could recover it from him. Hamaker v. Blanchard, 35 R. 664.

The plaintiff, while engaged as an employee in the defendant's paper-mill, in assorting a bale of old papers which the defendant had bought for manufacture, found a number of bank notes, in a clean unmarked envelope, in a bale, and delivered them to the defendant for the purpose of ascertaining if they were good, and upon his promise to return them. The defendant refusing to return them upon demand,—held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover their value from him. Bowen v. Sullivan, 30 R. 172.

The proprietor of a shop is entitled to the possession of a pocket-book which has been accidentally left by another upon a table there, and has remained uncalled for, as against a stranger who first sees it there. Property so left is not to be treated as other lost property, so as to entitle the finder to take and hold possession. McAvoy v. McDina, 87 D. 733.

The owner of a tannery sold it, and accidentally omitted to remove a few hides from the vats. Many years afterward a laborer found them. Held, that he got no title to them, they not being lost, abandoned, derelict, nor treasure-trove, and that they belonged to the original owner or his representatives. Livermore v. White, 43 R. 600.

The plaintiff, having found a bank note, deposited it for gratuitous safe-keeping with the defendant, from whose safe it was stolen by burglary. Held, 1. That in the absence of any claim by the rightful owner communicated to the defendant, the plaintiff had such an interest in it as would entitle him to recover it from the defendant; but 2. That the defendant was not liable unless he had been grossly negligent in his care of the note. Tancil v. Seaton, 26 R. 380.

9. Confusion or accession.*—Confusion of goods has taken place when there has been such an intermixture of goods owned by different persons that the property of each can no longer be distinguished. Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 50 D. 627.

The doctrine of confusion of goods is: If the goods can be distinguished and separated each may claim his own; if the goods are of the same nature and value, as corn, tea, etc., then each may claim his aliquot part; but if the mixture is not distinguishable, nor an aliquot division possible, then the party who occasions, or through whose neglect or fault occurs, the wrongful mixture, must bear the whole loss. Robinson v. Holt, 75 D. 233; Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 50 D. 627; Sims v. Glazener, 48 D. 120; Inglebright v. Hammond, 53 D. 430.

Where a person mingled his hay with that of a judgment debtor, and did not and could not identify his own,—held, that the mass became the property of the judgment debtor as between the party mixing the hay and an officer levying upon the same under a writ of execution against the debtor. Robinson v. Holt, 75 D. 233.

The injured party is entitled to replevy a whole body of mixed lumber where one willfully and indiscriminately intermixes his own lumber with that of another person so that they cannot be distinguished, and where the two lots so mixed are of different qualities or values. Jenkins v. Steanka, 88 D. 675.

The doctrine of confusion of goods is applicable to mill-logs and other lumber. Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 50 D. 627.

"Accession" and specification explained and defined. Lampton v. Preston, 19 D. 104.

The owner of property movable or immovable has a right by accession to that which is added or united to it. Peirce v. Goddard, 33 D. 764.

The owner of the principal materials acquires by right of accession the right of property in the whole where the materials of two persons are united by labor into a joint product. Pulcifer v. Page, 54 D. 582.

any alteration of form, unless it be changed into a different species and incapable of restoration to its original state. Peirce v. Goddard, 33 D. 764.

The title to chattels is not changed by bestowal of labor or skill upon them, by a willful wrong-doer, in manufacturing them or changing them into a commodity of another kind. No matter how great the transformation may be, the true owner may follow and reclaim his materials as far as he can prove their identity. Silbury v. McCoon, 53 D. 307; Dunn v. Oneal, 60 D. 140. But the right to the same may be so acquired, provided the possession of the same is innocently obtained and the species of the property be changed. Lampton v. Preston, 19 D. 104.

Willful trespassers taking corn and making it into whisky acquire no title, and can maintain no action against an officer seizing and selling the whisky in their distillery, on an execution against the owner of the corn. Silbury v. McCoon, 53 D. 307. Contra, Silbury v. McCoon, 41 D. 753.

The owner of the principal materials of an article manufactured by another who also supplied some slight deficiencies in the materials is the owner of the manufactured article, but the manufacturer has a lien thereon for his services and materials. Dunn v. Oneal, 60 D. 140.

One of two tenants in common of certain timber-land conveyed his undivided half of the land by warranty deed to certain parties to whom he was indebted, such parties agreeing orally to reconvey upon the discharge of the indebtedness. Subsequent to the sale of his interest in the land, and under authority previously given by his co-tenant, the vendor sold a quantity of the timber growing upon the land to a third party, who cut and manufactured the same into hoops. An action of replevin was brought by the owners of the land to recover the hoops. It was shown upon the trial that the value of the timber was twenty-five dollars, and that the value of the hoops was seven hundred dollars. Held, that evidence showing that the defendant purchased the timber and manufactured it, in good faith, was admissible; and that upon such showing he was entitled to have the jury instructed that the title to the timber was changed by a substantial change of identity, and that the remedy of the plaintiff was by an action of trespass. Weberbee v. Green, 7 R. 653.

Where one by mistake, in good faith, has expended labor upon the property of another, not destroying its identity, nor converting it into something substantially different, nor essentially enhancing its value, he cannot recover compensation therefor from the owner, although the owner has availed himself of the benefit. Isle Royal M. Co. v. Hertin, 26 R. 520.

Where one by mistake and in good faith cut cord-wood on the land of another, and hauled it to a landing and piled it, and the owner seized and sold it, — held, that the owner was not liable for the value of such labor. Id.

10. Derelict property. — The owner of property which, without his fault or negligence, is carried by high water down a stream and deposited upon the lands of another, will not be liable for any damage occasioned by it, unless he reclaim it, in which event he must make good the damages done. Sheldon v. Sherman, 1 R. 569; Livsey v. Philadelphia, 3 R. 578.

1. The right to practice medicine or surgery. — An agreement by a physician transferring his practice and good-will to another physician for a price, and guaranteeing that "no other physician, for the space of four years, will establish himself in this place as a competitor, unless the increased population of the place should warrant it, or unless the purchaser should commit some act which shall forfeit to him the confidence of the community," and that if any such competitor do so establish himself, the former will repay the sum paid, is not an agreement which is void as being in restraint of trade, nor too uncertain and insensible to support an action. Gilman v. Dwight, 74 D. 634.

Plaintiff, a physician, being about to remove from the town where he lived, agreed with defendant, also a physician, in consideration of five hundred dollars, to recommend him to his patients, and to use his influence to induce them to employ him. Held, that the agreement was lawful, and not against public policy. Hoyt v. Holly, 12 R. 390.

2. Statutory regulations of the right. — The legislature may regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, and prescribe the qualifications of applicants for license. Eastman v. State, 58 R. 400.

A statute requiring physicians and midwives to report births and deaths to the clerks of courts is not unconstitutional nor unreasonable. Robinson v. Hamilton, 46 R. 63.

The state may authorize the state medical board to refuse a certificate, as a necessary condition to the right to practice medicine, for "unprofessional or dishonorable conduct," but the applicant has a right first to be heard, and is not entitled to mandamus to review the determination. State v. State Med. Exam. Board, 50 R. 575.

Under a statute regulating the practice of medicine and surgery, an application for leave to practice who has a diploma must furnish the state board of health satisfactory proof that it was granted by some legally chartered institution in good standing. Held, that the granting of leave by the board is discretionary, and will not be enforced by mandamus. State v. Gregory, 53 R. 565.

3. Right to compensation, and how enforced. — A physician or surgeon, without special contract for the purpose, never stipulates for the successful conclusion of his services, nor is he ever a warrantor or insurer. Leighton v. Sargent, 59 D. 388.

In an action by a physician for his services rendered to a patient, evidence that while rendering such services he attended patients afflicted with small-pox, and communicated that disease to the defendant, notwithstanding his promise made to the defendant when first employed by him that he would not while attending him wait upon small-pox patients, is admissible for the purpose of reducing the recovery for the services in the performance of which the violation of this promise and the consequent damage occurred. Piper v. Menifce, 54 D. 547.

The superintendent of a hotel at a watering-place does not render himself liable for the services of a physician by sending to a friend in the neighboring town the following telegram, which is by him shown to said physician: "There are many cases of yellow fever at the Well; send out a physician this afternoon without fail." Williams v. Brickell, 75 D. 88.

The facts authorizing a recovery for malpractice constitute a defense to an action for professional services. Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593.

A consulting surgeon who, at the request of the attending surgeon, and with the consent of the patient, renders services to the patient, may recover from the patient, although the attending surgeon had agreed with the patient to pay therefor, but without the knowledge of the consulting surgeon. Garrey v. Stadler, 58 R. 877.

A physician may recover for his services, although he was mistaken in his treatment, provided he was not negligent or unskillful. Ely v. Wilbur, 60 R. 668.

4. The skill required, and how proved.* — The law requires of physicians and surgeons, in the treatment of their patients, to use ordinary skill and diligence only, the average of that possessed by the profession as a body, and not of the thoroughly educated only; having regard to the improvements and advanced state of the profession at the time of the treatment. Smother v. Hanks, 11 R. 141; Leighton v. Sargent, 59 D. 388; Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593; Wilnot v. Howard, 94 D. 338; Barnes v. Meuns, 25 R. 328.

A physician must use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treatment of a case. Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593.

A physician must use his best skill and judgment in deciding upon the nature of the disease, and the best mode of treatment, and the management, generally, of the patient. Id.

A physician is not a warrantor of a cure, and is not responsible for want of success in his treatment, unless it is proved to result from want of ordinary care, or ordinary skill and judgment. Id.

The law does not require that a physician or surgeon should have the highest skill, or largest experience, or most thorough education, equal to the most eminent of the profession. Id.

A country physician and surgeon is not bound to the exercise of that high degree of

* Skill and knowledge exacted of, see note, 56 R. 3:2-394.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

art and skill possessed by eminent surgeons living in large cities, and making a specialty of the practice of surgery, but only to that reasonable degree of learning, art, and skill ordinarily possessed by others learned in his profession, having regard to the advanced state of the science. Small v. Howard, 35 R. 363.

A physician or surgeon should be charged with the consequences of errors only where such errors could not have arisen except from want of reasonable skill or diligence. Leighton v. Sargent, 59 D. 388.

A physician is not responsible for an honest mistake of nature of disease, or as to the best mode of treatment, when there was reasonable ground for doubt or uncertainty, provided he is properly qualified as a physician, and exercises the proper care. Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593; Leighton v. Sargent, 59 D. 388.

A physician under whose care a man places his wife, some distance from his own residence, is presumed to have authority to do all such acts and adopt such course of treatment and operations as are in his opinion necessary, without previously notifying the husband of an intended operation; nor need he prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the operation was necessary, or that it would be dangerous to the wife to wait until her husband was notified. McClallen v. Adams, 31 D. 140.

Evidence that a person accused of negligence and unskillfulness in the treatment of a broken ankle was educated at a medical school of high repute, was a regularly educated and skillful physician and surgeon, is proper and should be admitted. Leighton v. Sargent, 59 D. 388.

The reputation of the institution where the physician's studies were pursued can have no legitimate bearing upon question of skill possessed by one physician as compared with others. Leighton v. Sargent, 64 D. 323.

The treatment of a physician of one particular school is to be tested by the general doctrines of his school, and not by those of other schools. Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593.

The number of cases treated, the course of treatment, or the amount of practice possessed by a physician, is not competent evidence to show his skill. Leighton v. Sargent, 64 D. 323.

In an action against a surgeon for malpractice, evidence of his reputation, in the community and among his profession, as to skill, is inadmissible. Holsman v. Hoy, 59 R. 390.

Evidence introduced to prove skill possessed by a surgeon two years subsequent to the act complained of is incompetent to prove skill at the time that the act was done. Leighton v. Sargent, 64 D. 323.

Where but one course of treatment would be suggested by physicians of ordinary knowledge or skill, the adoption of any other course may be evidence of a want of ordinary knowledge, skill, or care. Patten v. Wiggin, 81 D. 593.

Evidence that a skilled surgeon assisted a physician who had sole control of a case could not tend to prove the degree of skill possessed by said physician, especially when there was a disagreement as to mode of treatment to be pursued. Leighton v. Sargent, 64 D. 323.

The measure of skill which a physician is bound to exercise is not affected by his refusal of the proffer of assistance from other physicians. Potter v. Warner, 36 R. 668.

5. Liability for want of skill.*—The civil responsibility of physicians and surgeons in the treatment of their patients is not governed by the same rule of law that applies to mechanics and artisans in the execution of their work. Almond v. Nugent, 11 R. 147.

A physician is liable for damages arising as well from want of skill as from the want of application of skill. Long v. Morrison, 77 D. 72.

A physician attending patients afflicted with infectious diseases is bound to take all such precautions as experience has found to be necessary, to prevent the communication of those diseases to his other patients. Piper v. Menifee, 64 D. 547.

A surgeon is not liable for a want of the highest degree of skill, but only for the want of ordinary skill, care, or judgment. Howard v. Grover, 48 D. 478.

A surgeon is answerable to his patient for error of judgment so gross as to be inconsistent with the use of that degree of skill that it is the duty of every surgeon to bring to the treatment of a case. West v. Martin, 80 D. 107.

A surgeon is liable for the mismanagement of a broken arm, whereby it became defective, although the negligence or improper care of those having charge of the sufferer aggravated the injury and caused the damage to be greater than it otherwise would have been. Wilmot v. Howard, 94 D. 338.

Where the original treatment of a broken arm by a surgeon was such that the arm must have inevitably been injured, the mismanagement of those having the patient in charge, whereby the injury was aggravated, goes only to the measure of damages, and not to the right of action against the surgeon. Id.

Where a person had sustained an oblique fracture of the larger bone of the leg, and the surgeon in attendance neglected promptly to use the customary appliances, for extension and counter-extension, whereby the limb was materially shortened, it not appearing that the patient was unable to undergo such treatment, — held, that the surgeon was liable in damages. Barnes v. Means, 25 R. 328.

* Liability of physicians and surgeons for negligence, see note, 48 D. 481-487.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

6. — or for malpractice.* — 1. Generally. — Where a physician was charged in an action for damages for wounding and injuring a patient in child-birth, — held, that particular acts of the defendant might be given in evidence to sustain the general allegations, and that it was competent for the plaintiff to show by what means such injuries and wounds were received. Grannis v. Branden, 5 D. 143.

Evidence of the declarations of the defendant that the patient was infected with the venereal disease, and that this was the cause of protracted labor, when it appeared that she had no such disease, was held admissible, for the purpose merely of showing the defendant's ignorance as to the real state of her case. Id.

It was held to be competent to show that the defendant had not been regularly bred to his profession, to rebut evidence introduced by him of his general professional character. Id.

A physician is liable for injuries resulting from his carelessness, or from a want of ordinary diligence, care, and skill. Principle applied to careless vaccinating. London v. Humphrey, 23 D. 333.

When an action is brought against a surgeon for an injury arising from unskillful treatment, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show want of knowledge and skill on the part of defendant. Leighton v. Sergeant, 64 D. 323.

Negligent or improper conduct of a patient will not defeat his right of recovery against his physician for malpractice, unless it substantially contributes to the injury for which the patient seeks to recover. West v. Martin, 80 D. 107.

A complaint charged that the defendants undertook as surgeons to set and heal plaintiff's arm which was broken, but that they so negligently conducted themselves in attempting so to do that the arm was rendered worthless. Held, that the cause of action was ex contractu, and not ex delicto, and therefore only barred by the statute limiting actions on contracts. Staley v. Jameson, 15 R. 235.

2. Malpractice resulting in death. — An action for damages can be sustained by the husband against a surgeon for an unskillful operation upon his wife, notwithstanding she dies in consequence thereof. Cross v. Guthery, 1 D. 61.

The right of action for malpractice resulting in the death of a wife, if it grows out of the breach of the contract for skillful service on the part of the physician, is a chose in action, and survives the death of the wife. Long v. Morrison, 77 D. 72.

At common law, the right of action against a physician for malpractice founded on the tort, died with the death of the person injured. Id.

The following instruction is correct: "The action is predicated upon the injury to the deceased; and the amount of damages should be compensatory for the injury, short of the loss of life, which the law cannot estimate. The jury may well consider the pain and suffering of the deceased, but not the suffering of her parents, nor the suffering nor loss of the husband." Id.

For malpractice resulting in death of wife, the husband has a right of action for the loss of service, etc., sustained by him between the times of the commission of the injury and the death of the wife. Id.

The husband and personal representative of wife must join in action for malpractice resulting in death of wife, under a statute providing "when the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may maintain an action therefor against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action had he lived, against the latter for an injury for the same act or omission," but the husband would have no right to settle the suit, nor control the proceeds of it, independent of the administrator, since the statute declares the use to be made of the proceeds of the judgment recovered. Id.

The non-joinder of a husband with the personal representative of the wife, in an action for malpractice resulting in the death of the wife, is no ground for reversal under the code, if it was not specially raised as an objection below. Id.

A physician prescribing for a patient honestly and to the best of his ability is not criminally answerable for his death from the medicines so prescribed. State v. Schulz, 39 R. 187.

A physician is criminally liable for his gross ignorance causing the death of his patient, but not for mere mistake of judgment. State v. Hardister, 42 R. 5.

7. *Privilege of communications between physician and patient. — The narration by a patient to his physician, of the cause of his injuries, received some months previously, is not admissible as evidence, on the part of the patient, of the cause of such injury. Chapin v. Martborough, 69 D. 281. The physician cannot give in evidence the mere statement of the party injured, in lieu of his own professional opinion. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Sutton, 92 D. 81.

An attending physician is incompetent to testify as to information of the condition of the insured, acquired in his attendance and necessary to enable him to prescribe. Diller v. Home Life Ins. Co., 25 R. 182.

* Contributory negligence of patient which will bar recovery for malpractice, see note, 86 R. 670, 671.

* Knowledge obtained in course of professional employment, whether may be disclosed, see notes, 33 R. 435-439; 82 R. 4, 5; 56 R. 527-529.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Under a statute prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of information acquired in professional attendance and necessary to enable him to prescribe, in an action for damages for a personal injury by defendant's violence, a physician is not precluded from divulging the plaintiff's admission to him that the injury existed before the defendant's act, unless it affirmatively appeared that the disclosure was necessary to enable him to prescribe. Campas v. North, 33 R. 433.

A physician called on to make a professional examination of a patient may not be allowed to testify as to his opinion of his health based on "general sight," before the examination, or any conversation with him. Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 44 R. 372.

In an action on a life insurance policy, the prohibition of testimony by physicians as to attendance on the insured before the application may be waived by the beneficiary, but the waiver as to one does not prevent his asserting the privilege as to others. Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Wiler, 50 R. 769.

On a prosecution for abortion, a physician who, after the commission of the crime, was selected by the public prosecutor to attend and examine the woman, and did attend and examine her with her consent, was allowed to testify as a witness for the prosecution to his opinion, founded on his observation of the woman and her narration of the circumstances, that an abortion had been committed. The woman was alive at the time of the trial. Held, 1. That the disclosure was prohibited by the statute; 2. That it was incompetent, because a narration of past events and not part of the res gesta. People v. Murphy, 54 R. 661.

S. Medical societies.—An incorporated medical society, under the power to make the by-laws contained in its charter, may adopt a by-law providing for the expulsion of a member who shall be guilty of ungentlemanly conduct during a session of the society, or shall conduct himself out of the society in such a manner as would render him ineligible to membership; but the society has not an uncontrollable discretion in its construction and enforcement. State v. Georgia M. Soc., 85 D. 408.

An incorporated medical society cannot justify the expulsion of a member for doing that which the law not only authorizes but encourages. Id.

A medical society, incorporated under a charter empowering it to expel its members, summoned the plaintiffs, who were members, to appear before a board of trial, composed of members, to answer charges preferred by a committee, that the plaintiffs had violated the by-laws of the society by conduct unworthy honorable physicians and members of the society, in practicing according to a certain exclusive theory or dogma, and belonging to an association whose purpose was at variance with the principles of the society and tended to disorganize it. The plaintiffs filed a bill in equity against the society, the board of trial, and the committee preferring charges, alleging that it was the defendant's intention to expel the plaintiffs only for practicing homœopathy; that the body to try them was wrongly constituted; and that the proceedings were irregular and void. Held, on demurrer, that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction. Gregg v. Mass. Medical Soc., 15 R. 24.

A board of censors of a medical society may not refuse a license to an applicant on the sole ground that he is not worthy of public confidence. Gage v. New Hamp. etc. Med. Soc., 56 R. 492.

I. AT COMMON LAW.

1. General Principles.

1. Interpretation of pleadings, generally. — Pleadings are to be taken most strongly against the pleader, and it is to be supposed that the best aspect of the case has been presented. President etc. of Natchez v. Minor, 48 D. 727; Burrows v. Yount, 39 D. 439; Ex parte Martin, 58 D. 321; Chipman v. Bmeric, 63 D. 80. Consequently in an action against a sheriff for not levying on property pointed out by the plaintiff, if the defendant pleads in defense that the plaintiff, subsequent to the levy of the first, sued out an alias execution which was levied on other property, but the plea fails to show what disposition was made of the property, the court will infer that the property was sold or the levy set aside. Lawson v. State, 50 D. 238.

The rule that a pleading is taken most strongly against the party making it is drawn from the legal supposition that every suitor will state his case as strongly as the facts warrant. Green v. Covilland, 70 D. 725.

No great strictness should be required as to the manner of stating facts in the records of courts of limited and special jurisdiction. Haynes v. Meeks, 70 D. 703.

2. Form of allegations. — Rules of pleading in equity are not so strict in matters of form as at law; courts of equity look to substance, not form. Birely v. Staley, 25 D. 303.

The dollar-mark, prefixed to Arabic numerals, is not part of the English language, within the meaning of the Vermont statute requiring pleadings to be drawn in the English language. Clark v. Stoughton, 44 D. 361.

Short pleadings, when applicable, are to be encouraged. Harlan v. Bernie, 76 D. 428.

3. The requisite certainty. — Presumptions of law need not be averred or proved. Ferguson v. State, 61 D. 120.

A party need not plead a fact which when established has no effect whatever except to admit secondary evidence to sustain his right of action or ground of defense. Thus in an action on a promissory note it is not necessary to allege the fact that the note sued on is in the defendant's possession, if such be the case, for the right of action would be complete and perfect in the plaintiff, notwithstanding the fact that defendant had got possession of the note. In such a case, if defendant refused or failed on notice to produce the note sued on, the plaintiff would have a right to give secondary evidence of its contents. McClusky v. Gerhauser, 90 D. 512.

In pleading a levy on execution, it is sufficient to allege generally that the levy was made, without stating the specific acts of the sheriff constituting a levy in law. Bank v. Rogers, 97 D. 239.

A person cannot complain of error who does not show by his pleading that he has some cause of action or ground of defense. Sherman v. Clark, 97 D. 516.

A declaration which merely describes as "goods, chattels, wares, and merchandise," the cargo of a vessel, for the failure to tow out which safely the action is brought, does not contain a description sufficiently certain and definite. Pennsylvania etc. Co. v. Dandridge, 29 D. 543.

4. Pleadings must contain facts fully and plainly stated. — Facts should be pleaded, not the evidence to sustain them. Church v. Gilman, 30 D. 82.

Pleadings in chancery should consist of averments of fact, and not of inference or argument. Chambers v. Chalmers, 23 D. 572.

5. Exhibits. — While written evidence may be filed as exhibits, and referred to as part of the pleading, good pleading requires that the substance of such evidence shall be set forth by proper averments in the pleading. Harvey v. Kelly, 93 D. 267.

An allegation in a bill contradicted by the exhibit referred to is unavailing. Henderson v. Pickett, 16 D. 130.

In equity, a defendant may deny on oath the execution of any document annexed as an exhibit to the bill, and thus put the complainant on proof. Oliver v. Persons, 76 D. 657.

Exhibits in chancery which are lost or mislaid after the decree may be supplied at a subsequent term; and a defect in the record occasioned by a loss of process may also be supplied in the same way. Genry v. Hutchcraft, 18 D. 172.

A statement in a letter annexed as an exhibit to a bill, and prayed to be taken as part of it, will, unless qualified in some manner, become the statement of the bill. Minter v. Branch Bank, 58 D. 315.

The instrument set out in a pleading, though called by a wrong name, is to have effect according to the intention of the parties. Thus if a release, so called by the pleader, operates in any way, whether as a deed of bargain and sale, a covenant to stand seised, or as an instrument in any manner effectual to pass title, the pleader is to have the benefit of it. Thornton v. Mulguinne, 79 D. 548.

A plaintiff is not required to attach to his petition evidence in the case, but simply the instrument or account on which he brings his suit. Latterett v. Cook, 63 D. 428.

In an action on a judgment of another state, if plaintiff files with his petition a transcript consisting of a declaration in assumpsit and the judgment thereon, he is not precluded from offering in evidence on the trial a further or amended transcript containing, in addition to the declaration and judgment contained in the first transcript, a copy of the original writ or summons, and the service thereof. Id.

A record which shows a cause of action and a judgment rendered thereon is, in an action on a judgment of a sister state, sufficient to annex to plaintiff's petition, under the provisions of section 1750 of the Iowa code, which requires that when a pleading is founded on a written instrument a copy thereof must be annexed to such pleading. Id.

6. Pleadings must not contradict terms of written instruments. — A party relying on an account for the purpose of claiming a credit must accept it as a whole, though he may contradict or disprove it; if he does not, it is evidence to go to the jury. Turner v. Child, 17 D. 555.

A plea by the drawer of a bill payable at a day certain, setting up a parol agreement, at or before the making of the bill, not to sue, in any event, before the stipulated time of payment — the time specified in the bill — is bad, as being an agreement varying the legal effect of the written contract as to the time of payment. Rockmore v. Davenport, 65 D. 132.

7. How statutes should be pleaded. — A public statute need not be recited or referred to in pleading, for the information of the court, but will be judicially noticed. Reed v. Northfield, 23 D. 662.

In remedial actions under a statute, no offense need be set out, and an action against a town for damages from a defect in the highway is of that nature. Id.

Where a law is unconstitutional, that fact will be considered without its having been pleaded. People v. Comm'rs of Highways, 13 R. 581.

A different rule prevails as to indictments, informations, and actions for penalties under a statute, and an averment that the act was done against the statute is necessary in such cases, because it is of the substance of the offense. Reed v. Northfield, 23 D. 662.

A party who would bring himself within an exception must plead it; but if the exception forms no part of his cause of action, but merely an excuse for his adversary, the latter must plead it. Bloodgood v. Mohawet etc. R. R. Co., 31 D. 313.

Where usury is pleaded in bar of an action on a note executed in another state, the laws regulating the rate of interest in that state must be averred and proved as matters of fact. Jones v. Bank, 46 D. 540.

A party claiming a right under a law of foreign jurisdiction, and not under the common law, must prove the law upon which his claim or right depends, as a fact; and applying this principle to the rules of pleading, he would be required to set out the law or statute upon which he based his claim, in order that the court might see if it supported the right asserted. Gunn v. Howell, 62 D. 785.

8. The commencement of a narr. is the mere recital of the writ, and not a necessary part of a declaration, under article 75 of the Maryland code, which declares that it shall not be necessary to state any formal commencement or conclusion to any declaration or other plea. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

The demand of interest in the commencement of the declaration is unnecessary, but it forms no valid objection to the declaration. Dudley v. Lindsey, 50 D. 522.

9. Videlicet. — Actions on contracts and for personal injuries, wherever arising, may be brought in the courts of Virginia, without alleging in the declaration where the cause of action arose; yet in cases where it may be necessary, in order to avoid a variance, by fiction, the plaintiff is permitted to aver under a videlicet that the place is within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is brought. Shaver v. White, 8 D. 730.

When the plaintiff does not use this fiction, the defendant is not, in general, permitted to aver that the cause of action arose in another country, except to justify the act by the laws of that country, or to show that the action has been brought in an improper form; but such plea goes to the justification of the defendant, not to the jurisdiction of the court. Ib.

It is a principle that if a party be justified as to a transaction in the country where it took place, he is justified everywhere. Ib.

10. Surplusage. — Surplusage consists in alleging other facts than those necessary to charge, and may be entirely disregarded. Com. v. Jeffries, 83 D. 712. But the objectionable part cannot be stricken out where enough will not remain to make a cause of action. Crocker v. Mann, 26 D. 684.

A superfluous allegation in a declaration may be rejected as surplusage, as where in an action against a stockholder in a corporation, for a corporate debt, the plaintiff avers that he has judgment and execution against the corporation, and also that the corporation has been dissolved, when either fact would entitle him to recover. Freeland v. McCullough, 43 D. 685.

The words "survivor of," etc., assumed by plaintiff in his pleading, may be treated as a descriptio personæ, or rejected as surplusage. Kinsler v. McCants, 53 D. 711.

11. Repleader. — New assignment. — A repleader will be awarded, and costs to abide the final event of the suit, where the substance of the defense as set forth in the plea is good, but the plea is bad in form. Parkhurst v. Sumner, 56 D. 94.

Where a defect is radical, going to the very foundation of the action, where the error in the decree is apparent by reference to the bill and the decree, the aggrieved party may assign error, although no demurrer has been interposed. Gregory v. Ford, 73 D. 639.

2. Declaration; State of Demand.

12. Naming and describing the parties. — Where some dignitary, officer, or person in a special character only can bring the action, the plaintiff must aver that he holds such position. Brewster v. Vail, 38 D. 547.

A declaration setting forth that plaintiffs hold as assignees, and the several assignments through which they acquired that right, is sufficient; they need not style themselves assignees. Bennington Iron Co. v. Rutherford, 35 D. 528.

One to whom a bond is made payable, by a name, differing from his own, may declare on it in his own name, averring that it was made to him by the wrong name; such an averment is a material, traversable one upon which issue may be taken, but the plea of non est factum does not put it in issue. Nicholay v. Kay, 42 D. 680.

13. Stating the cause of action. — 1. Generally. — Where a party claims to have acted under a special authority, and his action is founded on such authority, it should be set out with reasonable precision and certainty. Stoyel v. Westcott, 2 D. 109.

The jury have nothing to do with the statement as to whether it is appropriate to the cause of action, or contains any cause of action, or lays a valid consideration; but these points may be mooted on a motion to arrest the judgment. Sidwell v. Evans, 21 D. 387.

An allegation of precise time is not essential, in general, in actions on penal statutes. Proving the act to have been done on any day after the day first alleged, and before the commencement of the action, is sufficient. Gebhart v. Adams, 76 D. 702.

A declaration on a penal statute may be framed in the words of the statute; and therefore, in debt to recover a statutory penalty for cutting timber, the declaration, if in the words of the statute, need not aver that the timber was cut willfully, knowingly, or in criminal negligence. Ib.

Declaration against common carrier of passengers for refusal to carry must aver that plaintiff offered, or was ready and willing, to pay his fare. Doy v. Owen, 72 D. 62.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Our statement set should be liberally construed to advance its object, which is to guard against the common-law mischief of variance between the allegata and the probata. Id.

Immaterial averments unnecessarily inserted in the statement need not be proved. Id.

A plaintiff proving only a part of his declaration may recover, if the part proved presents a cause of action. Blanchard v. Baker, 23 D. 504.

The declaration in an action to recover toll for carrying passengers by mail stages need not allege a demand therefor. State v. Neil, 28 D. 623.

The derivation of an equitable plaintiff's title from the legal plaintiff need not be set out in the declaration, where a recovery on the naked legal title would be a conclusive bar to a subsequent action by any one, but it will be sufficient to mark the suit to the use of the equitable plaintiff; as in the case of an action brought in the name of an assignor to the use of his assignee. Armstrong v. Lancaster, 30 D. 293.

The rejection of evidence of an assignment by the legal to the equitable plaintiff in such a case, though such evidence is in itself irrelevant, is a ground for reversal, where it appears that the want of such evidence was regarded on all hands as an insuperable barrier to a recovery. Id.

The declaration in an action founded upon a statute giving a new remedy ought to show whence the plaintiff derives his right of action, and all the facts and circumstances requisite to bring the case within the statute. Thorpe v. Rankin, 38 D. 531.

A trial may be stopped if the county court, in its discretion, is satisfied that no cause of action is stated in the declaration, and none proved on trial, although declaration is traversed instead of demurred to. Baxter v. Winoski Turnpike Co., 52 D. 84.

As a general rule, the plaintiff need not anticipate matters of defense, and is required only to state facts which constitute, prima facie, a cause of action. Cooper v. Poston, 85 D. 610.

2. In an action on a bond.—The declaration on a bond to deliver chattels need not allege demand at the place stipulated for delivery. Mitchell v. Merrill, 18 D. 128.

3. *— on a contract.—In an action by a son-in-law against his father-in-law, for the breach of a promise made before marriage, in reference to his daughter's fortune, the declaration averred that he promised to do equal justice to all his daughters as it should be convenient for him, without stating what portion he had given to his other daughters, or that he had given them larger proportions, or that it was convenient for him to give the plaintiff's wife a particular amount. Held, the declaration was insufficient after verdict. Chichester v. Vase, 1 D. 509.

A declaration which alleges that the defendant, in consideration of a certain sum to be paid to him by the plaintiff, promised to do certain things, for breach of which promise the action is brought, is bad after verdict, because it fails to allege any agreement between the parties, or any consideration for such promise by the defendant. Pa. etc. Nav. Co. v. Dandridge, 29 D. 543.

Where payment of an installment is independent, an action may be maintained on it after all the installments are due, without averring a performance or an offer to perform on the part of the plaintiff. Biddle v. Coryell, 38 D. 521.

An allegation of an offer of performance must state the date on which such offer was made. Vance v. Blair, 51 D. 467.

A declaration on a contract in partial restraint of trade need not expressly aver the reason to support the restraint, if it sufficiently appears from the contract itself, which is set forth in the declaration. Kellogg v. Larkin, 56 D. 164.

No averment can give to an agreement a character it had not, and no admission can take from it the character it had, where an agreement is laid before the court for construction. Id.

A plaintiff suing on a promise made in consideration of forbearance to file a caveat to a will must allege in his declaration that he was interested in setting the will aside. Busby v. Conoway, 63 D. 688.

A declaration in an action based on the forbearance must show either detriment to plaintiff or a benefit to the defendant; and a declaration in an action on a promise made upon the consideration of forbearance to file a caveat to a will, which contains no allegation that the testator left any assets, either real or personal, after payment of his debts, is therefore fatally defective. Id.

4. — on a covenant.—A count on covenant for the payment of installments, on the last of which the plaintiff is to make a deed to defendant, of certain land, should aver a performance, or an offer to perform, on plaintiff's part. Biddle v. Coryell, 38 D. 521.

5. — on a warranty.—In an action upon a contract of warranty, the party injured may, at his election, declare in assumpsit or in tort. Morehouse v. Northrop, 89 D. 211.

6. In an action for special damages.—The plaintiff declared that he had prepared rafts with intent to navigate them down a river which was constituted a public highway, and that he did navigate them until he came to a dam erected by the defendant, by which he was prevented from passing down the river with his rafts. It was held that this was a

* Contract sued on need not be alleged to be in writing, see note, 16 D. 149, 150.

sufficient averment of special damage to support an action. Hughes v. Heiser, 2 D. 459.

7. In an action upon an easement.—In declaring upon an easement, the plaintiff may either allege a certain deed from one party to another, or generally that a deed supposed to have been lost had been made, without naming the parties or date. Where twenty years' user is relied upon to prove said last-mentioned deed, such declaration is sufficient. Either form is good upon demurrer. French v. Martin, 57 D. 294.

8. In an action for fraud or deceit.—A general charge of fraudulent combination is not sufficient. Lewis v. Lewis, 43 D. 540.

In an action on the case for deceit in the sale of a newspaper establishment, it was alleged that the defendants affirmed the number of subscribers to be nine hundred, and the profits to be three thousand dollars per annum, whereas in fact the number of subscribers was only six hundred, and the profits nothing. The declaration then concluded: "And so the said S. B. saith that he, by reason of the said affirmation of the said R. M. and S. M., was falsely and fraudulently deceived, to wit, the day and year aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid. Wherefore, he saith he is made worse, and hath damage to the value of," etc. This was held to be a sufficient allegation that the defendants made the affirmations falsely and fraudulently, especially after verdict. Bayard v. Makolan, 3 D. 450.

9. — for money due.—A statement of demand is proper under the act of March 21, 1806, only where a sum certain, or to be made certain by calculation, is due; hence it is not appropriate to the case of a due-bill for "two bureaux." Roberts v. Beatty, 21 D. 410.

An allegation is too general to allow of proof in its support, if it is to the effect "that plaintiff is indebted to defendant in the sum of," etc. Pargond v. Guice, 25 D. 202.

Recovery cannot be had of a sum payable on a contingency, without showing that the contingency has arisen. Worden v. Dodge, 47 D. 247.

10. — for negligence.—An allegation of the loss of property through the negligence and carelessness of the defendants is equivalent to an averment of destruction. Herrin v. Eaton, 29 D. 499.

11. In penal actions.—The declaration in a penal action should allege that the facts charged are against the form of the statute upon which the action is based. Palmer v. York Bank, 36 D. 710.

One who would hold a bank liable for penal damages, given by the statute for a neglect to make payment in specie, on demand or within the time limited, must distinctly claim such damages in his declaration. Id.

12. In an action on a tort.—A charge of slander accompanied by a tortious act may be joined therewith in one count. Miles v. Oldfield, 2 D. 412.

In a declaration on a tort, an averment that an injury to plaintiff's hogs by defendant's servants was done with defendant's dogs, though it may be unnecessary, cannot be disregarded, since it is descriptive of the tort complained of, and it will not allow a recovery for an injury done with other dogs than those of defendant. Smith v. Causey, 65 D. 372.

An allegation that one maliciously and wantonly did something he had a right to do states no cause of action. Motive for doing a lawful act is immaterial. McCune v. Norwich City Gas Co., 79 D. 278.

A declaration that defendant did wrongfully threaten plaintiff with great injury, — held, too general. Grimes v. Gates, 19 R. 129.

A declaration that defendant did threaten to have "plaintiff arrested and imprisoned in the state prison," — held, sufficient on demurrer. Id.

14. Assigning breaches.—A declaration that a defendant agreed to do a certain thing at a specified time and place is sufficient without alleging demand and refusal; as in order to excuse himself defendant must show in his plea either that he did the thing agreed to be done, or that he was ready to do it. Patterson v. Jones, 56 D. 296.

The breach of an official bond is sufficiently assigned by negating the words of the covenant therein. Governor v. White, 24 D. 763.

The breach of a contract may be assigned affirmatively or negatively by using words of contract, provided the affirmation or negation in that form necessarily amounts to a breach; or it may be in words containing the sense and substance of the contract, but they must be co-extensive with it in their import and effect. Atlantic Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Young, 76 D. 200.

If a breach assigned is more enlarged or more limited than the contract alleged, it is bad on demurrer. Thus when the promise contained in the deposit note given by the insured to a mutual fire insurance company is set out in the declaration as a promise to pay such assessments, and at such times, as may be ordered by the directors, agreeably to the act of incorporation and by-laws of the company, while the breach assigned is enlarged to the non-payment of an assessment ordered by the directors, without averring whether it was made in conformity to the act and by-laws or not, and further enlarged as to time, so that it may include an assessment ordered to be paid on some day subsequent to the commencement of the suit as well as prior, and without alleging the time when it was ordered to be paid, — the declaration is bad on demurrer. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

15. What may be declared for under the common counts. — A special demand is not generally necessary, where the recovery may be had under the general counts; for a declaration need be special only where the claim sounds in damages, and is for the non-performance of a special contract. Mattocks v. Lyman, 46 D. 138.

16. When special counts are necessary. — In cases of tort, the special damages sued for must be the legal and necessary consequence of the alleged wrongful act, and must be particularly stated. Bulter v. Kent, 10 D. 219; Mattocks v. Lyman, 46 D. 138.

To impeach a sale for fraud, the fraud must be specially pleaded. Davis v. Hooper, 24 D. 751.

17. When several counts are proper. — Alternate pleading in the same count, as charging a loss or destruction, is bad; each should constitute a separate count. Stone v. Graves, 40 D. 131.

Matter proper for two counts may be embraced in one, where special demurrers have been abolished. Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59.

Subsequent counts intelligibly referring to the time correctly averred in the first count sufficiently show the causes of action alleged therein to have accrued before suit brought. Goodman v. Gay, 53 D. 589.

A plaintiff's claiming more than he proved, or more than he legally could demand, or his presenting his claim on different grounds in different counts in his declaration, forms no objection to his right to recover in an action to recover damages of the defendant for erecting a shop upon a road so near the plaintiff's store as to deprive him of the use of the road and store. Cole v. Sprout, 56 D. 696.

18. Effect of defects in one or more of several counts. — Each count should contain a distinct and complete cause of action, and objection to one count is not obviated by an averment in another count. Tinsman v. Belvidere Delaware R. R. Co., 64 D. 415. Contra, Freeland v. McCullough, 43 D. 685.

Where the first count of a declaration for the recovery back of money illegally extorted is sufficient, and a second count, inartificially drawn, and containing superfluous averments, but fully stating the circumstances out of which the law implies a promise by the defendant to pay the plaintiff's demand, is added, the defect in form is not sufficient to invalidate the declaration. Cobb v. Charter, 87 D. 178.

19. What counts may be joined. — Though tort and contract cannot be joined in the same declaration, yet where the gist of the action is tort, the declaration will not be held bad because it alleges that the transaction out of which the tort arose has been one of contract. Stoyel v. Westcott, 2 D. 109.

Counts in debt or assumpsit on a quantum meruit or quantum valebat may be joined in the same declaration with counts on a specialty. Van Deusen v. Blum, 29 D. 582.

A debt on a specialty may be joined with a debt on a simple contract. Medlin v. Platte Co., 40 D. 135.

A count for fraud may properly be joined with a count for false warranty, in an action upon contract of warranty. Morehouse v. Northrop, 89 D. 211.

20. Effect of variance between declaration and writ. — A fatal departure exists when the name of the party in the declaration is not the same as in the writ of attachment by which the suit was commenced. Goodman v. Walker, 68 D. 124.

3. The Plea.

21. General rules. — A plea bad in part is bad for the whole, where the plea is entire. Rison v. Farr, 87 D. 52.

Matter more in the knowledge of one party than in that of the other must be pleaded by the former. Owens v. Geiger, 22 D. 435.

Matter in aggravation need not be noticed in a plea. Rasor v. Qualla, 30 D. 658.

A defendant, by pleading to an action, admits the filing of the declaration therein. Arthur v. Broadnax, 37 D. 707.

A pleading in chief to a declaration waives any demurrer that may have been previously interposed. Neale v. Newland, 38 D. 42.

Defenses not raised in the pleadings are considered waived, especially such as are connected with the facts of the case. Stewart v. Preston, 44 D. 621.

It is not necessary to plead the presumption which the law raises from a given state of facts. Thus if a levy is pleaded, the presumption being that the sheriff accomplished his duty by selling the property, it is not necessary to aver the sale. Kershaw v. Merchants' Bank, 40 D. 70.

It is not necessary for a defendant in his pleading to state more than a prima facie case. Id.

Fraud and misrepresentation must be set out specifically. Clapp v. County of Cedar, 68 D. 678; Sterling v. Mercantile M. I. Co., 72 D. 773.

A plea that the "plaintiff did not notify defendant" fails to negative notice to the defendant. Moore v. Appleton, 73 D. 448.

A plea must answer all it professes to answer. If it purports to answer the whole declaration, and answers but a part, it is bad on demurrer. Goodrich v. Reynolds, 63 D. 240.

Where in assumpsit with a special count on a promissory note, and the common counts, pleas are interposed to the whole declaration, but answer only the special count, they are objectionable on demurrer, and the fact that plaintiff admitted, after the pleas were filed, that the note was the sole cause of action, does not cure the defect. Id.

In pleading citizenship, an averment that defendant is a citizen of the state is sufficient. State v. Harris, 36 D. 460.

22. Time to plead.—A defendant need not answer before moving for a continuance, under a statute which provides that where he is in actual military service of the United States or the state, an action against him "shall stand continued during the actual continuance of said defendant in the military service." McCormick v. Rusch, 83 D. 401.

23. Plea in abatement, generally.—Greatest accuracy and precision are required in framing pleas in abatement, as they delay the trial of the merits of the action. Southard v. Hill, 69 D. 85.

A plea in abatement is waived by a plea in bar. Gains v. Park, 38 D. 185.

A plea in abatement comes too late after exceptions to petition, and should be rejected. Cook v. Southwick, 60 D. 181.

Non-tenure cannot be pleaded in bar, and only in abatement within the time required by the rules of court. Newbegin v. Langley, 63 D. 612.

A plea in abatement of a writ may be both of writ and declaration; and it must be so where it is intended to plead in abatement only to a part of the writ, and the cause of abatement arises only on some of the counts in the declaration. Southard v. Hill, 69 D. 85.

The question whether defendant is a corporation or not should be presented by plea in abatement, and not by motion to quash the return of summons, it being raised upon matter dehors the record. American Exp. Co. v. Haggard, 87 D. 257.

A plea in abatement must give a better writ to the plaintiff by so correcting his mistake that he may avoid it in a new writ. Miller v. Ford, 55 D. 687. So held where the "American Express Company" is sued as a corporation, and a plea in abatement is filed in the names of several persons "and others," admitting that they, "together with others," were doing business under the name of the "American Express Company," but denying that the company was a corporation. The plea should have set forth who were the "others," so that the plaintiff might know against whom to bring his suit, if the plea should prove to be true. American Exp. Co. v. Haggard, 87 D. 257.

The facts presented by a plea in abatement cannot be considered by the jury or looked to for any purpose in the court below; and if in such a case the jury rendered a verdict for too great an amount, the mode of relief is by an application to the court for a new trial. Crawford v. Slade, 44 D. 463.

Errors relating to the form of the process, and not to the cause of action, and which are in the nature of dilatory pleas, are not favored in law. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

24. — for defect of parties.—A plea in abatement is the proper mode to take advantage of non-joinder of a partner, but is too late after the general issue pleaded in trespass, by one of two partners against a sheriff for a seizure and sale of goods under an execution against the other partner alone, the declaration alleging that the goods were the goods of the plaintiff. Deal v. Bogue, 57 D. 702.

An allegation that a party not joined is of full age, in a plea in abatement for the non-joinder, is unnecessary. Roberts v. McLean, 42 D. 529.

An allegation that a party not joined resides in state, and "did at the time of praying out" the writ, in a plea in abatement, is sufficient without saying "did reside," etc. Id.

A plea in abatement for the non-joinder of tenants in common of a dam, without an averment that the dam was real estate, will be overruled on demurrer. Southard v. Hill, 69 D. 85.

A judgment for the defendant on a plea in abatement, for not making proper parties defendants, is, that the writ be quashed. Miller v. Ford, 55 D. 687.

25. — for want of jurisdiction.—The objection to the form of process by which a party to an action is brought into court should be by plea in abatement, and not by demurrer to the declaration. Nashville Bank v. Henderson, 26 D. 257.

A plea in abatement that one of several defendants is a resident of the state where the suit has been commenced by warrant in a justice's court is bad, because, though personal to only one of the defendants, it goes to the whole suit. Shannon v. Comstock, 34 D. 262.

A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction, on the ground that the justice before whom the case is tried is a postmaster, is not good. McGregor v. Balch, 39 D. 231.

26. Plea of another action pending.—To constitute sufficient a plea that a debt has been garnished, where assumpsit was brought on a promissory note, the plea must set out the proceedings in the attachment suit at large, and show that all the requisites of the custom have been complied with. Crawford v. Slade, 44 D. 463.

The prayer of a plea in abatement of a pending attachment of the debt on which the action is brought should not be that the "writ be quashed," but that the defendant be not required to give any further answer, as this plea does not abate or destroy the writ, but leaves the matter in uncertainty whether the plaintiff will ever be able to maintain the action. Id.

An improper conclusion of a plea in abatement of a pending attachment of the debt is fatal on demurrer; the greatest precision is necessary in these pleas; indeed, it is the conclusion of the plea which is looked to to ascertain its true character. Id.

27. Pleas in bar, generally. — A plea in an action upon a bond, conditioned to convey a lot in fee-simple "as soon as a title can be obtained from the United States, agreeably to the regular routine of the sales and land titles of the United States," that the defendant has not yet been able to obtain a title from the United States, agreeably to the regular routine of sales and land titles of the United States, is insufficient. A sufficient excuse for not having obtained the title should be set forth, and it should appear that diligence has been used in attempting to obtain it. Nixon v. Bumpass, 26 D. 249.

The general plea of fraud, covin, and misrepresentation is good in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, even when assailed by special demurrer. Elliott v. Coggeshall, 29 D. 365.

A defendant justifying under a writ should set it out substantially in his plea, showing at whose instance the writ issued, the time when, etc. A plea that "defendant, as constable, by virtue of sundry executions, levied on," etc., is insufficient. Petres v. Hill, 33 D. 306.

A plea which fails to answer the averment that defendant had no title, in an action upon a covenant of seisin, is insufficient and defective. Logan v. Moulder, 33 D. 338.

A plea in an action on a note given for the purchase price of land, a conveyance of which is to be made by the vendor on payment of the note, is bad, if it merely avers that the payee had not made or tendered the deed before commencing the action. The plea in such a case should allege that the payee had not, on the day the note became due, or within a reasonable time afterwards, offered to deliver to the holder a good title, upon being paid, at the time of the delivery of the deed, the amount due on the note. Burrows v. Yount, 39 D. 439.

Matter which comes more properly from the plaintiff need not be stated in the plea. Union Bank v. Powell, 52 D. 367.

A similiter to a plea of not guilty, or to any negative plea, can be added by defendant, if he chooses to add it, and it is not error to proceed to trial without it. Gillespie v. Smith, 81 D. 328.

A plea justifying an arrest on suspicion of felony, without a warrant, should set forth the grounds of the suspicion, so that the court may judge of them, and determine whether they afford probable cause or not. Wade v. Chaffee, 5 R. 572.

28. The general issue.* — A plea of general issue admits that the declaration states

* Defenses that are admissible without being specially pleaded, see note, 69 D. 705-707.

a good cause of action, and when, in such a case, the plaintiff proves what he has undertaken to prove, he is entitled to a verdict, though the court should afterwards arrest the judgment for the defectiveness of the declaration. Brewer v. Strong, 44 D. 514.

Matter in mitigation of damages need not be specially pleaded. Joy v. Hull, 24 D. 625.

The general issue is sufficient, in an action by an indorsee against an indorser, to put in issue the allegation that execution had been returned no property found before the suit was commenced. A plea in abatement is not required in such case. Woodward v. Harbin, 37 D. 753.

Recoupment of damages may be allowed under plea of the general issue. Babcock v. Trice, 68 D. 560.

Under the Mississippi pleading act of 1850, the general issue and an offer to pay by tender cannot be pleaded together, nor will proof of a tender be allowed under the general issue. McIntyre v. Kline, 64 D. 163.

A defendant may plead a general issue to one count of the declaration, although he demurs to other counts. Patterson v. Wilkinson, 92 D. 568.

A demurrer being sustained to a declaration containing but one count, and a new count being added as an amendment, to which a plea of not guilty was entered, it was held that the plea applied to the new count only. Sanders v. Vance, 18 D. 167.

A plaintiff declaring as assignee of an insolvent, for a debt existing before the assignment, must prove the character in which he sues under the general issue. Best v. Strong, 20 D. 607; Winchester v. Union Bank, 19 D. 253.

A plea of general issue is a waiver of all objections to the person of plaintiff, and admits his capacity to sue in the action. A defendant cannot, under that plea, avail himself of any objection to the corporate character of a plaintiff suing as a corporation, but must take such objection by a plea in abatement. Brown v. Illius, 71 D. 49; McIntire v. Preston, 48 D. 321.

29. Non assumpsit. — A plea of non assumpsit, verified by an affidavit to the effect that the written contract sued on is not the defendant's act and deed, is sufficient to gain issue on the execution of such contract. Hunt v. Test, 42 D. 659.

Pleading non assumpsit in an action founded on a simple contract puts the plaintiff upon proving his whole case, and entitles the defendant, without prior special notice, to give evidence of anything which shows, ex æquo et bono, that the plaintiff ought not to recover. Falconer v. Smith, 55 D. 611.

A breach of a warranty may be set up under general issue in assumpsit, when it is parcel of the plaintiff's ground of action, and touches its consideration. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

30. Nil debet. — A plea of nil debet to debt on a bond, where the bond is the gist of the action, and the recovery is of a sum in numero, is bad; otherwise where the bond is merely the inducement to the action. Davis v. Burton, 36 D. 511.

A plea of nil debet to debt on a sheriff's bond is bad. Ib.

A plea of nil debet is insufficient in an action of debt on a common-law bond. Hanna v. McKenzie, 43 D. 122.

31. Non est factum. — Where an award was made against copartners upon a sealed instrument executed in the firm name by one partner, without authority, and they agreed to let the award stand as security, on being "let into a defense on the merits without being in any degree prejudiced by the award," — held, that they might, under such agreement, plead non est factum, that being a defense "on the merits." Hart v. Wilkerson, 21 D. 382.

An objection that such plea is precluded by the agreement is waived by taking issue thereon. Ib.

A judgment cannot be rendered against the partner who signed the instrument in such a case in an action against all the parties. Ib.

The plea of non est factum only puts in issue the execution of the deed, and its continuance as a deed at the time of the plea, and under such plea, the plaintiff has only to prove the sealing and the delivery. Nicholson v. Kay, 42 D. 680.

32. Nul tiel record. — An issue joined upon the plea of nul tiel record must be first decided by the court, before any other issue can be submitted to the jury. Gray v. Pingry, 44 D. 345.

Upon a plea of nul tiel record, in an action on a judgment, the justness of the judgment cannot be inquired into. Gay v. Lloyd, 46 D. 499.

Nul tiel record is insufficiently pleaded, where the allegation is, in substance, that if there be a record of any such supposed judgment, the defendants were not made parties to the suit in which it was rendered, because it does not conclude with a verification by the record. A demurrer to such a plea ought to be sustained. Cannon v. Cooper, 80 D. 101.

33. Special pleas, generally. — If a defense is founded upon a total or partial failure of consideration, or upon fraudulent acts or representations affecting the consideration, the special facts must be pleaded. Huston v. Williams, 25 D. 84.

A plea charging the illegality of a consideration must aver the facts constituting the illegality; a general plea alleging illegality will not be allowed. Dickson v. Burk, 44 D. 521.

A specialty may be impeached by a general plea alleging no consideration. Ib.

A plea of mistake in the consideration of a note is not sufficient in law, unless it states specifically the facts constituting the alleged mistake. Gaines v. Park, 38 D. 185.

A plea which avers, generally, that a note sued upon was given in the settlement of a balance of accounts, and that the balance charged against defendant was the result of mistake, as a true settlement would have shown nothing to be due, is not good. Ib.

A plea that a sealed note was obtained by fraud, covin, and misrepresentation is good on demurrer; and fraud may be specially pleaded in bar, without averring the acts constituting the fraud, even where evidence thereof might be given under the general issue. Saunders v. Stotte, 27 D. 263.

A special plea which amounts to a denial of an allegation which, in the first instance, the plaintiff would be bound to prove, under the general issue, to sustain his action, is bad as amounting to the general issue; but where, in an action of debt upon a written obligation, the defendant pleaded specially that he had executed the writing sued on, but averred that he did so on behalf of a corporation of which he was president, under the seal of the corporation, in conformity to its by-laws and for a corporate debt, it was held that such plea was allowable, and that it did not amount to the general issue. Pitman v. Kintner, 33 D. 469.

Each one of several defendants is entitled to present his defense in the form of a special plea, and cannot be compelled to adopt the plea of the other defendants. Roberts v. Williams, 34 D. 549.

A special pleader is not allowed to leave his pleading open to different constructions, and then take his choice between them. Van Etten v. Hurst, 41 D. 748.

A defendant cannot be required to plead, specially, facts which amount to no more than a denial of the plaintiff's averments, or facts which it will only become material for the defendant to prove for the purpose of rebutting evidence introduced by the plaintiff, or that which is but evidence of a material, issuable fact. Griffin v. Chubb, 58 D. 85.

A defendant may deny his liability under the general issue, but he must plead justification specially. McGuire v. Grant, 67 D. 49.

Title by prescription must be specially pleaded. Hicatt v. Morris, 78 D. 280.

A demurrer to a special plea amounting to a general issue should be sustained. City of Quincy v. Warfield, 79 D. 330.

34. Notice of special defense with general issue. — The right reserved to give special matter in evidence cannot embrace matters which could not be pleaded in bar. Scott v. Coleman, 15 D. 71.

An officer joining in a plea of the general issue, with notice of justification, with his co-defendant, does not lose his justification. Jennings v. Carter, 20 D. 635.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A defendant has not the right to plead specially, and also give notice of special matter, relied on as a defense under the general issue. When he so pleads, he may be called on to elect how he will proceed. Benjamin v. McConnell, 46 D. 474.

A defendant cannot supply a deficiency in his notice of special matter by embodying with it the additional matter in a special plea. McCay v. Burr, 47 D. 441.

In assumpsit by an administrator, a defendant may show, without notice of special matter being given, that by deceased's ledger his account was settled. Beals v. See, 49 D. 573.

A notice appended to a general issue is good only for the particular purpose for which the statute allows it to be filed; it is not binding as an admission upon the party filing it, and has no other effect upon the opposite party than to allow the matters of which it gives notice to be given in evidence. Adams v. Filer, 73 D. 410.

35. The statute of frauds. — The statute of frauds must be specially pleaded, and cannot be relied on by demurrer, unless the objection appears on the face of the complainant's bill, and if the defense is not raised by plea or demurrer, it is waived. Switzer v. Skiles, 44 D. 723; Osborne v. Endicott, 65 D. 498.

The defense of the statute of frauds may be shown under a general issue, or pleaded specially, at the option of the defendant. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 86 D. 679.

The refusal of one defendant to plead the statute of frauds cannot affect the rights of his co-defendants who rely upon and claim the protection of the statute. Petty v. Petty, 39 D. 501.

A plea that a note sued upon was given in consideration of a sale of an interest in land, not evidenced by an instrument in writing, is not a sufficient plea in bar directly setting up the statute of frauds. For a failure of consideration is the only issue raised by such a plea. Edelin v. Clarkson, 38 D. 177.

36. Pleading matter in confession and avoidance. — A plea that the cashier was robbed, in an action on his bond, should set out the place and circumstances of the robbery. Huntsville Bank v. Hill, 18 D. 39.

37. Plea of performance. — A plea of performance of a specific act, such as an agreement to give a deed, must state specially the facts constituting the performance. Tinney v. Ashley, 26 D. 620.

A plea that if plaintiff has been damaged he has been so only through his own wrong, etc., is applicable only in an action on a bond of indemnity. Harmony v. Bingham, 62 D. 142.

38. — of tender. — A plea of tender of specific articles must state that they were kept ready until the uttermost convenient time of the day of payment. Aldrich v. Albee, 10 D. 45.

A tender of personal property at the time and place of delivery may be pleaded in bar to an action on a bond for such delivery, without averring readiness afterwards to deliver it, or to bring it into court. Mitchell v. Merrill, 18 D. 123.

39. — of former recovery. — A plea of former recovery is good in bar, if it contains sufficient matter to show that the causes of action in the two suits were the same, and that the merits were determined in the first case. Culler v. Cox, 18 D. 152.

A plea of former recovery to an action on the case founded on a tort cannot be objected to merely because the first action was covenant, the causes of action being the same. Id.

If a plea of a former recovery aver the causes of action to be the same, and the record do not show them to be different, the averment, on demurrer to the plea, must be taken as true. Id.

If in a former action of covenant for the same cause, now made the subject of an action for a tort, accord and satisfaction be pleaded, and issue be joined on a replication, and the defendant recover judgment, it is a good plea in bar to the present action. Id.

A plea by two of three partners, sued on sundry notes that in a former action by the plaintiff against the same defendants on another note, the said two partners pleaded that they did not promise with the third partner, and that it was proved that the said note was given by the said third partner as a substitute for those now in suit, which were not then due; that said notes were given in evidence by the plaintiff, and that the defendants showed that they were given by the said third partner for his own debt, and in fraud of them, with the plaintiff's knowledge, and these facts being in issue, that the jury found that the defendants did not promise with the said third partner, upon which verdict judgment was rendered in their favor, which had not been reversed or annulled, — is not good as a plea in bar, because the former judgment was not for the same cause of action. Eastman v. Cooper, 26 D. 600.

40. Retraxit. — In a retraxit, the plaintiff voluntarily abandons his cause, and admits that he has no cause of action; it is this admission upon the record which constitutes a bar to another suit, and operates as an estoppel to the party. Coffman v. Brown, 45 D. 299.

A plea, held not to be a retraxit or a bar to plaintiff's action, viz., "that suit for the same cause of action, between the same parties, had been previously brought, in which the plaintiff, in his own proper person, came into court and confessed that he would not further prosecute his said suit against the defendant, but from the same altogether withdrew himself, whereupon it was considered by the court that the plaintiff should take nothing, and that the defendant go without day." Ib.

41. Plea puis darrein continuance. — A plea puis darrein continuance should show the date of the last continuance, and that the matter sought to be pleaded arose since that time. Averring that the matter arose since issue joined is insufficient. Vicary v. Moore, 27 D. 323; Brown v. Brown, 48 D. 52. But a deed which, by relation, takes effect prior to issue joined, need not be so pleaded. Jackson v. Ramsay, 15 D. 242.

A matter of defense which arose after the commencement of the action is admissible under the general issue, for the purpose of mitigating the damages, and not as a bar to the whole action. To have such effect, it must be pleaded puis darrein continuance. Costar v. Davies, 46 D. 311.

Evidence of the payment of a promissory note pendente lite cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Such defense must be set up by a plea of puis darrein continuance. Boyd v. Weeks, 43 D. 749.

A defendant, by pleading puis darrein continuance, waives all other pleas, and admits the cause of action as set out in the plaintiff's declaration. Adams v. Filer, 73 D. 410; Kimball v. Huntington, 25 D. 590.

A plea puis darrein continuance is not bad under the Alabama code as professing to be in bar of the entire action, when in fact it goes only to the further maintenance of the action, if the plea is "in short by consent," and does not in terms propose to bar the entire suit, but simply sets out the facts. Broughton v. Bradley, 73 D. 474.

In an action of trespass and ejectment, pleas of not guilty, and of soil and freehold, look to the state of things at or before the commencement of the action, and if matter of discharge accrues to the defendant pending the action, it must be pleaded to the further maintenance of the action, if it has arisen after suit, but before plea or continuance, and puis darrein continuance, if after plea or issue joined. A defendant in such action cannot, therefore, protect his possession by setting up an outstanding mortgage of the plaintiff's ancestor, purchased in by the defendant pending the action, nor by setting up such a mortgage discharged of record before the commencement of the action, but assigned to him pending the action, although he proves that the mortgage was purchased by him before the commencement of the action, and discharged by the mistake of the mortgagee instead of being assigned. Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 75 D. 681.

The court may, in its discretion, receive or reject a plea puis darrein continuance after one continuance. Cummings v. Smith, 79 D. 623.

Plea puis darrein continuance must have the same certainty as to time and place as other pleas. If such a plea does not allege the day on which the matter pleaded happened, it is bad. Ib.

42. Joint or double pleas. — A joint plea may be considered as several, as well as joint, in order to the attainment of justice. Bevin v. Linguard, 2 D. 684.

A defendant having a justification, and joining in a plea with a co-defendant who cannot justify, loses his defense; but the plaintiff must show a cause of action against him on the general issue before he is called on to justify. Bissell v. Gold, 19 D. 480; Ferrill v. Bradford, 50 D. 298.

Where several defendants have inconsistent claims, or will occupy adverse positions towards each other, on the event of plaintiff's recovery, they must frame their pleadings, as to each other, in contemplation of such event, or the court will not interpose to adjust their respective rights. Teas v. McDonald, 65 D. 65.

A plea is double when it presents two distinct grounds of defense, as breach of warranty and partial failure of consideration. Cunningham v. Smith, 60 D. 333.

4. Demurrer.

43. When a demurrer will lie, generally. — A party should take advantage of defective pleadings by demurrer. Martin v. Webb, 39 D. 363.

If a plea answers only a part of the declaration, the plaintiff should demur, and is entitled to judgment on demurrer. Hickok v. Coates, 20 D. 632.

A pleading is demurrable, by reason of superfluous, impertinent, and scandalous allegations therein. "The Count Joannes" v. Burt, 83 D. 625.

A plea which merely sets out the consideration of a contract sued on, without showing in what respect it was insufficient to support the contract, is no answer to the declaration, and a demurrer thereto is properly sustained. Mead v. Hughes, 50 D. 123.

A declaration which discontinues the suit against such defendants in the original writ as have not been served with process is not demurrable, if the case it states could be sustained by proof of such a case as under the statute would authorize the discontinuance. Gillaspie v. Wesson, 31 D. 715.

Pleading a deed with a profer of the original, and upon oyer being demanded, filing a copy, is not an objection of which advantage can be taken by demurrer. Auditor v. Woodruff, 33 D. 368.

A demurrer prior to the passage of the revised statutes enabled the party to avail himself of any defect in his adversary's pleading which would have been fatal to it on a general demurrer at common law, without specially alleging the grounds. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

44. General demurrer. — A general demurrer can only be sustained where the pleading does not state any cause of action, and it will not reach duplicity, or an improper joinder of causes of action. Smith v. Jordan, 97 D. 232.

Formal defects cannot be reached by a general demurrer, but only substantial ones. Coffin v. Knott, 52 D. 537; Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

Only those grounds of demurrer that go to plaintiff's right of action will be considered upon an appeal from a judgment overruling a general demurrer. George v. Thomas, 67 D. 612.

An objection of want of particularity in a statement of a cause of action is not raised by general demurrer. Id.

Where defendant's default is waived on condition that he will plead to the merits, he cannot file a general demurrer. Doty v. Strong, 40 D. 773.

An objection that the writ is in the detinet only, where the plaintiff sues on a contract in his own right, cannot be raised on general demurrer since the statute of 4 and 5 Anne, chapter 16. Sauser v. Walker, 25 D. 272.

An advantage may be taken by general demurrer of a material variance between an instrument pleaded with profert as a deed or writing obligatory, and a copy thereof filed as oyer, when the latter shows simply a mere contract signed with the names of defendants, but having no seal affixed. Auditor v. Woodruff, 33 D. 368.

A general demurrer in an action of trespass of et armis must, if sustained, inure to the advantage of all the defendants, when the act complained of could not, either in point of fact or of law, be joint. Foots v. Cincinnati, 34 D. 420.

In a declaration against a defendant for corrupt misconduct as a commissioner under the insolvent act in discharging the plaintiff's debtor, whereby the debt was lost, an averment that after judgment the debtor could not be found to satisfy the plaintiff is sufficient on general demurrer, without alleging that a ca. sa. was issued and returned non est inventus. Cunningham v. Bucklin, 18 D. 432.

If any one count in a declaration is good, a demurrer to the whole declaration must be overruled, though the other counts are bad in substance. United States v. White, 37 D. 374; Lane v. Levillian, 37 D. 769; Freeland v. McCullough, 43 D. 685; Smith v. Salomon, 91 D. 711.

45. Special demurrer. — A variance in a declaration must be taken advantage of by special demurrer. Phillips v. Runnels, 43 D. 109; and so in the case of a defective conclusion of a replication. Hooker v. Smith, 47 D. 679; or a plea presenting two distinct defenses. Judy v. Kelley, 50 D. 455; Cunningham v. Smith, 60 D. 333; or an objection that a plea only amounts to the general issue. Hotchkiss v. Ladd, 86 D. 679.

A plea in bar which denies the original cause of action is bad on special demurrer. Hatch v. Hyde, 39 D. 203.

46. What matters are admitted by demurring. — By demurring, a defendant admits the facts set out in the declaration, and raises the question of law as to their sufficiency to maintain the action. Stout v. Keyes, 43 D. 465; Sleeth v. Murphy, 41 D. 232; Wallace v. Holly, 58 D. 518.

A demurrer admits only facts well pleaded; whether injury is remote and consequential is a conclusion of law upon the facts stated in the declaration. Tinsman v. Belvidere etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 565; Kellogg v. Larkin, 56 D. 164; Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Sweet, 92 D. 206.

The averments in a plea, not inconsistent with those of the declaration, are admitted by a demurrer. Hanna v. McKensie, 43 D. 122.

The existence or the time of taking effect of a public statute cannot be put in issue, or admitted or denied by the pleadings, but must be determined by the judges themselves. Accordingly, an allegation in answer to quo warranto, that a statute under which the defendant claims to hold office was published and went into effect prior to the day of his alleged election, is not admitted by a demurrer to such answer. Attorney-General v. Foote, 78 D. 689.

47. How demurrers are determined, generally. — Where one of two pleas to the whole cause of action is adjudged good on demurrer, the other need not be considered. Outler v. Cox, 18 D. 152.

On a general demurrer to a declaration containing three counts, if either of the counts is good, the demurrer must be overruled, with costs, as it cannot be sustained in part and overruled in part. Biddle v. Coryell, 38 D. 521; Tinsman v. Belvidere Delaware R. R. Co., 64 D. 415; Thompson v. Newlin, 42 D. 169.

The failure of defendants to make special causes of demurrer good will not deprive them of the benefit of other causes assigned for demurrer going to the entire gravamen of the complaint, so as to defeat it on matter of substance. De Louis v. Meek, 50 D. 491.

48. Rendering judgment against party who committed first fault in pleading. — A general demurrer brings the whole record before the court, and judgment thereon will be rendered against the party whose pleadings contain the first vice or imperfection. Baughner v. Nelson, 52 D. 694; McDonald v. Wilkie, 54 D. 423; Dunlap v. Glidden, 52 D. 625; Union Bank v. Powell, 52 D. 367; Donnell v. Jones, 48 D. 59; United States v. White, 37 D. 374; Dibrell v. Miller, 29 D. 126; Hickok v. Coates, 20 D. 632.

A demurrer to a plea, where the defendant has craved oyer of the deed declared on, brings the whole record before the court, and such demurrer should be overruled if the declaration is defective. Birney v. Hann, 13 D. 167.

A demurrer to a plea in abatement does not open previous pleadings. The objection raised by the plea goes to the abatement of the writ, and not to the sufficiency of the declaration. Crawford v. Blade, 44 D. 463.

5. Replication, and Subsequent Pleadings.

49. When a replication is necessary or proper. — Where payment is pleaded in an action on a bond, and issue joined thereon, the short entry of set-off added thereto is only a notice, and not strictly a plea, and therefore requires no replication. Henderson v. Lewis, 11 D. 733.

The objection of multifariousness cannot be sustained where the complainants have similar interests, and seek the same redress for a common injury. Robinson v. Smith, 24 D. 212.

An objection to the averments in a plea should be taken by demurrer; the defects are waived by a replication, and cannot afterwards be examined on a demurrer to the replication. Wallace v. Collins, 39 D. 359.

50. Form and sufficiency of replication, generally. — Whatever is well set forth in a plea, and not controverted in the replication, is admitted to be true. Phillips v. Harris, 19 D. 166.

A replication is bad if it neither traverses the plea nor states matters in avoidance. Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne, 32 D. 707.

If the declaration on a bond sets out the condition and assigns the breaches, they need not be reassigned in the replication. Conover v. Com., 12 D. 451.

The replication to a plea of non est factum, that the note sued on was the act and deed of the maker, is insufficient. Hall v. Bank of Com., 30 D. 685.

Where the defendant pleads a judgment against plaintiff in another suit for the same cause of action, a replication by plaintiff which does not admit the judgment and deny that the cause of action was the same, but denies "that the merits of the present suit were tried and determined in the former suit," is defective in both form and substance. Agness v. McElroy, 48 D. 772.

To a plea of the statute of frauds alleging that the promises mentioned were special promises to pay the debt of a person named, a replication denying that the promises were for the debt of such person is a good answer, without the words, or any other person. The traverse is as broad as the issue offered. Hutchins v. Ladd, 86 D. 679.

In proceedings against a corporation for usurping banking privileges, a replication which avers that defendant issues paper in the similitude of bank notes, and that they were issued with the intent that they should be put in circulation as money, is objectionable for duplicity. People v. River Raisin etc. R. R. Co., 86 D. 64.

51. Departure in replication. — There is no departure in the pleading where the plaintiffs suing on an appeal bond describe themselves in the writ, which is in the detinet only, as "executors of," etc., and in the declaration which recites the writ, as "the said plaintiffs," and again describe themselves in the replication as "executors of," etc., and in their demurrer to the defendant's rejoinder, as "the said plaintiffs." Sasser v. Walker, 25 D. 272.

The addition of the word "executors" is mere surplusage, and not an irregularity in the writ, etc., where the plaintiffs are suing on an appeal bond given to them as executors, upon which they can maintain an action only in their individual capacity, the demand being the same. Id.

52. Replication to plea of statute of limitations. — Where the petition on its face shows that plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by statute of limitations, a replication setting up a subsequent promise to remove the bar is bad, because it is a different cause of action from that stated in the petition. Coles v. Kelsey, 47 D. 661; Murston v. Seabury, 4 D. 409.

53. Rejoinder. — To a replication in an action for the breach of the covenant of seisin, denying the defendant's plea that the deed under which he claims was executed before the enrolling and delivery of plaintiff's deed, a rejoinder is insufficient that it was executed before the commencement of the suit, with a videlicet setting out a date prior to the execution of the plaintiff's deed. Church v. Gilman, 30 D. 82.

A plaintiff relying on defendant's appearance by attorney in an action on a judgment of a sister state must reply that fact to the defendant's plea to the jurisdiction, and the defendant may rejoin that the attorney had no authority. Welch v. Sykes, 44 D. 689.

A defendant justified an arrest under an execution. Plaintiff replied payment before arrest, and traversed that the judgment was in full force. Held, that the traverse was to an immaterial matter, and the rejoinder of non-payment was good. Breck v. Blanchard, 51 D. 222.

6. Profert and Oyer.

54. Profert. — Where the plaintiff was bound to give a warranty deed to the defendant as a condition precedent, it is sufficient to allege, in the declaration, that he made out and tendered a warranty deed in every way legally authenticated, with a profert, without setting out the deed at length. Nichols v. Blakenlee, 2 D. 95.

Profert of a simple contract is not necessary. Bank of United States v. Sil, 13 D. 44.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The production of the bond is an indispensable part of the plaintiff's case in an action for contribution among obligors, where the joint indebtedness has been disputed. Craig v. Craig, 24 D. 390.

The identical instrument sued upon, if profert had been made of it, had formerly to be introduced in evidence; but this rule has been modified by our modern practice. Jones v. Robinson, 54 D. 212.

It was necessary to make a profert of a writing declared upon at common law, to set out its date and the parties to it. Its loss or destruction necessarily destroyed any claim under it, but at present an excuse for its non-production may be made. French v. Martin, 57 D. 294.

55. Oyer. — A plea to the action without oyer is equivalent to a waiver of every objection to the form of the oyer granted, or its sufficiency. Auditor v. Woodruff, 33 D. 368.

Where an agreement declared on is not an agreement given on oyer according to its true intent or meaning, a demurrer to the declaration should be sustained. Anderson v. Orlicher, 37 D. 72.

Oyer not having been called for, and the defense of payment and the general issue having been interposed, plaintiff need not introduce in evidence the instrument upon which he founds his suit. Jones v. Robinson, 54 D. 212.

Oyer is never granted of instruments not under seal. Commercial I. Co. v. Mahlman, 95 D. 543.

II. IN EQUITY.

1. General Principles.

56. Grounds for relief must be fully stated. — The plaintiff's claim to relief in equity must appear from the pleadings. The style and character of pleading in equity are of a more liberal cast than those of other courts. Tierman v. Poor, 19 D. 225.

A bill, though confessed, yet, if its allegations are destitute of precision, no decree can be correctly rendered thereon. Marshall v. Tenant, 19 D. 126.

A bill in equity to impeach a judgment or decree for fraud must set forth specifically and particularly the facts constituting the fraud. Pendleton v. Galloway, 34 D. 434.

The rule that certainty to common intent must exist in pleadings applies as well in equity as at law, the reason of the rule in both instances being to inform the adverse party with sufficient precision of the charge made against him, and to enable the court to pronounce the proper judgment. Farr v. Farr, 69 D. 406.

2. Bill; Cross-bill.

57. General rules relative to the bill. — A party to a suit is not bound to disclose to his adversary facts which tend to defeat or weaken his own right of recovery; and he commits no fraud by remaining silent. Taylor v. Bradshaw, 17 D. 132.

Where the complainant's want of equity appears on the face of the bill, no relief will be granted, though the defendant answers instead of demurring. Collins v. Jones, 29 D. 216.

Practicing attorneys are presumed to be present in court, and it is not necessary to allege that fact in a bill of privilege filed against one. Bennington Iron Co. v. Rutherford, 35 D. 523.

A bill asking discovery and also relief, upon a sufficient statement of facts, is an original bill, and if chancery has jurisdiction, an order dissolving an injunction and allowing the answer to be read does not dismiss the bill. Cowan v. Colbert, 46 D. 427.

The complainant can recover only on the case made by his bill; and he is entitled to no relief on equities brought into the case only by subsequent pleadings or by evidence. Converse v. Blumrich, 90 D. 230.

Where the plaintiff alleges an important equity, he is at liberty to add a small item which would not be within the jurisdiction of equity if alone, but which is connected with and tends to elucidate the main subject. Hart v. Roper, 51 D. 425.

58. Naming the parties. — One of the complainants may amend the bill by striking out his name as complainant and inserting it as defendant, under the Georgia statutes. Pool v. Morris, 74 D. 63.

The bill ought to be dismissed without prejudice, and not absolutely, where it has merits, and its sole defect is the want of proper parties. Kirkpatrick v. Buford, 76 D. 363.

59. Stating the cause of action, generally. — A complainant must state in his bill every fact showing him to be entitled to the relief prayed for. Brown v. Wylie, 98 D. 781.

The purchaser of a legal title for a valuable consideration, without notice of an outstanding equity, will not be affected by it; but it is otherwise as to a purchaser of an equitable title. Accordingly, a bill seeking to divest the legal title in the grantee and third persons claiming under him, upon the ground that the warrant on which the grant is founded was the property of the complainants, is good as against the grantee, but cannot be sustained against the other defendants claiming under such grantee, without alleging that no valuable consideration was paid by them, or that they knew of the complainant's equity either at or before the consideration was paid or the conveyance made. Perkins v. Hays, 5 D. 680.

A bill in equity is insufficient which seeks to restrain the directors of an incorporated company from issuing certificates of deposit which show upon their face that they were intended to circulate as money, unless there is an allegation in the bill that they were intended, when issued, to circulate as money. It is not a conclusion of law, from the face of the certificates, that the purpose of their issue would be that they might circulate as money, but is an inference of one fact from another, which may be overcome by countervailing evidence. Bliss v. Anderson, 70 D. 511.

An allegation in a bill that the petitioner "is informed and verily believes, and thereupon avers," is a direct and positive averment. Wells v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co., 79 D. 250.

Whether a bill is demurrable for want of equity where filed by a feme covert as cestui que trust against her trustee and a stranger, alleging that the trustee has loaned trust funds to the stranger, who has not paid, and that the trustee is insolvent, but alleging neither refusal of the trustee to sue, nor stranger to pay, nor showing when the insolvency of the trustee commenced, and alleging no waste or misconduct, and praying for the removal of the trustee, appointment of another, and a decree that the stranger pay to the new trustee, quere. Mason v. Mason, 83 D. 172.

60. Multifariousness, as to parties. — In chancery, several complainants cannot unite in one bill to demand several distinct and unconnected matters of one defendant; nor can one complainant demand several distinct and unconnected matters of one defendant. Richardson v. McKinson, 12 D. 308.

A bill filed against several persons, concerning distinct things or acts, is demurrable. Unconnected parties may unite in a suit, if there is one connected interest among them all, centering in the point in issue in the case. Fellows v. Fellows, 15 D. 412.

A bill is multifarious when against several persons for rent, and some of them have no interest in the rents for which others are answerable. Childs v. Clark, 49 D. 164; or which joins as parties defendant a partner, the firm of which he is a member, the several trustees to whom they have separately assigned property in trust for the benefit of creditors, and the creditors respectively affected by the deeds of trust. Johnson v. Brown, 37 D. 556.

A bill is not multifarious in which all the complainants are creditors of the same party, and seeking to subject the same fund to their claims. Comstock v. Rayford, 40 D. 102; or where the plaintiffs claim by a single, general, and entire right, although in opposition to the distinct and separate rights of several defendants. Pann v. Hargett, 32 D. 689; or where it seeks to enjoin a sale under executions of two several plaintiffs at law, but the same property is levied upon, and the complainant asserts one title to it all. Bridges v. Phillips, 60 D. 495.

A bill to subject property to the payment of a judgment, and presenting one entire case, as against the judgment debtor, is not multifarious, because one or more of the defendants, to whom parts of the property have been fraudulently conveyed, had nothing to do with other fraudulent transactions. Way v. Bragaw, 84 D. 147.

61. — as to causes of action. — No general principle in regard to multifariousness can be extracted from the cases; on the one hand, multiplicity of actions is to be avoided, and on the other hand, the blending in one suit of distinct and incongruous claims and liabilities. Johnson v. Brown, 37 D. 556; Marshall v. Means, 56 D. 444.

The objection of multifariousness is discouraged by the courts, where it would defeat instead of promote the ends of justice. Marshall v. Means, 56 D. 444.

A bill is not multifarious which sets up one sufficient ground for equitable relief with another claim containing no equity on its face entitling the complainant either to discovery or to relief. Varick v. Smith, 28 D. 417; or because it both seeks to remove fraudulent conveyances and encumbrances, and also to bring within the reach of the judgment equitable interests, which are not the subjects of execution at law. Way v. Bragaw, 84 D. 147; or which unites two good causes arising out of the same transaction, all the defendants being interested in the same claim of right, and relief of the same general character being asked in relation to each. Varick v. Smith, 28 D. 417; or because it seeks an account both of the rents and profits of real estate and also of personal estate. Rubey v. Barnett, 49 D. 112; or when all allegations relate to one and same transaction between the same parties, to one and the same subject-matter, and to the same injury, though it prays for different modes of relief against that injury. Wells v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co., 79 D. 250.

A bill is multifarious and demurrable which unites separate, distinct, and unconnected claims against several defendants. Stuart v. Coalter, 15 D. 731; or which seeks to enforce several separate demands against a corporation as such, against the stockholders as such, against them in their private capacity, and against them as trustees of the capital stock, and also as trustees in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, and which seeks to set aside the assignment, and subject the property conveyed by it to the payment of the complainant's claims. Ohio L. & T. Co. v. Merchants' etc. Co., 53 D. 742; or which demands several distinct matters of distinct natures of several defendants, or several entirely unconnected matters of one defendant, as where the assignee of a bond for the conveyance of land files a bill against his assignor and the original vendor to remodel and enforce the agreements between the defendants and between the complainant and his assignor, and claims also of the original vendor compensation for holding over, and for removing fences and manure, etc. Marshall v. Means, 56 D. 444.

Neither of the defendants to a bill can demur for multifariousness, or for misjoinder of causes of action, in some of which he has no interest, when the case presented by the bill is so entire that it cannot be prosecuted in several suits, and yet each of the defendants is a necessary party to some part of the case stated. Way v. Bragone, 84 D. 147.

62. Prayer for relief, generally. — The prayer for relief incompatible with the allegations and purpose of a bill may be rejected as surplusage. Murdock's Case, 20 D. 381.

The prayer should be disjunctive where the case made may entitle the complainant to one or another kind of relief, but not to both, or where the complainant is in doubt whether the facts stated entitle him to the special relief prayed for, or to some other form of relief. Colton v. Ross, 22 D. 648.

An alternative prayer for relief is proper in such a case, but the relief must be consistent with the case made by the bill. Id.

A proper case for a bill with a double aspect is, where the complainant is in doubt whether he is entitled to one kind of relief or another, upon the facts as stated in the bill; in such case he may frame his prayer in the alternative. Lloyd v. Brewster, 27 D. 88; Colton v. Ross, 22 D. 648; Brown v. Wyllie, 98 D. 781.

In a bill filed by heirs to set aside a will, in which such will is positively alleged to be invalid, a prayer for special relief, if the will should be found valid, is inconsistent with the case made by the will. Colton v. Ross, 22 D. 648.

So if the nature of the complainant's relief depends upon the existence or non-existence of a particular fact not within his knowledge, he may allege his ignorance, call for a discovery, and frame his prayer in the alternative. Lloyd v. Brewster, 27 D. 88.

63. — for general relief. — A party will not be denied relief by a court of equity merely because he is mistaken in the specific relief prayed for; but if his bill contains a prayer for general relief, the court will give the relief required by the facts of the case. Behee v. Bank, 3 D. 353; Stemmer's Appeal, 98 D. 248. So held under a disjunctive prayer for general relief. Colton v. Ross, 22 D. 648.

Under a general prayer for relief, none entirely distinct from and independent of nor inconsistent with the relief specially prayed for can be granted complainant. Brown v. Wyllie, 98 D. 781; Pensacola etc. R. R. Co. v. Spratt, 91 D. 747.

Under a prayer for general relief, only the relief consistent with the case made in the bill can be granted. Pensacola etc. R. R. Co. v. Spratt, 91 D. 747.

Where the complainant who had sold land, and taken a trust deed back to secure payment of part of the purchase price, brought an action in which he prayed that the lien of this trust deed be enforced, and also prayed for general relief, the court cannot, under either of these prayers, set aside his original deed of conveyance. Brown v. Wyllie, 98 D. 781.

64. — for special relief. — A complainant praying for a particular relief and other additional relief can have no relief inconsistent with that specifically prayed for, though consistent with the case stated. Colton v. Ross, 22 D. 648. But he may be relieved under his general prayer in any way not inconsistent with his special prayer. Brown v. Wyllie, 98 D. 781.

The insertion of a prayer for the removal of administrators in a bill filed in aid of proceedings at law to remove the administrators for the purpose of having a receiver take charge of the assets pending the legal proceedings, being inconsistent with the case made by the bill, cannot change the ancillary nature of the suit. Lewis v. Campen, 90 D. 245.

65. Cross-bill.* — A defendant who is entitled to affirmative relief can obtain it only by cross-bill, and it is not essential that all the facts which would entitle him to the relief sought should appear in the original bill. Hurd v. Case, 83 D. 249. But he may, in his answer, rely on any matter which shows the complainant not entitled to the relief claimed in his bill. Tarleton v. Vietes, 41 D. 193.

A bill in equity will be treated by the court as original or as a cross-bill, according to its substance and the relief prayed; not according to the title which may have been given to it by the solicitor. Pollock v. National Bank, 57 D. 520.

The bill is original, and not a cross-bill, which is filed by the defendant in a suit to hold him as the debtor and fraudulent grantee of a judgment debtor, and alleges that the complainant (the defendant in the earlier suit) has become the owner of the debt for which the judgment was rendered, and of a collateral mortgage given to secure it, and prays to have his title to these securities established; and also joins as parties the said judgment debtor (who was mortgagor in the collateral mortgage), and the holder of a prior mortgage, and prays leave to redeem from the prior mortgage, and the foreclosure of the other. Andrews v. Kibbe, 83 D. 766.

The object of a cross-bill for relief is to

* Cross-bills, nature and extent of, see note, 88 D. 351-354.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

enable a defendant to avail himself of some defense which can only be made complete by granting him some affirmative relief against complainant, or against some co-defendant. To be such, it must be strictly confined to matters involved in the original cause; for if it introduces distinct matters it is an original bill, and the suits are separate and distinct. Andrews v. Kibbee, 83 D. 766; May v. Armstrong, 20 D. 137; Dill v. Shahan, 60 D. 540; Hurd v. Case, 83 D. 249.

A cross-bill will be dismissed where the original bill is without equity, or where the cross-bill contains matter wholly repugnant to the answer of the defendant who files it. Dill v. Shahan, 60 D. 540.

A cross-bill by a junior mortgagee who was a party defendant to the foreclosure suit, seeking relief against a sale made by the prior mortgagee, pendente lite, under the power of sale in his mortgage, and for leave to redeem from that mortgage, was held to be confined to the subject-matter of the original bill, and its scope and object within the purpose of a cross-bill. Hurd v. Case, 83 D. 249.

New parties, who were not parties to the original bill, may be brought in by cross-bill; and where a junior mortgagee, made party defendant to a suit for foreclosure of a prior mortgage, seeks relief upon cross-bill against a sale made by the prior mortgagee, pendente lite, under a power of sale in his mortgage, the purchaser at such sale is an indispensable party to the cross-bill. Ib.

Where the plaintiff in a cross-bill does not object to the report of a commissioner for a failure to make a charge specially set up against a party, the objection will be considered as abandoned. Pena v. Spencer, 91 D. 375.

Where a plaintiff files a cross-bill to test the validity of a trust deed set up by defendant, and both parties claim satisfaction out of the same fund, if the deed is sustained, yet plaintiff is entitled to an account of the fund; and if upon such inquiry it is found that a portion of it belongs to plaintiff, then the amount thereof should be deducted from the amount provided for in the deed of trust, and in the absence of fraud, the deed should be held valid for the residue after such deduction. Ib.

66. Bill of revivor. — A bill of revivor is not always necessary where the execution of a former decree is sought; that relief will be allowed upon a bill, not one of revivor, where the bill, besides the former decree, introduces much other new matter. Johnson v. Johnson, 29 D. 72.

An original bill of revivor must show a case for complainant, otherwise new matter introduced supplementary is a new cause in court. Eastman v. Batchelder, 72 D. 295.

67. Interrogatories. — A defendant cannot be required to answer as to the forgery of a deed which the bill seeks to have canceled as forged. Leigh v. Everheart, 16 D. 160.

Where a statute requires that before interrogatories are allowed to issue, it must appear to the court, by the oath of the party filing the same, or otherwise, that the testimony will be material, and that the questions are pertinent; this will sufficiently appear to the court without affidavit of the party if the object of the testimony sought by the defendant in ejectment appears from the record to be to prove that the lessor of the plaintiff never existed, or was dead before suit brought. Tison v. Yawn, 60 D. 708.

The plaintiff, in an action to set aside a sheriff's sale for fraud, has a right to propound interrogatories to either or all of the defendants, touching any matters pertinent to the issues. Teas v. McDonald, 65 D. 65.

The court may refuse to permit a party to make new answers to interrogatories propounded to him, where the first answers were stricken out as not sufficiently categorical. Ib.

A plaintiff failing to answer interrogatories filed by defendant pursuant to an order of the court made at the time of filing, under the Indiana practice, cannot complain that no further steps were taken to enforce his answer until the trial, and the refusal of a motion at the trial to rule him to answer is error. Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

An answer of a defendant to interrogatories propounded by plaintiff has the effect of a deposition. Short v. Tinsley, 71 D. 482.

3. Plea; Answer.

68. Right to elect between plea, answer, or demurrer. — Where a general demurrer to a bill would hold, the court will not grant relief, even though the defendant answer. Stuart v. Coalter, 15 D. 731.

69. When a plea is necessary or proper. — Where a debt is payable on a particular day, the plaintiff need not allege, in his declaration, a demand and refusal at the residence of the defendant. If the defendant were really ready and willing to pay, he should specially plead it. Grant v. Groshon, 3 D. 725.

An objection that a party is not entitled to equitable relief, on the case made by his bill, may be made by the defendant at the hearing, after answer and issue joined thereon, and if sustained, the bill will be dismissed. Chambers v. Chalmers, 23 D. 572.

This rule does not apply to some statutory defenses, such as that of limitations, which must be pleaded, both at law and in equity, and cannot otherwise be taken advantage of at the hearing, although the claim may be apparently barred. Ib.

The defense of usury must be pleaded or relied on in the answer to a bill for specific performance, where the contract upon which the plaintiff's claim is founded may or may not be usurious, according to the facts really existing in the case. Ib.

Where a case stated in a bill is clearly usurious, and such as no inference or intentment can help, it may fall within the general rule authorizing the objection to be taken at the hearing, though not relied on in the answer. Ib.

An objection of usury in a mortgage to secure a divisible contract, containing distinct and independent stipulations, cannot be made at the hearing of a bill to enforce the mortgage, if not directly pleaded, where there is nothing in the bill to debar the plaintiff from showing that the mortgage debt arose from stipulations in the contract which were clearly not usurious. Ib.

Matters dehors a bill showing a want of interest in the complainant cannot be set up by way of demurrer, but must be raised by plea. Southern Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier, 58 D. 448.

70. Form and sufficiency of the plea, generally. — Where the defendant alleged, in his plea, that on the statement of an account, he delivered certain negotiable notes to C. on account and in behalf of the plaintiffs, but did not aver that C. was the agent of the plaintiffs, nor that the notes were accepted in full satisfaction and discharge of the debt, the plea was held bad. Bird v. Caritat, 3 D. 433.

An allegation that prior to the suing out of the writ, the defendant settled and discharged the debt of the plaintiffs, is sufficient as to the time; for the suing out of the writ is considered as the commencement of the suit. Ib.

A suit in equity pending, to be pleadable in bar of another suit in equity, must not only be for same cause, but the remedy must be co-extensive and equally beneficial to the complainant. Way v. Bragaw, 84 D. 147.

The plea of another suit pending for the same cause in bar of a suit in equity can only be of a suit pending in the same or in some other court of equity. Ib.

71. Time to plead. — Dilatory and declinatory pleas should be made at the proper time, or the same will be deemed waived; but a plea that shows a total want of legal right in a suitor may be objected to and advantage taken of the same at any stage of the proceedings. Brown v. Saul, 16 D. 175.

72. When the proper defense is by answer. — Any defense which would afford matter for a plea to a bill in equity may be availed of in an answer. Carmichael v. Hunter, 35 D. 401.

If a defendant choose to avail himself of the statute of frauds, it is not necessary that he should, by answer, confess or deny the parol agreement alleged in the bill, the law having declared it void. Glens v. Calder, 2 D. 686.

A cross-bill is unnecessary to set up a defense of set-off to a bill under the New York revised statutes; but the defense should be made by answer, unless a discovery is necessary to make such defense available, or unless for some other reason it cannot be taken advantage of by plea or answer. Jennings v. Webster, 35 D. 722.

73. Formal requisites of answer, generally. — Though in the caption of the answer the defendant is described as executrix only, yet she will be considered before the court in the character of devisee as well, where the answer is responsive to all the allegations of the bill charging her in that capacity. Kinney v. Harvey, 21 D. 597.

74. Rule that defendant must answer fully. — A defense not set up in the answer is of no avail. Field v. Mayor, 57 D. 436; though the defense appears in proof. Cummings v. Coleman, 62 D. 402. And if defendant purposely holds back something, he cannot complain if he should find himself regarded with suspicion, and refused that to which he may be entitled, and under other circumstances might have obtained. Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 71 D. 600.

Where the defense "bona fide purchaser without notice" is relied upon, notice must be denied fully and positively, though it be not charged in the bill; and if the facts be charged from which such notice may be inferred, such facts must be denied also. Johnson v. Toutin, 52 D. 212.

A party must make a full disclosure of all his proceedings during two years that he ought to have been engaged under his contract to procure gold, where he agrees, in consideration of certain advances by the plaintiffs, to dig for gold in California for two years, and to return the amount he procures, and the bill charges that he in some way obtained and sent home large sums of money, which were either procured by digging or by the use of the funds furnished by the plaintiffs for that purpose. Hoyt v. Smith, 60 D. 632.

Whenever intention is necessary or material, it is issuable, like any other fact. French v. Martin, 57 D. 294.

75. Rule that answer must be responsive to bill. — Allegations in the answer of stockholders of a dissolved corporation to a bill filed by creditors to the effect that the stockholders are also creditors are not evidence if not responsive to the bill, and must be proved if material. Briggs v. Penniman, 18 D. 454.

Statements in an answer not responsive to the bill must be proved. Ives v. Hazard, 67 D. 500.

defendant's wife, no such condition being expressed in the memorandum sued on, is not responsive to the bill, and must be proved by evidence independent of the answer. Id.

Where, in a bill, it is alleged, among other things, that the defendants, being owners of the legal title to a vessel, accepted, in writing, an order drawn upon them by the owner of an equitable interest therein, directing them to pay to the plaintiff all balances due the drawer, and to hold the drawer's interest in the vessel subject to the plaintiff's order, and the answer admits the acceptance as alleged, but avers that the defendants informed the plaintiff that there was no balance due from them to the drawer, but on the contrary, a large balance due from him to them, for which they held the vessel, such averment is inadmissible, because not responsive to the bill, and because it seeks to contradict the writing by parol. Clark v. Flint, 33 D. 733.

An answer to a charge of fraud in obtaining the surrender of an instrument of defeasance, setting forth that such surrender was made by the mortgagor's agent under an agreement between the parties that the mortgagee was to keep the land and pay the mortgagor a certain sum in full of his interest and right of redemption, which sum was paid accordingly on the mortgagor's order to his agent, is sufficient. Youle v. Richards, 23 D. 722.

An answer stating such facts is directly responsive to the charge of fraud in the bill. Id.

A defendant denying a charge in the bill has a right to state the whole transaction. Id.

Where the complaint alleges a judgment, issuance of an execution and a sale thereunder of land, and the answer denies the validity of the judgment, and that the plaintiff acquired any title by the pretended sale, the execution and sale are not sufficiently denied to require the execution to be put in evidence. Lee v. Figg, 99 D. 271.

A bill in equity to enforce a trust brought against an administrator alleged that the respondent as administrator withdrew a bank deposit, being the trust funds in question. The answer alleged the respondent's appointment as administrator in Massachusetts, and that as such he withdrew the deposit and held the same as part of his decedent's estate. Held, in the absence of denial by the administrator, that he held the deposit as administrator in Rhode Island, that the court would presume he held it as administrator in Rhode Island, and would order him to account directly with the complainant, the trust having been proven. Ray v. Simmons, 23 R. 447.

76. Proper contents of answer, generally. — An answer setting up the defense of "bona fide purchaser" is defective, if it fails to aver a want of notice down to the delivery of the deed. Byers v. Fowler, 54 D. 271.

An answer is sufficient which avers the payment by a bona fide purchaser for value of the purchase-money in full, and denies that he had any notice, either in fact or in law, of a trust deed, or of any interest in or claim to the property conveyed, in conflict with the absolute ownership of the grantor. Wyse v. Dandridge, 72 D. 149.

77. Form and sufficiency of denials. — A defendant may, on the hearing, avail himself of the statute of frauds, though not set up in his answer, where he has denied the making of the agreement charged in the bill. If defendant presents the issue of agreement or no agreement, the complainant must prove a valid agreement. It is where defendant admits a verbal agreement that he must, in his pleadings, insist upon the statute of frauds. Wynn v. Garland, 68 D. 190.

78. Effect of failure to deny allegations in bill. — Allegations positively sworn to in a bill, and not substantially denied in the answer upon the defendant's own knowledge, must be taken as true. Grimstone v. Carter, 24 D. 230; Hanty v. Blackford, 25 D. 114.

A failure to deny a material allegation in the bill, where the answer is responsive to every other part of the bill, raises an inference that it cannot be successfully denied. Dulaney v. Hoffman, 28 D. 207.

A material allegation in a bill, though not denied, must be proved. Joice v. Taylor, 25 D. 325.

When the bill charges the fact to be within the knowledge of the defendant, or which may fairly be presumed to be so, if the answer is silent as to the fact, it will be taken as admitted; otherwise, where the fact is not within the knowledge of the defendant. Moore v. Lockett, 4 D. 683; Lyon v. Bolling, 48 D. 122; Cowan v. Price, 4 D. 627.

When a bar to the relief prayed appears on the face of the bill, it is unnecessary for the defendant to plead it or suggest it in his answer; but he may take advantage of it on the hearing. Cowan v. Price, 4 D. 627.

79. Effect of answer to overrule plea. — Where a party pleads and answers to the same matter, the answer overrules the plea; so a demurrer is waived by a plea or answer to the same matter. Chase's Case, 17 D. 277.

80. Exceptions to answer, generally. — Taking a bill as confessed as to those points not responded to is a waiver of exceptions to the answer. Griffith v. Depue, 13 D. 141.

Exceptions which go to the merits and foundation of an action may be entertained after an answer to the merits, it seems. Fowler v. Stoneum, 62 D. 490.

Where an answer is defective and irregular, this point need not be raised before issue joined, but may be raised at the hearing on the bill, answer, replication, and testimony filed. The rule may be different as to pleas, but with answers, some facts may be sufficiently stated and material, so as to render it necessary to take issue upon them, while others may be immaterial or defectively averred, and require no denial. It is true, plaintiff may except to such parts of the answer, but it is not essential that he should do so unless he desires a further discovery. Everts v. Agnes, 65 D. 314.

Though taking issue upon a plea may be an acknowledgment that it is good, it is not so with the answer. A plea may be set down for hearing on objection to its sufficiency as a defense, but exceptions are not taken to an answer unless the complainant requires a more full discovery by probing still further the conscience of defendant. Id.

Where a complainant is entitled to the full knowledge of the amount of collaterals in the hands of the defendants, and a detailed statement of their condition, and the answer fails to give such statement, an objection to its sufficiency must be sustained. Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 71 D. 600.

81. — for impertinence. — The general rule is, that if the answer goes out of the bill to state anything not material to the defendant's case, it will be deemed impertinent, and may be expunged. Price v. Tyson, 22 D. 279.

Nothing is irrelevant that may have an influence upon the suit attending to the nature of it. Id.

Where pertinent matters are mixed with impertinent, so that they cannot be separated, the whole shall be expunged. Id.

82. — for scandal. — A co-defendant or a stranger may have scandalous matter, which is also impertinent, stricken out of an answer, at the cost of the party filing it. Price v. Tyson, 22 D. 279.

Pertinent matter, though scandalous in itself, is not to be so considered. Id.

Answers to impertinent questions, though reflecting and impertinent, are not scandalous. Id.

4. Demurrer; Disclaimer.

83. When a demurrer will lie, generally. — The equity of a bill in chancery can be questioned only by demurrer, or on the hearing. Brill v. Stiles, 85 D. 364.

A defendant in chancery cannot demur to and answer the same allegations in a bill at one time. And after answer it is too late to demur, unless the answer is first withdrawn. Id.

Multifariousness cannot be assigned for error, under the Tennessee act of 1852, chapter 365, section 7, unless the objection is first made by demurrer to the bill, taken at the proper time. Moreau v. Saffarans, 67 D. 532.

That a discovery may occasion the forfeiture of a corporate charter is not sufficient to support a general demurrer to the whole bill against the directors, even if it would have authorized a demurrer to the discovery of particular facts. Robinson v. Smith, 24 D. 212.

The statute of frauds may be taken advantage of by a demurrer, although the bill alleges that the contract was prevented from being put in writing by the fraud of the defendant, if, admitting the fraud as charged, the complainant is entitled to no relief. Box v. Stanford, 51 D. 142.

When an allegation in a bill claimed that a check was paid, and then detailed the manner and circumstances of its payment, and the latter do not show facts constituting a valid payment, a demurrer to the bill should be sustained. Redmond v. Dickerson, 59 D. 418.

A bill in equity to enjoin the erection of a livery-stable, with a prayer for general relief, and alleging that the stable, by its proximity, will render the complainant's house untenable, break up his business, and diminish the rents of his stores, is not demurrable for want of equity. Aldrich v. Howard, 80 D. 636.

An averment that the statements in a bill which is not verified are made upon information and belief, though unnecessary and inappropriate, constitutes no ground for demurrer. Marsh v. Marsh, 84 D. 164.

84. Demurrer for defect of parties. — On the sustaining of a demurrer for multifariousness, the complainant may dismiss as to those whose joinder made the bill bad, and proceed as to the rest. But if he appeals without so doing, the appellate court, on sustaining the lower court, can only dismiss the bill without prejudice. Jackson v. Brown, 37 D. 556.

An objection by demurrer, that a bill in equity is multifarious, as including several parties as defendants who have no interest in the suit, is not good in a suit by creditors against estate of deceased person to set aside fraudulent conveyances, where the bill alleges that the parties were connected with the fraudulent transactions. Snodgrass v. Andrews, 64 D. 169.

An objection of multifariousness may be raised at the hearing, but is usually done by demurrer; and when made at the hearing, its allowance is in the discretion of the court, and it is never allowed where the real point in controversy can be determined as well as if there were as many suits as there are plaintiffs. Hamilton v. Whitridge, 69 D. 184.

A bill to enforce the payment of a judgment is not demurrable because it is not prosecuted for the benefit of all the creditors of the judgment debtor jointly with the complainant, it not appearing that there is any other creditor of equal degree with the complainant. Way v. Bragan, 84 D. 147.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

85. Formal requisites of demurrer. — A demurrer ore tenus was allowed upon the payment by the defendants of the costs of the demurrer; but the complainants were permitted to amend. Robinson v. Smith, 24 D. 212.

86. Effect of demurrer as an admission. — A general demurrer admits all well-pleaded allegations of a bill. Smith v. Allen, 21 D. 33; Taylor v. Bradshaw, 17 D. 132; Peabody v. Norfolk, 96 D. 664. And if overruled, and the defendant declines to answer over, he cannot impeach the decree against him by denying the truth of the bill. Miller v. Davidson, 44 D. 715.

The question to be decided on a demurrer to a bill in equity is simply whether the facts alleged in the bill would, if true, entitle the party complaining to relief. Lockwood v. Mitchell, 53 D. 438.

87. Hearing and determination of demurrer. — On a demurrer to a part of a bill, leaving another part unnoticed by a plea, answer, or demurrer, it is clearly irregular to set the cause down for argument on bill and demurrer. Cowan v. Wheeler, 43 D. 283.

Every reasonable presumption is to be made in favor of a bill in equity, rather than against it. It is only when it clearly appears, from the face of the bill, that the equity of complainant is barred that the bill will be dismissed on demurrer for that cause. Lincoln v. Purcell, 73 D. 196.

Under a general demurrer for a want of equity, no objection for want of form can be raised. Marsh v. Marsh, 84 D. 164.

A demurrer to a bill may be overruled with leave to amend it by stating the grounds thereof within a specified time, unless within that time the complainant shall amend his bill in the particulars objected to. Id.

A decree should not be entered directly on overruling a demurrer to a bill, but the defendant should be directed to answer, and if he fails to do so the bill may be taken pro confesso and a decree entered thereon; but entering the decree immediately on overruling the demurrer is a mere irregularity which will not be noticed on appeal if not assigned for error. Miller v. Davidson, 44 D. 715.

Poetical or highly colored statements in a sworn bill in equity, regarding the noxious effects of coal-dust from a coal-yard adjacent to the complainant's premises, will not, on demurrer, be deemed a mere poetic fiction. Barrow v. Richard, 35 D. 713.

88. Disclaimer. — A disclaimer contained in an answer, to be effective, must be absolute and unqualified. Less than this, plaintiff is not bound to accept. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 87 D. 81.

5. Replication.

89. When a replication is necessary. — An answer is to be taken as true, as it was not put in issue by a replication, where it was agreed that the cause should be submitted on bill and answer. Ware v. Richardson, 56 D. 762; Trout v. Emmons, 81 D. 326; McQueen v. Chouteau, 64 D. 178.

Where the facts charged in the bill were admitted to be true, and no replication was introduced, but the parties agreed to submit the cause on the pleadings, the question to be decided is, whether the proceedings of the defendant, be they a plea or an answer, are sufficient in law to bar the plaintiff's claim. Tiernan v. Poor, 19 D. 225.

90. Sufficiency and effect. — The replication to an answer defective in substance does not make it better. In such a case the defendant can claim no more than he has set up in his answer, any more than the plaintiff can be allowed to depart from the case made by his bill. Everis v. Agnes, 65 D. 314.

Under the old chancery practice, a replication to a plea admitted its sufficiency, and though the plea was bad, the bill had to be dismissed, as a matter of course, on proof of the facts stated in the plea. Ely v. Wilcox, 91 D. 436.

III. UNDER CODES OF PROCEDURE AND PRACTICE ACTS.

1. General Principles.

91. The changes introduced by codes. — In Mississippi, formal distinctions between actions are abolished, and their character must be determined by the nature of the grievance rather than the form of the declaration. Hence when the facts are distinctly stated, the action will be regarded as either in tort or contract; having regard, first, to the character of the remedy; and second, to the most complete and ample redress which, upon the facts stated, the law can afford. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Hurst, 74 D. 785; Lubert v. Chauviteau, 58 D. 415.

The Wisconsin code has changed the forms of actions, but not their causes. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

There are no forms of action in Texas; and if, upon the facts stated, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, he must have judgment. Estes v. Browning, 60 D. 238.

Under the California system of pleading, there is but one form of action, and the statute makes no distinction in matters of form between actions of contract and those of tort, relief being administered without reference to the technical and artificial rules of the common law. Jones v. Steamship Cortes, 79 D. 142.

In California, all matters may be litigated in the same action which arise from and constitute part of the same transaction. Id.

The rules of pleading and practice of courts of law and equity, as known in the remedial jurisprudence of common-law countries, are not of any obligatory force in Texas, as matter of absolute principle, further than they have been introduced or recognized by statutory enactment. Sequin v. Maverick, 76 D. 117.

At common law, an allegation of time was, in general, a mere form; and mere form in pleading having been abolished by the code, such allegation may, in general, be wholly omitted; and in those cases only where a statement of time in common-law pleading was material and traversable need the time now be stated. Backus v. Clark, 83 D. 437.

92. Facts, not evidence, must be alleged. — Under the code system of pleading, facts only must be stated. This means the facts as contradistinguished from the law, from argument, from hypothesis, and from the evidence of the facts. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492; Thompson v. Munger, 65 D. 176; Gray v. Osborne, 76 D. 99.

Those facts only must be stated which constitute the cause of action, the defense, or the reply, under the code system of pleading. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

In pleading under the code, an averment of the facts constituting the cause of action or defense should be simple and concise, and without repetition or prolixity. Balkell v. Nosler, 63 D. 466; Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

An allegation of duty, without stating the facts which raise the duty, is insufficient, and if the facts stated do not raise the duty alleged, the allegation of duty is immaterial. Hewison v. New Haven, 91 D. 718.

93. General rules for interpretation of pleadings. — The presumption as to a traverse of facts stated in an answer, and the finding of the court or jury upon those facts, as provided in section 127 of the Ohio code of procedure, applies only to such facts stated in the answer as are inconsistent with the averments of the petition. Erwin v. Shaffer, 72 D. 613.

The plaintiff should be permitted to state his whole case in his own way, in a petition asking for equitable relief, where a full disclosure of the facts is necessary to enable the court to arrive at a definite conclusion. Lane v. Ewing, 77 D. 632.

Where pleadings were under the old chancery practice, in an action in equity brought before the code went into effect, they were given the same construction, force, and effect that they would have had under that practice, although the cause was not tried until after the code took effect. Ely v. Wilcox, 91 D. 436.

2. Complaint; Petition.

a. Formal Parts.

94. Describing the parties. — The character in which a party sues must be determined from the body of the pleading, and not from the description of himself given therein. A right of action as an individual, properly averred, and accruing to plaintiff in a fiduciary character, authorizes him to sue in his individual capacity; and superadded words, as "administrator," etc., are mere descriptio personæ. Tate v. Shackelford, 60 D. 488.

A description of plaintiffs as lately partners is surplusage, and if untrue, is no ground for nonsuit. New Brunswick etc. Trans. Co. v. Tiers, 64 D. 394.

b. Statement of Cause of Action.

95. Actions on contract, generally. — An allegation that an agreement is in writing is unnecessary under the statute of frauds, it seems, in a petition in a suit on an agreement concerning lands. James v. Fulcrud, 65 D. 743.

A general allegation of performance, by a plaintiff, of the conditions of a contract is sufficient, under the California statute. Cal. Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 65 D. 511.

The petition under the Ohio code is good on error, after verdict or a finding by the court of all the issues in favor of the plaintiff, where it states facts which, if proved on the trial, would constitute a good prima facie case for the plaintiff. Erwin v. Shaffer, 72 D. 613.

In an action on a quantum meruit, the plaintiff need not set up in his complaint the excuse for not fully performing his contract, this being a matter of reply to a defense interposing the contract. Wolfe v. Howes, 75 D. 388.

Whenever "actual request" is necessary to be stated, a general averment, "though often requested," is not sufficient. Such request, if essential to the breach, is so also as to the right of action; and it must therefore be specially alleged whenever such request is, either by the terms or nature of the contract, the condition of the liability. Whitton v. Whitton, 75 D. 163.

The complaint in an action by an assignee, for value of a county warrant for the payment of money, is sufficient, if it sets forth that the assignor represented that it was valid, and would be paid on presentation, but that in fact it was illegal and valueless. Keller v. Hicks, 83 D. 78.

The complaint in an action by persons assessed for the construction of a road to enjoin the payment of moneys to contractors for building the road charged that the contracts had been given to two persons, one of whom was a director of the road company, and that the other contractor had an illegal and corrupt understanding with the directors that he was to share the profits with them. Held, that there were sufficient facts alleged to constitute a cause of action, and a demurrer would not lie. Port v. Russell, 10 R. 5.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

96. Averment of indebtedness.*—A petition does not disclose a good cause of action, when it merely contains an allegation that defendant is indebted to petitioner, as is evidenced by a certain promissory note; but contains no allegation that the note described in it was either made, executed, or delivered, by defendant. Nor is the defect cured by a subsequent allegation that defendant executed and delivered his deed of mortgage, the substance of which purports to be set out in the petition, but in which there is no allegation that the mortgage discloses the fact that the note sued on was executed by defendant. Gray v. Osborne, 76 D. 99.

A complaint in an action to recover for professional services is sufficient, which avers, in substance, that defendant was at a certain time indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum for such services, rendered at the special instance and request of the former, without setting out in terms the value of the services, or that the defendant promised to pay. Willies v. Stidger, 83 D. 64.

A promise to pay is a mere conclusion of law, and need not be alleged under the code system of pleading, which requires only facts to be stated. Ib.

A complaint which briefly, yet clearly, sets forth the grievances of which the plaintiff complains, is sufficient under the Alabama code. Clark v. Goddard, 84 D. 777.

97. Actions of tort, generally.—A complaint in tort should be framed for the particular cause of action which the party has a right to sue for; but if it includes two or more causes of action, it will be presumed, after verdict, that the proof was limited on the trial to the legitimate ground of damages. This is the common-law rule. Rogers v. Smith, 79 D. 483.

The allegation of special damages as matter of aggravation is a substantive allegation of fact, and not an inference of law, resulting from facts antecedently stated. McConnell v. Kibbe, 85 D. 266.

98. Joinder of causes of action.—Many causes of action, under the code practice, may be joined in one petition; but each must be set out separately from the others, with its appropriate prayer for relief. Mooney v. Kennett, 61 D. 576.

If several causes of action are joined in one petition, there should be a separate assessment of damages, or verdict, in each cause; but a general finding for defendant on such petition may be sustained. Ib.

A cause of action by a principal against his agent for fraudulently selling land cannot be united, it seems, under section 167 of the New York code of procedure, with a cause of action against the purchaser, as a trustee, for a reconveyance or an accounting. Gardner v. Ogden, 78 D. 192.

In California, a cause of action in tort may be united with a cause of action on contract, if both arise out of the same transaction. Jones v. Steamship Cortes, 79 D. 142.

Where a complaint in tort contains two or more distinct causes of action in one count, it is duplicity under code. The remedy is by motion to strike out, and not by demurrer. Rogers v. Smith, 79 D. 483.

A claim to enforce an express or implied trust may be joined in a complaint with a claim to enforce a vendor's lien existing without any written contract. Burt v. Wilson, 87 D. 142.

Demands accruing to the plaintiff in his own right may be joined with demands accruing to him as survivor. Smith v. Salomon, 91 D. 711.

99. Several counts for same cause of action.—One cause of action cannot be stated in different counts, under the code system of pleading, as might have been done at common law; and if so set forth, the court may, on motion, require the plaintiff to elect upon which count he will proceed. Sturges v. Burton, 72 D. 582.

100. Rule requiring separate statement of distinct causes of action.*—Where various causes of action are united in one petition, they should be separately and distinctly stated. Baltzell v. Nosler, 63 D. 466.

Where a complaint contains allegations of several breaches of same contract, in the same count, a motion to compel the pleader to elect upon which of the claims stated he will proceed, and to abandon the others, should be overruled. Such motion should be granted only when the complaint contains several causes of action improperly blended. Fisk v. Tank, 78 D. 737.

Each paragraph of a complaint must contain in itself sufficient averments to constitute a good cause of action. Day v. Vallette, 87 D. 353.

c. Prayer for Relief.

101. General rules.—The prayer for relief need not be looked to for grounds of action. Pridgin v. Strickland, 58 D. 124.

While a prayer cannot aid in making out a case otherwise defectively stated in the complaint, it may serve to show what kind of a case the plaintiff supposes he has made, and the kind of relief to which he conceives himself to be entitled, and indicate the object which he seeks to accomplish. Arrington v. Liscom, 94 D. 722.

102. Prayer for general relief.—A prayer for general relief is sufficient to enable the court to afford appropriate relief, in an action for money had and received. Merryfield v. Willson, 65 D. 117.

3. Defendant's Pleadings.

a. Answer.

103. When an answer is proper.—The sufficiency of a complaint is admitted by answering to merits, under code of Indiana of 1852. Riser v. Snoddy, 65 D. 740.

A petition, pending a suit, asking for the appointment of a receiver, and setting forth new facts which are material, if not denied by a written answer on oath, will be taken as true. Chase's Case, 17 D. 277.

The existence of a partnership must be denied, if it is alleged in the complaint, within the time limited by statute, by an affidavit, or the truth of the allegation is deemed admitted. Fist v. Tank, 78 D. 737.

104. Formal parts of the answer.—Under the Iowa statute, a defendant in an action at law may set up an equitable defense against one holding the legal title. Shawhan v. Long, 96 D. 164.

105. What matters must be alleged.—When the defendant in his answer neither denies the legal right of the plaintiff to recover, nor the truth of the allegations in his petition, they are taken to be confessed, and the plaintiff, in such case, need not adduce proof in support of his claim or demand. Clapp v. Phelps, 92 D. 645; Lord v. Ocean Bank, 59 D. 728.

An answer of a carrier must show the necessity of jettison, and that such necessity was caused by a peril within the exceptions in the bill of lading, where such jettison is relied on as a justification for non-delivery of goods, and it must state the facts constituting the necessity and peril, and not mere conclusions of law, as that the accident was caused by dangers of the river, or was unforeseen and unavoidable, or the like. Bentley v. Bustard, 63 D. 561.

The defendant, having denied each averment in a declaration, may object to maintenance of action without having filed a demurrer under the practice act, which requires his answer to contain a statement that he demurs, if he wishes to raise an issue of law: See Acts of Mass. 1852, c. 313, secs. 17, 21. Hervey v. Moseley, 66 D. 515.

In pleading fraud, accident, or mistake, the facts and circumstances must be alleged. Fahie v. Pressey, 80 D. 401.

When the right to land acquired by adverse possession under the statute of limitations is presented in a complaint, any matter which would take the case out of the statute must be pleaded as a defense in the answer. Arrington v. Liscom, 94 D. 722.

106. What matters may be pleaded as a defense.—A tort may be made available as an equitable defense, total or partial, when it springs from the same transaction, and by impeaching the consideration of the contract sued on, meets and repels the plaintiff's allegations in whole or in part. Price v. Lewis, 55 D. 536.

107. Sufficiency of the denials, generally.—Under section 46 of the California code there are but two classes of defense allowed. The first consists of a simple denial, the second of the allegation of new affirmative matter; and as the code has abolished all distinctions in the forms of action, and requires only a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action or defense, the two classes of defense must be the same in all cases. Piercy v. Sabia, 70 D. 692.

The object of an answer is to apprise plaintiff what defense is intended to be set up in bar of his claim. This is all the law requires. Munn v. Taulman, 81 D. 503.

The phrase "he says that he denies," in an answer, is equivalent to the phrase "he denies," under the Kansas code. Ib.

An answer that defendant "does not admit" a material averment of the petition does not put plaintiff upon proof of its truth. Bomberger v. Turner, 82 D. 438.

A plea which professed in its commencement to answer the whole cause of action, and afterwards answered only a part, was bad under the old system of pleading as well as under the code. Filassimons v. City Fire Ins. Co., 86 D. 761.

A partial defense to an action should be set up and relied on as such, and not as a complete and entire defense. Ib.

An answer which professes and assumes to answer an entire cause of action is bad on demurrer, where the facts alleged constitute only a partial defense to the action. Ib.

108. Denials must be certain and direct.—The complainant has a right to have notice upon record, in a precise and unambiguous manner, of the conclusions of fact intended to be drawn from allegations in the answer. Vogle v. Ripper, 85 D. 298.

Averments in a complaint not denied must be taken to be true. Buckout v. Swift, 87 D. 90.

A denial that an assignment was in writing, or for valuable consideration, does not amount to a denial of the fact of an assignment alleged in the complaint, but if it denies anything, merely amounts to a denial that the assignment was written or for a valuable consideration. Randolph v. Harris, 87 D. 139.

A denial, in an answer, of "each and every material allegation of the complaint" is insufficient. Whether a denial be general or specific, there should be no room left for mistake as to what is denied and what is admitted. Montour v. Purdy, 88 D. 88.

A denial of each and every allegation in a complaint, except what the court may construe to be admitted in the foregoing part of the answer, is both indefinite and uncertain. Starbuck v. Dunklee, 89 D. 68.

109. General denials. — An answer by way of denial raises the issue only on the facts alleged in the complaint. Finley v. Quirk, 86 D. 93.

A general denial must be definite and positive; it must deny what is not admitted. Starbuck v. Dunklee, 88 D. 68.

A general denial, under the code practice, merely puts in issue such of the averments of the complaint as the plaintiff is bound to prove. Adams Exp. Co. v. Darnell, 99 D. 892.

A general denial in an action on a note requires the production of the note, although it does not put the plaintiff upon proof of its execution; but the plea of the general denial in such an action precludes the plaintiff from taking judgment by default, or for want of an answer. Able v. Chandler, 62 D. 518.

110. Specific denials. — An answer should be so certain and specific in its averments that, if admitted, the court may be able to give judgment upon it. Thompson v. Munger, 65 D. 176.

111. What may be denied on information and belief. — A denial of facts presumptively based on information need be only according to defendant's information and belief, but it must be according to both information and belief. Humphreys v. McCall, 70 D. 621.

A defendant must answer according to his belief, and is precluded from controverting the alleged fact which he believes, though his belief may be founded upon mere hearsay, general report, or other information. Id.

112. What may not be so denied. — A denial "for want of information to enable them to admit," etc., is not sufficient where both complaint and answer are verified. Humphreys v. McCall, 70 D. 621.

A denial of facts presumptively within defendant's knowledge must be in the positive form, and not on information and belief. Id.

In an action for a breach of a contract for transporting cord-wood, if defendant admits that he received and transported a large quantity of such wood, a denial that he has no knowledge or information whether the quantity of wood was as stated in the complaint or otherwise is bad, unless some special reason is given why he did not know. Starbuck v. Dunklee, 88 D. 68.

113. Negatives pregnant. — A mere denial that the property was of the value alleged in a complaint, where the question of value is material, is insufficient, and amounts to the pleading of a negative pregnant. The pleading should allege that the property is of no value, or should state the value as defendant claims it. Lynd v. Pickett, 82 D. 79.

114. Pleading new matter, generally. — The California code has adopted the rule that a defendant must either deny the facts as alleged or confess and avoid them, and if new matter in defense exists, it must be stated in the answer. Piercy v. Sabie, 70 D. 692.

New matter in a defense is that which, under the rules of evidence, the defendant must affirmatively establish. Thus if the onus of proof is thrown upon the defendant, the matter to be proved by him is new matter. A defense that concedes that plaintiff once had a good cause of action, but insists that it no longer exists, involves new matter. Id.

Facts which occur subsequent to the date of the original transaction constitute new matter; and as the code has made no distinction between different classes of new matter, therefore all such matter of defense must be stated in the answer. Id.

New matter constituting either an entire or partial defense must be pleaded, in order to be admissible in evidence. Morrell v. Irving Fire Ins. Co., 88 D. 396.

A defendant claiming affirmative relief must plead as fully as if he were a plaintiff. Rose v. Treadway, 97 D. 546.

Common counts may be pleaded in a counterclaim under the code. Meagher v. Morgan, 87 D. 476.

115. Former recovery. — Former recovery operates as a bar by way of estoppel only when specially pleaded. Gray v. Gillilan, 60 D. 761.

An answer setting up a former adjudication must be accompanied by a complete record of all the pleadings and proceedings in the case upon which it is founded, and if it fails to do this, the defect may be reached by demurrer. Wilkinson v. Foreman, 85 D. 475.

116. Statute of limitations. — An amendment setting up the plea of the statute of limitations, in an answer, will not be allowed, unless it would further the ends of justice. Cooke v. Spears, 56 D. 348.

117. Matter in avoidance. — Defenses in avoidance of an action must be alleged in an answer, under the Massachusetts practice act, Statutes of 1852, chapter 312, in order to avail the defendant, although first disclosed by the plaintiff's evidence. Muhry v. Mohawk Valley Ins. Co., 66 D. 380.

118. — or in mitigation of damages. — Mitigating circumstances serve only to reduce damages, and do not constitute a defense to the action, and when set up in an answer, the pleader should state that they are in mitigation of damages, otherwise the court would be warranted in striking them out as not amounting to an answer. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

119. What defenses may be joined. — Under the Iowa practice, a party defendant may set up as many defenses, both legal and equitable, as he may have. Roberts v. Corbin, 96 D. 146.

* See important note on when denials may be made on information and belief, 70 D. 625-634.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

120. Inconsistent defenses. — Inconsistent defenses cannot be set up in an answer where the statute requires pleadings to be verified. Atteberry v. Powell, 77 D. 579.

Two or more defenses are inconsistent only when proof of one necessarily disproves the other. The facts should be so set out that both defenses may be true. Nelson v. Brodhack, 100 D. 328.

A special defense is not necessarily inconsistent with a denial; it is only inconsistent when there is an absolute incompatibility of facts. Id.

b. Demurrer.

121. When it lies, generally. — A demurrer is properly sustained on the ground that an allegation is too general, when the allegation is that "no requisite of chapter 15 of the code was observed." Clapp v. County of Cedar, 68 D. 678.

An answer setting up a matter of law is bad on demurrer, at common law, and under the Indiana code. Kern v. Hazlerigg, 71 D. 360.

122. When it will not lie. — A demurrer to a petition is waived by filing of an answer by the defendant. Smith v. Silence, 66 D. 137.

That several grounds of defense are inconsistent is not a defect that can be taken advantage of by a demurrer. The usual and proper course is to compel the party to elect on which of the inconsistent grounds he will rely. Munn v. Taulman, 81 D. 508.

An averment of a complaint in an action against a railroad company for damages resulting from the negligence of its agents and servants, that the defendant ran its train with carelessness and gross negligence, is good on demurrer. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Davis, 85 D. 477.

The complaint in an action by a passenger against a railroad company alleging that the plaintiff was carried to his destination in a box-car which had no steps for the safe descent of passengers, and which was stopped before it reached the platform at the station, and that the plaintiff was required by the conductor to leap from the car to the ground, whereby he received injuries, is not demurrable on the ground that the injury appears to have resulted from rash conduct of the plaintiff. Evansville etc. R. R. Co. v. Duncan, 92 D. 322.

An objection that a pleading is argumentative will not be considered on a demurrer. Bell v. Eaton, 92 D. 329.

The prayer of a complaint is not demurrable. Althof v. Conheim, 99 D. 363.

123. Demurrer for want of jurisdiction. — A demurrer is properly sustained when a complaint shows an action is based upon the judgment of a court of another state, and that jurisdiction over defendant was acquired by the publication of the summons. Winston v. Taylor, 75 D. 112.

124. — for misjoinder of causes of action. — A misjoinder of causes of action appearing on the face of a complaint cannot be taken advantage of on the trial after failure to demur. Blossom v. Barrett, 97 D. 747.

A complaint is not demurrable on the ground of a misjoinder of causes of action, which contains one count charging defendants with an implied liability, on a sale of a county warrant, to repay the purchase-money, a second count charging them as indorsers of negotiable paper, and a third count for money had and received. Keller v. Hicks, 83 D. 78. Or where the complaint asks damages for the immediate injury to a mining claim caused by the breaking of a dam, and for the consequent preventing the plaintiffs from working the claim. Fraler v. Sears Union Water Co., 73 D. 562.

125. — for failure of complaint to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. — The adverse party may demur under the code system, if every fact essential to the claim or defense be not stated. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

A complaint stating facts entitling plaintiff to any relief, either in law or in equity, is not demurrable for want of facts. Grain v. Aldrich, 99 D. 423.

Uncertainty is not a ground of demurrer, under the Indiana code of procedure, but of a motion to compel the party to make his pleading more certain, unless the pleading be so uncertain as not to state intelligibly a substantially good cause of action or defense. Snowden v. Wilas, 81 D. 370.

The statute of frauds must be pleaded only when it does not appear, from the complaint, that the contract was parol; when it does so appear, and nothing is alleged to take the case out of the statute, the complaint is demurrable. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 72 D. 97.

126. Form of demurrer. — A demurrer is to be taken distributively, and is equivalent to a separate demurrer filed to each paragraph, and may therefore be overruled as to part, and sustained as to part, of the paragraphs, where an answer consists of several paragraphs, and a single demurrer is filed thereto, in which it is said that "the plaintiff demurs to each paragraph of the answer," etc. Parter v. Thomas, 81 D. 385.

127. General demurrer. — A plea in abatement may be objected to on general demurrer, because defective in not being verified by affidavit, when of facts not apparent of record, or for not being seasonably filed, or for not being entitled of the term when the writ and declaration were entered. Whidden v. Seelye, 63 D. 661.

If any of several grounds of defense set up in the answer is good, it is error to sustain a general demurrer thereto, on the ground that it does not set forth any defense to the action. Munn v. Taulman, 81 D. 508.

128. Interposing statute of limitations by demurrer. — An objection that the equity of the plaintiffs is barred by long adverse possession may be taken by demurrer. Williams v. Harrell, 55 D. 442.

A count in a complaint in the old form of assumpsit for money had and received is demurrable, if the promise is laid of a day more than two years prior to the commencement of the action, thus showing the demand to be barred by the statute of limitations. Keller v. Hicks, 83 D. 78.

129. Hearing and determination of demurrers. — The record of a former suit on which action is brought will not be examined on demurrer, where it is not made a part of the petition, but is simply filed with it. Hall v. Harrison, 64 D. 225.

Where a defect in the pleading is remedied by an additional pleading before the demurrer thereto is determined, such demurrer should be overruled. Bell v. Byerson, 77 D. 142.

4. Reply.

130. When a reply is necessary. — Under the Iowa system of pleading, no replication is required to an answer of defendant which admits the execution of a policy of fire insurance sued upon, and the loss as alleged in the petition, but sets up certain acts of plaintiff in violation of the terms of the policy whereby it became forfeited. The cause is at issue upon such answer, the law presuming a full denial thereof, and all matter properly in avoidance, as the replication of plaintiff. The answer may be controverted at the trial by evidence in denial of the facts averred, or by new matter in avoidance, as if fully pleaded under the old system. Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 96 D. 83.

Where an answer contains no counterclaim nor set-off, no replication is necessary under the Missouri practice act of 1855. Powers v. Kueckhoff, 97 D. 281.

131. What replies are sufficient. — Matter in avoidance, denied by a general replication, must be proved. Cecil v. Cecil, 81 D. 626.

A general replication waives the benefit of the statute of frauds as a defense against an agreement set up in the answer. Tarleton v. Vietes, 41 D. 193.

A plea of the statute of limitations alleged that the causes of action did not, nor did either of them, accrue within six years, etc. A replication thereto alleging that the said causes of action, or some of them, did accrue within six years, etc., was held to be defective in not saying which accrued within six years. Holchies v. Ladd, 86 D. 679.

IV. VERIFICATION OF PLEADINGS.

132. Form and sufficiency, generally. — An affidavit made in another state, verifying an answer in a suit brought in this state, is not within the act of Congress regulating the authentication of judicial proceedings in other states. Gibson v. Tillon, 17 D. 306.

Such an affidavit, if made before a magistrate duly authorized to administer an oath by the laws of the state where it was taken, is admissible here, and is considered as having been taken under the authority of the court in which the suit is pending. Id.

A jurat to an answer in the form of a certificate by the officer, that the defendant swore that the "facts," instead of the "matters," stated in the answer "were true," instead of "are true," is sufficient. Whelpley v. Van Epps, 37 D. 400.

133. Necessity of verification. — The execution of a note is admitted as to one of two defendants, where the denial of the execution is sworn to by the other only. Pursley v. Morrison, 63 D. 424.

134. Remedies for defective verification. — An objection to an answer for want of verification is waived by receiving and retaining that pleading without objection. Folsom v. Carli, 80 D. 429.

A neglect to return a defectively verified pleading, or pleading not verified when it should be, is to be deemed a waiver of the defect or omission. Hayward v. Grant, 97 D. 228.

V. THE ISSUE; ITS SCOPE; AND HOW JOINED.

135. Necessity of joinder of issue. — A trial without an issue is error. Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

Questions not presented by a bill and demurrer will not be considered. Chilton v. Wilford, 60 D. 399.

Facts shown by the evidence, but not put in issue by pleadings, cannot be considered on the hearing. Warner v. Whittaker, 72 D. 66; Winston v. Taylor, 75 D. 112.

To put the proof of the execution of a contract upon the opposing party, it must be put in issue by the pleadings, under the provisions of the Texas statute. Fulshear v. Randon, 70 D. 281.

A plaintiff may properly dismiss as to a party defendant after an answer, notwithstanding another defendant set up a defense in his answer which was unfavorable to his co-defendant. Stone v. Durnell, 78 D. 582.

136. What is a sufficient joinder. — Where a replication denies matters contained in the plea, it is error to dismiss the bill without hearing the issue of fact thus raised. Yost v. Devault, 66 D. 92.

An answer containing a demand in reconvention need not be served on the plaintiff, as he is bound to take notice of the issues of law, without an answer. Hunter v. Spurlock, 22 D. 165.

Payment pleaded but not replied to is not in issue. Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In a proceeding against a railroad corporation for usurping banking privileges by issuing paper in the similitude of bank notes, a plea that defendants have issued certain paper which they describe, and which paper as described may or may not be within the meaning of the law preventing banking by unauthorized persons, is defective, as the issue tendered thereby is immaterial. People v. River Raisin etc. R. R. Co., 86 D. 64.

137. Scope of the issue. — A recovery must be on the case made by the pleadings; therefore insurers treating a policy as one of reinsurance of the risks assumed by them cannot, on failing to prove the contract as alleged, recover the ratable contribution due on the policy, were it one of double insurance. Alliance Marine Ass. Co. v. La. State Ins. Co., 28 D. 117.

A judgment cannot be rendered in favor of a party upon the issue of law formed upon a separate plea, without disposing of the issue of fact joined upon plea of payment. Devers v. Ross, 60 D. 331.

An answer to a bill to foreclose a mortgage denying that alterations in the mortgage notes were made by the consent of the parties, as alleged in the bill, but not averring that they were fraudulently made, does not put in issue the intention with which they were made, and the court will not consider the evidence in regard to it. Vogle v. Ripper, 85 D. 298.

Evidence must correspond to the allegations and be confined to the issues, and if in the examination of witnesses facts come out which would furnish ground of relief or defense, such facts must be disregarded, unless they are warranted by allegations in the pleadings. Finley v. Quirk, 86 D. 93.

An allegation in a complaint in an action on a promissory note, payable to the payees as individuals, that they were partners at the time of bringing the suit, is immaterial, and a denial of such allegation in the answer does not raise a material issue. Hayward v. Grant, 97 D. 228.

No provision of the Kentucky code abrogates the principle that a plaintiff can recover only upon proof of the cause of action alleged in his pleading. Gossom v. Badgett, 99 D. 658.

138. Effect of express admissions. — An answer may be held to aid the complaint which distinctly sets out most of the facts necessary to entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought, but omits some material facts, where the facts so omitted are clearly stated and admitted in the answer. Hawthorne v. Smith, 93 D. 397.

A fact will be deemed established without proof which is affirmatively alleged both in the petition and answer, although the answer contains also a general denial, and the plaintiff filed a reply in general denial of the allegations of the answer. Cur v. Watson, 98 D. 763.

Under the Iowa system of pleading, a party may admit in writing any allegation of facts pleaded by his adversary which otherwise would be deemed controverted by mere force of law. This admission, of course, dispenses with proof of all facts thus admitted; but it does not preclude the party making it from proving other independent facts in avoidance of those admitted. Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 96 D. 83.

Where the defendant files a written admission of facts pleaded by the plaintiff, his answer sets up the facts relied upon as matter in avoidance; but when plaintiff files a written admission of facts pleaded by defendant, the replication being dispensed with, there is no pleading prescribed by the Iowa statute in which such matter may be embodied. Id.

Where the plaintiff files a written admission of matters alleged in defendant's answer, in a case where no replication is allowable, such writing may, and should by good practice, contain an averment or notice that the plaintiff relies upon and expects to show on the trial matter in avoidance of the allegations thus admitted. But the plaintiff may admit the facts pleaded by defendant, without stating the matters in avoidance to be given in evidence. Id.

After plea and issue joined, in an action to recover damages for the sale and conversion of hypothecated stock, it was agreed between the parties that all errors in pleading on both sides should be released, and that the plaintiff should be considered as having amended his declaration by adding such counts in tort as the state of the facts appearing at the trial would justify; and it was held that the plaintiff in his amendments was confined to his counts in tort, and that the suit had to be dealt with as an action ex delicto, and as if the supposed amended counts in that form were added. It would not be strictly correct to hold that all errors in pleading were released, and that the questions at issue were presented by the facts disclosed in the bill of exceptions, and the instructions of the court thereupon. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

VI. EVIDENCE UNDER PLEADINGS; VARIANCE.

1. In Actions at Law.

139. What evidence may be admitted under the pleadings, generally. — Where a party neglects to plead a former recovery as an estoppel when he has an opportunity to do so, and puts the facts directly in issue, the jury may find according to the truth of the case. Wood v. Jackson, 22 D. 603.

The rule does not apply where a special pleading is not required, as in assumpsit, where such an estoppel may be given in evidence under the general issue, nor where the plaintiff's title is by estoppel, nor where there is no opportunity to plead the estoppel. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A general averment in a declaration, of presentment of a bond for payment will let in proof that the bond was presented at the last known residence of the payor. Taylor v. Branch, 23 D. 293.

Matter not pleaded may be given in evidence when its materiality has been caused by conduct of the plaintiff at the trial. West v. McConnell, 25 D. 191.

A defendant must elect between two contradictory defenses, and evidence should be permitted only in support of the one on which he determines to rely. Cox v. Cox, 67 D. 432.

In an action for refusing to furnish the necessary kiln and hop-house for preparing hops for market, under a contract to prepare a suitable and convenient kiln and dry-house, to be prepared and ready for use when the same should be required, evidence that the contractee directed the contractor not to build them, but to use the contractor's kiln and dry-house for the purpose, that the contractor did so, and paid for the use of the same, and that the contractee made no objections, but fully assented to the arrangement, is admissible under a plea by the contractor that he did prepare a suitable kiln and dry-house, ready for use when required; also that he did prepare the same according to the true intent and meaning of said contract, and to the full satisfaction of plaintiff. Thompson v. Kilborne, 67 D. 742.

140. What should be excluded. — If the declaration omits to notice a note subjoined to the agreement and limiting its continuance to a day certain, the agreement cannot be introduced in evidence under such declaration, unless it appears that such note was subjoined without plaintiff's knowledge or consent, and that it was not a part of the agreement. Newell v. Mayberry, 23 D. 261.

Evidence of a negligent performance is not admissible to support an issue of total neglect and refusal to perform. Pennsylvania &c. Co. v. Dandridge, 29 D. 543.

141. What evidence is admissible under the general issue. — A former recovery may be given in evidence, without being specially pleaded, — 1. When the party who seeks the benefit of it had no opportunity to specially plead it; 2. By defendant in those cases in which other matters in discharge of the action can be proved under the general issue. Young v. Rummell, 38 D. 594.

A former recovery, release, or satisfaction need not be pleaded in an action on the case, but may be given in evidence under the general issue. Gilchrist v. Bale, 34 D. 469; Cook v. Vinmont, 17 D. 157; Young v.

Rummell, 38 D. 594; Whitney v. Clarendon, 46 D. 150; Reynolds v. Stansbury, 55 D. 459; and is as conclusive as if specially pleaded. Young v. Rummell, 38 D. 594; Offutt v. John, 40 D. 125; Gray v. Gillilan, 60 D. 761.

Under the general issue in assumpsit, defendant may show that there are other persons jointly interested with the plaintiff in the cause of action sued on, and it is not necessary to plead such matter in abatement. Marshall v. Jones, 25 D. 260.

Evidence tending to establish a payment may be given under the general issue. Cress v. Bleakley, 61 D. 58; Hanna v. Mills, 34 D. 216.

Evidence of an award in favor of defendant is admissible in an action of assumpsit, under the general issue. Winne v. Elderkin, 52 D. 159.

Evidence that neither the plaintiff on the record nor the real plaintiff has any beneficial interest in the suit may be given under the general issue. Berry v. Gillis, 43 D. 584.

A constable sued for an act done by virtue of his office may, under the general issue, give evidence of any matter which is a defense to the suit. Parker v. Walrod, 30 D. 124.

In an action on the case, any evidence may be given under the general issue which destroys the right of action. Whitney v. Clarendon, 46 D. 150. Accordingly, where the action was for diverting the water in plaintiff's mill, the defendant may give evidence, on the general issue, that the dam was higher than legally allowed, whereby defendant's improvements were overflowed, and that the defendant dug the canal on his own land to let off the surplus water. Langford v. Oneley, 4 D. 699.

142. What is not. — Evidence that an invention was useless, and of no value, cannot be given under the general issue pleaded to an action on a promissory note given for a certain patent right of the payee. Williams v. Hicks, 19 D. 693.

A matter of justification or excuse in an action of trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's house cannot be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty. Such matter must be specially pleaded. Carson v. Wilson, 19 D. 368.

A defendant cannot avail himself of an objection to the declaration in an action of trespass to try title, after he has pleaded "not guilty." Ware v. Bradford, 36 D. 427.

A partial failure of consideration cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Manville v. Gay, 60 D. 379.

Payment cannot be shown under a general issue in an action of covenant for rent, except with a brief statement. But payment may be shown in such action under a special plea of payment. Russell v. Fabyan, 61 D. 629.

A defendant in a real action between tenants in common cannot give in evidence under general issue that he "had never ousted the plaintiff of his portion of the demanded premises, nor in any way hindered his taking possession, but had only been in possession of the same as tenant in common with the defendant." Billings v. Gibbs, 92 D. 587.

143. Admissibility under plea of non assumpsit. — In an action to recover compensation for services as housekeeper, and for goods sold and delivered, evidence that the plaintiff embezzled or wasted the goods of her employer is admissible under the plea of non assumpsit, though not by way of set-off. Heck v. Shener, 8 D. 700.

144. Burden of proof. — The mere admission of a debt is not sufficient to charge the defendant with the whole demand of the plaintiff; he must, nevertheless, prove the amount due. Quarles v. Littlepage, 3 D. 637.

The plea of covenants performed admits the due and proper execution of the bond on which suit is brought, and if the covenant be to make title to land, it implies the defendant had made title; and he must prove it, or show by law that, agreeably to the plaintiff's own showing, he was not bound to make it. Cock v. Taylor, 5 D. 650.

Where a person seals a deed or executes a covenant in behalf of others, it is incumbent upon him to set forth in his plea and prove the authority under which he acted, in order to release him from his personal liability. White v. Skinner, 7 D. 381.

The averment of a demand, though immaterial, must be proved. Conn v. Gano, 13 D. 639.

On a declaration setting forth a joint undertaking to construct a mill, and the negligent and unskillful conduct of the defendant, whereby plaintiff was greatly damaged, the plaintiff must prove the joint contract, to enable him to recover. Wright v. Geer, 27 D. 538.

Where an express contract is necessary to create a liability, it must be stated, and must be proved as laid. Id.

A failure to prove a strictly joint liability is fatal upon a motion for a nonsuit, in an action in which the declaration charges a joint contract by the master and owner of a vessel, and alleges a loss through negligence. Patton v. Magrath, 33 D. 98.

In actions growing out of torts, it is sufficient to prove a part only of the allegation stated in the declaration, provided what is proved affords a ground for maintaining the action, supposing it to have been correctly stated as proved. The only exception to this rule is, when the allegation contains matter of description. Walsh v. Homer, 45 D. 342.

It is not necessary to prove an averment in a declaration, where the whole of it may be stricken out without destroying the plaintiff's right of action. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 50 D. 657.

A party has the right to have the jury pass upon all allegations contained in the declaration, and he is entitled to their verdict if he sustains by his proof any of the allegations showing a cause of action. Kearney v. Farrell, 73 D. 677.

145. What variances are material. — On the trial of an issue upon the assumpsit of the testator, evidence is not admissible showing a promise or engagement on behalf of the executor. Quarles v. Littlepage, 3 D. 637.

Whatever is alleged as inducement, and is not impertinent and foreign to the cause, must be proved as alleged, and when a contract is alleged and described, a variance is equally fatal, whether the action be upon the contract itself or upon some collateral matter. Walsh v. Gilmor, 6 D. 502.

Where it was in issue whether the plaintiff had a patent right dated November 17, 1810, for "a steam-still and water-boiler," evidence of a patent dated January 16, 1811, for "a water-boiler and steam-still" was held inadmissible. Bellas v. Hays, 9 D. 385.

In an action on a contract, the one set forth on the record and the one proved must agree in substance and effect. And in the case of mutual executory promises, a trivial variation in setting out the contract is fatal. Curley v. Dean, 10 D. 140.

A declaration on a covenant to convey on performance of certain conditions by the plaintiff, alleging performance of the conditions, will not be supported by proof of a waiver of such performance. Baldwin v. Munn, 20 D. 627.

A party, in an action on special contract, who fails to prove his contract as laid, but proves a different special contract, cannot recover on either contract; nor can he recover on the common counts, when there is a special contract in existence. Fowler v. Austin, 26 D. 701.

An allegation of a total neglect and refusal to perform an engagement is not sustained by proof of a negligent and imperfect performance. Pennsylvania etc. Co. v. Danbridge, 29 D. 543.

A declaration which alleges a contract to tow out a vessel and cargo safely is not sustained by proof of a contract to tow out free from a particular description of danger. Id.

On a plea of nil siet record, a variance between the decree relied on and that offered in evidence, as to the name of one of the parties in whose favor the decree was entered, is fatal, and cannot be helped by an averment that the name was inserted by mistake. Dibrell v. Miller, 29 D. 126.

Where, in an action on a jail bond, it appears that the sum named in the bond is different from the amount for which judgment was rendered and execution issued, this constitutes a variance, and the court must either exclude the execution from evidence or hold that it does not support the issue. Avery v. Lewis, 33 D. 203.

A difference of a half-cent between the note declared on and the one offered in evidence is a fatal variance. Spangler v. Pugh, 74 D. 77.

Names, sums, magnitudes, dates, durations, and terms are matters of essential description, and must, in general, be precisely proved. Id.

In declaring on a contract, it need not be recited in hoc verba; but if it be so recited, the recital must be strictly accurate. If the instrument be declared on according to its legal effect, that effect must be truly stated; and if there be a failure in either mode, an exception may be taken for the variance, and the instrument cannot be given in evidence. Id.

Where a plaintiff declares upon a parol promise, and the proof shows that his action is based upon a sealed instrument, the variance is fatal. He cannot set up one cause of action in his petition, and on the trial prove another and different one. Dougherty v. Matthews, 88 D. 128.

Variance is fatal, whether an action is in case ex contractu or ex delicto, where the declaration alleges a special contract for unusual dispatch in transporting merchandise, and the evidence does not tend to prove that there was any agreement for unusual dispatch. Mann v. Birchard, 94 D. 398.

Where several sue for an injury to property alleged to belong to them jointly, they can recover only for damage to such property as they prove belonged to them in a joint capacity. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. Linder, 89 D. 319.

146. What are immaterial. — A variance between the date of the bond declared on and that recited in the award is not fatal, if in other respects they agree; thus if the bond declared on have the month blank, and the award recites the month, it will not be fatal. Ross v. Overton, 2 D. 552.

In declaring upon such a writing, to allege that defendant undertook that "the oil was of a good and superior quality, to wit, prime quality winter oil," is not a material variance. Hastings v. Lovering, 13 D. 420.

An allegation that an action was commenced on the 24th is supported by proof of a writ dated the 25th for the day is not material. Steele v. Bates, 16 D. 720.

Where a declaration sets out a warrant which charges that property had been stolen from a person's premises, and the warrant produced in evidence charges that it was stolen from his possession, the variance is not material. Miller v. Brown, 23 D. 693.

A variance in mere matter of form between the record of acquittal offered and that pleaded is not sufficient to warrant its exclusion as evidence, especially when the prosecution out of which the acquittal arose was for a misdemeanor only. Adams v. Lisher, 25 D. 102.

A variance between an instrument offered in evidence from that set forth in the pleadings, where this latter is not of the foundation of the action, is immaterial, unless it be of such character as to cause a strong probability that the two instruments are not identical. Leidy v. Rawson, 29 D. 354.

Averments of matters of substance in a declaration need only be proved substantially, but matters of description must be proved exactly. And where assumpsit is brought to recover money alleged to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and by mistake omitted in a settlement between them, the averments of the time of such settlement, and of the particular sum due, and not embraced therein, are averments of matters of substance, not of description. Sage v. Hawley, 41 D. 128.

There is no variance between a declaration and proof, where the former alleges a promise of defendant, consequent upon his acceptance of a bill to pay it according to its tenor, and the proof is that the acceptor said the bill was all right, and he would come to Burke in a few days, and pay the bill. Fisher v. Beckwith, 46 D. 174.

Variance in an action of debt on a judgment is immaterial where the declaration alleges it to have been obtained in a suit brought before that time in the circuit court, when, from the description in the declaration of the record, it appears that it was originally brought in the district court and transferred by an act of Congress to the circuit court. Dudley v. Lindsey, 50 D. 522.

The omission in a count on a note to set out a memorandum thereon, which constitutes a defeasance or qualifies the stipulations of the note, is a variance, and the note will not support the count; but if the declaration contains the common money counts, and the memorandum is merely that the note is given as collateral security for another note, the variance is immaterial. Tebbetts v. Pickering, 51 D. 48.

Variance between an allegation and the proof in an action on an assessment does not exist where the proof shows that an assessment alleged to have been made by three directors was signed by but two directors. North R. M. Co. v. Shrewsbury Church, 53 D. 258.

Where the plaintiff declared that defendant had assumed to pay certain rent, and the evidence showed that he had promised to assure it, there is no variance, as it is sufficient to allege a promise according to its legal effect. Dougherty v. Matthews, 88 D. 128.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Immaterial allegations are not required to be proved as laid, unless they are of such a character as to be important in ascertaining the identity of the thing which is the cause of action. Holt v. Inhabitants of Penobscot, 96 D. 429.

147. Effect of variance.—The entry of a motion to quash a writ or dismiss a suit is not such an appearance as waives a variance between the writ and the declaration. Schoonhoven v. Gott, 71 D. 247.

A variance between a declaration and the proof, where defendants are charged with obstructing and turning a watercourse on plaintiff's land, and the proof is that defendants allowed their ditch to become so filled up as to throw an accumulation of water on plaintiff's land, is not so great but, by amendment, plaintiff's declaration might be made to cover all the facts. Waterman v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 73 D. 326.

2. In Suits in Equity.

148. What evidence is admissible under the pleadings, generally.—Evidence to support an allegation not made or relied on in a bill or answer in equity is inadmissible. Price v. Tyson, 22 D. 279.

A decree between co-defendants may be made on pleadings and evidence between plaintiffs and defendants. Motte v. Schult, 26 D. 194.

149. — in support of the bill.—Evidence is inadmissible to prove a fact not alleged in the bill. Bonwell v. Goodwin, 81 D. 169.

150. — in support of the answer.—Averments in an answer must be supported by proof, where the matter set up is new, or where it is not responsive to the allegations in the bill. Leach v. Fobes, 71 D. 732; Gasbill v. Sinc, 78 D. 106.

An answer to the merits does not deprive the defendant of any legal objection insisted on in the answer. Teagus v. Dendy, 16 D. 643.

Defendants' answers in equity are to be taken as true if the complainants do not give them an opportunity to substantiate them by proof. Covenhoven v. Shuler, 21 D. 73.

151. Burden of proof.—Equitable relief will not be granted, unless the allegations of the bill, which are denied, are proved. Ayres v. Campbell, 74 D. 346.

If the answer to a bill in chancery, by way of affirmative allegations, sets up new matter, not responsive to the bill, the burden is upon the defendant to prove the allegations as charged. Cooper v. Tyler, 95 D. 442.

152. Variance, and its effect.—Complainants, having asked for relief as the heirs of A, cannot recover as the heirs of B, although the proof adduced shows them to be such, as they can only recover on the validity of their title stated in their bill Maulding v. Scott, 56 D. 298.

Allegata and probata must agree, and averments material to the case omitted from the pleading cannot be supplied by evidence. This is a cardinal rule in equity as well as in all other pleading, and is peculiarly necessary upon a bill for specific performance. Green v. Covillaud, 70 D. 725.

3. In Actions under Codes of Procedure.

153. What evidence may be admitted under the pleadings, generally.—The proof must correspond with the allegations. Caldwell v. Neil, 99 D. 738.

Under a complaint substantially alleging that the plaintiff was deprived of the use of his meadow by reason of the defendant causing water to overflow it, thereby rendering it spongy and impassable, it is competent for plaintiff to show that his muck-bed in the meadow, valuable for manure, was made inaccessible by the flowage, and that he was injured in consequence thereof; for if the single question is, whether the railroad company so constructed its road as to injure the owner's meadow-land by flowage, the latter may show in what manner, and every manner, in which the flowing impaired the profits of the land. Johnson v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 560.

Under a plea of total failure of consideration, defendant may show partial failure, in Texas. This is not the rule in England, and in some of the states of the Union, but it is so here by virtue of the statute. Brandley v. Thomas, 73 D. 264.

The California practice act governs all cases, legal and equitable, by the same rules, at least in regard to evidence necessary to sustain the pleadings. Goodwin v. Hammond, 73 D. 574.

154. What should be excluded.—The causes of an action set forth in a complaint can be recovered upon, only; and concurrent and intimate causes of action cannot as a matter of course be given in evidence, nor made the basis of a verdict, under the act which declares that "there shall be but one form of civil action." Benedict v. Bray, 56 D. 332.

Under a complaint for damages sustained by being thrown from a wagon by reason of its being brought into contact with a defect in a highway, the plaintiff is not entitled to prove damages arising from his voluntarily leaping from such wagon to avoid injuries rendered imminent by such defect. Lead v. Tyngsborough, 59 D. 159.

A plaintiff cannot make out a cause of action by proof, where he fails to make it out in his complaint. Heath v. Frackleton, 91 D. 405.

Evidence of a fact essential to the support of an action is inadmissible, unless it be averred in the complaint. Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 91 D. 672.

155. What is admissible under the general issue. — Though the rule of court may make a general denial a sufficient denial of the averments of the petition, it cannot extend further than as a denial of the petition, and cannot open the door to special defenses and matter in avoidance. Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 63 D. 451.

Under an answer containing a general denial of indebtedness, and plea of payment, a judgment of garnishment against the defendant cannot be given in evidence. Such matter is special matter in avoidance, and not negating the original indebtedness, and must therefore be specially pleaded. Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 63 D. 451; Hubler v. Pullen, 68 D. 620.

In trover, trespass, and replevin, defendant need not deny amount of value or allegation of damages. They must be proved, though defendant puts in no answer. This was the practice before the code, and is so now. Jenkins v. Steamba, 88 D. 675.

Evidence is admissible under a general denial, in an action for an injury to the person, that the injury resulted from the plaintiff's negligence. Indianapolis etc. R. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 92 D. 338.

Proof of fraud is not admissible under a general denial. Pino v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co., 92 D. 529.

156. Burden of proof.* — Each party must allege every fact which he is required to prove, and will be precluded from proving any fact not alleged, under the code system; and he must allege nothing affirmatively which he is not required to prove. Negative allegations are, however, frequently necessary, but they are not to be proved. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

An allegation of new matter not constituting a counterclaim or set-off must be considered as denied, and must be proved by the party making the allegation. Fahnestock v. Bailey, 77 D. 161.

An allegation in a complaint that a defendant "has or claims an interest," etc., does not relieve him from proving that it is a redeemable interest, and the evidence must be the same as in other cases of disputed title. Smith v. Smith, 88 D. 707.

157. What variances are material. — A variance between names in a summons and a declaration is material, when the summons is against "Schoonhoven" and the declaration is against "Schoonover"; the names are not the same in sound. Schoonhoven v. Gott, 71 D. 247.

A failure of proof exists under the code system as well as at common law, when the plaintiff, in an action against one defendant, declares upon a joint undertaking of the defendant and another, and proves only a separate agreement of the defendant; for there is a want of identity between the contract declared on and the contract proved, which would prevent the judgment from being a bar to another action on the contract proved. Gossom v. Badgett, 99 D. 658.

A party cannot declare upon one cause of action and recover upon another; but the variance between allegations and proof, to be fatal, must be such as to mislead the adverse party, to his prejudice, in maintaining his action or defense upon its merits. Murphy v. Wilson, 100 D. 290.

158. What are immaterial. — The provisions of New York code of procedure concerning variance between pleadings and proofs are applicable to all actions; and a variance between allegations of usury in an answer and the proof should be deemed immaterial, when the proof does not differ from the allegations in their entire scope and meaning, and the plaintiff does not prove that he was actually misled thereby to his prejudice. Catlin v. Gunter, 62 D. 113.

A variance between an allegation and the proof is to be disregarded, under the New York code, unless it appears to have misled a party to his prejudice. Dubois v. Beaver, 82 D. 328.

Omitting from a pleading a portion of a contract which is declared upon is not a material variance between the allegations and proof, unless it shall actually mislead the adverse party, to his prejudice, in maintaining his action or defense upon its merits. At common law, variances of this kind were fatal, but the rule has been changed in Wisconsin by statute, and the court may order the pleading amended so as to conform to the facts, upon such terms as may be just, or it may disregard it altogether. Fisk v. Tank, 78 D. 737.

Averring greater damages than proved is no variance. Mallory v. Leach, 82 D. 625.

VII. EFFECT OF PLEADINGS AS EVIDENCE.

159. Bill or complaint as evidence.

— Allegations in an unverified bill are not evidence against the complainant. Rankin v. Macneil, 12 D. 431.

A bill against two defendants, taken pro confesso against one for want of his appearance, will not estop the other from denying or disproving the allegations in the bill. Petty v. Hannum, 36 D. 303.

Jurisdictional facts stated in a bill must be deemed to be true in a suit on a decree, when the decree is collaterally attacked. Harrison v. Harrison, 56 D. 227.

A bill in equity, sworn to by a complainant, may be used as evidence of the facts stated in it, concerning his title to certain lands, in another case in chancery affecting the same lands. Stump v. Henry, 61 D. 300.

* Burden of proof on plea of statute of limitations, see note, 81 D. 725-727.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

160. When defendant's answer is evidence. — An answer responsive to a bill, and within the discovery sought, is legal evidence. Woodcock v. Bennet, 13 D. 568.

161. When answer is not evidence. — An answer, after a replication, is not evidence for the defendant, unless it is made so by discoveries called for in the bill. Gillis v. Martin, 25 D. 729.

An answer of one defendant is not evidence against his co-defendant in chancery. Jones v. Hurdey, 32 D. 180.

An answer to a bill in equity that is unsupported by proof, and not responsive to the bill, but setting up matters in avoidance, must be considered as untrue and out of the case. O'Brien v. Elliot, 32 D. 137.

An answer responsive to a bill in equity, and denying charges therein, is not evidence for the defendant, though the bill be sustained by one witness only. Goodwin v. Hammond, 73 D. 574.

162. Answer not evidence in respect to new matter not responsive to bill.

— Allegations in an answer responsive to the bill are evidence for the defendant, but averments of new matter in avoidance are not. Ringgold v. Ringgold, 18 D. 250; Buck v. Swasey, 56 D. 681; Com. v. Cullen, 53 D. 450.

Where an answer admitting or denying facts in a bill sets up other facts in defense or avoidance, they must be proved by independent testimony. Miles v. Miles, 64 D. 362.

163. Effect of answer as evidence. — The answer of a respondent to a bill in equity praying for a disclosure is conclusive upon the petitioner as to the truth of its statements. Pollard v. Lyman, 2 D. 63.

An answer must be taken for true, in the absence of evidence, where it denies the statement in the bill, and avers otherwise. Paul v. Carver, 64 D. 649.

Where a bill in chancery calls for an answer under oath, the latter must be taken to be true in so far as it is responsive to the bill, and not contradicted by evidence. Cassell v. Ross, 55 D. 270; Garretson v. Vanloon, 54 D. 492; Price v. McDonald, 54 D. 657. So held, of an answer to a bill charging fraud, denying such fraud. Murray v. Blatchford, 19 D. 537; Allen v. Cole, 59 D. 416.

An answer, where a cause is heard upon a bill and answer, must be taken as conclusive proof of the facts which it sets up by way of defense; but intentions and motives are not facts touching which the answer is conclusive. Belford v. Crane, 84 D. 155.

Allegations in an answer respecting questions of fact are to be sustained by proper evidence, and are entitled to no more consideration than those of the orator, except as far as directly called for by the latter. Samborn v. Kittredge, 50 D. 58.

A sworn answer of a defendant to a bill in equity is evidence in his favor equal in weight to the testimony of a single witness, and is not to be discredited, nor any presumption raised against it, by reason of its being the answer of an interested party; and the answer is sufficient in itself, if direct and positive and responsive to the bill, to establish the denials and the affirmations of facts which it contains, if not outweighed by opposing proof. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

164. How the denials in the answer may be overcome. — Evidence sufficient to falsify an answer in chancery, determined under the peculiar circumstances of the case. Pringle v. Samuel, 13 D. 214.

If a defendant files a verified answer in equity, evidence may be received to impair the force of the answer as evidence, by showing that he is unworthy of belief. Miller v. Tollison, 14 D. 712.

Mere opinions founded on data that do not justify the conclusion reached cannot outweigh the positive statement in the answer of a defendant who had positive knowledge of the facts alleged. Simpson v. Feltz, 16 D. 602.

A parol contract alleged in a bill, which is denied by an answer thereto, may be established by parol evidence; the answer may be contradicted by evidence alibis. Printz v. Mitchell, 63 D. 258.

An answer to a bill ought not to be overthrown by evidence less positive than the allegations and denials of the answer, nor should it be outweighed by proof of circumstances which may be reconciled with the truth of the statements therein contained. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

A witness relied on to overcome an answer to a bill in equity must not only be competent, but his testimony must be credible; and the circumstances depended upon as corroborative must be such as to materially support the witness and strengthen his testimony, so that when both are considered together, they may be sufficient to satisfy the conscience of the court that the allegations and charges of the bill are true. Id.

The answer of a defendant to a bill filed against him in equity, if responsive to matters contained in the bill, will be conclusive evidence in his favor until overcome by testimony of two opposing witnesses, or one such witness and corroborating circumstances. Miles v. Miles, 84 D. 362; Meth. P. Church v. Baltimore, 48 D. 540; Zeigler v. Scott, 54 D. 395; Feigley v. Feigley, 61 D. 375; Trout v. Emmons, 81 D. 326. But the circumstances must be such that, standing alone, a reasonable conclusion as to the truth of the fact might be deduced from them. Maddox v. Sullivan, 44 D. 234.

To overcome an answer of a defendant to a bill in equity, it is not indispensable in all cases to have the testimony of a witness with corroborative circumstances; because circumstances alone may sometimes be found in the answer itself, or in documentary evidence referred to in the answer sufficient to more than countervail the denials of the answer. The rule properly applies to the case of an answer opposed only by the testimony of a single witness. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

The answer of an executrix alleging facts not within her personal knowledge is not within the rule that an answer asserting a fact responsive to the bill can only be disproved by two witnesses, or by one witness with strong corroborating circumstances. But as such answer does not admit the allegations of the bill, it puts the complainant on proof, and leaves him to sustain them as he can, unembarrassed by any supposed responsive features of the answer. Dugan v. Gittinge, 43 D. 306.

VIII. SERVICE; FILING; WITHDRAWAL.

165. Time to plead. — A peremptory exception cannot be received after answer. Coles v. Kelsey, 47 D. 661.

A plea of limitations is not a plea to the merits, and must be filed by the rule day, and is never allowed to be amended. Kunkel v. Spooner, 66 D. 332.

Pleas and motions in abatement must be filed within two days after entry of action, under the rules of court in Maine, and the entry of a special appearance for defendant does not dispense with the requirements of such rules in regard thereto. Mitchell v. Union Life Ins. Co., 71 D. 529.

One of several defendants cannot object that a bill was prematurely filed, and that the defendants were not then in default, when the bill was filed pursuant to an agreement between him and the complainants that he should unite with them in obtaining the relief prayed. Cobb v. Duke, 72 D. 157.

A defendant, by obtaining time and failing to file his amended answer, is not entitled to longer time without some showing why such answer was not ready. Butcher v. Bank of Brownsville, 83 D. 446.

166. Proof of service. — Where the sheriff's return states that he served the defendant with a certified copy of the complaint, this is sufficient to support a judgment by default. It cannot be argued that this does not show that the copy was certified by the clerk; he being the only person who could legally make the certificate, it must be presumed, in favor of the officer who has the general power of making service, that he discharged his duty in the legal mode. Curtis v. Herrick, 73 D. 632.

167. Sufficiency of filing. — The practice of filing pleas at different times, and after the answer has been filed, without first obtaining the leave of the court, is an irregularity not to be sanctioned, and calculated to perplex and leave it uncertain whether such pleas were received and went to the jury or not. Coles v. Kelsey, 47 D. 661.

A plaintiff, by conforming and not excepting to a bad rule of court requiring demurrers and answers to be filed at the same time, can take no advantage of it, save that it repels the inference that, by filing his answer, the defendant waives his demurrer. Butcher v. Bank, 83 D. 446.

168. Withdrawal of pleadings. — Where a demurrer to a petition is overruled, but not withdrawn, a withdrawal will be implied where the parties go before the jury on an issue made up under the direction of the court; the demurrer will not remain a confession of the facts in the petition. Dickey v. Malechi, 34 D. 130.

A refusal of defendant's motion for leave to withdraw a plea of the statute of limitations, where such motion is not made until the jury has been partly sworn, and if granted would give the defendant the privilege of opening the case, is not an improper exercise of the discretion of the court. Sanders v. Johnson, 36 D. 564.

After a verdict has been found for defendant on several pleas, he may withdraw one of them, if the verdict can be sustained on any one of the pleas. Godfrey v. Alton, 52 D. 476.

IX. AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS.

169. Amended pleadings in actions at law.* — 1. When allowable. — A declaration may be amended by inserting proper counts, provided the original cause of action remains the same. McVicker v. Beedy, 50 D. 666; Haverhill Ins. Co. v. Prescott, 80 D. 123.

An amendment changing a cause of action from assumpsit to trover may be allowed, in the discretion of the court, although such amendment may prevent the defendant from availing himself of a matter of set-off. Lee v. Lee, 64 D. 247.

Where a declaration contained a count for work and labor done and materials found, and the specifications of the plaintiff claimed the price of a carriage sold and delivered, an amendment thereto by filing a count upon an agreement by the defendant to take, and pay for a carriage to be built to his order, is for the same substantive cause of action and is properly allowed. Mizer v. Howarth, 32 D. 256.

A declaration may be amended on a motion in arrest of judgment, upon affidavits to show the true time of the commencement of the action, where rent is claimed which accrued after the beginning of the term of which the declaration is entitled. Zule v. Zule, 35 D. 600.

An amendment will be allowed in a suit upon an invalid promissory note, given in settlement of an account, by incorporating a count upon the original indebtedness. Perrin v. Keene, 36 D. 759.

An amendment of a declaration in indebitatus assumpsit at the trial by increasing the amount in the several counts and in the claim for damages, but not changing the cause of action, may be allowed. Tassey v. Church, 39 D. 65.

A plaintiff must declare upon the cause of action stated in his original writ; but if the facts set forth in the writ show the action to be improperly entitled therein, as if it be styled an action of trespass, whereas it should be an action on the case, he may amend in his declaration by inserting the proper name. Coggswell v. Baldwin, 40 D. 686.

An amendment should be allowed where the contract declared on, the cause of action alleged, and the redress sought are the same in the proposed amendment as in the original declaration. Stewart v. Kelly, 55 D. 487.

Where a plaintiff declares on an executed contract of sale, alleging performance by delivery of the property sold, and claiming damages for the defendant's refusal to pay for it, and the evidence shows that he had the property at the time and place appointed for delivery, but that the defendant refused to accept the same, or pay for it, he should be allowed to amend his declaration at the trial, so that its allegations may conform to the evidence. Id.

It is not error for the court to allow amendment to the declaration, in cases of libel and slander, striking out the original words, and inserting other words varying in terms, though amounting very much to the same in import, after the jury had been charged that the words proved would not sustain the declaration. Such amendment would not present a new cause of action. Hawks v. Patton, 63 D. 266.

A plaintiff will be allowed to amend his declaration by striking out items of illegal traffic, where he has brought an action for the value of a stock of goods sold, each article at an agreed price, but where the sale of some of the articles was prohibited by statute. Boyd v. Eaton, 69 D. 83.

2. When not allowable.—An amendment cannot be granted which changes the form of action, or introduces a new count for a new cause of action not contained in the original declaration. Carpenter v. Gookin, 21 D. 586; Ball v. Claffin, 16 D. 407; Lloyd v. Brewster, 27 D. 88; Stevenson v. Mudgett, 34 D. 153; Pridgin v. Strickland, 58 D. 124; Emerson v. Wilson, 34 D. 695. But the same contract or wrong may be alleged in a different manner, so as to conform to the facts and the proof; and such alteration may be allowed after the jury is sworn. Cassell v. Cooke, 11 D. 610; Stewart v. Kelly, 55 D. 487.

Where such an amendment was allowed by a justice of the peace, the county court, on an appeal thereto, must dismiss the action, and cannot restore the declaration and cause of action to what it was before the amendment. Emerson v. Wilson, 34 D. 695.

An amendment will not be allowed which gives to the plaintiff a new substantive cause of action, and which may take from the defendant the right of pleading the statute of limitations; so the plaintiff will not have leave to change his action for slander into one for malicious prosecution. Shock v. McChesney, 2 D. 415.

3. Time to amend.—A motion to amend a declaration after nonsuit has been directed is in season, where the nonsuit is taken off and a new trial ordered. Medbury v. Watson, 39 D. 726.

A plaintiff may amend his declaration so as to cure a mistake in the name of the defendant, even after a plea in abatement. Carterright v. Chabert, 49 D. 742.

After a demurrer to a declaration has been sustained, if plaintiff amends, he thereby waives the right to review the correctness of said ruling on appeal. Stallings v. Newman, 62 D. 723.

Plaintiff will not be allowed to amend his declaration after the defendant has been defaulted, and the cause has been argued upon the existing counts. Palmer v. York Bank, 36 D. 710.

No amendment of pleadings is allowed after the rendition of judgment. Landry v. Baugnon, 36 D. 606.

A plea in abatement is not amendable after demurrer filed thereto. Brown v. Nourse, 92 D. 583.

170. — in suits in equity. — 1. What amendments allowable.—Amendments are allowed in equity with great liberality. Codington v. Mott, 82 D. 258.

Where a bill is defective in omitting facts existing at the time, they should be inserted by amendment. Candler v. Pettit, 19 D. 399.

The complainant in equity relying on the statute of frauds to defeat a defense set up in the answer could formerly do so by a special replication, but that form of pleading is now disused, and he must now take advantage of the statute by amending his bill, so as to anticipate and avoid the defense. Tarleton v. Vietes, 41 D. 193.

A general and comprehensive statement of title may be sufficient where the complainant has no knowledge that such title would be controverted by the defendant; but when the title is impeached by the answer, it is more in accordance with ordinary practice to bring forward by amendment a distinct statement of the title, instead of simply traversing the defendant's answer. Sanborn v. Kittredge, 50 D. 58.

A mere clerical mistake of a single figure in a bill in equity the court will permit to be corrected instantly upon suggestion unless the opposite party has been misled by it. Howell v. Ashmore, 57 D. 371.

Error in overruling a demurrer or admitting evidence is cured by amendment removing the ground of demurrer or of objection to the evidence; as where a bill is filed by one in his own name as assignee of a cause of suit, when it should have been filed in the name of the alleged assignor, and a demurrer interposed on that ground is overruled, and an objection to proof of the alleged assignment is also overruled, and the bill is afterwards amended by making the assignor, or his representative, a complainant. Huff v. McDonald, 68 D. 487.

An amendment to a bill does not make a new case, and is properly allowed in a case where the bill is filed by a husband, as sole legatee of his wife, to recover her distributive share in her father's estate, and the amended bill exhibited a marriage contract which secured to him a life estate in his wife's personalty, and to her a separate estate in the remainder; for both titles set out give him the entire interest in the subject-matter. Blackwell v. Blackwell, 70 D. 556.

An error in the names of parties to a petition in a probate proceeding may be corrected by an amendment. And where a petition is irregularly presented by the attorneys of the legatees in their own name instead of the name of the legatees, this error may be corrected by substituting the names of the legatees for those of the attorneys. Lucich v. Medin, 93 D. 376.

Where the original bill was to compel a guardian to account, and to settle his affairs, an amended bill, which, in addition, to such relief, prayed for a reformation of the guardian's bond, so as to make it payable to the probate judge just elected, where it had by mistake been made payable to the judge whose term had just expired, is not a departure nor demurrable. Hall v. Hall, 94 D. 703.

2. Time to amend. — Material amendments in equity, as a general rule, should be applied for and made before the cause is at issue. So held where an amendment sought to make a new case, inconsistent with that made by original bill; and in the case of an application to amend a bill for the specific performance of a contract, by charging the contract to be fraudulent, and praying that it be declared void. Codington v. Mott, 82 D. 258.

Amendments are not generally allowable, if the parties are at issue upon the points of the original bill, and witnesses have been examined. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

After a submission of his case on final hearing, a party has no right to the privilege of being allowed to amend. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 53 D. 663.

Formal amendments, as the introduction of necessary parties, and amendments in the prayer of the bill to meet the exigency of the case, will be made up to and after the final hearing. Codington v. Mott, 82 D. 258.

An application to amend a bill should be promptly made after the discovery of the facts upon which it is based. Id.

171. In actions under codes.* — 1. Generally. — The true criterion for determining whether an amendment to a complaint is allowable, is to inquire whether the proposed amendment is another cause of controversy, or is upon the same contract or injury. Maxwell v. Harrison, 52 D. 385.

The words "as trustee" may be stricken out of a complaint wherever they are added to the name of the defendant, so as to let the suit stand against him individually. Id.

The object of the California statute in reference to amendments to pleadings is the furtherance of justice, and to that extent applications for amendments ought to be treated favorably. Cooke v. Spears, 56 D. 348.

A plaintiff may so amend his petition as to change the character or right in which he sues, upon the payment of costs, where the change does not deprive the defendant of any defense, or prejudice any right that may have accrued to him at the time of the amendment. Whitehead v. Heron, 65 D. 145.

Filing an amended answer that meets objections set out in a demurrer to the original answer is an admission that the demurrer was well taken, and it is not error to proceed to trial upon issues of fact without a decision upon the demurrer. Shirley v. Fearne, 69 D. 375.

Where a cause of action instituted at law is one of exclusively equitable jurisdiction, it is the duty of the plaintiff, under the Kentucky code, to amend his pleadings, and move the court to transfer the action to the proper docket. Cobb v. Stewart, 83 D. 465.

An amendment to pleadings should be allowed at any stage of the proceedings, when it will not delay the suit nor affect the rights of the adverse party, and a motion to strike from the files ought not to be sustained without first giving an opportunity to amend. Butcher v. Bank of Brownsville, 83 D. 446.

The court may amend pleadings by inserting the correct name of a defendant, either before or after judgment. Parry v. Woodson, 84 D. 51.

A plaintiff may amend his pleadings by striking out the wrong name and inserting the correct name of defendant. Parry v. Woodson, 84 D. 51.

* Amendments allowed under code practice, see note, 84 D. 160-162.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A complaint may be amended by striking out the name of one of the complainants. Murray v. Hay, 43 D. 773.

A complaint cannot be amended in the supreme court so as to make it correspond with the verdict; but the district court, in a proper case, may, before judgment, direct the complaint to be so amended. Hooper v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 85 D. 211.

Where the plaintiff has two actions pending for the same debt, one in New York and one in New Jersey, and pending the latter suit a judgment in his favor is rendered in the New York suit, he will not be allowed to amend his pleadings from assumpsit on the claim to debt on the judgment. Barnes v. Gibbs, 86 D. 210.

Where an action is brought before the statute begins to run, a substituted plaintiff cannot amend his complaint and incorporate a new cause of action so as to bar or embarrass the defense of the statute, which might be pleaded against the new cause of action. Bullion M. Co. v. Cræcus Gold etc. M. Co., 90 D. 526.

The provisions of the Wisconsin code respecting amendments of complaint in case of variance do not apply where the complaint states no cause of action. K— v. H—, 91 D. 397.

There is no error in allowing plaintiffs to amend a petition so as to increase the amount claimed as damages. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

A defect or omission in a complaint that no person, natural or artificial, is named as plaintiff is beyond the reach of amendment. All proceedings under such complaint are null and void. Proprietors etc. v. Yellow Jacket S. M. Co., 97 D. 510.

The Pennsylvania act of 1806, relating to amendments, extends only to the declaration or plea; and amendments beyond the plea are to be tested by a legal discretion, as at common law. Diehl v. Adams Co. M. I. Co., 98 D. 302.

A proposed amendment to a replication, which would introduce entirely new matter inconsistent with the replication already filed, is not an amendment of form, and its refusal is not error. Id.

2. Discretion of the court. — The court has discretion, under Alabama code, to allow amendment of complaint after the jury have been instructed; and the judgment will not be reversed on that ground. Prater v. Miller, 60 D. 521.

Allowing amendments to pleadings is passed to discretion of court by the California statute declaring that courts may, "in furtherance of justice," permit amendments to be made; but if that discretion is shown by the record to have been abused, in that it has been illegally exercised, it would be the duty of the appellate court to correct it. Cooke v. Spears, 56 D. 348.

Under the Indiana statute, the court may, at any time in its discretion and on such terms as may be deemed proper, direct any material allegation to be inserted, struck out, or modified, to conform the pleadings to the facts proved, when the amendment does not substantially change the claim of defense (See 2 R. S., p. 48, sec. 99). Miles v. Vanhorn, 79 D. 477.

If facts are developed upon the trial that will enable the defendant to impeach the transaction upon which suit is based, or if he is taken by surprise by these facts, or if other facts have come to his knowledge since making up the issues, or if any other good excuse can be given for not having made them up, so as to admit desired testimony, he should be permitted to amend. But this is a matter of discretion with the court, and will be presumed to have been soundly exercised until the contrary is shown. Allen v. Ranson, 100 D. 232.

In making amendments, leave of the court is asked for the purpose only of notifying the adverse party, and preventing surprise. Teas v. McDonald, 65 D. 65.

172. Supplemental bill in equity. — Proceedings founded on an original bill, so entirely defective that no valid decree can be made, cannot be sustained by a supplemental bill based on subsequent facts. Candler v. Pettit, 19 D. 399.

Where a complainant had no ground for proceeding originally, but subsequently becomes entitled to relief, he should file a new bill. Id.

A supplemental bill is proper when the original bill is sufficient to entitle the complainant to one kind of relief, and facts afterwards occur giving him a right to other or more extensive relief. Id.

A supplemental bill for an injunction may be filed, founded on facts subsequently arising, where the original bill was for a re exeat and an injunction, and the injunction was disallowed because the party was not then entitled to it. Id.

Where a bill is filed by a mortgagor against the mortgagee, before the mortgage is due, for an injunction to stay waste, the complainant may, after it has become due, file his supplemental bill to have the equity of redemption foreclosed, and the mortgaged premises sold. Allen v. Taylor, 29 D. 721.

Leave of the court should be obtained to file a supplemental bill; but where no objection is taken on this ground, it will be considered as waived by the voluntary appearance of the defendant. Id.

Complainant's assignee can in no case proceed in the name of the original party, but must make himself a party by supplemental bill. Mills v. Hoag, 31 D. 271.

A petition is the proper mode of affecting a fund in equity, where no other parties are to be brought in to litigate the question than such as are or should have been parties to the original bill, though it is otherwise where additional parties are required. Hays v. Miles, 31 D. 70.

A bill stating the previous proceedings of the court, not with a view to their alteration or amendment, but as a portion of the facts out of which the complainant's equity arises, is an original bill, though it is alleged to be a supplemental bill. Brooks v. Brooke, 38 D. 310.

New averments to a bill in equity are properly alleged in a supplemental bill, and in it any party may be brought before the court who has been omitted to be introduced at the stage of the cause in which an amendment for that purpose may be made. Dow v. Jewell, 45 D. 371.

The orators should file a supplemental bill stating the grounds upon which they desired to contest the release, in order to have the matters properly in issue before the court, on the coming in of the answer setting up a release of the defendant's liability, where the orators desire to restrict its operation. Fletcher v. Jackson, 56 D. 98.

173. Supplemental complaint under code. — In an action to set aside a conveyance of land from husband to wife as fraudulent, evidence on the plaintiff's part that a mortgage had been executed by the husband and wife on said land after the commencement of the suit, and that the money raised by such mortgage was invested in other real estate in the wife's name, was held to be inadmissible without a supplemental complaint, setting up the facts and asking appropriate relief against such other real estate. Pite v. Miles, 99 D. 148.

174. Supplemental answer in equity. — A supplemental answer explaining equivocal expressions in the original answer may be allowed, permitting the first answer to stand. Murdock's Case, 20 D. 381.

The court will not permit a supplemental answer to be filed, where the defendant permits the cause to be put at issue upon his answer, asks and obtains a continuance to procure the attendance of a witness, and allows many special and regular terms to intervene, with the privilege of applying to the judge at chambers for any interlocutory order, before asking leave to file such supplemental answer. The time of the application would alone justify the court in refusing the leave asked. Stout v. Shea, 42 D. 579.

A supplemental answer will be permitted according to chancery practice, in small and immaterial matters, where a mistake has crept into the engrossment, where new matter has been discovered since filing the original answer, in cases of surprise, and in mistakes of names. Id.

Supplemental answers will not be permitted according to chancery practice, where the defendant mistook the law, has unintentionally perjured himself, and an indictment is suspended over him, and has not failed to set forth his defense in his answer from an inability to state it with precision. Id.

The court will not permit a supplemental answer to be filed where it is not in aid or explanation of the answer, but assumes entirely new and distinct grounds of defense, as one resting upon a penal statute of the United States, even though in the petition for leave to file it the defendant has sworn that he intended to swear to the original answer in the sense in which he wished to be permitted to swear to his supplement. Id.

Granting of leave to file a supplemental answer, by the court of equity, is matter of discretion, and its action upon an application for such leave cannot therefore be assigned as error, or reviewed on appeal. Frisby v. Parkhurst, 96 D. 503.

X. REMEDIES FOR ERRORS AND DEFECTS; WAIVER.

175. General rules. — A defective declaration should be taken advantage of by demurrer, or in arrest of judgment. Beals v. Olmstead, 58 D. 150.

An improper blending of several causes of action may be cured by motion to compel an election. Mooney v. Kennett, 61 D. 576.

The insufficiency of a declaration cannot be taken advantage of by way of objection to evidence offered in support of the averments in the declaration. Morehouse v. Northrop, 39 D. 211.

176. Striking out pleadings, generally. — A plea which sets up in bar of the action an agreement between the parties, without stating what the terms of that agreement were, is defective, and may be properly stricken out on motion. Mead v. Hughes, 50 D. 123.

Pleas inapplicable or insufficient may be stricken out, or demurrers to them sustained, without error. Swafford v. Whipple, 54 D. 498.

An error in striking out a good plea is cured if the defendant is afterwards allowed to avail himself fully of all the matters of defense on which he saw fit to rely. Sanders v. Young, 73 D. 175.

When an amended answer is stricken from the files, the original answer stands as if no amended answer had been filed. Hill v. Jamieson, 79 D. 414.

177. Sham pleadings. — A sham answer may be stricken out, although verified. Hayward v. Grant, 97 D. 223; or one which does not aver any new matter, but consists merely of denials of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the several matters alleged in the complaint, if such denials are proved to be false; and this rule

* Striking out answer as sham, see note, 72 D 521-526.

applies, though the answer was duly verified. People v. McCumber, 72 D. 515.

A defendant may protect himself against unnecessary costs by putting in issue only the allegations in the complaint, or by conceding them to be true, and setting up new matter, thus narrowing the proofs upon the trial; but the plaintiff is protected against sham answers, which may be stricken out on motion. Such answer consists of one good in form, but false in fact, not pleaded in good faith, and which sets up new matter in defense which is false. Piercy v. Sabin, 70 D. 692.

178. Frivolous pleadings. — A motion to strike out one defense as "sham" may be united with an application for judgment on another defense as "frivolous." People v. McCumber, 72 D. 515.

179. Judgment on the pleadings. — Dilatory pleas being found against the defendant, the judgment must be in chief and peremptory, and he can not go into his defense as upon the general issue. Boston Glass Manuf. v. Langdon, 35 D. 292.

A plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings, where the defendant denies the right of the plaintiff, and sets up title in himself. Union Water Co. v. Crary, 85 D. 145; or if the answer, qualified by an offer of proof upon the trial, sets up a defense. Lamberton v. Windom, 90 D. 301.

180. Striking out particular allegations or defenses, generally. — An adverse party may move to strike out unessential parts of pleading under code system, if anything is stated which is not essential to the claim or defense; or in other words, anything that is not an issuable fact. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

An unessential or immaterial allegation is one that can be stricken from a pleading without leaving it insufficient, and need not be proved or disproved. Whether or not an allegation is material may be determined by the question, "Can it be made the subject of a material issue?" In other words, "If it be denied, will the failure to prove it decide the case in whole or in part?" If it will not, then the fact alleged is not material. Id.

An averment in a complaint in a foreclosure suit, that the mortgage was executed by defendant (thus alleging in effect that it is a legal mortgage), may be struck out as surplusage if the complaint also sets out a copy of the instrument, which from its face does not appear to be a legal as distinguished from an equitable mortgage. Love v. Water and Mining Co., 91 D. 602.

181. — as irrelevant. — Irrelevant matter in a pleading might be stricken out on the motion of the party prejudiced thereby, prior to the act of 1856 amending the Ohio code of civil procedure. State v. Harper, 67 D. 363.

In an action for the seizure and conversion of a bag of gold coin, the complaint, after the usual and only necessary averments, proceeded to detail the manner in which the seizure was made, with the incidents occurring on the street, and everything done by the defendants, the plaintiff, and the "crowd," relating to or constituting the evidence of the wrongful conversion: Held, all this narration should have been stricken out as irrelevant and redundant matter. Green v. Palmer, 76 D. 492.

In an action for breach of contract, admitted by defendant to be in full force, and to contain an agreed price for certain specified services to be rendered by him, an allegation in his answer as to the value of services rendered is immaterial, and should be stricken out. Starbuck v. Dunklee, 88 D. 68.

A plaintiff who regards the denials contained in an answer as insufficient may take advantage of the fact, by a motion to strike them out on the ground that they are sham and irrelevant. Tynan v. Walker, 95 D. 152.

Denials contained in an answer may be stricken out, on motion, as sham and irrelevant, when they do not explicitly traverse the material allegations of the complaint. Id.

182. — as scandalous. — In equity pleading, words, however disparaging or abusive, are not scandalous unless they are also "impertinent," or in other words, irrelevant, and put in for the mere purpose of scandal. Henry v. Henry, 98 D. 87.

183. — as impertinent. — Scandalous and impertinent charges in an answer to a bill will be expunged. Thus, where a bill was filed for the purpose of setting off a judgment recovered by a third person against the defendant, and assigned to the complainant, against a judgment recovered by the defendant against the complainant for slander, and the answer, after denying that the assignment was in good faith, and alleging it to be colorable and without consideration, charged that the assignor of the judgment was the real author of the slander against the defendant, and that the complainant uttered it at his instigation, under a promise of indemnity, in pursuance of which such assignment was made, the latter charge was expunged as scandalous and impertinent, with costs against the defendant. Sommers v. Torrey, 28 D. 411.

Counsel signing a pleading containing scandalous and impertinent matter, is liable, it seems, for the cost of expunging it. Id.

A defendant is not allowed to put the same matter twice in issue by allegations in different parts of his answer. Id.

An allegation that a sale was unjust, iniquitous, and fraudulent, is impertinent, if not accompanied with a statement of the facts, showing wherein the fraud and iniquity consisted. Baird v. Baird, 31 D. 399.

184. — as repugnant. — Where a complaint sets out in terms a contract sued on, and also contains an allegation which places a false construction upon the contract, such repugnant allegation may be rejected as surplusage. Love v. Water & M. Co., 91 D. 602.

185. Making allegations more definite and certain. — Common counts for goods sold and delivered, work and labor done, money had and received, etc., are sufficient under the code, as they were under the practice before the code; and if the opposing party objects to this form of pleading, he may, under the code, move to have it made more specific. Meagher v. Morgan, 87 D. 476.

186. Waiver of defects by failing to demur. — The legality of a contract set out in a declaration is not open to revision, if defendant has failed to demur. Reid v. Edwards, 31 D. 720.

The failure to demur to a bill in equity which states a cause of action in the alternative, one allegation of which is insufficient, and answering the same, is a waiver of such objection to the bill, and can not be taken advantage of on appeal. Andrews v. McCoy, 42 D. 669.

An objection to a declaration in tort because laid with a continuando comes too late after issue joined, and trial, and judgment rendered. If the objection is good at all, it should have been made by demurrer. Great Western R. R. Co. v. Helm, 81 D. 226.

A defect, if any, in declaring on a sealed instrument by averring simply that the defendant "covenanted" with the plaintiff, without saying "under seal," or using any technical word or phrase which in legal acceptance imports a seal, is one of form merely, and is waived by failing to demur, and pleading over; and it is not error to allow the contract to go to the jury. Cooke v. England, 92 D. 618.

187. Effect of pleading to cure prior errors. — 1. What is cured. — If the declaration, in an action on a bond for the purchase price bid at a sheriff's sale, omit to allege the sale, it will be bad on demurrer. But such defect will be cured by notice of special matter in defense, wherein is set out the fact of sale. Friedly v. Sheets, 11 D. 691.

A bill in chancery should be so certain in setting forth the case as to enable the chancellor to pronounce his decree at once; but if relief is sought on a lost paper, and the complainant mistakes his case the defect may be aided by the answer. Rankin v. Maxwell, 12 D. 431.

The objection of multifariousness to a bill in equity which sets up two distinct causes of complaint is obviated by defendants' answer that they have entirely removed and abated one of them since the filing of the bill. The allegation in the bill may then be deemed stricken out. Whitney v. Union R'y Co., 71 D. 718.

Averments in an answer may cure a petition, defective in material allegations. Erwin v. Shaffer, 72 D. 613.

2. What is not cured. — An improper misjoinder of two causes of action is not cured by a plea and judgment, where the defendant pleaded the general issue, and then suffered judgment by default. Whipple v. Fuller, 29 D. 330.

A misjoinder of causes of action must be corrected by defendant before filing answer, or all objections to this defect are waived. Chiles v. Drake, 74 D. 406.

A defect in an answer as to matters of substance is not cured by filing a general replication to the answer. Byers v. Fowler, 54 D. 271.

A complaint containing no cause of action cannot be aided by reply. Bernheimer v. Marshall, 72 D. 79.

Where the court has no authority to take cognizance of the subject-matter of the suit, the proceedings may be dismissed at any stage of the case when that fact is made to appear; but to take advantage of a personal exemption, the objection should be interposed before pleading to the merits. Thompson v. Steamboat J. D. Morton, 59 D. 658.

An objection that equity has no jurisdiction, because there is an adequate remedy at law, comes too late after answer filed, unless it is in a case where equity could not entertain jurisdiction under any circumstances. Mages v. Magee, 99 D. 571.

188. Waiver by failure to object. — When a defendant takes issue upon an imperfect pleading and thus makes it necessary for a plaintiff to go through trial, he waives all exceptions of which he might avail himself; but material omissions he cannot waive, for in such case there is no foundation on which the court can render judgment. Anderson v. Read, 5 D. 661.

The introduction of proof by the plaintiff at a trial, in support of material averments in his complaint, which were so defectively denied that, upon motion, such denials might have been stricken out as sham and irrelevant, is a waiver of all objections to the sufficiency of said denials; and an instruction to the jury, asked by the plaintiff, to the effect that the facts so averred were admitted to be true for all the purposes of the trial, may properly be refused. Tynae v. Walker, 95 D. 152.

A plaintiff waives his objection to the defendants being allowed to appear and plead without giving special bail by joining issue without making the objection, and the appearance bail are discharged. Culpeper Mfg. Soc. v. Digges, 18 D. 708.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

An apparent variance between an instrument introduced in evidence from the one set out in a pleading, is obviated by the failure of plaintiff to object to its introduction, such failure being deemed a confession that the instrument in evidence is relevant to the issue. Leidig v. Rawson, 29 D. 354.

An objection to the rejection of pleas is waived by going to trial on those remaining, and taking no exceptions to the ruling of the court below. Swafford v. Whipple, 54 D. 498.

In a proceeding for a divorce, where the plaintiff seeks also to have a deed from the defendant to his sister set aside, and for that purpose makes the sister a party, if the sister answers without objection, she must be considered as having submitted her rights under that deed for adjudication in such proceeding. Feigley v. Feigley, 61 D. 375.

If a plaintiff declares in assumpsit on a deed, the defendant must take advantage of the irregularity by his pleadings, or at the trial when the instrument is introduced in evidence, otherwise this ground of defense must be treated as waived. Harris v. Morse, 77 D. 269.

Any objections to common counts under the code on account of indefiniteness or uncertainty are waived by proceeding to trial. Meagher v. Morgan, 87 D. 476.

An irregularity in not answering a special plea is waived if the parties go to trial without objection on the part of the defendant. Parmelee v. Fischer, 74 D. 138.

Where a defense must be specially pleaded, the omission to plead it is not cured by the introduction, without objection, of evidence in support of it, and the finding of the facts in relation to it by the court. McComb v. Reed, 87 D. 115.

189. — by delay in objecting. — The want of legal precision in stating the defense of usury in an answer can not be objected to after issue joined on such answer. Chambers v. Chalmers, 23 D. 572.

Objections that answers are irresponsible to interrogatories come too late at trial. Nelson v. Iverson, 60 D. 442.

An objection to the mode of bringing a case before a competent court must be made before a general appearance and plea in bar. Schenley v. Com. 78 D. 359.

190. Disregarding harmless errors. — The omission of the word "not" in an averment of non-payment is cured by statute of jeofails; and even if it were not, the declaration would be held good, where it is apparent from the language used that the omission was a mere clerical error. Baldwin v. Banks, 71 D. 249.

The plaintiff need not state his cause of action with syllogistic accuracy. If bad grammar does not vitiate a declaration, other faults of style ought not to have that effect, unless they produce such a degree of obscurity as to give rise to the belief that the tribunal before whom the cause is heard might be misled as to the true issue. Holt v. Inhab. of Penobscot, 96 D. 429.

191. Errors cured by verdict. — 1. What is cured. — The general principle of aiding defects in a pleading by intendment after verdict is, that where there is any defect, imperfection, or omission in any pleading, whether in substance or form, which would have been a fatal objection upon demurrer, yet if the issue joined be such as necessarily required proof on the trial of the facts so defectively or imperfectly stated or omitted, and without which it is not to be presumed that either the judge would direct the jury to give or the jury would have given the verdict, such defect, imperfection, or omission is cured by the verdict. Roper v. Clay, 59 D. 314.

If a declaration contain a substantive cause of action, though informally set forth, it will be aided after verdict. Miles v. Oldfield, 2 D. 412.

A defect in a petition which should be assailed by demurrer is cured by verdict. Crossen v. White, 87 D. 420.

Where there is a defective statement in a pleading which would have been fatal upon demurrer, and where an issue has been joined which necessarily required the proof of such defectively stated fact, and where the verdict could not have been rendered without such proof of such fact, the imperfection or omission is cured by verdict. Richardson v. Farmer, 88 D. 129.

After a verdict, the allegations of fraud and deceit in the declaration are equivalent to the charge of an actual scienter. Osgood v. Lewis, 18 D. 317.

The omission to allege value makes a pleading demurrable, but will be cured after verdict. Lune v. Maine Mut. F. Ins. Co., 28 D. 150.

The want of alleging a special demand in a declaration, is a defect that is cured after verdict. Biss v. Arnold, 30 D. 467.

A variance between a writ and a declaration would be cured by verdict under the old forms of pleading. Wilms v. White, 90 D. 113.

Where an act, which the plaintiff was bound to perform within a reasonable time, is alleged to have been done within a reasonable time, to wit, on or about such a day, it is sufficient after verdict. Nichols v. Blakeslee, 2 D. 95.

A declaration in an action against a corporation for a tort stating that the act complained of was unjustly and wrongfully done, without alleging that it was not within the scope of the powers of the corporation, is good after verdict. Chestnut Hill T. Co. v. Rutter, 8 D. 675.

2. What is not cured. — Where an agreement was to convey the party's interest in a certain suit, and (in case the defendant in that suit was not legally bound by his undertaking) then to convey the right of such party to certain land, a declaration charging a refusal to convey the interest in the suit, or the right to the land, without setting forth a failure to recover in the suit, and a subsequent refusal to convey the land is substantially defective, and is not cured by a general verdict assessing entire damages. Austin v. Whitlock, 4 D. 550.

A verdict in favor of a pleader establishes the truth of all his material allegations of fact and nothing more, and when a fact material to the plaintiff's right of recovery is omitted altogether from his declaration, or is not so connected with other facts which are stated that the latter cannot be proved without proving the former, the verdict of the jury ascertains nothing in regard to such omitted fact, and cannot aid the declaration. McCune v. Norwich City Gas Co., 79 D. 273.

An allegation of duty or liability in a declaration is of no avail, unless the facts necessary to raise it are stated. It is but the statement of a legal inference never traversable and of no avail in pleading. Such defect is not cured by verdict. Id.

PLEDGE: COLLATERAL SECURITY.

[Includes the rights and obligations arising out of the bailment of personal property as security for the payment of a debt, or the performance of some other obligation on the part of the bailor.]

Attachment of thing pledged, see ATTACHMENT, 31.

Distinguished from mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, 19.

Of bonds held as collateral, see BONDS, 26.

Of collaterals, see BROKERS, 16.

Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS, 34.

Of goods, by factors, see FACTORS, 10.

Power of representatives to make, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 66.

Subject of, when reached by execution, see EXECUTION, 29.

I. PLEDGE OR PAWN.

II. COLLATERAL SECURITY.

I. PLEDGE OR PAWN.

1. Power to pledge franchises and rights of a corporation implies, as incident thereto the power to pledge everything that may be necessary to the enjoyment of the franchise and upon which its real value depends. Phillips v. Winslow, 68 D. 729.

Where one holding certificates of stock in his own name as "trustee" pledges them for his own debt, the term "trustee" is a sufficient notice to the pledgee of the trust and he takes them at his peril. Shaw v. Spencer, 1 R. 115.

The owner of stock certificates, fraudulently pledged by one holding them as trustee, is not estopped from claiming them of the pledgee by standing by, after having notified the pledgee of his claim and demanding the stock, and without protest witnessing the pledgee pay an assessment theretofore made on the stock. Id.

2. What constitutes a pledge.* — A pledge is a bailment of personal property, as security for the performance of some obligation. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

Shares of corporate stock may be pledged, and although their owner transfers them absolutely in form, yet if the intention of the parties is that the transferee shall hold them only as security for money lent, and that the owner may redeem them at any time (even after the loan falls due) before the lender has exercised his power of sale, the transaction is a pledge, not a mortgage. Wilson v. Little, 51 D. 307.

Coupon bonds payable to the bearer may be pledged by the party issuing them, because they are securities usually sold in the stock market, and understood by the parties to be designed for that use, and not because party's ordinary bond or mortgage, deposited as a collateral, could be so regarded, semble. Morris Canal and Banking Co. v. Fisher, 64 D. 423.

3. Distinction between pledge and mortgage.† — Although a pledge is not technically a mortgage, the subject of it not having been assigned or transferred by an instrument known to the law as such, with a condition of defeasance, yet, where it is given as a security for a debt, it partakes of the nature of a mortgage; and is subject to some of its incidents, including the right of redemption, and no good reason exists why equity should withhold its aid from the pledgor seeking a return of the pledge in a case where the law cannot restore it. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

4. Consideration, delivery, etc.‡ — A liability for another on a contract still in force, is a sufficient consideration for a mortgage or pledge; and the ratio of the consideration to the value of the thing pledged is of no importance. Jewett v. Warren, 7 D. 74.

Delivery of possession must accompany a pledge of a personal chattel to render it valid. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686; and cannot be dispensed with by merely setting aside the article pledged, or by the pledgor's consenting to act as bailee thereof for the pledgee. First Nat. Bank v. Nelson, 95 D. 400.

If the pawnee immediately redelivers the thing pledged to the pawnor the special property therein created by the bailment is determined. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

Pledge of a steamboat need not be recorded, and the lien of the pledgee, who remains in possession, even without registering or recording it, is superior to that of a subsequent bona fide execution creditor. Thoms v. Southard, 28 D. 467.

5. Relative rights of the parties. — The relation of pledgor and pledgee is a legal relation; its rights and duties are defined by law; and the remedies for a violation of such duties are ordinarily in a court of law. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dabrymple, 89 D. 779.

A general owner having possession of a pledge may lawfully dispose of it or maintain trespass for it. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

6. Rights and duties of pledgee, generally.* — A specific pledge or appropriation of goods, with intent that they shall be a security for payment, vests the property in them, as soon as deposited with a bailee, in the person to whom they are to be delivered. Desha v. Pope, 41 D. 76.

The duty of the pledgee is to safely keep property pledged, without using it, and without causing detriment thereto. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

A pledge of personal property passes to the pledgee merely the possession, with a right of retainer until the debt is paid, or other engagement is fulfilled, for which the article pledged is given as security. Luckette v. Townsend, 49 D. 723.

The amount due from a factor is in nature of a fund provided for pledgee's benefit by the pledgor, and which the pledgee is not at liberty to wholly disregard, and claim the entire balance of his debt as if no means of satisfaction had ever been at his command, where he has the superior right to pursue the fund by virtue of an understanding that the goods received by him should be disposed of through a factor, and the debtor credited with the amount of sales. Bigelow v. Walker, 58 D. 156.

The pledge of personal property is a "mortgage" thereof within the attachment act, the word being therein used in a general sense meaning security; and by receiving such pledge as security for a debt, the creditor gives up his right to enforce his debt by attachment. Payne v. Bensley, 68 D. 318.

7. The care and diligence required. — If a pawn is lost the pledgee can not recover on the debt for which it stood as security, without showing that the loss was in no wise attributable to any want of necessary care and diligence upon his part. Orocker v. Monroe, 36 D. 660.

* Duties and liabilities of pledgees, see note, 49 D. 785-738.

Remedies of the pledgee, see note, 79 D. 499-506.

The bailee of a pawn is bound for ordinary care and answerable for ordinary neglect. If a theft of the pawn is occasioned by his negligence, he is responsible; if without any negligence, he is discharged from liability. Petty v. Overall, 94 D. 634.

The care required of a pledgee is that of a prudent administrator; he is not subjected to the requisition of the most exact diligence. Commercial Bank v. Martin, 45 D. 87.

A detriment happening to pledged property may be set off against the debt. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

8. Lien of pledgee. — The lien on personal property left in pledge or subject to an equitable lien, may be enforced in equity, if the property has been taken by the debtor from the pledgee. At law the lien incident to a pledge depends upon possession. Coleman v. Shelton, 16 D. 639.

The pawnee by giving up possession of the pawn, though for a special purpose, loses his lien, and cannot recover the pawn from an innocent purchaser of the pawnor. Bodenhammer v. Newsom, 69 D. 775.

The pledgee of goods loses his lien thereon by surrendering possession of them to a third person and taking from him a written guaranty of the debt. But such third person acquires a new lien on such goods, not only for the security of his own debt, but as an indemnity against the liability which he incurs to the pledgee, provided the pledgor, who is indebted to him, consents to the transaction, when it is made, or ratifies it afterward. And when the pledgor was absent when the transaction took place, but, on being informed of it the next day, expressed his gratification with the arrangement, this is a sufficient ratification thereof. Treadwell v. Davis, 94 D. 770.

9. His right to sell, assign, or transfer thing pledged. — Where the pledge is for an indefinite period, the pawnor should be called on to redeem before the pawnee can dispose of the property, and if he is absent, or cannot be found, judicial proceedings should be had to bar his right of redemption. Garlick v. James, 7 D. 294.

Sale of a pledge at the maturity of a debt is not required, under an instrument executed by pledgee to pledgor, simply dispensing with notice to the latter to redeem before sale. Robinson v. Hurley, 79 D. 497.

A sale of a pledge by the pledgee before the maturity of a debt secured thereby, if unauthorized by the agreement, renders the pledgee liable for a breach of trust, though he afterwards purchases other articles of the same kind and value to replace those sold. Dykens v. Allen, 42 D. 87.

An express authority in a contract to sell a pledge for non-payment of the debt at maturity excludes any implied authority to sell at any other time. 1*b*.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A pledgee holding a pledge as collateral security may, after the debt falls due, elect one of three remedies: 1. Proceed personally against pledgor for his debt, without sale of pledge; 2. File a bill in chancery for a judicial sale under a regular decree of foreclosure; 3. Sell the pledge without judicial process upon reasonable notice to debtor to redeem. Robinson v. Hurley, 79 D. 497.

A pledgee can not sell the pawn without demanding payment of the debt and giving notice to the pledgor of the time and place of sale. Wilson v. Little, 51 D. 307.

A pledgee, upon the failure of the pledgor to redeem, may either sell the articles pledged, under a judicial decree, or at auction, upon giving reasonable notice to the pledgor to redeem, and apprising him of the time and place of sale. Luckett v. Townsend, 49 D. 723; Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

A pledge is not forfeited by non-payment of the debt at the time stipulated; but the pledgee may then proceed to sell the property to pay his debt, interest, and expenses. The residue, if any, must be paid the pledgor. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

A pledgee has in no case an authority to sell, without judicial process, unless he first gives the pledgor personal notice to redeem, and of the intended sale. Id.

A pledgee is bound to notify the pledgor of the intent to sell a pledge, after default in payment, and of the time and place of sale, in the absence of a contract to sell ex mero motu. Davis v. Funk, 80 D. 519.

If a pledgee sell the property without giving notice to the pledgor, the latter may recover the value of the property from the former without tendering payment of the debt. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248; Luckett v. Townsend, 49 D. 723; Wilson v. Little, 51 D. 307.

Consent that the pledge may sell without giving notice does not relieve him from the necessity of demanding payment of the debt before he sells. Wilson v. Little, 51 D. 307.

A stipulation in a contract of pledge, to the effect that upon the pledgor's failure to make prompt payment, the title should become absolute in the pledgee, is void. Luckett v. Townsend, 49 D. 723.

The measure of damages in an action for wrongfully selling a pledge, discussed in a case where there had been negotiations between pledgor and pledgee of stocks for a payment of the debt and a return of similar stocks to those which the pledgee had received and sold, pending which, such stocks had risen in value; and—held, that the pledgor was entitled, under such circumstances, to recover the highest value down to the time when the negotiations were broken off. Wilson v. Little, 51 D. 307.

Where a debtor leaves property with his creditor as security for a loan, with directions to sell it, deduct his debt, and pay the balance to the debtor, and the creditor, instead of doing so, exchanges it for other property, the property got by the exchange does not necessarily belong to the creditor, nor is it necessarily liable to attachment for the payment of his debts. The right of property is determined by the debtor's ratification or repudiation of the contract of exchange. Strong v. Adams, 73 D. 305.

If the subject of a pledge is divisible, and the pledgee sells more than is necessary to satisfy the debt, he is liable in damages to the pledgor; the pledgor's acceptance of the surplus of such sale will not defeat his right to recover such damages; and the measure of damages is the difference between the price for which the excess was sold and the price necessarily paid by the pledgor to replace it. Fitzgerald v. Blocker, 29 R. 3.

10. Duty to return subject of pledge. — The pledgee must redeliver the identical article pledged, where it is distinctive in its character, and capable of being recognized among other things of a like nature, or where a mark is set upon it with a view to its discrimination, but not, where, from its very nature, it is incapable of identification if once mingled with other things of the same kind. Gilpin v. Howell, 45 D. 720; and for a failure to do so renders himself liable in trover, for the full value of the property pledged, without any deduction for his debt. Ball v. Stanley, 26 D. 263; and equity may be invoked for this purpose where the law fails. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

The pledgee of certificates of stock is not required to keep and return the identical shares pledged. Gilpin v. Howell, 45 D. 720.

The pledgee is bound to restore the pledge in the condition in which he received it, on payment of the debt. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

11. Liabilities of pledgee, generally. — The profits of the labor of a slave pledged for the payment of a debt must be accounted for by the pawnee, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary; and if such profits have discharged the debt, the pawnor is entitled to the possession of the slave. Geron v. Geron, 50 D. 143.

A borrowed of B two hundred dollars, and to secure payment pledged a negro slave, whose services were worth sixty dollars a year. A paid B the money borrowed, and received back the slave. A then demanded of B satisfaction for the services of the slave, and upon refusal, brought his action, declaring upon a quantum meruit, and also for money had and received. He was held entitled to recover; and the measure of damages is the excess of the value of the slave's services above the interest of the sum borrowed. Houston v. Holliday, 5 D. 522.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In an action brought by a pledgee to recover the amount of his debt, the pledgor may, under the plea of non assumpsit, show that the plaintiffs ought not to recover, because they have converted the pledged property by an unlawful sale thereof. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

12. When liable for conversion. — Where an article pledged is a specific chattel there is an ample remedy at law by replevin if the pledgee retains the possession, or by trover or assumpsit in case he has parted with it. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

The pledgee may recoup the amount of his debt when sued for the conversion of the pledged property, or for any tort with respect thereto. Stearns v. Marsh, 47 D. 248.

The measure of damages for the conversion of a pledge by pledgee is the value of the pledge at time of conversion. Robinson v. Hurley, 79 D. 497.

13. Pledgor's right of action as against third persons. — A purchaser from a pledgee of an article given in pledge acquires no greater title than his vendor had at the time of conveyance. Luckette v. Townsend, 49 D. 723.

A debtor may repudiate his creditor's exchange of pledged property by bringing an action, within a reasonable time, to recover the original property pledged by him to secure his debt. Strong v. Adams, 73 D. 305.

A debtor may ratify his creditor's exchange of pledged property by bringing an action, within a reasonable time, to recover the property got by the exchange, and against one who has attached it as the creditor's property, unless there is evidence inconsistent with that of ratification. Ib.

14. Pledgee's right of action against third persons. — Where an action by a pledgee for the conversion of goods is against a stranger, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the full value of the goods. But if the goods be converted by the owner or by any one acting in privity with him, the pledgee can recover only the value of his special interest in the goods pledged. Treadwell v. Davis, 94 D. 770.

Where a sheriff violates the law in seizing goods pledged, under an attachment against the pledgor, in an action against him by the pledgee, he will be liable to the latter for the entire value of the goods. Ib.

A pledgee may maintain an action in his own name upon a promissory note payable to order, transferred, after its maturity without indorsement by the payee, as collateral security for the payment of a debt due on a certain day, where the pledgor has made default in the payment of the debt which it was pledged to secure. And no demand by the pledgee is necessary, in such case, to enable him to sue. White v. Phelps, 100 D. 190.

For the purpose of borrowing money from B, to form a limited partnership, A executed an instrument pledging to B all his interest in the limited partnership of A and C, A to remain in possession, but to make an assignment of his interest on demand. The proposed partnership was formed, but under another name, including additional parties. B lent the money to A, who contributed it to the capital of the partnership. No assignment was ever made nor demanded. A died insolvent, but upon the subsequent winding up of the partnership a balance of profits remained, and A's share thereof was paid to his executor. Upon distribution of said fund — held, that B was entitled to receive the amount of the pledge to the exclusion of a general creditor of A. Collins' Appeal, 52 R. 479.

15. Pawnbrokers. — A statute making it a misdemeanor for any pawnbroker to exact interest at the rate of more than two per cent a month is not within the constitutional prohibition of special laws regulating the rate of interest. Ex parte Lichtenstein, 56 R. 713.

One who lends money of his own or of others, and takes security by mortgage on real or personal property, or by stocks, bonds or notes, is not a pawnbroker. Chicago v. Hulbert, 59 R. 400.

II. COLLATERAL SECURITY.

16. Rights of the parties, generally. — A promissory note of a third person, deposited by a debtor with his creditor as collateral security for a debt, is a pledge in which the pawnee has merely a special property, the general ownership remaining in the pawnor. Garlick v. James, 7 D. 264.

The taking of collateral security for the payment of a debt affords no implication that the creditor is to look to it only or primarily for the payment of the debt. The debtor's obligation to respond in his person and property is the same as if no security had been given. Rogers v. Ward, 85 D. 710.

If a debtor, at or immediately after an execution or an assignment of a mortgage on his property to a creditor, transfers to him a policy of insurance against fire on the mortgaged premises, though nothing be expressed at the time, or it is transferred as collateral security generally, it is a conclusion of law that the policy is to be held by the creditor as collateral security for the mortgage, and it requires an express agreement to authorize the assignee to apply the insurance money, in case of loss, to any other debt or liability; and so the jury should be instructed. Buckley v. Garrett, 100 D. 564.

* Right of pawnee to sell or dispose of goods pawned, see note, 93 D. 42.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

17. — of the debtor. — Money collected by a creditor on a note received as collateral security, which the creditor has power to convert into money, operates pro tanto as payment of the secured debt. Hunt v. Newera, 26 D. 616.

The surplus of money so collected is money had and received to the use of the beneficial owner of the note, which the law implies a promise to pay over on demand. Ib.

A special demand is unnecessary before bringing an action on such implied promise. Ib.

Interest is collectible only from the service of the writ, in such a case, in the absence of a special demand. Ib.

Where stock is held as collateral security for the payment of a promissory note which is indorsed by a third person, and the holder, without the consent of the original owner of the stock, releases the indorser for the purpose of making him a witness in a suit in equity by such owner for the recovery of the stock, the stock will be thereby released, and cannot be held for the purpose of enforcing payment of the note. Denny v. Lyon, 80 D. 463.

18. — of the holder.* — The holder of collateral security cannot appropriate it in satisfaction of the debt at his own option, unless in pursuance of a contract to that effect. Diller v. Brubaker, 91 D. 177.

One with whom an insurance policy is deposited as security has a lien thereon at law. Wells v. Archer, 13 D. 682.

The application of a surplus arising from a sale of securities may be made pro rata to all liabilities mentioned in a letter by the debtor to the pledgee, directing him to hold the stock as a general collateral security for all the pledgor's liability to the pledgee at present existing or which may hereafter be incurred by him. Eichelberger v. Murdock, 69 D. 140.

The pledgee of a promissory note may maintain an action against a pledgor for the conversion of the note, where the latter has obtained the note, though without fraud, under an agreement that he is to return it or another note, which agreement he refuses to comply with. Way v. Davidson, 74 D. 604.

The assignment of shares of railroad stock is collateral security for a pre-existing debt, not contracted on the faith of the security, confers upon the assignee no better title than his assignor had, and he takes subject to equities. City of Cleveland v. Bank of Ohio, 88 D. 445.

The person holding collateral securities is not bound to resort to them before suing upon his principal claim, but when that claim is satisfied, he may be compelled to release or reassign the collaterals. Walker v. Finnegan, 90 D. 243.

If after allowing a set-off of a note secured by collaterals the defendant is still found in debt to plaintiff, the latter has other remedies to recover the collaterals if the defendant should see fit to withhold them; but if the set-off brings the plaintiff in debt, the defendant may properly hold them for the balance. Ib.

19. Liabilities of holder. — A creditor to whom claims are transferred as collateral security, is bound to use ordinary diligence in collecting them, and is liable for loss resulting from his failure to do so; but if the transfer merely authorizes such creditor to receive the proceeds of the claims when collected, and apply them to the payment of his debt, he is not bound to prosecute their collection. Miller v. Gettysburg Bank, 34 D. 449.

Where one receives a note as collateral security for an existing debt, the general rule is, that the party receiving such note must use ordinary care and diligence in collecting it; and if any loss should happen to the other party, by reason of a want of such care and diligence, the law will compel him to make good the loss. Roberts v. Thompson, 82 D. 465.

Where a creditor holds a collateral security for the protection of his debt, and the collateral is lost by the insolvency of the debtor in the collateral instrument, through the negligence of the creditor, the latter is liable for the loss to his own debtor. Hanna v. Holton, 21 R. 20.

Plaintiff assigned to defendant, as collateral for money lent, a judgment, the lien of which expired September, 1873. The defendant neglected to revive his lien, and the judgment debtor sold his land in 1866, and the judgment was lost. Held, 1. That the defendant was liable to plaintiff for the judgment, and 2. That (the judgment debtor being solvent when his land was sold) the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the sale, and not from the expiration of the lien. Ib.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff delivered stock to the defendant as collateral security for the payment of his note, the defendant undertaking to redeliver it on payment; that at the maturity of the note the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay it, and demanded the stock, but was informed by the defendant that it was lost; that some fifteen months afterward the stock was found and the note was paid; that owing to the delay the plaintiff lost a sale of the stock which he had contracted to make to his damage. Held, no cause of action. Cummock v. Newburyport Savings Inst. 56 R. 679.

20. Right to sell collaterals. — The holder of collateral security cannot sell it

*Holder of negotiable paper as collateral security, and diligence which he must exercise for its collection, see note, 34 D. 451, 452.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

without first giving notice to the pledgor of his intention to do so, in order that the pledgor may have an opportunity to redeem. Diller v. Brubaker, 91 D. 177.

The sale of hypothecated stock to satisfy a loan need not necessarily be made at public auction. A sale by the pledgee at the board of brokers, publicly and fairly made, would be legal and valid, and if made to a third person, and not to himself, would vest a good title in the purchaser, and terminate the bailment, where default has been made and notice dispensed with by the contract of the parties. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

In the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, it is necessary for the pledgee before exercising a power of sale to give notice to the pledgor of the time and place of sale; but this rule has no application to a case where such notice is dispensed with by the contract of the parties. Id.

In absence of a special authority, it is the duty of pledgee of hypothecated stock to dispose of it at public sale, after a reasonable notice to the public of the time and place of sale, or at the public stock board; but special authority will enable the pledgee to sell at private sale and without notice. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

The sale of collateral security must be public, and the notice of the sale given to the pledgor must specify both time and place. Diller v. Brubaker, 91 D. 177.

Notice given on November 13th is sufficient authority for the pledgee to sell hypothecated stock on November 20th, where by the terms of the contract between the parties the loan was payable on one day's notice, and if not paid according to the agreement the defendant was authorized, without further notice, to sell the stock pledged for the purpose of satisfying the same. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

By the words of a written agreement authorizing a pledgee of hypothecated stock, upon default, to sell without further notice, it is to be understood that when the power to sell arose all notice of the time and place of sale was waived and dispensed with by the pledgor, leaving upon the pledgee the obligation to sell publicly and fairly for the best price he could obtain. Id.

If a pledgor of hypothecated stock gives the pledgee a written authority to sell such pledge in case it is not redeemed at a day specified, or to give the same "to any broker to sell on that day," and the pledge is not redeemed on the day specified, a sale made by a broker thereafter at private sale, for the full market price of the stock at that date, is in conformity with the authority, and valid. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

A bank holding the bonds of a railroad company as collateral security may sell them for the payment of the debt secured thereby, if the sale be made to a third person, but the bank itself cannot become the purchaser thereof, either at private or public sale. Bank of Old Dominion v. Dubuque etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 302.

If a bank holding bonds as collateral security sells them at public sale, and itself becomes the purchaser, no title passes by such sale, but the bank will be considered as still holding them under its original title as collateral security for the payment of the debt due to it from the owner of the bonds. Id.

If a pledgee of hypothecated stock sells it at public stock board, upon pledgor's failure to redeem, and himself becomes the purchaser thereof, and continues to hold such stock, he will be regarded as still maintaining the character of bailee, and as holding the pledge to secure the payment of the loan with interest, and will be required to account for all dividends on the stock received by him in the meantime. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

A pledgor of hypothecated stock is not entitled to recover in an action ex delicto where such stock has been sold by a valid contract breaking up the bailment, and where there has been no violation of the contract of bailment on the part of the pledgee, nor any tortious conversion of the stock. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

Stock was pledged on August 13, 1860, as collateral security for the repayment of a loan upon one day's notice; the pledgor agreed, in writing, that if said loan was not paid according to agreement, that the pledgee was authorized, without further notice, to sell the stock pledged, for the purpose of satisfying the loan; sufficient notice to pay was given, and the pledgor made default; the pledgee then sold the stock on November 20, 1860, but bought it in himself; nothing further was done, and the pledgor continuing in default, the pledgee, in the spring of 1862, caused the stock to be publicly sold at the board of brokers, and it was transferred to the several purchasers; on the 16th of April, 1861, the pledgee had received a dividend on the stock. Held, that the sale of November 20, 1860, being inoperative, and the plaintiff continuing in default, the power to sell conferred by the contract still continued, and was, in fact, executed by the sales made in 1862, which ended the bailment; but that the pledgor would have the right to recover, in an action ex contractu, any excess which might have remained in the hands of the pledgee arising from the proceeds of the sale of the stock in 1862, including the dividend received on April 16, 1861, with which the pledgee would be chargeable, after deducting the amount of the loan and interest due at that time, and such excess would simply be money had and received by the pledgee to the use of the pledgor, under and in conformity with the contract. Ib.

The custom has grown up in New York of selling hypothecated stock at the Merchants' Exchange, and that usage has been sanctioned by the courts. Ib.

Where a pledgee, at the public stock board, sells stock which he has taken and held as collateral security for loans made to the pledgor, the transaction constitutes a valid public sale, where no fraud appears in it. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

A pledgee who takes shares of corporate stock as collateral security for a promissory note, with authority to sell in case of the non-payment of the note, is not bound to sell upon default in the payment of the note, and is not liable for a loss occasioned by a depreciation in the value of the stock occurring after the default. Rozet v. McClellan, 96 D. 551.

Whether the foreclosure and sale of a negotiable instrument held in pledge can be decreed in satisfaction of the debt for which it is held, under ordinary circumstances, quære. Donohoe v. Gamble, 99 D. 399.

The foreclosure and sale of a negotiable instrument held as a pledge is authorized, when the maker resides in a remote country or a different state, and it does not appear that he has any property within the jurisdiction subject to seizure and sale. Ib.

21. Wrongful disposal of collaterals. — A pledgee's sale of hypothecated stock to himself to satisfy a loan is contrary to the faith of the bailment, is forbidden by the common law, and may be treated by the pledgor, at his election, as a tortious conversion of the property; but if he make no election, there is no such conversion. Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 89 D. 779.

Where a pledgee's sale of hypothecated stock, made on November 20, 1860, did not operate to vest a title in the pledgee, because he himself was the purchaser, or to work a conversion of the stock, because the pledgor did not elect to so treat it, the bailment continued; and if nothing more had been done subsequently, that is, no valid sale made, and the stock had remained in the pledgee's possession, a tender and demand made on December 16, 1862, would have been valid, and the refusal on the part of the pledgee at that time would have given a good cause of action to the pledgor. Ib.

Equity alone can afford relief, by ordering a retransfer of the pledged stock of an incorporated company, where the shares have been transferred upon the books of the corporation, and stand in the name of the pledgee as legal owner. The law falls short of the remedy to which the pledgor is entitled. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

Where an agent fraudulently misappropriates negotiable collaterals deposited with him on a loan of the principal's money, the borrower offering to pay the loan at maturity, the principal is liable to him for the value of the collaterals at that time. Reynolds v. Witte, 38 R. 678.

22. Rights of purchasers in good faith. — A party, by pledging negotiable securities transferable by delivery loses all right to the securities when transferred by the pledgee in good faith to a third party. Coit v. Humbert, 63 D. 128.

Warrants drawn by officers of the government upon its disbursing officers, having been pledged, may be held against the original owner by one acquiring them in good faith from the pledgee. Ib.

B., an officer of the corporation in this case, and who had signed the compromise agreement, had transferred two of its bonds to a bank as collateral security for a note, and informed P. of their situation; P. furnished B. money, and authorized him to buy the bonds for him (P.), which B. did; held, that under all the facts upon this point, it was not a loan of money by P. to B., and a purchase of the bonds of B.; that P. derived his title by purchase from the bank, and not from B.; and that the fact that afterwards there was an agreement between P. and B. that B. with P.'s money should purchase securities for P., and if any profit was made, B. should have a share of it, even if the arrangement included these bonds, would not necessarily change the character of this transaction, although it might, as evidence, have some bearing upon the question of fact as to what the real character of it was. Miller v. Rutland etc. R. R. Co., 94 D. 413.

23. Taking negotiable paper as collateral. — The cases of persons who receive negotiable paper as collateral security, are not governed by the strict rules of the commercial law, applicable to negotiable paper, but fall under the general law of agency, which must determine the rights and liabilities of the parties. However, if the parties make a special agreement, they will be bound by its terms. Roberts v. Thompson, 82 D. 465.

A party to whom has been assigned, as collateral security, a promissory note, payable on or before a certain date, under an agreement by which demand and notice of non-payment are waived, is under no obligation to demand or insist upon payment of the note before it becomes due. This is so, although the maker of the note expressed a willingness to pay it, and the holder might have collected it by insisting upon payment. Ib.

A pledgee of negotiable paper as collateral security is bound to ordinary diligence to preserve the legal validity and pecuniary value of the pledge, and must take active measures to prevent a loss by insolvency of parties liable upon the collateral note. He is liable to the extent of such loss occasioned through his negligence. Lamberton v. Windom, 90 D. 301.

Whether negotiable paper is held in mortgage or pledge, which is indorsed to and held by a creditor as a security for the payment of a debt, without any other express agreement, quære. Donohoe v. Gamble, 99 D. 399.

A pledgee of negotiable paper has generally a right to collect the whole amount of securities pledged to him, and account to the pledgor for the surplus over his debt. But in case of accommodation paper pledged, the pledgee can recover of the maker only the amount of the debt due him from the pledgor. Atlas Bank v. Doyle, 11 R. 219; 98 D. 368.

One to whom a promissory note is pledged as collateral security for a debt, unless specially authorized, cannot sell the same on default, but is bound to collect it at maturity, and apply the proceeds to the debt. Joliet Iron Co. v. Scott Fire Brick Co., 25 R. 341.

The plaintiff assigned to the defendant two promissory notes as collateral security. The defendant got judgment on the notes, and sold the maker's real estate on the judgment in execution, without the knowledge of or notice to the plaintiff, for about one twentieth of its value; the defendant's minor daughter bidding it in at his suggestion, there being no other bidders present. The defendant afterward got judgment against the plaintiff for the balance. In a suit to restrain the collection of that judgment, — held, that the defendant must be restrained and account for the loss. McQueen's Appeal, 49 R. 592.

24. Redemption. — The note of a third person indorsed and delivered as security to a creditor for the payment of a debt due from the payee, no time for redemption being specified, may be collected by the creditor if not redeemed before it becomes due. Hunt v. Newsa, 26 D. 616.

The question as to whether the debtor's right of redemption of such note is forfeited if not exercised in his life-time, does not arise, where the note is collected in the life-time of both parties, and there has been no demand or tender of the amount of the debt secured. Id.

If a pawnee has two remedies, to sell at law after default and notice, or to foreclose in equity, no reason exists why a pledgor should not be furnished with the equitable remedy to redeem. Bryson v. Rayner, 90 D. 69.

One to whom shares of stock had been pledged as collateral security sold them wrongfully, but for the full market price at the time. Upon a bill in equity to redeem the shares, held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be placed in the same position as if the sale had not been made; and that the defendant might be charged with the value of the shares at the time of filing the bill. Fowle v. Ward, 18 R. 534.

Stock was pledged in 1871, the pledgee advancing money on it from time to time while its value fluctuated from twenty cents on the dollar up to, but never more than the amount advanced. In 1881 the pledgee sold it for less than the amount advanced. In 1884 the pledgor sought to redeem and to hold the pledgee accountable for its value, greatly appreciated after the sale. Held, that his bill should be dismissed on account of the staleness of the demand. Gilmer v. Morris, 60 R. 85.

POOR AND POOR-LAWS.

[Includes the validity and interpretation of poor-laws, and the relief and maintenance of paupers, either at public expense, or at the charge of kindred liable therefor.]

I. SUPPORT AT PUBLIC EXPENSE.

II. COMPELLING SUPPORT BY KINDRED.

I. SUPPORT AT PUBLIC EXPENSE.

1. Constitutionality of poor-laws. — A state statute authorized two overseers

* Constitutionality of statutes awarding custody of poor children to overseers of poor, see note, 56 R. 456-462.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

of the poor in any town, by writing under their hand, to commit paupers and vagrants to the workhouse. Held, in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, as it deprived a person of liberty without due process of law. Portland v. Bangor, 20 R. 681.

Where the state constitution declares that the counties shall respectively provide for their paupers, an act to establish and maintain a state asylum for the poor and maimed of the state is not warranted by a constitutional provision for "institutions for the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb, and such other benevolent institutions as the public good may require." State v. Hallock, 33 R. 589.

2. Liability of town for support. — A verdict and judgment against a town in an action for the support of a pauper, though rendered after the act of incorporation, are evidence of the reputation of the place as a town, if they were founded on a claim and settlement of a prior date; and they are admissible to rebut the presumption that the town was not incorporated before, though they would have no tendency to prove an incorporation fifteen years prior to the act of incorporation. Their effect would not be modified by the fact that the plaintiff in the action afterwards supported the same pauper; and such fact would have no tendency to rebut the effect of the verdict and judgment as evidence of the reputation of the corporate character of the town. Bow v. Allentown, 69 D. 489.

3. Rights of town incident to the liability. — The issuance of a warrant on incompetent testimony is merely erroneous, and does not render the proceeding void, as where the warrant is issued solely on the testimony of the wife of the person whose property is seized thereunder. Downing v. Ruger, 34 D. 223.

A town liable for the support of a poor man can not maintain an action against him by whose fraudulent act he was reduced to poverty. Only the party defrauded is entitled to an action, either at law or in chancery. Milton v. Story, 34 D. 671.

Townships advancing money to relieve indigent persons may recover the same from the person or municipal authority obligated to support such persons only in case of a neglect of such obligation or a refusal to support such persons. Ashland Co. v. Richland Co. Infirmary, 70 D. 49.

4. Powers and duties of officers. — Overseers of the poor are a corporation for certain purposes, and for the execution of their trust may sue and be sued and are liable in debt for the obligations contracted by their predecessors. Todd v. Birdsall, 13 D. 522; Chapline v. Overseers, 30 D. 504.

Where, pending a motion against their predecessors for moneys officially received and unaccounted for, the plaintiffs' term of office expires, their motion does not abate, but they may proceed and prosecute it, being themselves accountable to their successors for the money recovered. Chapline v. Overseers, 30 D. 504.

The presumption is that a town has two overseers of the poor until the contrary appears, where the statute requires each town to elect two. Downing v. Ruger, 34 D. 223.

One or two overseers of the poor may, by consent of the other, act alone, as the agent or deputy of both, in applying for and executing a warrant, under the statute, against the property of one who has absconded, leaving his family chargeable to the town, and the consent of the other overseer will be presumed, if the warrant is regular on its face, and recites an application by both. Id.

The presumption that an overseer of the poor acted regularly, and with the consent of his colleague, in proceeding against the property of one who has absconded, leaving his family chargeable to the town, must prevail, and justify his acts until the want of such consent is affirmatively shown by the testimony of the other overseer, he being a competent witness. Id.

A return in the name of only one of the overseers of the poor of a seizure of the property of one who has absconded, leaving his family chargeable to the town, is informal only, if jurisdiction has been regularly acquired, and not impeachable in an action against the overseer who made the seizure. Id.

5. How a settlement may be acquired. — A year's settlement, under the act of 1797, does not require that the pauper should be constantly with his family, provided their place of abode is his domicile. Burlington v. Calais, 18 D. 691.

"Coming and residing within the state," within the meaning of the act, does not require a coming from another state, but a coming from any place to the town, or being and residing there when the act was passed, is sufficient. Id.

Service by a pauper under a contract for the space of a year gains a settlement, whether all performed under one contract or whether performed under several distinct contracts. Heidleberg v. Lynn, 34 D. 566.

Residence, to gain a settlement under the pauper law, means home or dwelling-place. Warren v. Thomaston, 69 D. 69.

But residence, dwelling-place, and home differ from a settlement, under the pauper law, and a person may have a settlement in one town and a residence in another. Id.

A residence does not involve continued personal presence necessarily, and temporary absences do not work a change of residence. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Residence is acquired only by a personal presence without present intent to depart, under the pauper law, and when once acquired, is lost only by departure with intent to abandon it. Ib.

Domicile is not synonymous with residence, dwelling-place, or home, in its ordinary legal sense, but it must be regarded as synonymous with those terms when used with respect to the status of a pauper as to habitation. Ib.

Residence under the pauper law is abandoned by a departure without a present intent to return, and a subsequent intent to return formed upon a disappointment of business expectations does not cure the abandonment. Ib.

A particular house to which a party may resort as matter of right is not necessary to enable him to acquire or maintain a residence, within the meaning of the pauper law. Ib.

Under the pauper laws a residence once established may be abandoned or lost without having acquired another; and the continuance of a residence of a pauper, who has left his place of abode, taking all he has, and with no intention as to returning, depends, in no degree, upon the fact of his return. North Yarmouth v. West Gardiner, 4 R. 279.

A lunatic's place of settlement is not invalidated or changed by confinement in an asylum or jail by lawful authority. Ashland Co. v. Richland County Infirmary, 70 D. 49.

Imprisonment in a state prison for two years for an offense not a felony does not of itself interrupt or terminate the prisoner's residence under the pauper law. Baltimore v. Town of Chester, 38 R. 677. Nor does imprisonment for five years do so. Topsham v. Lewiston, 43 R. 584.

6. Derivative settlements. — Attaining the age of twenty-one is not ipso facto emancipation, in respect to the question of settlement; so long as the child remains single, enters into no contract inconsistent with the idea of his being a member of, and in a subordinate situation in his father's family, acquires no settlement for himself, and makes his father's house his home, no matter what his age may be, he will follow any newly acquired settlement of his father. Alexandria v. Bethlehem, 31 D. 229.

An idiot living with his father may derive a settlement, no matter what his age may be. Ib.

The settlement of the parents determines the settlement of an unemancipated child, and where the head of the family changes his settlement, that of his children changes with him. This is the case when, upon death of the father, the mother becomes the head of the family. Burrell Township v. Pittsburg etc., 1 R. 441.

N. W., the widowed mother of A. K. W., removed from the township of Burrell, where she had a settlement, to Pittsburgh. She there leased a house, and resided in it until her death. In the meantime A. K. W. became deranged, and after the death of his mother became a pauper. Held, that by the act of the mother changing her settlement, that of A. K. W. was also changed, and that Burrell township was not liable for the support of the pauper. Ib.

Although the father and mother stand upon a different footing as to their children, in relation to private parties, in regard to the public their standing is the same. Ib.

7. Effect of changes in towns or counties. — The new county made by dividing an old one is not chargeable with any expense incurred by the old county in keeping a pauper whose proper residence is in the new one, until he has been removed to the new one with the request that he be received and taken care of by the commissioners. Ashland Co. v. Richland Co. Infirmary, 70 D. 49.

Paupers who become settled remain a charge on the township whose territory affords them a dwelling-place, without regard to the former name or boundaries of the township from which they have become separated. Ib.

The new county, when formed, shall receive and become chargeable with all paupers having a residence and legal settlement in the territory of which it is composed. Ib.

8. Removal of paupers. — An order for the removal of a pauper, his family and effects, from one town to another, is valid as to the pauper only. Newbury v. Brunswick, 19 D. 703.

Directors authorized to remove paupers to a county whose commissioners are obligated to receive them may sue and recover for a breach of duty if such paupers are not received. Ashland Co. v. Richland Co. Infirmary, 70 D. 49.

The expenses of returning paupers to the commissioners of a new county carved from the old one, together with the charges for keeping them from that period, is the limit of recovery in case such paupers are not received. Ib.

II. COMPELLING SUPPORT BY KINDRED.

9. In general. — The burden of supporting poor relations is not to be imposed when it would be likely to reduce those upon whom it is thrown to poverty and want. Colebrook v. Stewartstown, 64 D. 275.

A man's liability to support his poor relations arises only when he can support himself, his family, and the paupers, from his annual income. Ib.

The ability of a man to support his poor

* Poor relations, liability for support of, see note, 64 D. 279-281.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

relations is to be judged of with reference to existing state of things. The jury need not be satisfied of his ability to support his poor relations under all the contingencies which may happen, because the ability of the relative may become less, or the wants of the pauper may become greater. Id.

A charge by the court that a "man may have reached that time of life, and be in such circumstances, that it might not be unreasonable to require him, if necessary, to trench upon his capital" to support his poor relations, is erroneous, as all that he is required to spend is the surplus of his annual income. Id.

10. Liability of parent or child. — Kindred by consanguinity of sufficient ability to contribute to support of paupers are required by statute to do so, but such statute does not embrace within its provisions the support of an illegitimate child who has become chargeable as a pauper. Hiram v. Pierce, 71 D. 555.

A complaint setting forth that a child has been supported by the complainant town as a pauper, since a certain day named therein, sufficiently alleges that the town had incurred expense. Id.

A complaint signed and made by an attorney in behalf of a town, to recover the charge for the support of a pauper, is sufficient. Id.

11. — of husband or wife. — A husband is not liable for the maintenance of his wife's parents. Commissioners v. Gansett, 23 D. 139.

An insane, starving and shelterless wife, absent from her husband, is a "poor person," although her husband is able to support her; and her husband, voluntarily permitting her to be absent and a public charge, is liable to the public authorities for her support. Goodale v. Lawrence, 42 R. 259.

1. Contracts for carrying the mail.*

—Mail contractors are not liable in assumption for money inclosed in a letter, handed to and lost by the mail-carrier employed by them, and through his neglect. Hutchins v. Brackett, 53 D. 248.

A mail carrier is not an officer of the government, but is the private agent of the contractor for carrying the mail, and the latter is liable to third persons for any injury sustained through the negligence or default of such agent in the performance of his duties. Sawyer v. Corso, 94 D. 445.

A mail carrier not sworn as required by the act of Congress is the private agent of the contractor who employs him, and such contractor is liable for his defaults. Ib.

The failure of a mail carrier to take the oath prescribed by the act of Congress does not make the mail contractor who employs him an insurer, but he is liable to third persons for injury caused by the negligence or default of such carrier. Ib.

One who contracts to carry the mails for the government is neither a common carrier nor a private carrier, and is not liable to the owner for money stolen from the mails by his subordinates; and his promissory note given therefor is without consideration and creates no liability as between the parties. Foster v. Metts, 30 R. 504.

A common carrier, who is also a contractor with the government for carrying the mails, is not liable as a common carrier to the sender of a letter by mail for its loss. Central R. R. etc. Co. v. Lamproy, 52 R. 334.

2. Rights of postmasters, generally.—The office of postmaster is an office of profit and trust, under the authority of congress. McGregor v. Balch, 39 D. 231.

A person can not hold the offices of postmaster and justice of the peace at the same time, and, although a postmaster is eligible to any executive or judiciary office in the state, he must surrender his office of postmaster, to be able to hold such executive or judiciary office. Ib.

A postmaster is a public officer, and in the discharge of his trust is bound to exercise his judgment for the public benefit in locating his office, and any contract for the sale of this exercise of his judgment for his private emolument interferes with the discharge of his official duties and is void. Spence v. Harvey, 83 D. 69.

A contract by a postmaster to locate and continue his office at a particular place might be valid, when necessary, in order to secure a fit location, but such necessity would be required to be affirmatively shown to sustain an action on the contract. Ib.

*See note on contracts for carrying the mail, 42 D. 209, 210.

In an action of trespass quare clausum and for assault, defendant pleaded that the locus was part of plaintiff's house, which had been used by him while postmaster as a post-office; that one G. having succeeded him in that office, had license from him to enter and remove the public property of the United States; that defendant, as assistant postmaster and servant to G., and by his direction, attempted to enter for that purpose, but was resisted and assaulted by plaintiff, whereupon, etc. (justifying the trespass) Held, that the justification was good, and would have been so without averment of license. Sterling v. Warden, 12 R. 80.

3. Their duties and liabilities.*—Where a letter containing money is lost after being delivered to a postmaster, he is liable for want of ordinary care, in an action on the case for his neglect; but he is not liable to an action for money had and received, unless it be shown that he put the money to his own use. Danforth v. Grant, 39 D. 224.

A postmaster is liable to an action of trover in a state court (otherwise competent) for detaining matter in the mail under his charge, addressed to plaintiff. Teall v. Felton, 49 D. 352.

A postmaster does not act judicially in determining whether a parcel of mail matter is chargeable with letter or newspaper postage. Ib.

A postmaster is liable for his servant's negligence, carelessness, and default, as well as his own, and a civil action will lie for a larceny of a letter containing money which was stolen from his office. Coleman v. Frazier, 53 D. 727.

An assistant postmaster is merely the servant, or agent of the postmaster, and the doctrine of the common law, that the principal who holds out an agent or servant in any public employment is liable in case for his negligence, will apply. Coleman v. Frazier, 53 D. 727; Keenan v. Southworth, 14 R. 613.

4. Offenses under the postal laws.—The levy of an execution upon a ferryboat does not obstruct the passage of the mail within the meaning of the act of Congress making it a penal offense to "knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or of any driver or carrier, or of any horse or carriage carrying the same," where no mails were on the boat at the time of levy, though they were brought on soon afterwards. Lathrop v. Middleton, 83 D. 112.

1. Execution and validity of instruments conferring powers. — A power to sell and convey land not under seal, though insufficient to authorize the execution of a conveyance of the fee, is nevertheless a sufficient authority for the execution of a contract of sale; and an instrument made by the donee reciting the sale is a sufficient "note or memorandum" of such contract, and though inoperative as a conveyance, is good as an agreement to convey. Dutton v. Warschauer, 82 D. 765.

Where a trust is void under the rule against perpetuities, a power to lease which is not a mere power distinct from the trust, leaving the act to be done at the will of the party to whom it is given, but is mixed and blended with the trust, and is as imperative in its execution as the trust itself, is also void. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

2. Their interpretation. — In considering the extent of a power, the intent of the parties must control. In conformity with this intent a general power may be limited, or a limited power made general. Wilson v. Troup, 14 D. 458.

A power to a feme covert to convey will be strictly construed, and a power to convey by "will or deed of gift," will not include the power to convey by bill of sale. Marshall v. Stephens, 47 D. 601.

Every general power or duty given or enjoined implies every particular power necessary to its exercise or performance. Heard v. Pierce, 54 D. 757.

Where a discretionary power is not exercised, the whole of the objects who are within it will take in equal shares. So must it be in the disposition of a part where the power is not exercised as to the part. Cruze v. McKee, 73 D. 186.

Powers are to be construed in the light of the purpose which the agent or depositary is appointed to accomplish. Baltimore v. Reynolds, 83 D. 535.

Every power, the direct object of which is to create a perpetuity, is generally held to be absolutely void; the exceptions to the rule arise out of the distinction between general and limited or special powers. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

3. Execution of powers, generally.

—Where a person takes by execution of a power, he takes under the authority of the power, equally as if the power and its execution had been incorporated in one instrument. Doolittle v. Lewis, 11 D. 389.

A power delegated to two or more for a private purpose, must be executed by all; but in matters of public concern a majority may act if all are were present. McCoy v. Curtice, 24 D. 113.

A power given to executors jointly cannot be exercised by one alone. Brown v. Hobson, 13 D. 187.

Where slaves were devised to a husband and wife for life with power to dispose of them as they pleased among their children during their lives or at death, it was held that a continued loan for more than five years to one of the children rendered the slaves liable for such child's debts the same as if the power had been formally executed by gift. Brwing v. Handley, 14 D. 140.

The power to mortgage authorizes the execution of a mortgage with a power of sale, particularly where it is the custom of the country to include such powers in mortgages. Wilson v. Troup, 14 D. 458.

A person incapable of contracting may be the donee of a power. Weisbrod v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 86 D. 743.

The execution of a power, being distinct from the power itself, must conform to the requirements of the rule against perpetuities, or run the hazard of being avoided. Barnum v. Barnum, 90 D. 88.

Where a power does not in itself transgress the rule against perpetuities, the appointees may, in executing it, go beyond the bound-dary provided by such rule; and equity in such case being guided by the power, will treat the excess as surplusage and void, but only where the excess be definite and ascertained, or can be rendered so. If, however, the limitation is in the instrument itself which creates the trust or power, and no one can declare with certainty how the dispositions of the testator would have been regulated if he had been aware at the time of his inability to extend them to some included in his gifts, the whole will be vitiated by the excess. Id.

A power in a will to convey lands in fee is well executed by a warranty deed, upon full consideration, although it does not refer to the will. South v. South, 46 R. 591.

4. Execution of power to sell. — 1. Who may exercise. — A power to sell, given by a will to several executors, may be exercised by those who qualify. Taylor v. Galway, 13 D. 605.

Three executors were given power to sell to satisfy debts, and two only qualified, and the other never intermeddled, but did not formally renounce as executor. A sale by the two executors twenty years after the testator's death, was held valid, the other then living, and not refusing to join. The power is attached to the office, and not to the persons named as executors. Marr v. Peay, 5 D. 521.

The court will presume a renunciation after twenty years' lapse of time. A formal renunciation in open court is unnecessary; it only affords easier proof of the fact. Id.

A power given in a will to certain persons to sell lands at their discretion, is a personal trust, and though the same persons are named executors, yet, on their decease, the administrator with the will annexed cannot execute the trust. Brown v. Hobson, 13 D. 187.

A power to two executors to sell cannot be executed by one; and a power to sell for special purposes can be exercised for those purposes alone. Floyd v. Johnson, 13 D. 255.

A power of sale may be given in the alternative; and when such is the case, the deed of sale may be executed either by the donor or donee of the power. Oranston v. Crane, 93 D. 106.

A power to sell may be executed by an agent of a donee who is the grantor in a deed of the land signed by the grantee, which, besides giving him a power of sale in case of non-payment of the purchase-money, gives him also a lien therefor on the land, thus giving him a power coupled with an interest; which power is, furthermore, not qualified by any personal trust or confidence, since the deed authorizes the power to be executed, not only by the grantor, but by any assignee of the purchase notes. Hill v. Walker, 98 D. 465.

2. How construed. — Where a testator devised certain land to his wife for life, and gave her power, in case of need, to sell all his estate, real and personal, for her comfortable support, — held that she took only a life estate with a power of sale depending on a contingency. Stevens v. Winship, 11 D. 178.

A power of sale does not authorize the transfer of the property of the principal in payment of a debt. Durham v. Oddie, 14 D. 190.

A power under a will to sell such property of a testator as may be useless to his estate does not authorize an executor to sell whatever property he pleases. McCauley v. Bee, 16 D. 610.

A power to sell is implied in a deed of trust where the object of the deed is the payment of the trustor's debts, which can not be done without sale of the property. Williams v. Otey, 47 D. 632.

A general power to sell lease, etc., given to a stranger in a deed to grantor's children is void, and a sale under such a power is of no effect. Smith v. Smith, 59 D. 581.

The difference between a mere power to convey and a conveyance itself is that the latter is regarded in law as a contract, while the former is not. Weisbrod v. Chicago etc. Co., 86 D. 743.

A power to sell personalty does not authorize a barter or exchange. Cleveland v. Bank of Ohio, 88 D. 445; Taylor v. Gallowsay, 13 D. 605.

Commissioners authorized by a statute to act in behalf of a city derive their power solely from the statute, and those dealing with them or claiming under them, directly or remotely, are bound to take notice of the extent of those powers; and the city is not estopped to deny the existence of a power assumed by them. Cleveland v. Bank of Ohio, 88 D. 445.

3. *What is a valid execution. — A power to sell, either in a will or a deed, to be exercised on the happening of a particular event, can not be lawfully exercised until that event happens. Brune's Appeal, 55 D. 499.

Those who claim under a contingent power of sale in a will must show that the power was well executed, and that the contingency happened; and it is for the jury to decide whether it happened or not. Stevens v. Winship, 11 D. 178.

A probate of a will, containing a power to sell land, is not necessary to the execution of the power. Doolittle v. Lewis, 11 D. 339.

Where town trustees are invested by a special statute with the title to land, and with a general authority to sell and convey, their deed prima facie implies a due execution of the power, notwithstanding the act of 1801; but where there is a naked power to convey under special restrictions, one claiming under such power must show a strict execution of it. Morrison v. McMillan, 14 D. 115.

*Power of sale, whether includes power to mortgage, see note, 38 R. 342.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A power in a creditor to sell his debtor's land in order to obtain funds wherewith to pay the indebtedness due to himself, must be exercised by a sale of the land to third persons. The creditor will not be justified in taking from his debtor's trustee a deed to himself of the land. Engles v. Engles, 38 D. 37.

A power to sell property to pay debts of trustor, given in a deed of trust, is an absolute power as to purchasers, and they are not obliged to show that there were debts existing at the time of the sale in order to acquire a good title. Williams v. Oley, 47 D. 632.

A purchaser of property under a sale in pursuance of a power is chargeable with notice of the extent of the power, and is bound to see that it has been pursued. Sears v. Livermore, 85 D. 564.

In ascertaining whether a power has been properly exercised or followed, no question of jurisdiction is involved as in cases of judicial sales. Ib.

Directions in a power of sale must be strictly pursued, and a deviation in the execution of the power will invalidate the sale. Sears v. Livermore, 85 D. 564; Cranston v. Crane, 93 D. 106.

Where a deed containing a power of sale provided that notice should be given by posting on the front door of a certain hotel, a posting of such notice near the door but not on it is not a sufficient compliance with the power; and the fact that the proprietor of the hotel refused to permit the posting of such notices on the door of his house would afford no excuse for disregarding the terms of the power. Sears v. Livermore, 85 D. 564.

The commissioners empowered by a special statute to act in behalf of a city in subscribing to stock of a railroad company and authorized to sell the stock, "and to do whatsoever else may seem necessary to secure and advance the interests of the city in the premises," have no power to exchange the stock for stock in another company; as the power to sell does not include the power to exchange, and the clause following does not enlarge the specific powers before conferred, the phrase "in the premises" limiting the discretion therein granted to the manner of exercising the powers specifically granted. Cleveland v. Bank of Ohio, 88 D. 445.

When a power of sale merely authorizes donee to execute deed in name of donor, or as his attorney, it must be so executed; and the deed of sale will then be the deed of the donor of the power, and not of the donee. Cranston v. Crane, 93 D. 106.

A power of sale may be given to be executed by deed of donee; and when such is the case, the deed of sale not only may but must be executed under the hand and seal of the donee of the power. Ib.

Where land is conveyed to a wife, and child afterwards to be born, with a power in the husband to superintend, and with wife's concurrence to sell and convey the same as husband, this power to the husband did not contemplate a conveyance by him directly to the wife, but only some conveyance by him and her to a stranger, and then only of the wife's interest, and not of such child as had been born to her, and a deed by the husband directly to his wife would be utterly void. Powell v. Powell, 96 D. 372.

When a trustee, having a power to sell lands with the assent in writing of the first cestui que trust for life, but no interest whatever in the property, joins with her and her children, subsequent cestui que trust for life, in a conveyance of the property on valuable consideration, with covenants of warranty; this is a good execution of the power, although the conveyance does not mention or refer to it. Gindrat v. Montgomery Gaslight Co. 60 R. 769.

5. Execution of power of appointment.—1. *How Construed.—A general power is a power to appoint whomsoever the donee pleases. Thompson v. Garwood, 31 D. 502.

A particular power is one by which the donee is restricted to particular objects. Ib.

A power general in its terms will not be cut down to a particular power, unless an intent to do so is apparent from the instrument conferring the power. Ib.

Wills executed under powers are construed the same as proper wills, and are not affected by the instrument by which the power was conferred, except by the clause by which the power is created. Ib.

A power of appointment is deemed general for the purpose of subjecting the estate, after appointment, to the claims of the appointor's creditors, whenever the donee may appoint to whom he pleases, although he can appoint only by deed or will to take effect at his death, and can not appoint to any use in his life-time. Johnson v. Cushing, 41 D. 694.

A power of appointment to children does not embrace grandchildren, and the exercise of it in their favor is void. Cruse v. McKee, 73 D. 186.

A valid appointment will be maintained, though embraced in the same deed or will with others not valid. Ib.

Property not disposed of in conformity with a power under a will must pass as a vested remainder under the will, and be distributed equally to all the objects of the

* Power of appointment, interest of donee in, see note, 41 D. 704-706

power, the testator's children in this case, the representatives taking a share of a deceased child, without regard to the property held under the valid appointments of the wife. It is not a case for collation of advancements, as in intestacy. Ib.

2. What is a valid execution generally.—One clothed with a power of appointment must execute it in good faith for the end and purpose designed. Cruise v. McKee, 73 D. 186.

A power of appointment is not executed unless some steps are taken, or some acts done, with this sole and definite intention, which must be such as are properly referable to the power. Mitchell v. Denson, 65 D. 403.

Presumption that a power of appointment has been legally exercised, exists in favor of innocent purchasers or meritorious claimants. Marshall v. Stephens, 47 D. 601.

Where a party has power to appoint a fee, if there are no words of positive restriction, a less estate may be appointed. Butler v. Hcutis, 18 R. 589.

Where a power is created by deed, empowering a husband to appoint to whom the land shall be conveyed, and, in case of his death before his wife, empowering her to do it, there must be an actual appointment in the mode indicated, and not merely an intention in the husband, in order to defeat the wife's right of appointment. Accordingly, where a power requires, among other requisites, that the trustee should convey to such person as the husband should limit or appoint, and the husband executed an instrument of writing, authorizing the trustee to convey to whom he pleases in his discretion, this is not an execution of the power, nor a destruction of that subsequently limited to the wife. Haslen v. Kean, 7 D. 718.

An actual exercise of a general power of appointment, by deed or will, converts the appointed estate into assets in equity for the payment of the appointor's creditors, whose claims take preference over those of the appointee, and, upon a bill filed by the creditors, a court of chancery, treating the execution of the power without providing for them, as a fraud upon them, will regard the appointor's executor or the appointee as a trustee for the creditors, and subject the estate in his hands to payment of their claims; but the court will not interfere if the power has not been executed and if no act has been done indicating an intent to execute it. Johnson v. Cushing, 41 D. 694.

An appointment will be declared void where one clothed with a discretionary power, in order to secure advantage to the trustee himself, or to a stranger, makes discriminations among a class of the objects of the power. Quere: If fraud intervenes in the exercise of a power of appointment, does it vitiate the entire acts of the trustee, or only such appointments as are fraudulent? Cruise v. McKee, 73 D. 186.

A testator's children will take in equal shares property which has been bequeathed to his wife with a discretionary power of appointment, where she fails to exercise the appointment, or makes an invalid one. Ib.

3. Execution by conveyance or will.—A mortgage is an execution of a power to appoint by any writing, in the nature of a will or other instrument, under hand and seal, executed in the presence of two credible witnesses. Lancaster v. Dolan, 18 D. 625.

A power of appointment by a will given to the grantee in a conveyance for life, is not deemed to be executed by a mortgage by the latter to creditors, followed by foreclosure and sale. Bentham v. Smith, 34 D. 599.

A power of disposition by a will can not be executed by a conveyance of the premises by deed. Ib.

Power of appointment may be executed, though not referred to, by a will disposing of the property, where there is nothing for the will to act on except in execution of the power. Cathey v. Cathey, 49 D. 714.

A will by the donee of a power of appointment makes no disposition of the property and is no execution of the power, where such will merely directs the property to be kept together under the management of certain persons "until the heirs may wish a division;" and where the power was to divide the property among the donor's children as the donee should think best, they take equally. Ib.

Appointments of a wife in conformity with a power conferred upon her are not void because others, invalid, are included in her will. Those in accordance with the power will be sustained; others will be rejected. Cruise v. McKee, 73 D. 186.

A testator devised to his wife as follows: "All my real estate and personal property, to settle all debts, and expenses, and claims, collect all debts, to hold for her life, and to dispose of at her death at her pleasure." The widow conveyed in fee simple some of the land so devised to her, by warranty deed containing no recital of her title, nor evidence of an intention to execute the power. Held, (1) that she had, under the will, an estate for life only, with a power to appoint the fee; (2) that the power was not executed by the deed, and that the deed therefore, passed only an estate for her life. Quere, whether the power could be executed by deed, or whether it must be by will. Dunning v. Vanhusen, 17 R. 709.

By the rules of a benevolent society, a sum was payable, upon the death of a member, to his widow, children, or such persons to whom he might have disposed of the same by will or assignment; and if there should be no widow or children, and no disposition by will or assignment, the fund should go to the permanent fund of the society. A member died unmarried and without issue, and by his will gave the "entire residue" of his "estate," after payment of debts and funeral expenses, to his three sisters. Held, (1) that the fund due from the society was not assets recoverable by his administrator or executor, but only the subject of a power; and (2) that the will was not an exercise of the power, and, therefore, the fund went to the society. Maryland Mut. Ben. Soc. v. Clendinen, 22 R. 52.

A husband devised to his wife, for her life, two-thirds of his entire estate, subject to certain specific legacies, with power to dispose of the same absolutely by will or deed. After his death, the wife acquired the fee of the undivided third of the lands so devised to her. Subsequently she executed a will, making some specific bequests, and then providing as follows: "All and singular the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal, of whatever kind and wheresoever situate, I hereby order and direct to be converted into money by my executors." "And for that purpose I do authorize and empower them to bargain, sell, and convey my real estate wheresoever situate, and to make, execute, acknowledge and perfect all deeds and conveyances in law necessary to assure in the purchase or purchasers thereof the full title thereto, the said real estate to be sold as soon as the same can be done without sacrifice, in the discretion of said executors." "And when my said residuary estate shall be converted into money as aforesaid," etc., with directions for its distribution. She also bequeathed a gold watch and some household furniture, which came to her under her husband's will, to different persons. She died seized of several parcels of real estate. Held, that the power of disposition conferred by her husband's will was fully exercised, and her will carried all the property in which she derived any interest under that will. Funk v. Eggleston, 34 R. 138.

6. Powers coupled with an interest.

— A power coupled with an interest exists when the person to whom the power is given derives a present or future interest in the subject over which the power is to be exercised. The interest must be in the thing itself, and not in the execution of the power merely. Mansfield v. Mansfield, 16 D. 76.

The power of a mortgagee to sell is a power coupled with an interest. Wilson v. Troup, 14 D. 458; and is not revoked by the death of the mortgagor. Bergen v. Bennett, 2 D. 231; Mansfield v. Mansfield, 16 D. 76.

A power to sell, coupled with an interest given to several persons, may be executed by those who accept the power, even though one or more refuse to accept it, or after accepting renounce it. Williams v. Otey, 47 D. 632.

A power given to an executor by will to sell lands, when, in his opinion, sale can be made to good advantage, and to distribute the proceeds among the testator's children as they become of age, is a power coupled with an interest, and entitles the executor to the possession of the land. Dabney v. Manning, 17 D. 597.

Where a railroad company conveys to trustees to secure payment of bonds issued by it, certain lands divided into tracts, each described, numbered, and valued, reserving to itself the power to sell any portion of the land at its valuation, and the trustees having power to convey in fee, upon the surrender to them by the company of bonds equal in amount to the value of the land sold, the power of the trustees to convey is a power coupled with an interest, and requires only a substantial compliance with its terms. A deed from the trustees passes the legal title, and in an action against their grantee, under the Indiana code, for the recovery of real property, on a complaint averring the legal right of the plaintiff to the possession, the equities of the plaintiff cannot be inquired into. Rouse v. Beckett, 95 D. 676.

7. Aiding defective execution in equity. — Courts of equity will aid a defective execution of powers, but not the non-execution of them. Mitchell v. Denson, 65 D. 403. Hence a conveyance by only one of three executors or trustees, will be supported in favor of a purchaser for a valuable consideration; and though it be provided by the will, that if one or more of the executors or trustees should die before the trust was executed, others should be appointed by the survivors jointly with them to complete the execution of the trust. Roberts v. Stanton, 5 D. 463. But a want of a power to convey can not be supplied in chancery. Hence, if executors convey without power, their conveyance cannot be aided in equity. Tierman v. Beam, 15 D. 557.

Equity will not aid the execution of a power of appointment held by one who intended to execute it, but failed to do so because erroneously advised by her attorney that it was unnecessary to exercise it. This was not even a defective execution of the power. Mitchell v. Denson, 65 D. 403.

8. Delegation of powers. — A naked power cannot be delegated, but where a devise is to executors in trust to sell and convey, it seems that they may act by attorney. May v. Frazer, 14 D. 159.

9. Revocation. — A power to sell and convey is a naked power, and a naked power or authority may be revoked at pleasure. A power or authority coupled with an interest is irrevocable. Mansfield v. Mansfield, 16 D. 76.

*When execution of power may be delegated to agent, see note, 14 D. 170-172.

Power coupled with an interest cannot be revoked by person granting it; but it is necessarily revoked by his death, for a valid act cannot be done in the name of a dead man. Frederick's Appeal, 91 D. 159.

A naked power given jointly to several persons does not survive, after the death of any of them. Mallet v. Smith, 60 D. 107.

Where the defendant, who receives for collection a note in favor of the plaintiff's debtor, the proceeds of which the debtor directed to be paid to his creditors, promised the plaintiff in consideration of his forbearing to sue the debtor, to pay the proceeds to him, — held that the power given to the defendant was revocable, and that he was not liable in an action for money had and received, it appearing that before the note had been collected, the debtor directed the defendant to pay the sum when collected to a particular creditor, which the defendant did. Peabody v. Harvey, 10 D. 103.

PRIVATE WAYS.

[Includes the creation, use, and extinguishment of an easement in one person, of a right of passage over the land of another; not embracing highways, city streets, or ferries.]

1. Nature of the easement, generally. — Where land is granted with a right of way, that right is appurtenant to every part of the land thereafter granted, no matter how small. Watson v. Bioren, 7 D. 617.

A right of way as a mere rural servitude is confined to a convenient passage from the property granted to the public road or highway. Livingston v. Mayor of N. Y., 22 D. 622.

A person can not have a right of way as an easement, in the legal sense of the word, over his own land. Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 47 D. 156.

A right of way is not any interest in land, but merely an easement, which does not conflict with the absolute proprietorship of the owner. Snyder v. Warford, 49 D. 94.

The inference establishing a right of way in the public over uninclosed land can not be deduced from the mere travel across it by the public without objection from the owner. Warren v. Jacksonville, 58 D. 610.

The owner of a tract of land who has an easement in a mill-race, dam, and a road-way along said race to repair the same, has not got a private right of way for ordinary purposes over said road, but only a right to use it as occasion might require to repair the race and dam. McTavish v. Carroll, 61 D. 353.

A right of way is appurtenant to land, and the right to possession and use of land carries with it the right to use the way. Cheswell v. Chapman, 75 D. 158.

A way appurtenant to a close is appurtenant to every parcel into which it may be divided. Whitney v. Lee, 79 D. 727.

The words "road" and "way" are not synonymous. A road is any piece of land used or appropriated for travel, and is a very different thing from a mere right of way. Chollar-Potosi M. Co. v. Kennedy, 93 D. 409.

A right of way is either in gross or appurtenant. The first is attached to and vests the right in the person to whom it is granted. The second is incident to an estate, one terminus of which is the land or tenement of the person claiming it; it inheres in the land, concerns the premises, and pertains to its enjoyment, and passes with it. Alley v. Carleton, 94 D. 260.

A way in gross, being attached to a person, cannot be assigned or granted over to another; hence, it must be claimed by grant or from prescription by the claimant in his own person, and does not arise in this manner where it can fairly be construed to be appurtenant to another estate. But a right of way appurtenant may be derived from express grant, from necessity, by implication, from a grant in which it is not expressed, and by prescription. Id.

The owner of land who sells half of it, reserving the right of way across it, and in the same deed granting to the vendee a right of way across the unsold half, does not thereby create rights which are annexed or appurtenant to the respective tracts so as to pass with the title. Wagner v. Hanna, 96 D. 354.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Whether a grant of a right of way be in gross or appurtenant to some other estate must be determined from the grant itself, and not by matter aliunde. Ib.

A right of way is an easement, only when it appears in the grant to be made for the benefit of a dominant tenement which is described therein. Ib.

A right of way is an interest in land within the statute of frauds, and hence transferable only by an instrument in writing, which describes the interest conveyed. If it be appurtenant, the instrument must so describe it, and must include a description of the tract of land to which it is annexed. Ib.

2. Creation by act of the landowner.—The grantees of several lots, which originally constituted an entire block, who derive title from the same source by deeds from the original proprietor which conveyed their respective lots with reference to an alley-way laid through the center of the block, are estopped from denying the existence of such alley-way as a public or private way. Carlin v. Paul, 47 D. 139.

Ordinary rights of way do not pass by conveyance, unless the grantor uses language showing his intention to create the easement de novo; and the use of the word appurtenances does not show such an intention. Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 47 D. 158.

Nothing passes as incident to the grant of a right of way over the land of another except what is necessary for its reasonable and proper enjoyment. Maxwell v. McAttee, 48 D. 409.

Verbal promises to establish a pathway through land cannot be enforced: 1. Because there is no specific contract entered into by any person or persons; and 2. Because such promises are not obligatory under the statute of frauds. Hall v. McLeod, 74 D. 400.

Upon the division of a deceased person's estate, the committee appointed by the probate court may, where necessity or convenience requires it, give to one share a right of way over land assigned to the other shares. Cheswell v. Chapman, 75 D. 158.

A deed granting a right of way by reference to the actual condition of property, and the manner in which it was used by the owner at the time, is valid; and proof may be introduced to show what roads and passes were in use at the time of the conveyance. Ib.

A valid right of way in passways after partition is created by a probate court committee who assign to one share the "privilege to pass and repass to and from, in and around, the lands assigned to the other shares," in the usual passways. Ib.

A right of way in passways after a partition of a decedent's estate will be limited to such passways as were in existence and in a condition to be used at the time of the partition, and such as were marked on the ground by a distinguishable track, or otherwise so defined as to be fixed in a certain course. Such a right confers no authority to open passways formerly used, but discontinued and closed at the time of the partition. Ib.

Equity will enforce the specific performance of a provision of a will granting a road across the land of a purchaser of one devisee to the land of a purchaser of another devisee, notwithstanding that the will provides that the devisees shall themselves locate the road, or cause others to locate it for them. Lide v. Hadley, 76 D. 338.

Under a parol agreement by the owners of adjacent lots, dedicating an alley to the common use of the lots, and in pursuance of which the owners erect their buildings in reference to the alley, the easement becomes appurtenant to each lot, and is not defeated by the statute of frauds, and subsequent purchasers of the lots take the easement as an appurtenance. Rhea v. Forsyth, 78 D. 441.

3. Creation by adverse user or prescription.—To establish a right by prescription there must be: 1. Continued and uninterrupted use or enjoyment; 2. Identity of the thing enjoyed; 3. That the right is adverse to the owner of the soil. Lawton v. Rivers, 13 D. 741. S. P., as to the third point. Sims v. Davis, 34 D. 581; Rowland v. Wolfe, 19 D. 651.

Immaterial changes in a road do not destroy its identity; but much depends on the situation of the country. Lawton v. Rivers, 13 D. 741.

A person does not have a right of way by prescription by passing over the lands of another in all directions, nor can a grant of such a way be presumed, however long continued. Jones v. Percival, 16 D. 415.

Permissive use of a passway through land, although continued for fifty years, confers no right on the persons using it. Hall v. McLeod, 74 D. 400.

The mere declaration of one that he uses a way by sufferance is insufficient to divest him of rights acquired by prescription. Pierce v. Cloud, 82 D. 496.

A plea, after partition, alleging a right of way by prescription is insufficient, although it refers to the immemorial usage of former proprietors, unless it contains a distinct averment that the passway existed and was in use, or in a condition to be used, at the time of the partition; and not leave it to be inferred that it was closed and discontinued at that time. If defendant allege that it was necessary for him to remove fences or other obstructions in order to use the passway, he must also allege that the obstruction was placed there since the partition. Plea of usage in former times by owners of the whole land is of no importance, except as it may furnish evidence that there was a passway at the time of the partition. Cheswell v. Chapman, 75 D. 158.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The enjoyment of a way as of right is defined to mean an enjoyment had openly, notoriously, without particular leave at the time, by a person claiming to use, without danger of being treated as a trespasser, as a matter of right, whether strictly legal by presumption and adverse user, or by deed confirming the right; or though not strictly legal, yet lawful to the extent of excusing a trespass. Pierce v. Cloud, 82 D. 496.

Twenty-one years of use and enjoyment of right of way, as of right, confers title, and the owner of the land has the burden of proving that the use of the easement was under some license, indulgence, or special contract inconsistent with the right claimed by the other party. Ib.

Five years' uninterrupted enjoyment of a right of way over public land appropriated for a road establishes a prescriptive right to continue to enjoy the same. Chollar-Potosi M. Co. v. Kennedy, 93 D. 409.

A party assuming and exercising a right of way openly, notoriously, and continuously, without asking the consent of the owner of the land, and without manifesting in any way that he is exercising the right as a favor or license given him by the owner of the soil, must be considered as holding adversely. Ib.

A party relying upon a right of way by prescription need not in pleading aver that he enjoys the right of way by prescription. It is sufficient for him to aver that he has enjoyed the right of way for a period long enough to have established his right. Ib.

When a right of way to certain land exists by adverse use and enjoyment only, proof that it was used for a variety of purposes, covering every purpose required by the dominant estate, in its then condition, is evidence from which may be inferred a right to use the way for all purposes which may be reasonably required for the use of that estate, while substantially in the same condition. Parks v. Bishop, 21 R. 519.

A right of way over an uninclosed woodland can be acquired by user for twenty-one years. Reimer v. Stuber, 59 D. 744.

Adverse use must be uninterrupted for twenty years to give a right of way over uninclosed land, and inclosing the land terminates the use. Kilburn v. Adams, 39 D. 754.

A prescriptive right of way over uninclosed lands can not be acquired by mere use thereof. Sims v. Davis, 34 D. 581.

The assertion of ownership by the claimant of a right of way, or some implied admission by the owner of the soil that the right exists, is essential to create a right of way by prescription over uninclosed lands. Ib.

A right of way over uninclosed land attached to a school-house, designedly left open for convenience or ornament, can not be acquired by an adjacent proprietor, by merely passing over the land in common with those for whose use it is appropriated, for any number of years, although his use is more frequent than theirs, and a marked path is worn thereby, and although he occasionally levels spots gullied by the rain, such use being regarded as permissive and not adverse, unless there is some decisive act, indicating an exclusive use under a claim of right, such as making a wrought way, paved or graveled, or otherwise fitted for use. Kilburn v. Adams, 39 D. 754.

A trustee of an incorporated academy can acquire a right of way over its land by adverse use, but more unequivocal acts of adverse and uninterrupted possession are required of him than of a stranger. Ib.

4. When a grant will be presumed. — A grant of a right of way may be presumed from an uninterrupted adverse possession for more than twenty years, unexplained. Hill v. Crosby, 13 D. 448. The way claimed must be definitely located; no right can be acquired, in common with other neighbors, over uninclosed lands, the routes used being changed with every change of fields and fences at the will of the owner. Turnbull v. Rivers, 15 D. 622.

To rebut the presumption of the grant of a way from an alleged uninterrupted use, evidence that the owner of the land had plowed up the way, within the statutory time, at the same time declaring that the claimant had no right of way, is admissible. Barker v. Clark, 17 D. 428.

The grant of a right of way will be presumed from an uninterrupted enjoyment thereof for twenty-one years. Worrall v. Rhoads, 30 D. 274.

Such a presumption applies to a way over uninclosed land, whether clear or woodland. Ib.

The use of a passway, to create a presumption of a grant of a right of way, must be enjoyed under circumstances that indicate that it is claimed as a right, and is not regarded merely as a privilege. Hall v. McLeod, 74 D. 400.

The grant of an easement in that portion of a passage-way between adjoining lots of land which lies upon the lot of the other owner will be presumed in the owner of each lot, where the way, which extended from a street along and upon the dividing line between the lots and was the only means of access to the back part of either, was used uninterruptedly for twenty years by the owners of both lots, without limit, restriction, interruption, or objection, or any claim or right, except what might be implied from such use, and no mention of any right of way was made in any of the conveyances of any of the lots for a much longer time. Barnes v. Haynes, 74 D. 629.

M. C., owning a tract of land bounded north by W. street, conveyed to D. the west portion, whereon was a well, reserving a right to use the well by the words, "excepting a privilege to the well of water on said lot, which I reserve for the use of my said homestead estate," this homestead estate being the remainder of the tract. M. C. devised to J. in fee simple the land between the house and the lot conveyed to D., together with a tenement in the house, and to S. the rest of the homestead estate. For a long period, but not for the time required to gain an easement by prescription, all the occupants of the homestead estate had crossed the land between the homestead and D.'s lot on their way to the well. In trespass quare clausum brought by the grantees of J. against S. held, that the way across J.'s lot could not be claimed as a way of strict necessity. Held, further, that the way could not be implied from the circumstances of the case as one reasonably necessary. O'Rourke v. Smith, 23 R. 440.

Quare, whether the grant of a way existing de facto can be implied except in cases of strict necessity. Ib.

Seem, that the claimant of such grant must be required to show that without the way he will be subjected to an expense excessive and disproportioned to the value of his estate, or that his estate clearly depends for its appropriate enjoyment on the way, or that some conclusive indication of his grantor's intention exists in the circumstances of his estate. Ib.

5. Transfers and assignments. — Where the owner of three tracts of land, over one of which he has been accustomed to pass by a way between the other two, conveys these two, with their appurtenances, the way does not pass. Barker v. Clark, 17 D. 428.

An ungranted residue of a right of way may be annexed to a particular messuage or close, either by express stipulation or necessary implication, according to the occasion of the grant. Kirkham v. Sharp, 29 D. 57.

A grantor of such right of way, by conveying a full privilege of ingress, egress, and regress, puts his right thereto exactly on a footing with that of his grantee as a co-tenant; and therefore he can not afterwards use his ungranted residue in a manner different from that contemplated and obviously intended by the parties at the time the grant was made. Ib.

A perpetual right of way is the subject of grant, and not of license, and can be conveyed at law only by deed or prescription. Foster v. Browning, 67 D. 505.

A license purporting to give a perpetual right of way is revocable at law, although money may have been expended upon the faith of it by the licensee in building the way; but it seems that in equity the licensee may have relief upon the grounds of estoppel and part performance of a parol contract. Ib.

A right of way to land devised, over other land of the testator, is appurtenant to the land devised, and passes by a conveyance thereof without express mention. Lide v. Hadley, 76 D. 338.

J. owning lands, on which was a strip called a street, but which was not laid out or dedicated as a public highway, conveyed the same to S., by a conveyance, in which the said strip was mentioned as a boundary and described as "St. Charles street." Subsequently S. conveyed a portion of such lands to the plaintiff, "with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging," referring to the so-called street, in the deed. The land so sold did not abut or front upon such street, nor was there a right of way by necessity over the land intermediate. Held, that the plaintiff did not acquire any right of way over the so-called street. Dawson v. St. Paul Fire Ins. Co., 2 R. 109.

Where the owner of land has a way over one portion of it for the benefit of another portion of it, such way is a non-continuous quasi easement and will not pass on a sale of the dominant portion, by the word "appurtenances" merely, but there must be words sufficient to create a new easement. Parsons v. Johnson, 23 R. 149.

The owner of land, over which was a way for his convenience, sold the land adjacent to the way, describing it by precise and definite boundaries, but the way was not mentioned and there were no general words except the word "appurtenances." The way was not necessary to the purchaser. Held, that the way was a non-continuous quasi easement and did not pass. Ib.

6. Use of private ways. * — Where the way commonly used is closed by the act of the owner of the land, the way not being limited or defined, the one having the easement may pass to and fro in the manner least prejudicial to the owner. Farnum v. Platt, 19 D. 330.

If a private way be unlawfully obstructed by the owner of adjoining land, a person entitled to use the way may pass over the adjoining close, so far as may be necessary to avoid the obstructions, taking care to do no unnecessary damage. Kent v. Jullkins, 87 D. 544; Haley v. Colcord, 47 R. 176.

The grantee of a right of way takes it subject to all restrictions which the grantor has imposed, and can use it for no other purpose than that provided in the grant. French v. Martin, 57 D. 294.

* Private ways, in what manner may be used, see note, 88 D. 279-282.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The owner of a right of way over a passage-way may disturb the soil and pave or repair the way for the purpose of keeping it fit for use, provided in so doing he make no material change in the condition of the way nor interfere with the estates of others therein. Brown v. Stone, 69 D. 303.

The owner of land burdened with a right of way is bound to furnish reasonable facilities, determined by the circumstances of the case, for its enjoyment by the one entitled to the right. Bakeman v. Tulbot, 88 D. 275.

7. When a way of necessity arises.*—A right of way may be created in three ways: 1. By necessity; 2. By grant; 3. By prescription. Lawton v. Rivers, 13 D. 741.

A right of way from necessity, strictly speaking, does not exist. A way of necessity, such as the law recognizes, results either from a grant or reservation implied from the existing necessity; and unity of possession at some former time appears to be the foundation of the right. Tracy v. Atherton, 82 D. 621.

A right of way by necessity exists in all cases where a person owns land surrounded by other lands which exclude it from a public highway. Snyder v. Warford, 49 D. 94.

A way of necessity is impliedly included in a grant of land to which access can be had only by passing over the grantor's land. Nichols v. Luce, 35 D. 302; Brown v. Burkenmeyer, 33 D. 541; McTavish v. Carroll, 61 D. 353; and if a grantor conveys part of his lands, reserving a part to which there is no access except over the part conveyed away, he will be entitled to a way by necessity over the part so conveyed by him. Collins v. Prentice, 38 D. 61; but if he can use another way he cannot claim by implication to pass over that of another to get to his own. Alley v. Carleton, 94 D. 260.

Where one conveys land to which there is no access, except over his remaining lands or over the lands of a stranger, a right of way exists by necessity over such lands of the grantor. Kimball v. Cochecho R. R. 59 D. 387.

Two or more ways of necessity are impliedly included in a grant of lands which are so divided by impassable barriers, that the different parts are inaccessible without such ways. Nichols v. Luce, 35 D. 302.

The grantor in a deed of warranty may have a way of necessity over land granted. Brigham v. Smith, 64 D. 76.

To establish a way by necessity it is sufficient if the necessity exist; its existence for any particular length of time is not required; but the actual necessity of the right, and not its mere convenience, must be shown. Hence, where a resident on an island has a way by water to a public road, of no greater length than a passage through a neighbor's field, no sufficient necessity exists to create a way through the field. Lawton v. Rivers, 13 D. 741.

The order in which two parcels of land were conveyed makes no difference in determining whether or not a right of way by necessity is appurtenant to either. And neither does the fact that such parcels were conveyed by the executors of a deceased owner, under a decree of the probate court. Collins v. Prentice, 38 D. 61.

The common law rule respecting ways by necessity is not changed by the Connecticut statute authorizing the selectmen to lay out private ways. R.

Where a right of way by necessity is claimed by a party, he must prove that the necessity exists. Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 47 D. 156.

A right of way is reserved by implication to a wreck commissioner on the grant of land on "the banks," where there is no other way of getting to the shore. Helfield v. Baum, 57 D. 563.

A private right of way may exist by necessity. Id.

A right of way incident to a right of common for taking sea-weed, etc., passes by implication, by a grant of such right of common, upon one tract of land in favor of another. Hall v. Lawrence, 57 D. 715.

A way over other land of grantor in a deed may pass as appurtenant to the land granted, even though there be no "insuperable physical obstacles" to prevent access by another way, if such other way cannot be made without unreasonable labor and expense. And a jury in determining this question may consider the comparative value of the land and the probable cost of such a way. Pettingill v. Porter, 85 D. 671.

A right of way from necessity is implied by law solely to secure the party in whom it is vested in the enjoyment of his property, of which he would be otherwise deprived, and if the necessity for its use ceases, the right also ceases. Alley v. Carleton, 94 D. 260; Collins v. Prentice, 38 D. 61.

Where the real estate of a deceased person is divided among his heirs by proceedings in the Probate Court, a right of way of necessity may be implied from one part to another, and where appurtenant to a part set off for dower, it does not cease with the widow's death, but passes to a grantee or purchaser. Goodal v. Godfrey, 38 R. 671.

The owner of two stores, with a pulloo hall over both of them, conveyed the stores at different times to different grantees, and an individual half of the furniture, scenery, etc., of the hall to each. There was but one entrance to the hall, and that was at the south end of the building, and it was impracticable to construct another without injuring the front of the north store and the hall. Held, that the owner of the north store had an implied right to use the stairway. Galloway v. Bonesteel, 56 R. 616.

In determining necessity for ways to pass with land, the word "necessary" does not mean absolute physical necessity; and "unreasonable labor and expense" means excessive and disproportionate to the value of the property purchased. Pettingill v. Porter, 85 D. 671.

Where a judgment-creditor levied on a part of the debtor's land, leaving the latter no passage from the remaining portion to the highway, the debtor has necessarily a right of way over the land levied upon. Pernam v. Wood, 3 D. 43.

When land of a debtor is set off on execution to which no access can be had, except over other lands of the debtor, the creditor may have set off to him a right of passage over such other lands either separately or jointly with the debtor. Taylor v. Townsend, 5 D. 107.

8. When it does not. — A way of necessity exists only when there is no other outlet to a public highway. Goyette v. Bethune, 7 D. 188.

The necessity from which the grantee derives a right of way is, when the lands purchased are surrounded on all sides by the lands of the grantor. If the land can be reached by water, or by a distant or difficult road, the grantee is not entitled to a way across the lands of the grantor; for it is necessity, and not inconvenience, that gives the right. Turnbull v. Rivers, 15 D. 622; Nichols v. Luce, 35 D. 302; Screen v. Gregorie, 64 D. 747.

A party can have no right of way by necessity over the land of another to connect different parts of a tract of land belonging to himself. Cooper v. Maupin, 35 D. 456.

A right of way by necessity does not exist when the party claiming it has a way over his own land. Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 47 D. 156.

A vendee has no right of way through the land of his vendor, unless such right of way is indispensably necessary to the enjoyment of the land conveyed to him. Hall v. McLeod, 74 D. 400.

In 1839, the owner of a lot built two houses on it, one fifteen feet front, the other twelve and one-half feet front in the first story, and fifteen feet in the upper stories, leaving an alley of two and one-half feet in width between them, open to the street, thirty feet deep, and communicating at the inner end by gates with the rear yards of both houses, the timbers of the latter house extending across the alley from the upper stories, and resting in the wall of the first house. The alley was used as a common passage-way by the occupants of both houses.

At the inner end of the alley a fence at right angles with the street, extending to the rear of the lot, divided it into equal parts of fifteen feet each. Access could be had to the yard through the house or from a lane in the rear of the premises. The builder and his widow owned both houses until 1865, when the property was sold under decree to W., who in that year sold the second house to C. by a deed including the alley, without reservation of any right in it to the occupants of the other house. In 1868 W. sold the first house to S. by a deed embracing no part of the alley, nor any right in it. Held, that the owners of the first house got no right to the use of the alley. Mitchell v. Seipel, 36 R. 404.

9. Remedy for interference. * — Case may be maintained against an intruder, by one having a right of way, without proof of special damage. Williams v. Estling, 45 D. 710.

10. — or obstruction. — The existence of other obstructions to plaintiff's way is no bar to his recovery, where such other obstructions are not considered in estimating damages. Rogers v. Stewart, 26 D. 296.

The measure of damages for obstructing a way is the plaintiff's injury sustained by loss of the use of the entire way; the mere value of the way up to some further obstruction is not the proper rule. Id.

A declaration in case for obstructing a way setting out termini, and a general verdict thereunder for the plaintiff, are sufficiently certain. Pearce v. McClenaghan, 55 D. 710.

Seisin is not necessary to maintain case for obstructing a way appurtenant to land, but rightful possession is sufficient, and under an allegation of seisin and possession proof of rightful possession will support the action, especially after verdict. Id.

An allegation of possession of land and of a right of way over an adjoining tract, without averring that the right of way is by reason of the possession, is sufficient after verdict where a way appurtenant is proved, although the better course is to allege the way to be by reason of the possession. Id.

The owner of land subject to an easement has all the rights of an owner, subject only to a reasonable use of the easement. Consequently where such owner builds a fence across a road, to which another person has an easement for occasional use, if the owner offers to and is willing to take down the fence every time the person having the right desires to pass, he occasions such latter person no damage which can be recovered in an action. McTavish v. Carroll, 61 D. 353.

An easement to travel along a road running along a mill-race, for purpose of repairing same, is not necessarily obstructed by "plowing and cultivating" the road, the sort of cultivation not being mentioned. There are different modes of cultivation, some of which in particular stages of it would create no such obstruction as could prevent carts and wagons from being used with convenience in repairing the dam and race. Id.

A plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for obstructions to his right of way, while such right existed, although he avers himself out of court at the time of suit brought, as to the right of way itself. Alley v. Carleton, 94 D. 260.

The grant of a passway over a particular part of grantor's land does not deprive him of the right to erect gates at the termini of the way in entering and leaving his land. Maxwell v. McAtee, 48 D. 409; provided they do not interfere with a reasonable and proper enjoyment of the way; whether they do or not is a question for the jury. Baker v. Frick, 24 R. 506.

Under a grant of a passage-way, "as now laid out," the owner of land over which a way passes cannot maintain a gate thereon, nor can he narrow the way by planting posts therein. Welch v. Wilcox, 100 D. 113.

Where city lots are conveyed with the reservation of a passage-way, five feet wide, in the rear, with no outlet at one end, for the purpose of access to the street, the rights of abutters on that way are not infringed by the erection of bay-windows projecting over it from thirteen to eighteen inches, not interfering with foot passage. Burnham v. Nevins, 59 R. 61.

11. Extinction of the right by acts of land owner.*—The obstruction of a way by the erection of a gate thereon, which may be opened and shut at pleasure, is not such an obstruction as will operate to extinguish the claimant's right of way, however long it may have been continued. Barnwell v. Magrath, 36 D. 254.

An actual obstruction of a private right of way, as by inclosing and cultivating it for ten years, extinguishes the plaintiff's right thereto. Boven v. Team, 60 D. 127.

A right of way of necessity is not a permanent right, and the conveyance of an estate to which such a right is appendant carries with it the right, and wholly divests the grantor of all interest in it. Alley v. Carleton, 94 D. 260.

12.—by abandonment or non-user.—Omitting to remove an obstruction in a way, placed there by the defendant, is not an abandonment thereof; otherwise, had the plaintiff himself erected the obstruction. Rogers v. Stewart, 26 D. 296.

In the case of private ways, non-user for twenty years affords a conclusive presumption that the right to them never existed, or has been extinguished in favor of some adverse right. Webber v. Chapman, 80 D. 111.

13.—by merger.—Unity of ownership extinguishes an easement of way. Screen v. Gregorie, 64 D. 747.

A way is extinguished by a union of the title in fee in the dominant and servient estates in the same person. Pearce v. McClenaghan, 55 D. 710.

When the title to two adjoining closes becomes united in one person, all subordinate rights and easements are extinguished. And if there is a private way over such premises, actually in use or designated on a plan, and no one else has a legal right to use it, he may discontinue it in whole or in part, and may sell and convey the fee in the land over which such way was laid out or used. Warren v. Blake, 89 D. 748.

A right of way appurtenant is not extinguished by merger in a mortgagee taking possession of the dominant and servient estates under separate mortgages for the purpose of foreclosure, but conveying one of the estates before foreclosure. Rüger v. Parker, 54 D. 744.

A way is not extinguished by a conveyance of the dominant estate in trust to the owner of the servient estate, for the benefit of a married woman for life, remainder in fee to her children, nor is the way suspended by such a conveyance. Pearce v. McClenaghan, 55 D. 710.

The right to use an alley running between two lots of land, and from one street to another, and between other lots of land, such alley having been dedicated to the use of lot-owners by a former owner of the property, constitutes an easement which, if continuous, will not be extinguished by merger of the title of the said two lots in one owner, but will pass to purchasers and holders of other lots upon the alley; and the purchaser of such two lots will have no right to close the alley, though the measurements in his deeds extend to the center of the alley, and embrace the whole of it between his lots; but the consent of all the owners of lots bounding on it will be necessary to authorize it to be closed. McCarty v. Kitchenman, 80 D. 538.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.

I. IN CIVIL ACTIONS.

1. General Principles.

1. Necessity of Process.—Notice is necessary to give a court jurisdiction of the person, and unless it is acquired in some mode, the judgments of the court are mere nullities. Ex parte Cheatham, 44 D. 525.

A proceeding against a steamboat or other water-craft is one in rem; the liability is upon the craft, and the judgment operates alone upon it. The seizure of the thing is construed notice to the whole world, and ne the powers of the sheriff in serving or executing any process except that he is not to be recognized or obeyed as a sheriff or known officer, but must show his authority, and make known his business if required by the party who is to obey the same. Burton v. Wilkinson, 46 D. 145.

A constable, being the plaintiff in an action, may serve the summons himself, and his return can not be impeached in trespass, for an arrest under an execution and judgment founded on such service. Putnam v. Man, 20 D. 686.

Process, where a sheriff is a party, plaintiff or defendant, should, at the common law, be issued to the coroner in all cases; and if, in such cases, it be issued to the sheriff, it will be set aside as irregular upon the application of the other party to the court whence it issued. Collais v. McLeod, 49 D. 376.

A sheriff acquires a special property in money collected by him under execution, and if such money is at any time subject in his hands to other process, he cannot serve it himself, but it must be executed by the coroner. Clymer v. Willis, 58 D. 414.

The law does not authorize a person to execute process in his own favor. Snyder v. Broese, 99 D. 551.

11. — and upon whom. — Service upon an attorney after his client's death is invalid. Ciena v. Beach, 46 D. 576.

12. Service on one of several defendants.* — In trespass against several defendants, the plaintiff may proceed to trial, as to one or more, without entering a nolle prosequi as to the defendants who have not been served with process, and who have not appeared. Givens v. Bradley, 6 D. 646.

13. Mode and sufficiency of service. — 1. In general. — It is competent for a state to declare what manner of service or process shall be sufficient to bring its citizens into court; but its regulations cannot operate extraterritorially, and therefore are not binding upon citizens of other states unless they go voluntarily within its limits. Bimeler v. Dawson, 39 D. 430.

Courts have the power to determine whether a service of process was sufficient. Borden v. State, 54 D. 217.

The mode in which writs and precepts shall be served and executed is regulated by statute, and unless substantially conformable thereto, the doings of the officer are invalid. Benson v. Smith, 66 D. 285.

2. Personal service. — Showing to a sheriff an order of supersedeas is a sufficient service thereof upon him. Hopkinson v. Sears, 39 D. 236.

The service of a writ of summons is insufficient, where the return states that it was executed by leaving a certified copy for the defendant below, "with his wife, a white member of his family, and over the age of fifteen years," but does not state it to have been left at his usual place of abode, as expressly required by statute when the service is not personal. Vaughn v. Brown, 47 D. 730.

*Service of process on one of several partners or joint-debtors, see note, 44 D. 570-574

A record which shows a service of process, a notice to the defendant, or an appearance for him, not amounting in either case to personal notice or appearance, raises a presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of the court, but such presumption may be met and overcome by proof that the service was not sufficient under the laws of the state where the judgment was taken, or by other countervailing proof. Bimeler v. Dawson, 39 D. 430.

3. Constructive service. — Constructive service of process and proceedings in rem, are authorized by the laws of most of the states, and judgments founded on such service or proceedings, are valid. Scott v. Coleman, 15 D. 71.

Statutes substituting other than a personal service or process, must be strictly complied with, to give the court jurisdiction, and this compliance must appear affirmatively in the proceedings. Zecharie v. Bosers, 40 D. 111.

The publication of an order for two months, as required by statute, is sufficient, although such order directed its publication for eight weeks only. Blight v. Banks, 17 D. 136.

An affidavit for an order of publication against persons sued as unknown heirs, must be made by the complainant himself, unless it appear why he could not make it. Id.

The statute 5 George II., authorizing service by publication against absent parties, is substantially in force in Georgia, but does not apply to citizens of other states who were never residents of the state, or to foreign corporations. Dearing v. Bank of Charleston, 48 D. 300.

Where a statute provides for constructive service of writ upon each defendant separately, either by personal service or by leaving a copy at his usual place of abode, the terms and conditions of such service must be complied with. Service cannot be made by leaving one writ for two defendants. Stewart v. Stringer, 97 D. 278.

14. Time of service. — A service of civil process upon Thanksgiving day, is prohibited by statute, and is therefore void. Gladwin v. Lewis, 16 D. 33.

A sheriff should execute process with the utmost expedition, or as soon after he receives it as the nature of the thing will admit. Wyer v. Andrews, 29 D. 497.

Of two writs served on the same day, one of which shows the exact time of day when the service was made, the second only the day, the former will be given precedence to the latter, as no intendment can be made that the latter was served before the hour mentioned in the first return of service. Fairfield v. Paine, 41 D. 357.

An amendment to a return of a service that may affect the rights of third persons can only be allowed where something appears of record by which the correction can be made. Thus where one party claims under a writ of execution returned as served at noon of a certain day, an amendment can not be allowed of a writ returned merely as served upon the same day, so as to cause the same to appear as served before the first writ, where nothing appears in the record to indicate the time of service. Id.

A computation of the time of serving process before return day, must be made by including the day of service, and excluding the return day. Dills v. Zeigler, 48 D. 370.

15. Place of service.*—Process served on a party without the state has no greater effect, it seems, than knowledge brought home to him in any other way. Ewer v. Coffin, 48 D. 587.

16. Officer's return, and how compelled.—A party not being an officer, justifying under legal process, need not show it returned. Plummer v. Dennett, 20 D. 316.

The omission of the sheriff to sign the return of a writ, renders such return irregular. Dewar v. Spence, 30 D. 241.

A misreturn or an irregular return is amendable, but it is otherwise where there is no return, which renders the subsequent proceedings void. Id.

An unsigned indorsement on a summons in partition of "nil habet, and published as the law directs," when returned into the prothonotary's office, which is referred to in a subsequent part of the record as the sheriff's return, is an insufficient return, and is amendable, and a judgment by default founded thereon is not void. Id.

A sheriff's return upon a writ that he served process upon certain named defendants, and could not find the others, imports that a personal service was made upon those found. Colerick v. Hooper, 56 D. 505.

The return of a summons, directed to two defendants, does not show legal service, where it is, "I have served this writ on defendant, P. R. and W. R., by leaving a certified copy with his family." It does not show which defendant was served, or that a copy was left with some person of suitable age and discretion. Rope v. Heaton, 76 D. 269.

17. Conclusiveness of return.—An official return duly made upon process by a sworn officer is conclusive of the facts therein stated, until vacated or set aside by due course of law, as between the parties and privies to the suit and others whose rights are necessarily dependent upon it; but as to all other persons, such return is prima facie evidence only of the facts stated in it, and subject to be disproved. Phillips v. Ellwell, 84 D. 373; Stinson v. Snow, 25 D. 238; and the remedy of the party injured is an action against the sheriff for a false return. Stewart v. Stringer, 97 D. 278.

A sheriff's return is conclusive as to the facts therein set forth, upon the parties, as far as the particular action is concerned. Thus, if the return state that property replevied was surrendered to the defendant upon his giving bond, the latter may not show that less property was replevied from him than appeared from the return. Knowles v. Lord, 34 D. 525.

An officer can not contradict or invalidate his own return under oath. Wyer v. Andrews, 29 D. 497.

An officer's return is only prima facie evidence of a fact. Hutchins v. Johnson, 30 D. 622.

The return of service of process by a sheriff will not preclude a defendant from showing that he had no notice of the action. Jones v. Commercial Bank, 35 D. 419.

The return of service of a writ by an officer is, where a return is required by law, the only proper evidence of what has been done by him thereunder, and no omission therein of any fact may be supplied by other proof. Fairfield v. Paine, 41 D. 357.

Privies who are concluded by an official return made upon process by a sworn officer are those whose privy would enable them to maintain an action against the officer for a false return to such process. Phillips v. Ellwell, 84 D. 373.

13. Amending return.*—An application for leave to amend a return is addressed to the discretion of the court, and may be denied if the granting of it will work an injustice. Freeman v. Paul, 14 D. 237.

A sheriff may, even after judgment, by leave of the court, amend his return on a writ, nunc pro tunc, in order to show that the writ was in fact served on the defendant before the judgment was rendered; and such return so made will be sufficient to sustain the judgment, although made after the writ of error is brought. Heflin v. McMinn, 20 D. 58.

A return of a summons may be amended according to the facts, to show that a copy left at the defendant's residence was left with a member of his family. Crocker v. Mann, 26 D. 684.

19. Relief against irregular service.†—A party decoyed from another state or country, on a promise not to sue him, may, upon being sued in violation of the promise, avoid the process, and may also bring an action for his damages by the breach of such promise. Steele v. Bates, 16 D. 720.

If such a party does not avoid the process on the ground of the fraud, but proceeds to trial upon the merits, and judgment go against him, he can not recover the amount of that judgment as damages for the breach of such promise. Id.

For any irregularity of an officer in executing valid process, or from any act not authorized by the process the party suing out is not liable, unless the officer acts under his orders or direction. Barnard v. Stevens, 16 D. 733.

An action for a false return is the remedy if the return is untrue. Putnam v. Man, 20 D. 686.

Process may be quashed on motion if irregularly or fraudulently executed. Steele v. Boyd, 29 D. 218.

A suit instituted by process that does not run in the name of the state may be dismissed upon motion of the defendant, though prior to the motion he has appeared in the action for other purposes; and though the statute authorizes like suits to be instituted "either by voluntary appearance and agreement of the parties or by process." Little v. Little, 32 D. 317.

Want of authority in a person serving a writ of attachment may be taken advantage of at any time, and is not waived by failing to take advantage of it by plea in abatement. Kelly v. Paris, 33 D. 199.

Void process must be set aside or vacated before trespass can be maintained against the party who caused it to issue, for acts done thereunder. Doy v. Sharp, 34 D. 509.

A motion to quash a writ for want of a proper teste is addressed to the discretion of court, and if such motion is made for a cause which might have been taken advantage of by plea in abatement, it must be made within the time limited for making such plea, or the party will be deemed to have waived the right to make it. Parsons v. Swett, 64 D. 352.

A court has jurisdiction to amend a writ after plea in abatement, or after a motion to quash the writ seasonably made. Id.

Strangers, third persons, or volunteers are liable in trespass for interfering, instigating, and causing the enforcement of unlawful process, though it may be regular and valid on its face. Public duty does not require such persons to assume the responsibility of executing legal process. Emery v. Haygood, 66 D. 459.

It is the province of the court to see that neither the law, nor its officers, nor its instruments, are made auxiliary to corrupt, unjust, or oppressive ends. Courts frequently remedy such evils upon motion, where the question relates to the control, use, or misuse of the process of the court. Pomroy v. Parmlee, 74 D. 328.

A party dispossessed by a writ improperly granted is entitled to restitution. People v. Johnson, 97 D. 770.

20. Privilege from service of process. — Privilege in respect to place of service of attachment process does not avoid it, as where it was served on a member of one of the councils of Baltimore in the council-chamber. Peters v. League, 71 D. 622.

The service of process on a privileged person is not void; it is treated as an irregularity, which may be waived.

One charged with a criminal offense in another county than that of his residence, and who on the trial is discharged, is privileged from civil suit in that county until the lapse of a reasonable time to enable him to return home. Palmer v. Rowan, 59 R. 844.

b. In Suits in Equity.

21. Service upon non-resident defendants. — A decree rendered on an insufficient publication does not bind the parties thereto; and ratification of such decree pending the suit is ineffectual. Blight v. Banks, 17 D. 136.

A court can not extend its jurisdiction over citizens of other states, by a rule of practice, as to service of process. Dearing v. Bank of Charleston, 48 D. 300.

The rule of equity, in Georgia, for the publication of a notice to absent defendants, is in affirmance of the statute 5 Geo. II., and is valid so far as it affects parties who have departed from the state to avoid service. Id.

A decree pro confesso is erroneous, when passed on an order of publication, directing publication for three weeks instead of one month, as required by statute. Central Bank v. Copeland, 81 D. 597.

Jurisdiction over the person of a non-resident defendant in a chancery suit may be acquired by service of process by publication, and proper return thereon. McDaniel v. Correll, 68 D. 587.

Non-resident defendants are not within the jurisdiction of a court where no attempt has been made to serve them with process; and where a part of the defendants have not been thus served, the defect cannot be cured by legislative enactment. Id.

A decree against non-residents upon constructive notice by publication affects only property within the jurisdiction of the court. Harris v. Pullman, 25 R. 416.

A decree of a court against three persons composing a partnership, doing business in the state of the former, rendered on personal service on two of the partners in that state, does not bind the third, who resided out of that state, did not appear, and was not personally served. Pickett v. Ferguson, 55 R. 545.

c. In Actions under Codes.

22. By whom service may be made. — Generally, in case of the inability of a sheriff to execute process, the coroner, by virtue of his office, is authorized to act as his substitute; and where he has acted, the legal presumption is that the facts existed which rendered it proper for him to act in the particular instance. Kirk v. Murphy, 67 D. 640.

When a sheriff is a party to an action, the clerk may direct process to a coroner, although there be no proof that the sheriff is a party. The clerk is presumed to know who is sheriff, and may act on his own knowledge in issuing the process in such a case. Oliphant v. Dallas, 65 D. 146.

The clerk may direct process to a coroner without an averment in a petition that the sheriff is a party to the action. It is the better practice to insert such averment, but its omission is not fatal, and may, if required, be supplied by amendment. Ib.

Personal service of a summons may be made by the sheriff of the county where the defendant is found by his deputy, by a person specially appointed by the sheriff, or by the judge of the court in which the action is brought, or by any white male citizen of the United States over the age of twenty-one years, and competent to be a witness on the trial of the action. Hahn v. Kelly, 94 D. 742.

23. Who may be served with process. — A person may appoint an attorney with capacity "to be sued," or to be served with process in his place and stead, and service of process on such attorney will have the same effect as service upon the principal. Coffey v. Silvan, 65 D. 169.

Service cannot be made on a non-resident. Sturgis v. Fay, 79 D. 440.

24. Sufficiency of service generally. — Service can not render process operative which is so utterly vitiated, with or without appearance, with or without the consent of the defendant, as to be null and void. Beall v. Blake, 58 D. 513.

The distinction between the effect of defective service and of no service should be observed. Pursley v. Hayes, 92 D. 350.

Service of process in rem should be made openly, and a written notice left with the person in possession; and the officer's acts of custody and control should be exercised in such an open and visible manner, by a custodian or otherwise, that the person having the thing in charge may take the necessary steps to protect the rights of all those interested in it. Jones v. McGuirk, 99 D. 556.

25. Time of service. — The day of issuing a summons as well as the day of return is to be counted in ascertaining the return day thereof. Barber v. Chandler, 55 D. 533.

The court is justified in dismissing an action because of the plaintiff's want of diligence in allowing an action to rest, without service or summons, for two years and eight months after the summons is issued. Grijsby v. Napa Co. 95 D. 213.

An action may be dismissed by the court for want of prosecution, notwithstanding an entry of default, where the notice to dismiss is given before summons is served, and the plaintiff then serves the summons, and at the end of ten days takes a default, but judgment is not entered up. The dismissal takes effect by relation back to the time of service of the motion. Ib.

26. Place of service. — A joint action was brought in Massachusetts against A, a resident of that state, and B, a resident of Pennsylvania. Process was served on A, and the court ordered that the plaintiff give notice to B by service of a copy of the order. B, in Pennsylvania, indorsed the order, "I accept service of this writ." A judgment by default was obtained against both defendants, and the plaintiff sued B in Pennsylvania, on the judgment. Held, that the Massachusetts court obtained no jurisdiction over B, and that the judgment against him was invalid. Scott v. Noble, 13 R. 663.

27. Leaving process, or copy. — Process may be served upon a member of a man's family, by leaving a copy thereof with his widowed sister keeping house for him. Wade v. Jones, 61 D. 584.

Where a copy of the summons regularly issued against a resident of the state is left by the serving officer at the place where such person then resided, the service is to be regarded as actual notice in law, and not constructive notice. Sturgis v. Fay, 79 D. 440.

The "usual or last place of residence" means the residence into which the person, still a resident of the state has moved, in the state, last before the service of process. Ib.

An officer's return of the service of process upon a trustee of an absent defendant, by leaving "at his dwelling-house" a true and attested copy of the writ, is a sufficient return under a statute requiring such copy to be left "at the last and usual place of abode" of the trustee. Bruce v. Cloutman, 84 D. 111.

28. When service by publication is proper and how made. — Jurisdiction over a non-resident on service by publication results from the fact that he has property within the jurisdiction, and extends only to such property as was within the state when the jurisdiction attached. Stone v. Myers, 86 D. 104.

* Summons by publication, — attack on judgment for want of jurisdiction, see note, 94 D. 762-770.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Proceeding against a non-resident defendant by an order of publication is simply a statutory mode of conferring upon the court power to pass judgment on property, the subject-matter of suit within its jurisdiction, where the owner is beyond the reach of its process. The courts in such cases act upon the presumption of notice which they will not allow to be rebutted. Dorsey v. Dorsey, 96 D. 633.

Jurisdiction of the person of a defendant may be obtained: 1. By personal service of the summons, with a copy of the complaint; 2. By constructive service, or what is commonly designated publication of summons. Hahn v. Kelly, 94 D. 742.

The service of a summons by publication thereof is set on foot by an affidavit showing the existence of certain facts, in view of which this mode of service is allowed, followed by an order of the court, the judge thereof, or a county judge, directing publication of the summons to be made in some newspaper most likely to give the defendant notice, for a certain length of time; and if the residence of the defendant be known, also directing a copy of the summons and complaint to be forthwith deposited in the post-office, addressed to him at his place of residence; and is terminated by publication and mailing as ordered, or by personal service out of the state, which is equivalent to publication and mailing. Ib.

29. Mailing, and proof thereof.—In the case of service by publication, in addition to the publication, the law requires proof that a copy of the petition and notice be directed to the defendant through the post-office, at his usual place of residence, or that such place of residence is unknown to plaintiff, who, after reasonable diligence, could not ascertain the same; and it is error to enter a judgment by default until such proof has been made. McGahan v. Carr, 71 D. 421.

In the case of service by publication, proof that a copy of the petition and notice was mailed to the defendant at his usual place of residence, or that such place of residence is unknown, is a jurisdictional fact, upon which, by the statute, the power of the court to act is made to depend, and should appear of record in the case. Without such proof, no default can be legally entered. Ib.

A decree entered upon default in a case in which service was made by publication, which recites that it was made to appear to the court that the defendant had been served with notice of the pendency of said action, is not conclusive of such service. The record must show that in addition to the publication a copy of the petition and notice had been sent by mail to the defendant at his usual place of residence, or that the same was unknown; or the decree itself must recite and show affirmatively that such copies were mailed. Ib.

30. Substituted or constructive service.—The allegation that a debtor had been more than thirty days voluntarily within the Confederate lines may be taken for confessed, if supported by the proper affidavit. Buckner v. Bush, 85 D. 634.

31. Proof of service, generally.—Proof of personal service of a summons, if made by an officer, is his affidavit or certificate stating the fact and the time and place of service; if made by a citizen, by his affidavit, setting forth that he is competent to make the service, and that he in fact made it by delivering to the defendant personally a certified copy of the summons and complaint, stating the time and place. Hahn v. Kelly, 94 D. 742.

32. Sufficiency of officer's return.—The return of service of a summons failing to state that it was left at the usual place of abode of the defendant, as required by statute, does not render absolutely void a judgment of the circuit court of the United States. Byers v. Fowler, 54 D. 271.

A person serving a notice must set out in his return of service all acts done by him, so that the court may judge of the sufficiency of the service. A return that the notice was served, or duly served, is insufficient. Hodges v. Hodges, 71 D. 383.

The return of an alias summons is sufficient, when it appears therefrom that the sheriff informed the plaintiff that he had the writ for him, and offered to deliver to him a true copy, but plaintiff refused to hear it read, and walked away. Story v. Warr, 72 D. 125.

The term at which an alias summons is returnable is the return term of the suit, and plaintiff may answer or plead at that term, when there is no service of the original process which has issued to the preceding term. Ib.

A sheriff's return of service of a summons is sufficient without adding to his signature thereto a designation of his office. Thompson v. Haskell, 74 D. 98.

The return of an officer to a summons as served upon an agent of a corporation is not conclusive as to the fact of agency; but the objection should be pleaded in abatement. Mineral Point R. R. Co. v. Keop, 74 D. 124.

33. Conclusiveness of return.—Where the record of a judgment shows that a summons was issued in the case under the seal of the court of a sister state, and returned "served" by an officer, who, it appears, was sheriff of the county, the courts of Iowa will not, in an action on such judgment, inquire into the sufficiency of such return, when no evidence to contradict it is offered by the defendant. The question whether that return was sufficient evidence of service under the laws of the state where the judgment was rendered might be raised in the appellate court of that state, but not here, merely upon the record, without further or other proof. Latterett v. Cook, 63 D. 423.

A sheriff's return of process, regular on its face, is conclusive upon the parties to the suit. Its truth can only be controverted in an action against the sheriff for a false return. McDonald v. Leewright, 77 D. 631.

The sheriff's return on a summons was that he had served it by leaving a copy thereof at the usual place of residence of the defendant. On a motion to set aside the return, — Ald, that evidence was admissible to show that the place where the summons was left was not the defendant's residence. Bond v. Wilson, 12 R. 466.

In an action to recover real estate, the plaintiff's title was founded on a sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of a sale on execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace rendered by default, on a constable's return of service of the summons by "leaving a certified copy at the defendant's usual place of residence." Held, that evidence was admissible to show that the return was false, in that the defendant was not in, and had no residence in Kansas, but was and had long been in, and a resident of, the Indian Territory. Martin v. Gray, 27 R. 149.

34. Proof of service by publication. — Proof of the service of a summons by publication is the affidavit of the printer, or his foreman or principal clerk, showing that the publication has been made, stating where and how long, and an affidavit showing a deposit in the post-office, if such deposit was made. Hahn v. Kelly, 94 D. 742.

35. Relief against irregular service. — Where a void summons is served upon the defendant, he may take advantage of it, in rem, by motion to quash, or wait, and if judgment is rendered by default, reverse it upon writ of error. Frosch v. Schlampff, 47 D. 655.

A defect in the service of process, by a failure of the sheriff to serve a copy of the complaint with the summons, is a mere irregularity, and not available on error, after judgment by default. Dew v. Cunningham, 66 D. 362.

A defendant's absence in another state at time of service is no reason for setting aside a return of service, though he was not actually notified of the suit until the first day of the term at which the summons was returnable. Council v. Atwood, 2 Ind. 289; Sturgis v. Fay, 79 D. 440.

Process served on a defendant by the wrong name is as effectually served as if served on him by his right name; and if in such case judgment is taken against him, it is as binding as if rendered against him by his right name. Perry v. Woodson, 84 D. 51.

Where a defendant was fraudulently induced to come within the jurisdiction of the court, the service of civil process upon him will be set aside, although the design, when the representations were made, was to arrest him on a criminal charge, and although the defendant has made a voluntary general appearance. Townsend v. Smith, 32 R. 793.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.

36. Warrants of arrest. — A warrant issued by a magistrate or officer of limited jurisdiction must show on its face that he had jurisdiction of the subject matter, the person, and the process. Hall v. Howd, 27 D. 696.

Whether a warrant running "State of Missouri, County of Cole, ss." would be valid or not, quare. Hickman v. Griffith, 34 D. 124.

A warrant need not be under the seal of the magistrate issuing it unless it be expressly required by statute. State v. McNally, 56 D. 650.

A wafer attached to a warrant, which is the usual seal in such cases, is prima facie sufficient without proof that it was the seal of the magistrate, or adopted by him. Id.

A warrant purporting to be issued by a justice of the peace, upon a complaint sworn to before him in that capacity furnishes a presumption that he was legally authorized so to act. Id.

The corporate seal of a town is not the seal of the mayor as a justice of the peace, and need not be appended to a warrant issued by him in that capacity, nor is his court a court of record. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

Peace-officers are not prohibited from making a complaint of a violation of penal laws by a statute providing that no sheriff, deputy sheriff, coroner, or constable shall appear as attorney or counsel for any one, nor make any writing or process to commence a suit or proceeding. Id.

37. Search-warrants.* A search-warrant under the hand and seal of a justice reciting information on oath that certain described goods had been stolen by specified parties and were concealed in a certain house, and commanding the officer to whom it was directed to enter that house in the daytime, search for the stolen articles, and bring them, with the owner of the house, or the person who had them in custody, before the justice, was held to be a valid warrant, without stating the name of the owner of the goods. Bell v. Clapp, 6 D. 339.

Under such a warrant the officer may break open the door of the house, if it is shut, and if, upon demand, it is refused to be opened. Id.

* See note on search-warrants, 40 D. 666, 667.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A warrant to search for stolen goods, and arrest the person suspected, should only issue on an oath by the applicant, showing his goods to have been stolen, and that he strongly suspects that they are concealed in a specific place, and stolen by a person distinctly pointed out; and the warrant should specifically describe the goods, place and person, and direct the officer to search such place, and arrest such person only. Grason v. Raymond, 6 D. 200.

If the preliminary requisites to obtaining a search warrant be omitted, or if the warrant be general, the proceeding is coram non judice, and the magistrate who issues the warrant, and the officer who executes it, are liable in trespass to the party injured. Id.

A search-warrant, to be valid, must particularly describe the goods to be searched for and the places to be searched. Sandford v. Nichols, 7 D. 151.

A search warrant, issued under the provisions of the Kentucky constitution, which provides "that no warrant to search any place or to seize any person or things, shall issue without describing them as nearly as may be," must describe the place to be searched, the person against whom the warrant issues, and the property sought, with such certainty as to be able to identify the same. Reed v. Rice, 19 D. 122.

It is not a prerequisite to the issuance of a search-warrant for stolen goods that any steps should be taken to inaugurate a prosecution against the party guilty of the theft; all that is required is an affidavit before a proper officer showing that the goods have been stolen, and that the applicant has sufficient grounds to believe that they are concealed in a place which he desires searched. Chipman v. Bates, 40 D. 663.

No return is required upon a search-warrant, if the goods are not found. Id.

A plea of justification, in an action of trespass, under a search-warrant, interposed by the party at whose instance the writ issued, need not show that there were sufficient grounds for its issuance. Id.

A search-warrant is a sufficient justification, though the stolen goods are not found, even to the party at whose instance the writ issued, for an entry upon the suspected place, where the doors are found open and the entry is peaceable; whether it would be a justification where the doors are found closed and are broken down, not decided. Id. Search-warrants should be construed strictly. Larthe v. Forgay, 46 D. 554.

Where parties, under the color of a search warrant, commanding the officer to diligently search a certain house for stolen goods, force their way into an adjoining dwelling-house and search it, they will be jointly liable in damages for the injury done to the property and feelings of the occupant. Id.

In a statute providing for the issuance of a search-warrant "to any sheriff, city marshal or deputy," the term "deputy" relates to both the marshal and sheriff preceding it, and the warrant may be issued to a deputy sheriff. State v. McNally, 58 D. 650.

A steamboat or vessel moored at a wharf is a "place" liable to be searched, within the meaning of a statute that provides that "any store, shop, warehouse, or other building or place in said city or town" may be searched. Id.

The authorization of a search-warrant is not "unreasonable," so as to be unconstitutional, when it is authorized for a thing obnoxious to the law, and of a person and place particularly described, and is issued on oath of probable cause. Santo v. State, 63 D. 487.

An act authorizing a search-warrant is not unconstitutional, on the ground that it does not require a particular description of the place to be searched or property to be seized, when it requires the place, person, and property to be described "as particularly as may be." Id.

PROHIBITION (WRIT OF).

1. Jurisdiction, and nature of the remedy.*—The nature of prohibition at common law, and the manner of proceeding therefor, explained. Ex parte Williams, 38 D. 46.

Writs of prohibition, mandamus, quo warranto, indicavit, and waste, contrasted and explained. State v. Comm'rs. of Roads, 12 D. 596.

A prohibition is commonly defined to be a

* When the writ will lie, see note. 12 D. 604-609.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

writ issuing out of a superior court, directed to the judge and parties of an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of a suit, because of want of jurisdiction over the suit or some collateral matter therein; but the writ may be directed to persons whose functions have little or nothing of a judicial nature. Ib.

A writ of prohibition is an existing legal remedy, in a proper case, in Kentucky. Arnold v. Shields, 30 D. 669.

The office of a writ of prohibition is to prevent the courts from exceeding their jurisdiction in the exercise of their judicial functions. Ex parte Braudlacht, 38 D. 593.

2. When the writ will not lie.*—Writ of prohibition does not lie to prevent a court from deciding erroneously, or from enforcing a wrong judgment, in a case in which it has a right to adjudicate, but only to prevent the usurpation of judicial power by a court that has no authority to decide the case which it is assuming to determine, Arnold v. Shields, 30 D. 669; or to restrain a governor from issuing a commission to an officer because of irregularity in his election. Grier v. Taylor, 17 D. 731; or to restrain action of a court of chancery upon a bill in equity, filed against the special guardian of a son compos, by one who, on appeal from the probate court, had been appointed general guardian, and alleging that error had been brought on the order appointing complainant such guardian, and that defendant also prolonged, by appeal, proceedings taken for his removal and threatened further litigation, and was grossly misbehaving as a special guardian; and praying for an injunction, the appointment of a receiver and an accounting, it being held that such bill showed a case of equity jurisdiction to grant the preliminary relief prayed. People v. Wayne Circuit Court, 83 D. 754; or where there is no other adequate remedy. Ex parte Braudlacht, 38 D. 593.

Error in the exercise of existing jurisdiction is no ground for a writ of prohibition. Ib.

A writ of prohibition issues only to restrain the action of courts in excess of jurisdiction, and does not lie to restrain any action which can be reviewed by any of the ordinary methods. People v. Wayne Circuit Court, 83 D. 754.

The act of issuing an execution is not judicial, but ministerial. Hence a writ of prohibition will not be issued to prevent it. Ex parte Braudlacht, 38 D. 593.

3. Proceedings to obtain the writ.—A plea to the jurisdiction is necessary to the granting of a prohibition only in cases where a court may acquire jurisdiction by consent, waiver of objection, or by default, and not in cases where the court can not possibly acquire jurisdiction. Arnold v. Shields, 30 D. 669.

The preliminary step where a writ of prohibition is sought is the filing, in the superior court, a suggestion, wherein should be set forth all the material facts whereon the party founds his right to such remedy; where such facts are not apparent from the record of the proceedings in the inferior court, an affidavit to their truth should be made. Ex parte Williams, 38 D. 46.

Upon the presentation of a suggestion a rule should be entered upon the opposite party requiring him to show cause why a prohibition should not issue. Ib.

A rule to show cause why a prohibition should not issue stays all further proceedings in the inferior court from the time that it is served upon that court and the opposite party. Ib.

Where a rule for a prohibition is made absolute, the writ should not at once issue, if there is any objection thereto, but the party who seeks it should be required to declare in a qui tam action. Such action is based upon the fiction that the prohibition has actually issued, and that the opposite party is proceeding in defiance thereof. The declaration therein should set forth the facts upon which the prohibition issued, so that their sufficiency may be determined by the court on demurrer, or that their truth may be traversed by plea. Upon the determination of such action in favor of plaintiff, the writ of prohibition should issue; if determined for defendant, then the case should be remanded to the original jurisdiction, to be proceeded in. Ib.

4.—and for its enforcement.—Issues in prohibition should be submitted to a jury. State v. Commissioners of Roads, 12 D. 596.

PUBLIC LANDS.

[Includes the acquisition, ownership, and disposition of the public lands of the United States and of the several states, and the rights of settlers, pre-emptioners, and others under statutory regulations. Grants of land by government are further treated under GRANTS.]

Interests in, when subject to execution, see EXECUTION, 43.

1. Acquisition of title by general government. — A deed to Thomas Jefferson, president of the United States, and his successors in office, vests the title in him as trustee, and a future conveyance by the United States will raise a presumption of a conveyance from the president to the government. McOullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715.

The government and its grants is the true source of title to all lands in this country. Sullivan v. McLenane, 65 D. 780.

The cession of territory from one government to another is considered, under the law of nations, independent of treaty stipulations, as passing only public property in and rights of sovereignty over the territory, and does not impair the rights of inhabitants to their property, but they retain all such rights to the same extent as under the former government. Teschemacher v. Thompson, 79 D. 151.

When California was ceded to United States, the latter, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, in effect stipulated for the protection of the rights of property of the inhabitants of the ceded territory, and thus included such titles to property as were merely equitable, and had never been perfected under the former government. Id.

The power of United States to provide for protecting all titles, legal and equitable, acquired in California from Mexico, prior to the cession of California to the United States, results from the fact that it is sovereign and supreme as to all matters connected with treaties, and the enforcement of obligations incurred thereunder, or cast upon it independent of treaty, by the law of nations, upon the cession of the country. Id.

The United States must determine for itself what claims to property existed at the date of the cession of a country, which it thereby became bound to protect, and the lands to which they apply, and the parties entitled to the same. Id.

Subsequent claimants from the United States after the cession of California, of lands therein, take in strict subordination to the action of the government, and they are not entitled to any notice of its proceedings. Whatever interests they may possess were acquired with full knowledge of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and of the obligations and powers of the new government. Id.

2. Acquisition of title by the states.

— The people of the state succeeded to the rights of the crown on the declaration of independence. Wendell v. Jackson, 22 D. 635.

The people are owners of all lands within the state not granted to others or lost by adverse possession. The presumption is, therefore, that they own all lands which have never been granted by them, until the contrary appears. Id.

Proof that land was vacant within the time required to make title by adverse possession is sufficient prima facie to enable the people to recover the same in ejectment. Id.

The United States has but a proprietary interest in land within the borders of the state, the sovereignty being in the state, and the rights attaching to such interests do not differ from those of any other land-holder in the state, except as provided by the constitution of the United States, and the terms of the compact between the general and the state governments at the time the state is admitted into the Union. The state therefore cannot interfere with the primary disposal of the soil, nor with any regulations congress may find necessary for securing title to bona fide purchasers, nor can it tax the lands of the United States within its borders; and with these exceptions, such lands are subject to the same control by the state government as any other lands over which its jurisdiction extends. State v. Bachelder, 80 D. 410.

While lands belong to the United States they may be disposed of by the government to whom it pleases, and the title may be secured to the purchaser in such manner as it sees fit to prescribe; but the moment the sale is completed and the title secured to the purchaser, the land enters into the general mass of the property of the state, relieved from all control of the federal government whatever, save such as is incident to the general relation of the state to the federal Union. Ib.

The state of California cannot select and locate five hundred thousand acres of land granted her for purposes of internal improvement by the eighth section of the act of Congress of September 4, 1841, until after the lands to be selected have been surveyed and sectionized by the proper officers of the federal government. Terry v. Megerle, 85 D. 84.

No title to any specific land can vest in the state under the eighth section of the act of Congress of September 4, 1841, unless the land has been surveyed by the proper officers of the federal government, and selected and located by the state in parcels conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions of not less than 320 acres, and has upon it no subsisting valid claim by pre-emption, or otherwise, and the selection has been approved by the federal government. Ib.

The state can make no valid selection or location upon public lands of United States in the possession of a bona fide pre-emptor under the laws of Congress, nor can it convey any valid title therein to another. Ib.

A grant of five hundred thousand acres of land under act of Congress of September 4, 1841, to each new state upon its admission into the Union, imports a present grant, and the title to the lands granted passes upon the admission of the state, although it does not attach to any particular parcel until selected and located by the officers or agents of the state and approved by the United States. Megerle v. Ashe, 87 D. 76.

When a particular parcel of land is selected by the state, through her officers or agents as a part of the five hundred thousand acres granted by the United States to each new state upon her admission into the Union, and such selection and location are approved by the United States, the title becomes perfect, and attaches to the tract selected. Such title then vests in the state or her grantee, and prevails over that asserted by the holder of a subsequent United States patent. Ib.

A party claiming title to a particular parcel of land through the state, under the act of Congress granting to each state five hundred thousand acres of land upon her admission into the Union, is obliged to show, as against one claiming title under a subsequent United States patent, the performance of all acts required by law to constitute the selection and location of the land. Ib.

The United States did not and could not give the state of Michigan any control over private property, under 10 United States Statutes at Large, 35, granting the state a strip of land for canal purposes through the military reservation at Sault Ste. Marie. Ryan v. Brown, 100 D. 154.

A state can only maintain proprietary rights over lands, upon proof of a valid grant, or legal appropriation upon an inquest in form of law. Ib.

3. The land-office.* 1. In general. — State courts cannot interfere with or control the officers of the general government in the disposal of public lands. Lewis v. Lewis, 43 D. 540.

State courts have no jurisdiction in regard to pre-emption of public lands unless the case is affected with fraud or trust. Ib.

State land-officers act judicially, and their decisions are as final as those of other courts, in all matters which by law are confided to their examination and decision. State v. Bachelder, 80 D. 410.

2. Registers and Receivers of Land Offices. — The decisions of the register and receiver of the United States land-office are not conclusive on the rights of individuals. Bird v. Ward, 13 D. 506.

The register and receiver have no jurisdiction to grant titles by pre-emption. Guidry v. Woods, 36 D. 677.

The register and receiver are special judicial officers, and their decision is final and binding upon pre-emption rights, except in cases of fraud. Lewis v. Lewis, 43 D. 540.

The decision of register and receiver of land-office is final and conclusive upon a subject within the jurisdiction of such officers, under the act of Congress of September 4, 1841, if no element of fraud or mistake intervenes. Lamont v. Stimson, 62 D. 696.

The decision of the register and receiver of the United States land-office, as to who is entitled to a portion of the public domain, is final and conclusive, and can not be reviewed by the judiciary. Boatner v. Ventress, 20 D. 266. Henry v. Welch, 23 D. 490.

The certificate of a purchase of public lands issued by the register and receiver does not constitute evidence of title. Guidry v. Woods, 36 D. 677.

Such a certificate is evidence that the applicant was then in possession, and that he had cultivated the land in the time and manner required by law. Ib.

The omission of the register to mark a sale of land on the township map does not affect the rights of the purchaser, though the land has been afterward sold to another. Kittredge v. Breaud, 39 D. 512.

3. Commissioner of the general land-office. — The Determinations of the commissioner of the general land-office are not conclusive upon any one, such commissioner not being a judicial officer. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422. Brill v. Stiles, 85 D. 364.

The Commissioner of the general land-office has authority, under the supervision

* Decision of land-officers, when conclusive, see note, 20 D. 273-276.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

of the Secretary of the Treasury, to determine the construction of acts of congress relative to the public domain, and if it appear that the register and receiver have issued a certificate of purchase to lands the sale or disposal of which is unauthorized by law, may revoke or annul it. Guidry v. Woods, 38 D. 677.

The records of the general land-office and the deposition of the commissioner are admissible to prove the cancellation by the commissioner of the certificate of entry and purchase issued by the register and receiver to land not subject to pre-emption. Ib.

Where the commissioner of the general land-office cancels an entry of land without authority of law, such cancellation is a nullity, and the entry is not affected thereby. Perry v. O'Hanton, 49 D. 100.

The commissioner of the general land-office is the proper officer to accept relinquishments of title by a grantee to the state, as his is the office or department in which to preserve the evidence of the public lands and land titles of the state; and in the absence of any legal provisions or prohibition, he must be deemed to have authority to accept the relinquishment of title on behalf of the state. Dikes v. Miller, 78 D. 571.

4. Necessity of an entry.—Under an act providing that the owners of land on watercourses shall be preferred as purchasers of the back land adjoining their own tracts, provided that notice of the claim shall be entered previous to the time designated for the public sale of lands in the township where the claim is situated, and providing further that all claims not so entered shall be liable to public sale, the preferred right of a proprietor entitled to the benefit of its provisions becomes extinct when the lands affected have been offered at public sale by proclamation of the president. Thompson v. Schlater, 33 D. 556.

5. — and how construed.—The right acquired by an entry is not a legal but an equitable right, and depends upon an executory contract with the government. Reed v. Bullock, 12 D. 345.

The entry is the inception of the title and not the survey made upon it; therefore the expiration of the statutory time after entry will bar the right to recover. Ib.

Where an entry calls for land on a certain creek, "about seven miles" from its mouth, the word "about" must be rejected, and the distance taken in a straight line from the mouth, if the stream is of sufficient length. Sanders v. Morrison, 15 D. 140.

In such a case, if the stream is a large river, or is not of sufficient length, the meanders may be followed in measuring the distance. Ib.

A purchaser of land from the United States, by the act of entry and payment of the purchase money, acquires an inchoate legal title, which may be alienated or divested in the same manner as any other legal title. Goodlet v. Smithson, 30 D. 561.

Prior to the issuance of a patent, the interest of one in lands purchased of the United States, and for which he has received a certificate of final payment, may be levied upon and sold under execution. Ib.

Title acquired by a regular entry and purchase to land offered at public sale, under the laws of the United States, irrevocably divests the right of the government in the soil. Thompson v. Schlater, 33 D. 556.

An entry on land offered at public sale confers upon the person making it, a prior right and title under a purchase from the government, over another who acquired title to the same land by an entry made afterwards, under an act of Congress giving to proprietors, whose lands bordered on watercourses, a preference in making entry and becoming purchasers of back land adjoining. Ib.

An entry of public land gives no title to timber cut and lying upon it at the time such entry is made. Kecton v. Audsley, 61 D. 560.

6. Necessity of a survey.—A patent is not void for want of a survey, if the boundaries can be identified by any reasonable evidence; and if course and distance alone, from a defined beginning point, will with reasonable certainty locate and identify the land, that will be sufficient. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

7. — and how made.—A survey does not mean a map, ex et terminis, but will include a description in words or figures of the lands located. Attorney-general v. Stevens, 22 D. 526.

Where the lines of survey can be run from well-ascertained and established monuments, they are to control and govern a description delineated on a plat. Martin v. Carlin, 88 D. 696.

It is the duty of a surveyor of public land to run around land located and see that such objects are designated as will clearly identify the boundaries of the tract, and to extend a correct description of these objects, natural and artificial, with courses and distances, into the field-notes of the survey; and until the reverse is proved, it will be presumed that the land was thus surveyed, and the boundaries plainly marked and defined. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

8. Effect of surveys.—The word "withdrawn," found on the margin of a surveyor's entry book, does not prove that the entry was withdrawn. Mills v. Lee, 17 D. 118.

There is a sufficient delivery and taking possession of public land when the party entitled to the land purchases it in conformity to a survey returned to and approved by the surveyor-general. Kittridge v. Bream, 39 D. 512.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The correctness of boundaries of public lands, as shown by the government plan and survey under which sales have been made, cannot be questioned. Schurmeier v. St. Paul & R. R. Co., 88 D. 59.

An official survey of government lands prevails over a private survey thereof, even though the lines run and corners marked are not located with mathematical precision. Bellingsley v. Bates, 68 D. 126.

In re-locating a lost corner marked or line run by the government surveyor, the jury may consider a private survey of the same as well as the known marks and corners, and the field notes and plat, even though such private survey does not correspond in all respects with the government survey. Id.

The mode of re-locating a line marked by the government surveyor, a portion of which is lost, is to follow the line as far as it can be traced, and if the corner is also lost, produce the line in the same direction until it intersects the township line, at which point the corner will be presumed to be, unless it is proved to have been at some other point, in which case a straight line is run from the last known point of the line to such location of the corner on the township line. Id.

9. Resurveys. — The title to land located and patented under an official survey is not disturbed by a subsequent survey, which disregards and interferes with that according to which the prior location was made and patent procured. Slack v. Orillion, 33 D. 551.

10. Rights of settlers, generally. — The confirmation of a title by act of Congress is equivalent to a patent, and can only be defeated by a prior title out of the government. Boutner v. Walker, 30 D. 723; but where the boundaries are vague and uncertain, the government may make a valid sale of land not necessarily embraced within the confirmation. Slack v. Orillion, 30 D. 724.

A settler's possession under the Donation act and confirmation of his title is superior to the certificate of the commissioners for the adjustment of land titles, followed by an order of survey and actual survey and location approved by the surveyor-general. Boutner v. Walker, 30 D. 723.

The confirmation of a claim emanating from the former governments of Louisiana is but a relinquishment of title on the part of the government, and parties must look to the primitive title to ascertain the boundaries. Slack v. Orillion, 30 D. 724.

A settler upon land east of the Tennessee is not entitled to relief in equity for the residue of land in his occupancy against one who has obtained an elder legal title therefor, where, having surveyed and appropriated part of the land occupied, he evinces no intention to appropriate such residue. Aulick v. Colvin, 43 D. 164.

A purchaser of public lands acquires no title to timber cut thereon prior to his purchase. Wincher v. Shrewsbury, 35 D. 108; but he acquires title to the crops on the land at the time of the purchase, and which were planted prior thereto by other persons. Boyer v. Williams, 32 D. 324; and this is true whether the crops are severed or unsevered. Consequently, a mere possessor of public land who has planted a crop thereon cannot maintain trespass against a purchaser who enters and removes such crop. Floyd v. Ricks, 58 D. 374.

The rights of occupants of public lands are founded on the presumption of a license from the government. Conger v. Weaver, 65 D. 528.

A mere possessor of public lands of United States, with hopes of future entry by pre-emption, is not a possessor in good faith. Gibson v. Hutchins, 68 D. 772.

An agreement with a settler on public land, that in consideration of money advanced for the purpose of purchasing it and paying costs and incidental expenses, the lender should have a lien upon the land to secure the repayment thereof, is void, and the settler is not entitled to the benefit of the act concerning pre-emptions, under the provision that "he or she has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract in any way or manner, with any person or persons whatsoever, by which the title he or she might acquire from the government of the United States shall inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself or herself." McCue v. Smith, 86 D. 100.

11. Settlement certificates. — The final certificate of title, under the act of Congress, settling Spanish claims, is sufficient evidence of title, and can not be questioned by a trespasser. Richardson v. Hobart, 18 D. 70.

The issuance of a certificate for lands to heirs of the original grantee cannot affect the rights of a party having a beneficial interest therein. The heirs in such case will hold the land in trust for the party entitled. Wheat v. Owens, 65 D. 164.

12. Head right certificates. — When the law gives a preference in the purchase of government land to a particular person, and he, in the exercise of his right, pays the money, and receives from the public officer a receipt for it, and a certificate that he is entitled to purchase, the sale is complete, although the evidence of it can not be made out in a prescribed form. Kittridge v. Bream, 39 D. 512.

* Rights of settlers upon public lands, see note, 51 D. 604, 606.

Respective rights of miners and others, see note, 65 D. 94, 97.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The act of Congress of May 5, 1830, was passed for the relief of those persons only who had paid their money to the receiver and had not presented their receipts to the register for his certificate until it was too late for them to exercise their rights. Ib.

A want of notice of a prior sale will not give a second purchaser any claim, when it arose from an omission of the register, and not from want of diligence in the first purchaser. Ib.

In Georgia, lands are not subject to survey, and to be granted out on head rights, unless they are vacant. Moody v. Fleming, 48 D. 210.

Lands are not vacant which have been in the grantee's possession for more than seven years, under a grant from the state which is void for irregularity. Ib.

The grantee of a head-right certificate placing it in the hands of the locator, under a covenant to locate, survey, and obtain a patent, and then to divide the land between the owner and the grantee, does not thereby make a sale of land, although formal words of conveyance are used and a money consideration paid; but the agreement is one for the future acquisition of land, under which the purchaser is to make the selection, and the parties are to participate equally in the benefits to be derived from the selection when made. Ross v. Armstrong, 78 D. 574.

A contract whereby the holder of a head-right certificate places it in the hands of a locator, under a covenant to locate, survey, and obtain a patent, and then divide the land between the owner and the grantee, where it is really an adventure on shares, and the patent is to issue in the name of one for the benefit of both, is a resulting trust, in which the grantee becomes the trustee for the benefit of his equitable tenant in common. Ib.

Under a joint adventure between the holder of a head-right certificate and the locator, to secure a patent to government land, and to divide the land when acquired, if, after securing the grant and dividing the land, it is discovered that part of the land which the government has thus granted had been previously appropriated by an older title, the partition is one upon a mistake of facts from which equity will relieve. Ib.

13. Improvement rights. — Improvements made by innocent purchasers of an equitable claim, without notice of a prior equity, ought to be respected, and the proprietor of a warrant ought not to profit for the adventitious value accruing from the enterprise, labor and industry bestowed by others innocently on the land. Patrick v. Marshall, 4 D. 670.

A mere settler upon public lands, with a hope of pre-emption, is, until he makes his entry, a tenant at sufferance; he makes improvements for his own benefit and at his own risk. Gibson v. Hutchins, 68 D. 772.

14. Alienability of settlers' rights. — The sale of improvements upon public lands to one who has a right to pre-emption will constitute a valuable and legal consideration for a promissory note. Bryan v. Glass, 54 D. 576; Ratcliff v. Bridger, 36 D. 683; Wilson v. Webster, 41 D. 230.

No title to or lien or privilege upon the land is transferred by or implied in such sale independent of the rights conferred by the laws of the United States. Ratcliff v. Bridger, 36 D. 683.

A grantee of lands could alienate the same under Texas colonization law of 1823, immediately on his acquiring the right of property therein. The period of acquisition commenced with the date of concession; and all requirements of the law concerning cultivation were fulfilled if it were done within two years, either by the original grantee or his vendee. Portis v. Hill, 65 D. 99.

The following facts, etc., amount to a contract to convey land which should be enforced specifically in equity. S. and F. were settlers upon different parts of the same quarter-section of land. It all had to be entered in one piece. S. and F. both filed upon the whole tract. S. proposed to F. that he would withdraw his filing and would furnish money to pay for his portion of the land, and allow F. to enter the land, if F. would convey to S. his portion of the land. F. said he could not enter into such an agreement prior to taking the pre-emption oath; that he, however, did not want S.'s land, as the latter was poor; that F. would do what was right about it. S. withdrew his filing, and F. entered the entire tract. S. tendered to F. the value of his portion of the tract and demanded a conveyance. Such a contract does not violate either the letter or spirit of the act of Congress of September, 4, 1841, prohibiting the assignment or transfer of pre-emption rights before entry. Snow v. Flannery, 77 D. 120.

15. Issuing land warrants. — The proprietors of a land warrant may pursue it into the hands of assignees and purchasers, for valuable consideration, having notice of their claim before they acquired legal title to the land. Patrick v. Marshall, 4 D. 670.

16. Locating the warrant. — Lots of land in each range of a new township, numbered in regular arithmetical series, are presumed to have been located contiguous to each other; the lot numbered eight in such a series is presumed to include all the land lying between those numbered seven and nine, and a party claiming a different location must repel this presumption by positive proof. Warren v. Pierce, 19 D. 189.

Location should be governed: 1. By natural objects; 2. By artificial marks; 3.

By course and distance. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

The true location of land is ascertained by the application of all or of any of the rules of location to the particular case. And when they lead to contrary results or confusion, that rule must be adopted which is most consistent with the intention apparent upon the face of the patent, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Ib.

17. Assignability of warrant. — The purchaser of a land-warrant in good faith and for value cannot, after he has located the warrant and obtained a patent for the land located, be charged in equity as trustee of the legal title for the true owner of the warrant, although it was obtained by the fraud of a third person, and transferred under a forged assignment. Dixon v. Caldwell, 86 D. 437.

18. Pre-emption, generally. — Where a settler erects improvements at the corner of sections, an entry of one of the sections on which the improvements were made is a bar to pre-emptive rights over the other sections. Carter v. Spencer, 34 D. 106.

Open and notorious possession of a settler on public land, under the act of May 29, 1830, is notice to all the world of his equitable right of pre-emption. Bruner v. Manlove, 36 D. 651.

An actual settlement was not necessary under the act of Congress of July 9, 1832, in order to secure a right to pre-emption, in cases where the claimants waived their claims and relinquished to the United States. The deed of relinquishment was the only evidence required of their pre-emption rights. Perry v. O'Hanlon, 49 D. 100.

A married woman has no right of pre-emption when her husband was alive, and had for a valuable consideration sold the improvements erected on the claim, to another, under whom the wife claimed. Groves v. Fulsome, 57 D. 347.

In a possessory action for public lands, where the plaintiff claims to recover by reason of prior possession, and the defendant claims as a pre-emptor under the laws of the United States, the latter is entitled to prove the necessary facts to establish his pre-emption right. Tyler v. Green, 87 D. 130.

Pre-emption rights and benefits may be acquired by compliance with the requirements of the pre-emption law, and any other conditions or requirements superadded by the commissioners of the general land office cannot affect one's rights under that law. Baty v. Sale, 92 D. 128.

The pre-emption act does not require an application for lands to be renewed, where they have been withdrawn from market for a short period after a claim for a pre-emption has once been filed; and such a requirement imposed by the officers of the land-office amounts to nothing. They are powerless to annex conditions or provisions to the law; that can only be done by the law-making power. Ib.

A contract is valid, and not in contravention of the pre-emption laws, nor within the statute of frauds, where it is agreed between two that one shall obtain a pre-emption title to an entire tract of land, and thereafter deed to the other a portion of such tract, in consideration that the latter should refrain from presenting his pre-emption claim to the whole tract, to which he was entitled, and should pay the purchase-money of the smaller portion, which was within his inclosure. Rose v. Treadway, 97 D. 546.

When, under an agreement between two, each settler secures the precise land which he has occupied, cultivated, and improved, the object of the pre-emption laws is fully attained, and when under such agreement, the legal title has vested in one by the issuance of a patent, a trust results in favor of the other, which equity will enforce against the patentee. Ib.

M. purchased government land, but B. soon entered upon it as a pre-emptor, claiming to have commenced a settlement and improvement on it previous to the purchase by M. The pre-emption claim was contested, but it was held good by the land officers. It having been appealed to the secretary of the interior, — held, that the decision of the land officers was conclusive as to the right of pre-emption. Robbins v. Bunn, 5 R. 75.

19. Nature and extent of the right acquired.* — One who by fraud enters land to which another had a valid pre-emption right, may be decreed to hold in trust for the latter or his heirs. Bird v. Ward, 13 D. 506.

A right of pre-emption gives no title to the land prior to the exhibition of the necessary proofs and the adjudication of the land by the register and receiver to the person claiming the right. Henry v. Welch, 23 D. 490.

A pre-emptor's power of attorney to convey land, held under the pre-emption law of May, 1830, as soon as a patent has issued therefor, is void as an attempted evasion of the inhibition of the act against the transfer of pre-emption rights before patent issued; therefore a conveyance under the power, though after patent issued, passes no title. McElroy v. Hayter, 37 D. 645.

A pre-emptor planting a crop which matures after his pre-emption right expires, because of his failure to purchase during the time allowed him by law, may be dispossessed of it by one who, after the expiration of the right, purchases from the government. Razor v. Qualls, 30 D. 658.

The validity of a certificate of pre-emption may be impeached in ejectment brought by the pre-emptor against a party in possession.

* See notes on rights of pre-emptors, 23 D. 42, 43; 34 D. 122-124.

sion under the authority of the United States, by evidence of fraud and collusion between the pre-emptor and the officers granting the certificate, the latter knowing the land not to be subject to pre-emption. Jamison v. Beaubien, 36 D. 534.

A person having acquired an inchoate right of pre-emption to a tract of land under the act of May 29, 1830, by settlement and cultivation, may, upon making proof and paying the purchase money within one year, compel a conveyance by a purchaser thereof by virtue of a Vincennes certificate, under the act of May 11, 1820, who entered and purchased the land after such inchoate right accrued, but before the pre-emption price was paid, and may enjoin such purchaser from recovering the land. Bruner v. Manlove, 36 D. 551.

A person in the use and occupation of vacant land has a pre-emptive right to appropriate it, under the act of 1831, which can only be taken away by a three months' notice from another person that he intends to enter and appropriate the same. Aulick v. Colvin, 43 D. 164.

Where a patent has been obtained to land west of the Tennessee River in fraud of a settler's pre-emptive rights, equity will grant such settler relief upon his showing that it was his intention, and that he would have entered and appropriated the land, had he not been prevented by the previous illegal entry of the patentee. Id.

Pre-emption rights granted to settlers before the issuing of patents are not transferable, and a conveyance in such a case is void and will not even operate as an estoppel. Stevens v. Hays, 48 D. 359.

Where a pre-emptor has done everything in his power to comply with the requirements of an act of Congress which fixes a limit to the period within which he may avail himself of the benefit of the act in which the limitation is made, the delay of the officers of the government, by which he is prevented from obtaining his certificate of pre-emption within the time limited, will not defeat his right, but the certificate may be granted to him after the expiration of the time so limited by law. Perry v. O'Hanlon, 49 D. 100.

A pre-emptor has one entire year, while land is subject to entry, within which to make his final proof and to complete his purchase, under the act of September 4, 1841, sec. 15, (5 U. S. Statutes at Large, p. 457.) Baty v. Sale, 92 D. 128.

Where land is temporarily withdrawn from the market after a party has filed his declaration of an intention to pre-empt it, the officers of the land-office may properly exclude the time that the land is not subject to entry, in computing the year within which he has the right to make his proof and enter the land. Id.

A mortgage upon government land given by the pre-emptor, after an entry and certificate received, but before patent issued, is not invalid under the twelfth section of the pre-emption law of 1841, providing that "all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured, prior to the issuing of the patent, shall be null and void," the words, "the right hereby secured," being construed to mean simply the right of pre-emption. Robbins v. Bunn, 5 R. 75.

20. Issuing grants generally. — Only the judicial department of state is clothed with power to investigate antagonistic claims of contending parties, and consequently an order of the executive correcting a grant, after the rights of third parties have intervened, is inoperative and void. Sykes v. McRory, 54 D. 402.

The governor may correct a mistake in a grant from the state if the rights of third parties have not intervened, otherwise there must be a judgment or decree in a judicial proceeding between the litigating parties, which will enable the executive to make the correction. Tison v. Yawn, 60 D. 708.

A second grant of land after it has already been granted away, is effective for many practical purposes. Burkhalter v. Edwards, 60 D. 744.

Islands in navigable streams in Pennsylvania belong to the state, and are excepted from the general laws for the sale and settlement of vacant lands. They are granted under special laws. Stover v. Jack, 100 D. 566.

21. Validity of grants. — A confirmation of a Spanish title relates back to the original grant. Stark v. Mather, 12 D. 553.

Every presumption is in favor of the validity of a grant. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

A legislative grant passes title to government lands as effectually as a patent. Megerle v. Ashe, 87 D. 76.

22. Rules of interpretation. — The sovereignty is not subject to imputations of fraud, is not bound by the doctrine of estoppel, nor do her grants imply warranties. Elmendorf v. Carmichael, 14 D. 86.

Grants by the government are construed favorably for the grantor, and pass nothing by implication. Wilcoxon v. McShea, 54 D. 409.

A grant of land by the government does not pass the right of overflowing adjoining government lands by maintaining a dam on the land granted, though the dam was on the land at the time of the grant. Id.

23. Sufficiency as respects description of land conveyed. — In a description of land purchased from the government under the laws relating to back lands it is not indispensably necessary that the township, range, and section should be stated. Kittbridge v. Breaud, 39 D. 512.

A grant of public land having a fixed and definite description passes nothing but what is included within the boundaries expressed in the patent, or is naturally or necessarily annexed to the land. Wilcoxon v. McGhee, 54 D. 409.

24. Ascertaining boundaries. — A grant of lands, extending along a river, and embracing the space of fifteen miles on each side thereof, must be located so that the sides will be parallel to the river, and so as to include all land which can be found within fifteen miles of the river, measuring from any point, in any direction, not above or below the points of limitation; and the ends must be at right angles with the general course of the river. Winthrop v. Curtis, 14 D. 216.

Where public lands bordering on a stream, navigable in fact, are shown by the government survey and plat, under which sales have been made, to be bounded by a river, the margin of such river, and not the meander lines run by the surveyor, must control in determining what amount of land a grantee takes under his grant. In such case the meander lines cannot limit the grant in a patent. Schurmeier v. St. Paul, etc. R. R. Co., 88 D. 59.

A grantee of public lands bordering on a river navigable in fact, but above the flow of the tide, takes the land absolutely to low-water mark, and obtains the fee in the bed of the stream to the middle thereof, subject to the public easement of navigation. Id.

In Pennsylvania, the state has not parted with the control of the waters of its navigable streams, nor of the soil beneath. So that grants by the state of lands calling for a navigable stream as a boundary do not extend beyond low-water mark, and the grant is not absolute except to high-water mark; and gives the grantee only a qualified title to the space between high and low water mark. The right of passage over it in high water remains in the public. The state may use it for navigation purposes without compensation, and may protect it from an unauthorized use, even by the owner of the land, to low-water mark. Stover v. Jack, 100 D. 566.

25. Courses and distances must yield to landmarks and monuments. — To restore lost lines and corners, no departure should be made from the courses or distances except in cases of necessity, and where it is necessary to depart either from the courses or the distances, the distances ought to yield. Bryon v. Beckley, 12 D. 276.

Allowances for the variation of the magnetic needle from the true meridian are to be made in all cases where lost lines and corners are to be renewed. Allowances are also to be made for the unevenness of the ground over which each line passes. Id.

A mistake in a distance committed in the original survey on one line is presumed to have affected the opposite line only. Id.

Course and distance are most unreliable calls, because of the liability of the officers of the government to err; and distance is less reliable than course, because of the greater liability of chain-carriers to mistake. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

Natural or artificial monuments must generally control the courses and distances in a patent. Wendell v. Jackson, 22 D. 635.

Where the beginning point in a patent is identified by satisfactory evidence, the location of the premises must be commenced at that point and the courses and distances pursued, although by doing so a point, mentioned in a patent issued a few days afterwards, as one of the corners, is not reached, and although it may be necessary to exclude some of the courses and distances, and part of the land supposed to be conveyed. Id.

Course and distance control a call for a bounded tree described in patent as standing on a point at the mouth of a creek, where both the tree and the spot on which it stood are lost. Budd v. Brooks, 43 D. 321.

Natural and artificial objects are not liable to change or mistake like calls for course and distance; and hence the rule that course and distance yield to natural and artificial objects. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

Course and distance may control under some circumstances, as where the natural objects appear to have been inserted by mistake, or without regard to precision, as in the case of descriptive calls; but generally they are mere guides to the other calls. Id.

26. Revocation of grants. — Where a grant was arbitrarily revoked, and the property re-granted to another, to whom the title was confirmed, he was decreed to hold as trustee for the first grantee. Stark v. Mather, 12 D. 553.

27. The patent; its nature and form, generally. — The United States may, by an act of Congress, divest itself at once of all property in a portion of the public lands, and transfer it to an individual. It may also so legislate as to make the issuance of a patent necessary to effectuate that object. Boatner v. Ventress, 20 D. 266.

A patent which appears on its face to have been legally executed, is presumed to have been executed by the proper officers. The burden of showing that it was not, is upon the party opposing it. The presumption is not removed in a case where the president's name and the filling up of the patent appear to be in the same handwriting, while the secretary's name appears to be in a different handwriting. Parkison v. Bracken, 39 D. 296.

A patent for land without witnesses, but signed and sealed by the Secretary of War is sufficient to convey lands from the United States to a state, if the state recognizes the conveyance as valid. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715.

The holder of a receipt from the state for the purchase price of land is indefeasibly entitled to a patent, and said receipt is inchoate evidence of an absolute title. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

A patent of United States to ceded lands formerly belonging to another government is not only the deed of the United States, but is a solemn record of the action and judgment of the government with respect to the validity of the title of the claimant existing at the date of the cession. It declares that the previous grant was genuine; the claim under it valid, and entitled to recognition and confirmation; that the grant was or might have been located by the former government, and that it is correctly located by the new government so as to embrace the premises as they are surveyed and described, and while this declaration remains of record, the government itself cannot question its verity, nor can persons do so who claim through the government by title subsequent. Teschmacher v. Thompson, 79 D. 151.

28. How construed. — A construction that gives effect to a patent is to be preferred to one that renders it inoperative and void; and, in determining what land is embraced within the calls of a patent, reference may be had to the surveyor's field notes and the original plat, if the patent itself is uncertain. Alexander v. Lively, 17 D. 50.

The true meaning of a binding expression in a patent must be applied, no matter in what part of the instrument such expression may be found. Budd v. Brooke, 43 D. 321.

A patent should be so construed as to reconcile all its parts, and to give effect to every word in it, if possible. Id.

The United States occupies only the position of a private proprietor, with reference to its real property within the limits of a state, with the exception that such property is exempt from state taxation; and its patent to such property is therefore subject to the same general rules of construction which apply to conveyances of individuals. Moore v. Smau, 79 D. 123.

A patent, as a deed of the United States, takes effect only from the date of the presentation of the petition of the patentees for confirmation of their claim. But as a record of the government of the existence and validity of the grant, it establishes the title of the patentees from the date of the grant. Teschmacher v. Thompson, 79 D. 151.

If a grant of land ceded to the United States by another government, upon which a patent is issued, was one of quantity only, requiring at the cession the action of the government to give it location, the duty devolved upon the new government to make the location, and this was essential to perfect the equitable title of the grantees. As the duty of the government attached at the date of the cession, its performance could not be interfered with or defeated by any matters subsequently occurring. Id.

United States patent, following a final decree affirming validity of a Mexican grant takes effect by relation at the date of the presentation of the petition for confirmation to the land commission, and is to be regarded, so far as all intermediate conveyances are concerned, as having been executed at that time. Touchard v. Crow, 81 D. 108.

Where a Virginia patent issued before the separation of Kentucky from her, the rights of the patentee vested under, and should be determined by, the laws of Virginia. Berry v. Snyder, 96 D. 219.

29. Its effect. — A purchaser under a patent from the commonwealth is bound to take notice of a prior title to which a reference is made in the patent. Burkart v. Bucher, 4 D. 457.

The final certificate of title, under the act of Congress, settling Spanish claims, is sufficient evidence of title, and can not be questioned by a trespasser. Richardson v. Hobart, 18 D. 70.

The recitals in a patent issued by the government are evidence against a person in possession of the land without title. Boatner v. Ventress, 20 D. 266.

In sales of land by the United States, the law gives the right, and the patent is considered, not the title itself, but the evidence by which it is shown that the prerequisites to a legal sale have been complied with. Goodlet v. Smithson, 30 D. 561.

The patentee of land is invested with seisin of it, if no prior patent has been issued. Overton v. Davison, 42 D. 544.

A patent to lands issued to a person after suit therefor against him has become dormant, clothes him with legal title, which will inure to the benefit of those to whom he has previously conveyed, with general covenant of warranty. Trimble v. Boothby, 45 D. 526.

United States patent for lands, issued in the name of a deceased person who, while living, conveyed with warranty, vests the legal title in those to whom he so conveyed them. Id.

The assignment of a patent certificate by a judgment debtor after execution sale of the land under the judgment, passes no interest except a right of redemption. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422.

One whose lands, held under a certificate of purchase, but for which the patent has not been issued, are sold under execution, can not set up the subsequently acquired patent to defeat an action brought for the possession thereof. Cavender v. Smith, 56 D. 541.

A purchaser of public lands of United States who has complied with the necessary preliminaries of purchase is, upon payment of the purchase money, vested with title to the land, unless it is established by proof that the claimant who disputes such title was a bona fide purchaser without prior notice of purchase by the party in whom the title is vested. Nelson v. Sims, 57 D. 144.

Where a prior vendee is in possession of a tract of public lands, and informs a party about to purchase the same that he is the owner, such information will be construed to be proper notice to the intending purchaser of the rights of such possession. Id.

One obtaining a patent to land by fraud towards another, or who affects himself with a trust, holds the title thus acquired for the benefit of those who have been injured by his conduct. Groves v. Fulsome, 57 D. 247.

An act of Congress confirming an approved survey of commons in villages was equivalent to a patent, and conveyed to the city of St. Louis a perfect title to her commons from the government. A claimant seeking to dispossess her, or those claiming under her, of such title, must produce actual proof of prior cultivation, inhabitation, and possession. Prima facie proof of such fact is not sufficient. Vasquez v. Bwing, 66 D. 694.

A patent giving a fee-simple title on its face is such title as will afford protection to those claiming under it, either directly or having a title connected with it, with possession for seven years, as required by the statute of limitations of Illinois. Williams v. Ballance, 74 D. 187.

The object of the act of Congress of March 3, 1851, is "to ascertain and settle private land claims in California," and it does not restrict the operation of the patents issued by the United States upon confirmation of the claims, to the interests acquired by the claimants from the former government, nor distinguish the patents so issued from other patents issued by the United States; but patents issued under the act are without words of reservation or limitation, except that they shall not affect third persons. Moore v. Smart, 79 D. 123.

United States land patents pass to the patentee all interest of the United States, whatever it may have been, in everything connected with the soil; in everything forming a portion of its bed or fixed to its surface; and in fact, in everything which is embraced within the signification of the term "land." Id.

United States patent to ceded lands, issued on a grant of former government of quantity only, is evidence that the grantees possessed, at the date of the cession, a vested interest in the quantity of land mentioned in the grant; a right to so much land to be afterwards laid off by official authority; that the premises described were then subject to appropriation in satisfaction of the quantity granted; and that the United States government, in discharge of its duty, has, through its appropriate departments, made the appropriation, and thereby given precision to the title of the grantees, and attached it to the tract as surveyed. Teschmacher v. Thompson, 79 D. 151.

United States patent if no higher evidence of title than a prior legislative grant. Megerle v. Ashe, 87 D. 76.

The title derived from the government is no better than the title from an individual owning the fee, and is governed by the same rules. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422; Brill v. Stiles, 85 D. 364.

The issuance of the patent vests the legal title in the patentee. Until the patent is issued the party is not invested with a complete, perfect title. Roads v. Symmes, 13 D. 621; Carman v. Johnson, 61 D. 593; Brill v. Stiles, 85 D. 364.

The certificate of a purchase from the United States land office, issued prior to a patent, conveys the absolute title, and a patent subsequently acquired relates back to the date of said certificate. Cavender v. Smith, 56 D. 541.

A patent for land bounded by navigable water passes the title to the soil and all rights of property incident thereto, subject only to the public rights of fishing and navigation, and no title thereto can, therefore, be acquired by reclamation and improvement under the Maryland act of 1745, by an owner of the adjacent shore under a prior patent. Casey v. Inloe, 39 D. 658.

The patentee of a fractional tract of government land, bounded upon a navigable stream, takes to the water's edge. The meander line is not a line of boundary. Kraut v. Crawford, 87 D. 414.

30. *Validity.—A possession by native Indians, existing as an independent nation, is not such an adverse possession as will render void alienations by patentees to whom the lands were granted by the state, and cannot be set up against the validity of the patent, or conveyances under it. Jackson v. Hudson, 3 D. 500.

A patent for land granted by a sister state is one of those public acts to which every other state is bound to give full faith and credit under the constitution of the United States; therefore the validity of such patent cannot be collaterally drawn in question by the courts of any other state, on a suggestion that the survey on which it was founded was a forgery. Lasby v. Fontaine, 4 D. 510.

* Validity of patent issued to decedent or to heirs of deceased, see note. 83 D. 467-470.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A patent, though not recorded, is good in equity against a purchaser with notice. In such case, information of its existence by common report, and from a person declaring he had seen it, with knowledge of possession and use of the land under the patent, is sufficient notice. Roberts v. Stanton, 5 D. 463.

If a patent has been issued by fraud, or on false suggestion, unless the fraud or mistake appear on the face of the patent itself, it is not void, but voidable only by a suit for that purpose. Jackson v. Lawton, 6 D. 311.

Congress may, by reason of its power to regulate the disposition of the public domain, declare imperfect patents to be of effect from the day that they were issued. Parkison v. Bracken, 39 D. 296.

A patent is void which was issued from the government, to land which had previously been appropriated by the government, and reserved from entry. Hu-tuk-ho-mi v. Watts, 45 D. 308.

A patent issued for land reserved from sale is void. Perry v. O'Hanlon, 49 D. 100.

All land to which claims were presented was reserved from sale by the act of July 9, 1832, until some disposition of such claims could be made; and, therefore, where claims were presented and relinquished to the United States before any decision was made, the reservation still continues, and a patent issued to any other than the claimant who relinquished, is void. Id.

A patent issued to the assignee of a certificate before sheriff's deed to an execution purchaser of the land under a judgment against the assignor, where the assignment is made after the execution sale, is void if the assignee has not exercised his right of redemption. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422.

A patent issued by virtue of an unconstitutional act is void upon its face. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

A patent for land issued to a person not in existence is void. Thomas v. Wyatt, 77 D. 640; Thomas v. Wyatt, 69 D. 446.

A patent for land issued to a person under an assumed name is not void, but vests the title in him, and his title will pass by a transfer of the land under his assumed name. Thomas v. Wyatt, 77 D. 640.

A land patent issued by the proper officers of United States is presumed to be valid, and is prima facie evidence of regularity in all the preliminary steps to entitle the patentee thereto. Schnee v. Schnee, 99 D. 183.

31. Conclusiveness, and how impeached.—Where a patent had been issued, and afterwards a second, which recited a mistake in the issuing of the first, —held that the first was conclusive as to the title until it was set aside by a proper proceeding instituted for that purpose. Jackson v. Lawton, 6 D. 311.

One who receives a patent from the government when another is entitled thereto, may be declared to hold as trustee for such other. Stark v. Mather, 12 D. 553.

An application for a private entry without filing an affidavit that the land was not subject to the right of pre-emption, as required by an instruction of the Secretary of the Treasury under act of April 5, 1832, is not of itself evidence of fraud. Carter v. Spencer, 34 D. 106.

A purchaser of land under a patent is bound to take notice of the chain of conveyances which authorizes the commonwealth to grant her remaining title to the patentee. Gingrich v. Folz, 57 D. 631.

A patent to land in the territory ceded by another government to United States is not conclusive against those whose title accrued before the duty of the United States to protect the inhabitants and their property in the ceded territory attached. Techemacher v. Thompson, 79 D. 151.

A state grant or patent is to be deemed conclusive when drawn in question in a collateral action, so far as to show that the state has passed its title to the lands therein contained, and that all the previous requisites existed that were necessary to authorize and render it a complete and lawful act. Such grant can only be set aside by a direct proceeding on the part of the government for that purpose. It cannot be rescinded, except upon a verdict solemnly rendered, and entered of record. Overton v. Campbell, 9 D. 780; Jackson v. Hart, 7 D. 280; Norvell v. Camm, 8 D. 742.

A patent to lands may be impeached for illegality or fraud, and the question is as well examinable at law as in equity. Hu-tuk-ho-mi v. Watts, 45 D. 308; Carter v. Spencer, 34 D. 106. When the fraud or other defect arises on circumstances dehors the patent, it is voidable only in a suit in equity. State v. Bachelder, 80 D. 410.

A patent, issuing in virtue of a decision of land-officers, may be impeached in equity for fraud or collusion in obtaining it, even where such officers act clearly within the sphere of their jurisdiction. But even in equity, it must be made to appear that the party had no remedy at law adequate to his protection. Nor will the court set aside the decision upon the suggestion of fraud alone. Id.

An action to set aside a patent to land on the ground of fraud, by a party in actual possession, and brought under the Minnesota statute for determining an adverse claim, estate, or interest in land, is as much a direct proceeding to set aside the patent, as would be a bill in equity filed for that purpose. Id.

In an action to set aside a land patent obtained through fraud, if it appear that plaintiff had notice and contested, or had an opportunity to contest and did not take advantage of it, the admission of false testimony would not be sufficient ground for relief. Ib.

A court of law may disregard a fraudulent patent or deed as void, in an action of ejectment, at the instance of the party defrauded, or those claiming under him; as where a patent is obtained by an assignee of the patent certificate under an assignment made after a sale of the land on execution against the assignor, and the ejectment is brought against the execution purchaser. Rogers v. Brent, 50 D. 422.

A fraudulent patent is not the "paramount title" as against a purchaser on execution under the patent certificate, notwithstanding the provisions of Ill. Rev. Stat., c. 40, sec. 5. Ib.

A state patent purporting to convey title, which is void upon its face, as where the state had no authority to convey, may be collaterally attacked in an action of ejectment. Winter v. Jones, 54 D. 379.

A bona fide pre-emptioner of public land under the laws of the United States may attack collaterally a patent for the same land granted by the state by virtue of a selection of the land made by the state while the pre-emptioner was in possession, in an action of ejectment against him by the state patentee, for the state had no title to the land. Terry v. Megerle, 85 D. 84.

Though a patent cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding by matters or facts outside of the recitals therein, yet when it bears on its face evidence of a want of authority to issue the same, it will be declared void when introduced in evidence in an action of ejectment. Alexander v. Greenup, 4 D. 541.

39. Requisite certainty in description, calls, etc.—A mistake in calling for an object, where the same is not found, does not vitiate or destroy the validity of a patent. Overton v. Davison, 42 D. 544.

A mistake in one course, evidenced by applying the patent to the ground, cannot be applied or be made by presumption to affect any other course named. Bryon v. Beckley, 12 D. 276.

Mistakes in the calls of a patent may be corrected by reference to the plat and certificate of survey as evidence of the true position of the corners, which when ascertained, must control, though varying from the description of the patent. Steele v. Taylor, 13 D. 151.

"Seventy acres of land being and lying in south west corner of the south-west quarter of section fourteen," is sufficient as a description. The lands will be located in a square. Wales v. Ringer, 15 D. 555.

The calls of a patent may be controlled by a survey. Newman v. Foster, 34 D. 98.

In a court of law, a patent is of conclusive effect; and where there are two conflicting patents, the first must prevail. No equitable title can be opposed to the patent where a recovery is sought in ejectment. Parkison v. Bracken, 39 D. 296.

Patent is not conclusive evidence of title in Louisiana. Kittredge v. Breaud, 39 D. 512.

An equitable right originating before the date of a patent will be examined into. Ib.

If land cannot be located to correspond with all the calls in a patent, the direction indicated by the description must be followed in running around the premises, especially where the angles are not marked by natural or artificial monuments. Wendell v. Jackson, 22 D. 635.

Where several particulars are given in a patent, all of which are necessary to ascertain the land intended, nothing will pass that does not correspond with all those particulars. Ib.

False or mistaken particulars or boundaries, in the description in a patent, may be rejected. Ib.

The course of a line is controlled by a conflicting binding call in a patent. Budd v. Brooks, 43 D. 321.

A peremptory binding call, in a patent, for a creek, changes the general rule that a line calling for a lost boundary must be run by its course and distance, and in such case, the course and distance must be expended on the creek, and no other line can be interpolated to extend such line beyond the spot where such course and distance leave it. Ib.

The words "running up a creek" are not a binding call in a patent, but merely indicate the general direction of the line, which must be run in a straight direction from boundary to boundary. But where such creek is, in another part of the patent, made the boundary, the length of the line must be expended on the meanders of the creek, and the line will terminate at the point where such distance is expended. And if the second boundary named in the patent can not be found on the creek, the line to be supplied is a line drawn from such point on the creek to such second boundary, and not one drawn from the second boundary to the nearest point on the creek. Ib.

A variation of the magnetic needle cannot affect a line which must be run according to the calls in a patent, which are to be gratified in the same manner as if no course for the line were expressed in the patent. Ib.

It will be presumed that any object of a perishable nature called for in patent, if not found, is destroyed or defaced. Staford v. King, 94 D. 304.

Recourse must be had to the calls of a patent in controversies respecting boundaries of the tract, and if found, there is little room for doubt; but if not found, or found out of their proper places, the rules of law must govern in establishing the boundaries. Ib.

The most material and certain calls shall control those which are less material and certain; and a call for a natural object, such as a river, known stream, a spring, or even a marked tree, shall control both course and distance. Ib.

Natural and artificial calls are divided into descriptive or directory and special locative calls; and the former, though consisting of rivers, lakes, and creeks, must yield to special locative calls, and for the reason that the latter, consisting of particular objects upon the lines or corners of the land, are intended to indicate the precise boundary. Ib.

A descriptive call in a patent for 3,160 varas will be regarded as a mistake, and 750 varas will be taken to be its true length, where the call is the distance of the corner of the tract from a well-known point, and by following the longer distance, and then pursuing the courses and distances none of the natural and artificial calls of the patent are found, whereas if the corner is located at the shorter distance, and the courses and distances then followed, every call of the patent for natural and artificial objects is found. Ib.

33. Identifying monuments and landmarks.—Visible and actual landmarks are to be preferred in restoring lost lines and corners; and if they cannot be ascertained, resort must be then had to the courses and distances. Bryan v. Beckley, 12 D. 276.

Natural objects are mountains, lakes, rivers, creeks, rocks, and the like; artificial objects are marked lines, trees, stakes, etc.; and a description of these objects should be faithfully transferred into the field notes, and thence into the patent, for the purpose of identifying the land. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

34. Priority between junior and senior grants and entries.—A confirmation by an act of Congress of a location of land does not overreach a patent subsequently issued to the same land, so as to annul the title of the patentee, unless the confirmation defines the land according to a particular survey, or within boundaries that are definite and precise. Slack v. Orillion, 33 D. 551.

Where an applicant for a patent has knowledge of a prior claim which he conceals from the knowledge of the commissioner of the general land office and the president, the benefit of the patent will inure to the prior claimant. Kittredge v. Breaud, 39 D. 512.

United States patent for land relates back to the appropriation of it, and in a court of equity the person who first appropriates the land has the best title. McAfee v. Keira, 43 D. 331.

One who, with full knowledge of the facts, makes an entry upon and obtains a patent for public land upon which a prior entry has been made, which has been cancelled by mistake, will hold the legal title in trust for the prior entryman or his assignee. Forbes v. Hall, 85 D. 301.

An entry of public land cancelled by mistake is, if not abandoned, in full force when the mistake is corrected, and a subsequent entry with notice cannot defeat it. Ib.

Land-officers cannot, by any act of theirs, divest the equity of a prior entryman without his consent. Ib.

One fraudulently making a second entry on public lands has no claim against a prior entryman for purchase-money and taxes paid. Ib.

A certificate of entry will prevail in equity over a patent based upon a subsequent entry, unless the prior equity has been legally vacated. Brill v. Stiles, 85 D. 364.

In ejectment, where plaintiff offers in evidence a United States patent and rests, defendant is entitled to offer in evidence a prior patent from the state, and in connection therewith to prove that the recitals in the patent are true, showing that the land has been properly selected and located by the state from a part of the grant to the state by act of Congress of September 3, 1841. Meyerle v. Ashe, 87 D. 76.

The fact that the same tract was surveyed and patented to another cannot affect the question of boundary under the survey and patent in controversy. Stafford v. King, 94 D. 304.

A title subsequently acquired by the commonwealth by escheat, from an elder patentee, will not inure to the benefit of a junior patentee. The commonwealth may convey this title to another, who will have all the rights of the elder patentee. Emondorf v. Carmichael, 14 D. 86.

A junior patent based on a senior pre-emption right will prevail against a senior patent to the assignees of Jefferson College, issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress in favor of such college. McAfee v. Keira, 45 D. 331.

A junior patent predicated on a reservation to a Choctaw Indian by treaty, will prevail against a senior patent issued under an act of Congress to the assignees of the Jefferson College. Ib.

Although there can be no adversary possession against the commonwealth, and therefore a junior patentee can not go behind the elder patent for the purpose of giving color to his possession prior thereto, yet there may be an adversary possession against one who has derived title from the commonwealth, and therefore a junior patentee may go behind his own patent, and also behind the patent of the elder patentee, for the purpose of giving color to his possession from or subsequently to the granting of the elder patent. Shanks v. Lancaster, 50 D. 108.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Defendants in ejectment claiming under a junior patent, founded on an inclusive survey, may introduce in evidence the entries for the different tracts embraced in the inclusive survey, the order of court authorizing the survey, and the survey itself, in order to show possession under color of title prior to his patent. Id.

Possession under a junior patentee of an island, tolls the right of entry under an elder patentee, when the land was vacant at the time the defendant, claiming under the junior patentee, entered, with an intention of taking possession, and drove his stock upon it for that purpose, and continued to use it in the mode and at such times as was proper, considering its nature and locality, as his own, and such possession was at no time abandoned by him, or those claiming under him, but was continued uninterruptedly for twenty years. Webb v. Hynes, 50 D. 515.

Where a junior grant covers and includes an older grant, whether the holder claims all within the outer bounds or excludes the older grant from his claim, is a question of fact, and if he claims all within the outer bounds, possession of part is possession of all of it, where there is no adverse claimant. McCormac v. Wilkes, 51 D. 637.

An occupant under a junior grant which covers an older grant will be protected against violation of his claim of right by any one not claiming under such older grant. Id.

A patent is a better legal title than a prior entry, as giving the right to possession. Corman v. Johnson, 61 D. 593.

Possession taken by an owner of a junior survey of interference with an older and unoccupied survey, by erecting improvements upon and clearing and cultivating his land outside the lines of the interference, and using the balance of it, including the interference, as owners usually do their adjacent timber-lands, by taking fire-wood, fence-rails, or timber for the use of a sawmill for a period of twenty-one years, will be such possession as would give title under the statute of limitations to the part within the lines of such interference. But simply occasional entries upon the interference for lumbering purposes will not constitute such a possession. Beaupland v. McKee, 70 D. 115.

A junior patent from the government, or the register's certificate of entry, will prevail in equity over the elder one, if the right on which it is based is prior in point of time to that upon which the elder patent or certificate is founded. Brill v. Siles, 85 D. 364.

35. Intrusion on public lands. — Trespassers on lands of the United States stand in the same position with trespassers on private property, and can not by such trespass acquire any property, either general or special. Turley v. Tucker, 35 D. 449.

A stranger can not enter on land granted by government and defend against the grantee on the ground that there is a present or prospective controversy with the government respecting the title, and that the government intends to disregard the location and survey. Stephenson v. Goff, 73 D. 171.

A party whose possession was acquired by intrusion upon prior rights of another cannot invoke the protection of the Van Ness ordinance, by which the city of San Francisco relinquished and granted all her claim and title to certain lands, to the parties in the actual possession thereof, by themselves or tenants, during the period named in the ordinance. Keane v. Cannon, 82 D. 738.

36. Cutting timber. — A party, not a settler, cutting trees on land of the United States, is a trespasser, and does not thereby acquire such property that he can maintain trover against a third person who hauls away the trees. Turley v. Tucker, 35 D. 449.

QUO WARRANTO.

[Includes the remedies by writ of quo warranto, or information in the nature of quo warranto, to try the questions of title to office, and usurpation of franchise.]

1. Jurisdiction, and nature of the remedy.—The object of the writ of quo warranto was to remove or terminate some usurpation of the rights or prerogatives of the crown. Com. v. Murray, 14 D. 614.

It is a writ issuable by the state at will and of right, and is a demand made by it upon an individual, to show by what right he exercises a franchise, which can not lawfully be exercised, except by virtue of some grant or authority emanating from it. State v. Harris, 36 D. 460; State v. Evans, 36 D. 468.

It originally issued only at the instance of the sovereign against any person who usurped any franchise or liberty against the king, or for misuser or non-user of franchises or privileges granted by him. State v. Curtis, 95 D. 263.

The statute of 9 Anne extended an information in nature of a quo warranto so that it could issue at the relation of any person against any other person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding any franchise or office in any corporation. Id.

It will not lie in a state court to try the right to the office of director in a bank organized under the national currency act. This is one of that class of cases where jurisdiction in the state court is utterly incompatible with the necessary jurisdiction of the national government. Id.

The jurisdiction to issue an information in the nature of a quo warranto from a state court, to try the right to the office of director in a bank organized under the national currency act, is not conferred by the amended currency act of 1864, section 57, which provides that suits against the national banks may be instituted in either the federal or state courts. Id.

The proceeding is civil in character, and a party applying for a change of venue in such proceeding, showing all the requisite facts thereto, is entitled to a change of venue as a matter of right. The Illinois act of 1861, giving the court discretionary power to grant a change of venue in certain criminal proceedings, does not embrace a proceeding by quo warranto. Ensinger v. People, 95 D. 495.

2. When an information will lie. — A writ of quo warranto is the proper proceeding to ascertain whether a forfeiture of the charter of a corporation has been incurred. State v. Real Estate Bank, 41 D. 109.

Lapse of time is no bar to filing an information in the nature of a quo warranto by the attorney-general. State v. Pawtucket Turnpike Co., 94 D. 123.

Commissioners appointed by the legislature to select a townsite, and lay out and sell lots thereon, who have performed every act required of them, and are functi officio, may be proceeded against by information in the nature of a quo warranto, where the conviction is sought for the purpose of invalidating their acts, where such acts would affect the general administration of affairs in the community. Burton v. Patton, 62 D. 194.

3. When it will not. — A quo warranto against a minister cannot be sustained where there is no established church and each religious society manages its own concerns. He does not hold an office connected with the administration of justice, nor does he exercise a right or franchise belonging to the commonwealth. Com. v. Murray, 14 D. 614.

4. Who may apply for it. — An information in the nature of a quo warranto, may be granted at the relation of any person interested in the election or admission of an officer or member of a corporation; but, for the purpose of dissolving the corporation, or of seizing its franchises, it cannot be prosecuted, except by the authority of the commonwealth, through the legislature, or by the attorney-general. Com. v. Union Ins. Co., 4 D. 50.

The writ can issue only to a competent relator; one having an interest to warrant his interference. Com. v. Oluley, 94 D. 75.

The relator in quo warranto has no interest when he is the next in vote at an election for sheriff, where the person receiving the highest number of votes and returned was disqualified. He has no more interest than any other inhabitant of the commonwealth. The question of his right to the office is a public one exclusively, and can be raised only by the attorney-general. Id.

An enactment that the writ may be issued on suggestion of any person desiring to prosecute the same means any person having an interest to be affected. Id.

5. Trying title to office. — Quo warranto is a proper remedy to try title to office. People v. Olds, 58 D. 398.

Both the title of the party in possession of office, and that of a party claiming a right thereto, will be determined in the action in the nature of a quo warranto, and such determination will dispose as well of the public interest as of the private right. People ex rel. Smith v. Pease, 84 D. 242.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto lies in all cases where a charter exists, and a question arises concerning the exercise of an office claimed under that charter; but the court has the right to grant or refuse it according to the circumstances. Com. v. Arrison, 16 D. 531.

Where the term of office has expired before a quo warranto is applied for, or will expire before trial, the application will be denied. People v. Loomis, 24 D. 33.

The purview of twelfth section of act of April 13, 1840, covers all questions arising on writs of quo warranto between rival claimants of elective offices, and being highly remedial, should be liberally construed. Com. ex rel. v. Cullen, 53 D. 450.

In proceedings in nature of quo warranto against respondent for having intruded into an office, the information will not be dismissed, even though it appears that the office which respondent is charged to have usurped has expired since the filing of the information, as the statute provides for the imposition of a fine in a proper case, and also for the payment of costs by the respondent and the recovery of damages by the relator. People ex rel. v. Hartwell, 86 D. 70.

One wrongfully kept out of an office of profit, by a claimant thereto, is entitled to recover as damages the whole official salary, without deduction for the services of the incumbent. People v. Miller, 9 R. 131.

One entitled to an office and ejected may, after being re-instated, recover from the usurper the emoluments received by him, although he was put in possession by a judgment of the supreme court. Kessel v. Zeiser, 55 R. 769.

A state constitution provided that any candidate for office who should be guilty of bribery should be disqualified from holding office. Held, that an officer might be removed by quo warranto for obtaining his election by bribery, without having first been convicted of the offense on an indictment, but semble, that the defendant had a right to have the issues of fact raised upon the quo warranto tried by a jury. Com. v. Walter, 24 R. 154.

Under the constitution and statutes of Virginia no person who has engaged or shall engage in a duel is allowed to hold office. Held, that one who has been so engaged may be removed from office by quo warranto or an information in the nature of quo warranto, without a previous conviction of the offense in criminal proceedings. Royall v. Thomas, 26 R. 335.

6. Usurpation, or forfeiture of corporate franchise. — In England quo warranto lies in name of the sovereign against those who usurp sovereign franchises, because such usurpation is in derogation of the rights of the crown. State v. Curtis, 95 D. 263.

In the United States quo warranto lies in name of government against those who usurp sovereign franchises, because such franchises are grantable or granted by the commonwealth. Id.

Quo warranto can lie only in name of United States, and in the federal courts, against those who invade a franchise granted by the national government. Id.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto lies against a corporation for illegally carrying on banking operations. Such information need show no title in the people to a franchise, as it is incumbent on the defendant to show authority for exercising the right. People v. Utica Ins. Co., 8 D. 243.

An information in the nature of quo warranto to oust the defendants from acting as a corporation, and to test the fact of their incorporation, should be filed against the individuals; but if the object is to effect a dissolution of a corporation, or to oust such corporation of some franchise which is unlawfully exercised, then the information is correctly filed against the corporation. People v. Rensselaer etc. R. R. Co., 30 D. 33.

Filing false and fraudulent articles of association is a sufficient fact to sustain an information in the nature of quo warranto on the part of the state against a corporation. State ex rel v. Bailey, 79 D. 405.

Present insolvency is not a sufficient fact to sustain an information in the nature of quo warranto on the part of the state against a corporation. Id.

The object and effect of the proceeding by quo warranto is either to oust the party defendant of the franchise, if he fails to show in himself a complete legal right to its exercise; or if the franchise has been legally granted, but has been forfeited by the defendant or those under whom he claims, then to seize it into the hands of the state. State v. Evans, 36 D. 468.

Where a person is legally entitled to the exercise of a franchise, he can not by quo warranto be prohibited or restrained from the doing of any particular act or thing, the right of doing which is claimed by virtue of such office or franchise, and constitutes only an integral part of the rights, powers, and privileges incident thereto. Thus a judge legally elected, can not be prohibited by such a proceeding from taking cognizance of and adjudicating any suit or proceeding instituted and pending for adjudication in any court which he is authorized to hold, although such court may not legally possess jurisdiction over the matter. Id.

7. The application.—Where leave of court must first be obtained to file an information in nature of quo warranto, the court may, in its discretion, refuse its permission on the ground that the term of office would expire before the question could be tried; but where the statute permits the information to be filed without permission, there is no objection to the prosecution of the proceedings. People ex rel v. Hartwell, 86 D. 70.

8. Issuing the writ or information.—A writ of quo warranto is not a writ of right. Its issuance rests in the discretion of the court; and this was so under the British statute, 9 Anne, c. 20. The provisions of which statute were incorporated into the revised code of Pennsylvania, though they were not at first adopted in that state. Commonwealth v. Chuley, 94 D. 75.

The issuance of the writ does not end the discretion of supreme court, and that court is not obliged to entertain such writ, if in their opinion it was improvidently issued. Id.

9. Sufficiency of the information.—A proceeding by quo warranto is a criminal prosecution, and must, in Illinois, be carried on "in the name and by the authority of the people of the state," and conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the same." Donnelly v. People, 52 D. 459.

The prayer for relief at the close of an information containing several paragraphs must be taken distributively, and applied severally to the paragraphs. State ex rel v. Bailey, 79 D. 405.

In an information in the nature of a quo warranto, franchises and privileges alleged to be usurped need only to be set forth in general terms. The government has always the right to call upon those who assume corporate powers to require them to show by what warrant they do so, and when the defendants have set forth their claims by plea, the attorney-general may then reply and show the special grounds upon which he relies. People ex rel v. River Raisin etc. R. Co., 86 D. 64.

An information filed against a corporation in its corporate name, admits the existence of the corporation. People v. Rensselaer etc. R. Co., 30 D. 33.

The information is fatally defective which charges certain parties with intrusion into the offices of wardens and vestrymen of St. Paul's Church, "a corporation created by the authority of this state," without showing in what manner the organization became a body corporate, not having been created by special charter. People v. De Mill, 93 D. 179.

It is sufficient to aver in general terms the existence of the corporation created by special charter. But where it is not so created, the facts showing its existence must be set forth. Id.

The existence of the corporation is a jurisdictional fact which must be set forth, unless judicially known, where an information is filed for usurpation of office. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The nature and duties of an alleged office in a corporation, not judicially known, must be so described, in an information filed for usurpation of the office, as to show whether it is an office within the meaning of the law relating to the usurpation of franchises. Id.

10. Rules of pleading.*—Where the ownership of real estate is by law a prerequisite to the exercise of a franchise, upon quo warranto, the party exercising the franchise must in his plea describe the real estate of which he is owner, and how he has derived title thereto, and exhibit the deeds and records by which his ownership is evidenced. State v. Harris, 36 D. 460.

Ownership of stock, where a prerequisite to the exercise of a franchise, must be pleaded, so as to show that the stock was originally awarded after a compliance with the requirements of law, and if acquired by the defendant by transfer, the transfer must be set out; and the title deeds and records through which the defendant's title thereto has been acquired, must be exhibited, or some legal excuse for their non-production must be made. Id.

In pleading an election to the office of director, by the stockholders of a corporation, defendant must show that the election was held agreeably to law and in conformity with and in pursuance of the ordinances and regulations of the governing board of the corporation, and that at such election he received a majority of the legal votes cast; if his claim is by virtue of an election by the board of directors, to supply a vacancy therein, he must show the existence of a board competent to elect, and that a vacancy existed therein, and how such vacancy arose, and his subsequent election. Id.

The defendant in a quo warranto need only show a prima facie legal right to his enjoyment of the franchise; that if his pleading show an election by electors acting under color of legal right, it is sufficient; and that the electors were not possessed of the proper qualifications must be pleaded in avoidance by the state. Id.

Quo warranto is a common-law proceeding, under which a new defensive averment, answering plaintiff's case, is admissible. Com. ex rel. v. Cullen, 53 D. 450.

The answer of not guilty or non usurpavit is bad in quo warranto. The defendant must either justify or disclaim the holding. Attorney-General v. Foote, 78 D. 689.

A plea to an information in the nature of a quo warranto which puts in issue a material allegation in the information, such as that any votes were cast for the relator at the election, should conclude to the contrary, and not with a verification. People ex rel. v. Hartwell, 86 D. 70.

In an action in the nature of quo warranto

to declare void the election of a county officer on the ground that he offered, before election, to pay a part of his salary into the county treasury if he should be chosen—held, that the complaint was bad for not showing that voters influenced by such offer were tax payers of the county, or would otherwise be benefited by the performance of the promise. State v. Church, 20 R. 746.

11. Evidence, and burden of proof.* On the trial of a quo warranto, in which the issue is on the legality of the election, evidence may be given of conversations and transactions previous to the election, if they were connected with, and might have had an influence on it, though no previous notice thereof has been given. Com. v. Woelper, 8 D. 628.

Supreme court of New York, in an action of quo warranto to review election of a state officer, is not restricted to correcting mistakes of the canvassing officers, but may go behind their returns, and receive evidence establishing what votes were actually cast and identifying the candidates for whom they were in fact intended. People v. Cook, 59 D. 451.

The certificate of a board of canvassers authorized to canvass votes given for any elective office is only prima facie evidence of the title of the person receiving it to the office therein mentioned, and in all cases where the proceeding is by quo warranto, or by an action in that nature, it is competent to go behind the certificate to ascertain the real facts of the case. People ex rel. v. Pease, 84 D. 242.

Evidence is admissible to show that the votes cast for either of two candidates for office were given by persons who were not qualified electors. Id.

The poll list kept at an election is admissible in evidence to prove that a person voted at such election, although such list is not signed by the inspectors, has no heading denoting its character, and has never been filed in the town clerk's office. Id.

Where the evidence is that a person who was alien born has voted, the legal presumption is that he voted legally, and that he had become naturalized. Id.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto is essentially a civil proceeding, and the burden of proof is upon the complaining party to show that his adversary is illegally in possession of the office. State v. Kuyperie, 100 D. 265.

In quo warranto, the burden is upon the defendant of showing such facts as invest him with a complete legal title to the franchise in question. State v. Harris, 36 D. 460.

Upon a quo warranto to the president of a corporation, requiring him to show his title to that office, he must show the existence of a corporation, that he is possessed of the qualifications required by law of the incumbent of the office of president thereof, and that he is the president. Id.

*Burden of proof in quo warranto proceedings, see note, 100 D. 268-274.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where a voter is proved to have been an alien born, and there is prima facie evidence that he has not become a citizen by naturalization or otherwise, the burden of showing that he has become a citizen is cast on the party who desires to retain the vote, and in the absence of such proof the vote must be disallowed. People ex rel v. Pease, 84 D. 242.

In an action in the nature of a quo warranto against the incumbent of an office, brought in the name of the people on the relation of a candidate for an office who, according to the returns, received less votes than the defendant, — held, (1) that the returns having been shown to be false, the burden was on the defendant to establish his title to the office by other proof than his certificate of election; (2) that on failure to do this, judgment of ouster should be rendered against defendant; but (3) that the relator was bound to show affirmatively that he was entitled to the office in order to obtain judgment to that effect. People ex rel v. Thatcher, 14 R. 312.

12. The judgment, and how enforced. — Where the term expires after information in the nature of quo warranto, but before judgment, such judgment will, nevertheless, be rendered, as the prevailing party is entitled to costs. People v. Loomis, 24 D. 33.

A judgment of ouster is rendered against individuals for unlawfully assuming to be a corporation, or against a corporation usurping a franchise. Judgment of seizure is given against a corporation for a forfeiture of its corporate privileges. People v. Rensselaer, etc. R. R. Co., 30 D. 33.

13. Review. — In an information in the nature of a quo warranto against an officer of a corporation, charging him with having usurped the franchises of the office, a new trial will not be granted for a misdirection, when it appears that the term of the office has expired, and a new annual election of officers has been made. State v. Tudor, 5 D. 162.

An action in the nature of quo warranto, authorized by the New York code of procedure to be brought for determining the title to a public office, being a civil, not a criminal proceeding, is to be reviewed by appeal, not by writ of error. People v. Cook, 59 D. 451.

RAILROAD COMPANIES.

V. HORSE AND STREET RAILROADS.

I. INCORPORATION, ORGANIZATION, AND POWERS GENERALLY.

1. Power of the legislature over railroads. — Railroads are not private affairs but public improvements, and it is the right and duty of the state to advance the commerce and promote the welfare of the people by making or causing them to be made at the public expense. Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 59 D. 759.

The legislature may, by general laws, impose new burdens on railroad companies, in addition to those imposed by their charters, when such burdens are conducive to the public interest and safety. Nelson v. Vermont etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 614.

A state legislature has power to prohibit unjust discrimination in railway freights.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Chicago and A. R. R. Co. v. People, 16 R. 599.

The right to build roads and levy tolls is an attribute of sovereignty, and, in the hands of a subject, a franchise. Where the legislature confers a franchise to build and operate a railway, it retains the right to control the recipient in its exercise so far as it does not surrender its authority to do so. Blake v. Winona etc. R. R. Co., 18 R. 345.

2. Constitutionality of statutes affecting railroads.—Monopolies are not prohibited by the constitution of Pennsylvania, and the legislature may, therefore, grant exclusive privileges to a railroad. Case of Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 36 D. 202.

The construction of a railroad through a county is a "county purpose," within the Tennessee constitution, notwithstanding the stock in the railroad subscribed for by the county be distributed among the people in the proportions in which they pay the tax levied for this purpose, for it is not the stock as an investment which is contemplated by the constitution, but the road in which the stock is held. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Davidson Co., 62 D. 424.

The construction of a railroad through a county, although it extends through other counties or states, is a "county purpose," within the purview of the Tennessee constitution empowering the legislature to authorize the several counties of the state to impose taxes for county purposes. Id.

A statute required a railroad company, whose charter was subject to amendment by alteration or repeal, to establish a flag station at a certain point on its line, to erect there a station house and to stop its trains, is not in violation of the constitution of the United States. Com. v. Eastern R. R. Co., 4 R. 555.

A statute giving the owner of live stock "double the value" of live stock injured or killed by the cars of a railroad company is void. Atchison and N. R. R. Co. v. Baly, 29 R. 356.

A statute rendering railroad companies liable for cattle killed by them, at a valuation to be conclusively fixed by appraisers, is unconstitutional as denying the right to a trial by jury. Graves v. Northern Pacific R. R. Co., 51 R. 81.

A statute, imposing a penalty on railway conductors for failing to cause their trains to stop five minutes at every way station, is constitutional. Davidson v. State, 30 R. 166.

By the acts incorporating a railway company, no special authority was given to charge toll for freight and passengers. By a subsequent act, maximum rates of toll were fixed. Held, that the state had a right to regulate the matter of tolls, and violated no contract in doing so; that the act in question was not a usurpation by the legislature of judicial authority, and that the same was constitutional. Blake v. Winona etc. R. R. Co., 18 R. 345.

A statute made railroad companies liable "for all expenses of the coroner and his inquest, and the burial of all persons who may die on the cars, or who may be killed by collision or other accident occurring to such cars, or otherwise." Held, unconstitutional so far as it attempts to make railroad companies liable in cases where they have violated no law or been guilty of no negligence. Ohio and Miss. R'y Co. v. Lackey, 20 R. 259.

A statute provided that all railroad corporations should be liable for damages from fires caused by the operating of such railroad. Held, valid and constitutional as to railroads incorporated before the statute was passed. Rodemacher v. Milwaukee etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 592.

3. Their interpretation.—An act of the legislature authorized "all railroad companies upon equal terms to run their locomotive and cars over the track" of the Union Railway Company of Baltimore. Held, that this provision did not confer upon such railroad company the power to construct lateral railroads connecting with other railroads running to Baltimore. 1871. Baltimore etc. Turnp. Co. v. Union R'y Co., 6 R. 397.

A statute makes it the duty of railway locomotive engineers, "on perceiving any obstruction on the track of the road," to use all means to stop the train. Held, that this does not apply to an animal running by the side of the track and suddenly springing on the track too late to be avoided. East Tennessee etc. R. R. Co. v. Bayless, 54 R. 69.

The Maryland railroad act of 1838, construed. Baltimore & S. R. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 59 D. 72.

4. Construction of charter provisions.—Railway companies must stand upon a strict construction of their chartered privileges. Com. v. Pittsburgh etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 372.

A provision in a charter of a railroad company requiring it to restore a highway which it crosses to its former state of usefulness, as near as may be, is not a condition precedent to its right to cross such highway. Richardson v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 60 D. 283.

Building a railroad tract so as to contribute to other purposes is within the charter powers of a railroad company, if the primary object was for railroad purposes. Jones v. Western Vermont R. R. Co., 65 D. 206.

A railroad company acting under a special charter, which leases a line constructed under the general railroad law, with respect to the business transacted by them on said leased road, are governed by the provisions of the general railroad law, and cannot claim the benefit of such exemptions as are contained in their original charter. McMillan v. Michigan S. & N. R. R., 93 D. 208.

A charter granted by two states to a company to construct a railroad is not only a contract with the company but a compact between the states. It is to be liberally construed with reference to its objects. Like a treaty, it is the law of the contracting states, not being subject to interpretation by the local usages of either. The same construction must be made in both. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 94 D. 84.

By the the charter of the P. Railroad Company it was provided, among other things, that the corporation should "be obliged to receive at all proper times and places" persons and articles for transportation, etc. That the legislature should have the right to inquire into and correct abuses of the franchise, but that the charter should not be revoked, annulled, altered, limited or restrained without the consent of the corporation, etc., and that the president and directors should have "authority to exercise all the powers granted the corporation for locating, building, completing and running the road." The railroad commissioners, under the provisions of an act passed subsequent to the charter, ordered the company to build and maintain a station for the receipt of goods and passengers at a specified place on its line. Held, (1) that the duties imposed upon the corporation were ministerial to do and perform what public convenience should require, and (2) that it was not in the discretion of its directors to determine ultimately what their duties were; (3) and that the legislature had the constitutional right and authority to confer jurisdiction over the subject, and nothing in the act conferring it conflicted with the charter of the corporation. State v. Noyes, 47 Me. 205 distinguished. Railroad Comm'rs. v. Portland & O. Cent. R. R. Co. 18 R. 208.

5. Subscriptions to stock and how enforced. — Railway stock subscriptions, conditional on the location of the line or a station, are upheld, on the ground that this agreement, and not the stock itself, is conditional. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Seely, 100 D. 369.

A subscription to joint stock is not only an undertaking with the company but with all other subscribers. So where one subscribed to the building of a railroad according to a specified survey, the amount to be paid only when the subscriptions reached an amount specified, he cannot be permitted to show that he induced to subscribe by the promises of the company's agents that the road should be constructed not according to the survey, but past his house, etc., and that his subscription was not to be binding unless the road was so constructed. Müller v. Hanover Junction etc. R. R. Co., 30 R. 349.

The defendant procured subscriptions for the stock of the plaintiff's railway, and himself previously subscribed thereto, entering his name in the same subscription book belonging to the plaintiff, which he kept about six months thereafter. Subsequently he cut his name out of the book and returned the book to the plaintiff. Held, that he was still bound by his contract. Greer v. Chartier's R'y Co., 42 R. 548.

A subscription for building a railroad was made on the conditions that the road should be completed and put into operation to a certain town by a certain date, and that it should locate a station within a specified distance of the court-house in the town. The road was graded to the town by the appointed time, but was not fully completed until several months later, and in the meantime the company used about a mile of another railroad. Held, (1) that the contract for completion was substantially complied with; (2) that the distance of the station from the court-house should be measured in a straight line; (3) that the contract for locating the station was lawful. Missouri Pac. R'y Co. v. Tygard, 54 R. 97.

6. Powers of the company generally. — A railway company has the right forcibly to eject from its premises a hotel runner, who comes there to solicit patronage for his hotel, in violation of a regulation of the company, of which he has knowledge. Landrigan v. State, 25 R. 647.

7. Power to make contracts. — Whether a railroad corporation has power to assign its road and the franchise connected with it, is a matter between the state and corporation, with which third parties have nothing to do. Arthur v. Com. & R. R. Bank, 48 D. 719.

If a railroad hold an estate in fee in property it may assign it. Id.

Assignment of the road does not carry the franchise with it nor does it of itself work a dissolution of the corporation. Id.

A railroad corporation, having affirmative right of possession and management of its road under its mortgage, has a legal right to contract for such articles as would enter into the expense of maintaining and operating the road. Parkhurst v. Northern Cent. R. R. Co., 81 D. 648.

A railroad company may, in exercising its franchises, incur liability for expense on account of injury received by its employees, although the charter may not, in terms, authorize the company to incur such expense. Toledo R. R. Co. v. Rodriguez, 95 D. 484.

It is sufficient consideration to support an express agreement to pay for the nursing and medical attendance necessary to the cure of a railroad employee, that he was disabled while in the employ of the company, and in the discharge of his hazardous duties. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

8. — to issue bonds. — Corporations have power by common law to issue bonds, but under the statute of Massachusetts, railroad corporations have no power to issue bonds for the payment of money, except for the purposes and in the mode therein authorized. All bonds issued otherwise are void. Com. v. Smith, 87 D. 672.

A mortgage is void which is made to secure railroad bonds issued for purposes not authorized by the statute, and not in the mode therein prescribed. Id.

Railroad bonds issued and a mortgage given of its franchise and other property in violation of statute may be attacked as invalid, even in a collateral proceeding, by one who has taken a valid second mortgage on the property, and not made expressly subject to the former mortgage. Id.

A railroad corporation may make interest on bonds payable semi-annually, where it is authorized to borrow money "at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent per annum," and the bonds shall be "payable at such time and places as shall be agreed on by the respective parties so contracting." Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co., 75 D. 518.

Bonds of a railroad company are not made void by being secured by a mortgage which the company had no power to execute. Nor is the holder's right to recover on such bonds at all affected by a memorandum thereon that they were issued by the company in accordance with its charter, and that the mortgage therein recited had been duly executed. Phila. & S. R. R. Co. v. Lewis, 75 D. 574.

A bona fide purchaser of bonds of a railroad company is not bound to see to the application of the money paid for them to the purposes of the corporation, where the bonds are in such form as to pass by delivery. Nor is it any defense to an action on such bonds that the books of the company do not show value received for them, or that the president of the company has not made to it a return of the proceeds. Id.

9. — to make leases. — A railroad company has no power to lease its road so as to relieve itself from liability for the non-performance of duties devolving upon it, in the absence of legislative authority, express or implied. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 71 D. 291.

The board of directors of a railway corporation have no power to make a lease of their road, under the laws of Virginia, without the sanction of the stockholders. Stevens v. Davison, 98 D. 692.

A lease made by the board of directors on the day their terms of office expired, two of the board having been concerned in a fraudulent issue of spurious stock, to two lessees in the employ of the corporation, one of whom had been an agent in the issue of such stock, and securing such lessees a clear profit, equal to one half of the gross earnings of the road, is a fraud on the rights of the stockholders. Id.

10. — to execute mortgages. — A railroad corporation may sell bonds at a discount or exchange them for iron rails, and its mortgages securing them are not rendered invalid thereby, where it is authorized to borrow money and execute its bonds therefor, and secure the same by pledge or mortgage, and it is provided that the directors might sell or negotiate the bonds at such rates as they should deem best to advance the interest of the company; and such sale should be as valid in every respect as if sold at their par value. Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co., 75 D. 518.

The franchise to be a corporation, and that to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, are devisable as regards alienation by the corporation, however they may be for other purposes; and the fact that corporations only, under the law, can exercise the power of eminent domain, which cannot be the subject of grant or sale, is no objection to the transfer to individuals of the latter franchise, if it otherwise appears to be authorized by the legislature. Id.

A railroad corporation is not authorized to pledge or mortgage the franchise of being a corporation, but may pledge or mortgage the franchise to maintain and operate its road, and its property whether real or personal, to be subsequently acquired, under statutes empowering it to borrow money and to execute its bonds therefor, and to "pledge, by mortgage or otherwise, the entire road, fixtures, and equipments, with all the appurtenances, income, and resources thereof." Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co. 75 D. 518. S. P., Bardtown etc. R. R. Co. v. Metcalfe, 81 D. 541; Com. v. Smith, 87 D. 672.

A railroad corporation's general powers to pledge or mortgage after-acquired property are no greater than those of an individual. Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co., 75 D. 518.

A mortgage on the future net earnings of a railroad company for the purpose of securing prompt payment of interest on its construction bonds is valid. Jessup v. Bridge, 79 D. 513.

A mortgage by railroad company to secure money borrowed for the construction of its road is not opposed to the public policy of Kentucky. This is indicated by the general course of legislation upon the subject. Bardtown etc. R. R. Co. v. Metcalfe, 81 D. 541.

Where a railroad corporation voluntarily mortgages its property to secure money which it is expressly authorized to borrow, and the bond-holders invest their money upon the faith of the mortgage, this is sufficient to take the case out of the rule that a turnpike road cannot be sold for a general debt of the corporation. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A resolution of the directors of a railroad corporation authorizing a mortgage of "the road and its property, etc.," is sufficient to authorize a mortgage of the "railroad, with all its rights and privileges," as there was nothing to which the phrase "etc." could have been designed to apply except the franchises, and therefore must have been used to embrace them. Id.

A resolution of the directors authorizing a mortgage of the road and its property must design a transfer of the right to operate the road. Id.

A street railway corporation has no power to mortgage its franchise, road or property, without legislative authority, and a mortgage without such authority is wholly void. Richardson v. Sibley, 87 D. 700.

A mortgage by a railroad company upon its existing road and franchises may be extended to rolling stock thereafter to be acquired and placed on the road, if the intent to acquire such stock and hold it subject to the mortgage be clearly and sufficiently expressed. Such mortgages are exceptions to the general rule that property not in esse cannot be conveyed. Merrill v. Noyes, 96 D. 486.

The remedy for enforcing the lien of a mortgage on a railroad and rolling stock to be subsequently acquired, pointed out. Id.

A railroad company, authorized by their charter to mortgage "all or any part of their road, property, rights," etc., executed and delivered a mortgage of "all the road, property, rights," etc., "now held or hereafter to be acquired." Held, valid as to subsequently acquired property. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Woelper, 3 R. 596.

11. Construction and effect of mortgages.*—Cars, wheels, fire-wood for engines, and coal for machine-shops of a railroad company are things incident and indispensable to the use and enjoyment of its rights and franchises, and are included in a deed which purports to convey all its present and in future to be acquired property. Phillips v. Winslow, 68 D. 729.

A railroad corporation's personal property is not exempted from the operation of liens or claims created by its own acts or resulting from judicial proceedings, from the fact that it has executed a mortgage, under authority, of its franchises and its real and personal property. Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co., 75 D. 518.

A creditor of railroad has no equitable claim superior to mortgages, from the fact that the consideration of his debt was for moneys advanced in payment of interest and taxes, and for right of way. Id.

A subsequent mortgage has no priority over a previous mortgage defectively executed to which it was expressly made subject. Id.

The mode of sale of the property and franchises under a mortgage given by a railroad corporation, and the rights of mortgagees, bond-holders, and creditors thereunder stated. Id.

To redeem a mortgage on the property of a railroad company, lying in different states, the entire mortgage must be redeemed, as the mortgage has a lien upon every part of the railroad to secure every part of the debt. Wood v. Goodwin, 77 D. 259.

If the mortgage debt matures at successive periods, and the mortgagee goes into possession for default in payment of portion first due, the mortgagor will not be permitted to eject him without paying all that is due, and depositing money, or otherwise providing for the payment of the remainder as it shall become due. Id.

Where a mortgage of a railroad and its property authorizes a sale upon failure to pay either the principal or interest to satisfy "the amount claimed and due," but contains no provision that the principal shall become due upon a failure to pay interest, until such principal becomes due the bondholders have no right to insist on payment of it by foreclosure or otherwise. But they have a right to a sale for the interest due; and if the property is divisible, it would be proper to order a sale of only so much as might satisfy the amount due. If it is not susceptible of a division, it must be sold or leased as an entirety. Bardston etc. R. R. Co. v. Metcalf, 81 D. 541.

Where such mortgage authorizes a sale upon failure to pay either the interest or principal "to satisfy the amount claimed and due," and the property is worth much more than the debt and interest, it may be leased at public auction for the shortest term that will bring the amount due and accruing interest and principal as the same shall become due. If no lessee is found, then it may be sold absolutely, the company to elect whether or not the property shall be offered in the first instance for a term of years, and if sold, the purchaser to give bonds, with approved security, for the purchase-money, including the accruing interest and principal, and a lien on the property should be reserved as additional security. If leased, the lessee should be required to give a covenant, with approved security, to keep in good repair the road and property, and to return the same to the company at the end of the term in as good condition as it may be when received. An inventory of the property should be filed in the cause and declared in the decree ordering the lease, to be conclusive evidence of the condition and value of the property at the time of the lease. Id.

A railroad corporation conveys only the net income of the road, after payment of all expenses, while it remains in no default in paying the interest, and providing a sinking fund, by a mortgage of its entire road, lands, buildings, rolling-stock, machinery, etc., together with all its tolls, income, rents, issues, and profits, and alienable franchises, to secure its entire debt, providing that if the interest or principal of its bonds should not be paid when due, the trustees under the instrument were to take possession, work the road, and apply the net income to the payment of the bonds, interest and principal; but that until default in the payment of the interest or principal, the mortgagors should continue in the management of the mortgaged property. Parkhurst v. Northern Cent. R. R. Co., 81 D. 648.

The nature and object of mortgages of a railroad do not give them any more enlarged meaning, where the company mortgages separately, at different times, the two divisions of its road, to raise money to complete the road, and neither of the mortgages contains any language purporting to convey materials to be thereafter acquired, any further than they become a part of or appurtenance to the road, or were used in operating it. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 82 D. 689.

A railroad company is not estopped from denying that railroad chairs were conveyed by prior mortgages, where, after having subsequently acquired the chairs, it executed another mortgage of its road and appurtenances, and all "materials," which mortgage was declared to be subject to the lien of the two prior mortgages, "in all respects prior, superior, and senior liens upon the property and premises described therein, respectively, acquired and to be acquired." Ib.

Town lots held by a railroad company do not pass by sheriff's sale under mortgage of the road, "with its corporate privileges and appurtenances," unless directly appurtenant to the railroad and indispensably necessary to the enjoyment of its franchises; and the question of appurtenances and necessity is properly referred to the jury as a fact to be determined by them. Shamokin Valley R. R. Co. v. Livermore, 86 D. 552.

One holding a valid second mortgage upon a railroad and its franchise, and not made expressly subject to a former first mortgage, has a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, and cannot, therefore, maintain a bill in equity to procure the cancellation of said first mortgage, which is void, and thus remove a cloud upon his title. Com. v. Smith, 87 D. 672.

Where a railroad company, in pursuance of a power in its charter to borrow money and to execute the required securities therefor, executed a mortgage on its road, etc., and on "all future right thereto and interest therein to be acquired,"—held, that such mortgage was a valid lien on all lands over which the road was at the time located, though the title thereto or right of way was not acquired until subsequently; and that it was prior to the lien of the vendor of such right of way for the purchase-money. Pierce v. Milwaukee etc. R. R. Co. 1 R. 203.

In an action to foreclose two mortgages on a railroad and its franchises and equipments it appeared that the rolling stock had, subsequent to the giving of the mortgages, been sold on execution and purchased at a sheriff's sale under judgment in favor of J. S., a director of the railroad company. Held, that the rolling stock of the railroad was personal property and the mortgage should have been filed as a chattel mortgage under the law requiring mortgages of personal property to be filed when the possession of the property remains with the mortgagor; that such mortgages having been given before the act of 1863 (enacting that mortgages by railroad companies of real and personal property need not be filed as chattel mortgages if recorded properly as real estate mortgages), were void as against judgment creditors; and that J. S. could retain the property purchased by him under the judgment and execution, as against the mortgages seeking to foreclose. That rolling stock is personal property. Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & M. R. R. Co., 13 R. 595. See, also, Randall v. Ethwell, 11 R. 747.

A railroad company mortgaged "all its right, title and interest in and to all and singular its property, real and personal, of whatever nature and description, now possessed or to be hereafter acquired; including all its rights, privileges, franchises and easements." Held, that the mortgage did not, in law, cover the future earnings of the road. Emerson v. European etc. Ry Co. 24 R. 39.

A railroad company mortgaged all its "real and personal estate and franchise now owned or hereafter to be acquired." Subsequently the company bought a hotel, a store-house, some vacant town lots, and a farm of three hundred acres. This property was not used in connection with the railroad but the company carried on a hotel and rented the rest. Held, that as against a purchaser under a subsequent judgment the mortgages got no title to this property. Mississippi Valley Co. v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 38 R. 348.

12. Dissolution and forfeiture of franchise.—A railroad charter though violated is not void until the state, by proper judicial proceeding, has obtained a judgment of forfeiture. Arthur v. Com. & R. R. Bank, 48 D. 719.

A railroad company forfeits its franchise by abandonment of part of road, after its completion between the points named in its charter or articles. People v. Albany etc. R. Co., 82 D. 295.

A railroad company has not the option to discontinue a part of its road, and forfeit its franchise, but the remedy is not by action in equity for specific performance, but by mandamus or indictment, or at the election of the people, by action to annul the charter of the corporation. Ib.

13. Appointment and powers of receivers.—A receiver will be appointed to take charge of a railway when necessary to secure the rights of the stockholders. Stevens v. Davison, 98 D. 692.

A railroad company, whose road with all its appurtenances is in the exclusive possession, use, and control of the receiver, who has power to employ, control, and dismiss all the agents, servants, and employees engaged on the road, is not liable for an injury resulting from the negligence of such agents or servants. Ohio & Miss. R. R. Co. v. Davis, 85 D. 477.

Possession of a railroad by a receiver appointed by the court cannot be regarded as the possession of the railroad company. Ib.

The receiver or assignee of a railroad company appointed in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings is not the agent of the corporation, so as to render it liable for injuries caused by his negligence while operating the road. Mets v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 17 R. 201.

14. Actions by and against receivers, or trustees.—Where parties acting under appointment as receivers of court are managing and controlling a line of railroad, and holding themselves out as common carriers, the fact that they are such receivers is not a defense to an action at law for a breach of any obligation or duty which is voluntarily assumed by them in matters of business, though conducted and carried on by them while acting as receivers. Bismuthal v. B. Vinard, 91 D. 349.

A receiver of a corporation appointed under state laws is liable in his official capacity the same as the corporation would be. Meara v. Holbrook, 5 R. 633.

Trustees operating a railroad for the benefit of bondholders are personally liable to owners of freight and to passengers, to the same extent as the company would be if operating the road, and in the same way lessees or mere intruders who operate the road are liable. Sprague v. Smith, 70 D. 424.

Where the trustees, under a second mortgage of a railroad, have taken possession of it, and have afterward by a bill in equity obtained a decree of foreclosure with a provision for a sale of the railroad in accordance with the power conferred by the mortgage, and have themselves become the purchasers as they were authorized to do by the decree, and to hold the property in trust for the bondholders, and they continue to keep possession of the railroad and operate it as such trustees,—held, that they are liable as common carriers for the loss of goods received for transportation. Barter v. Wheeler, 6 R. 434.

15.—or assignees in bankruptcy.—It seems that the purchasers at an assignee's sale of the property and franchises of a bankrupt railroad corporation do not acquire the corporate entity or become stockholders. Mets v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co. 17 R. 201.

A railroad company was thrown into involuntary bankruptcy, and the road was operated by the assignee. The property and franchises of the corporation were sold to holders of bonds on the road. Before the sale was confirmed, and while the assignee was operating the road, plaintiff's intestate was negligently killed. Held, that the corporation was not liable. Ib.

The assignee in bankruptcy of a railroad corporation, who operates the road under the order of the court, is not personally liable for an injury caused by the negligence of a servant employed by him, in the absence of evidence that he was negligent in the selection of servants or that he held himself out as operating the road otherwise than as receiver. Cardot v. Barney, 20 R. 533.

II. ACQUIRING RIGHT OF WAY AND CONSTRUCTING THE ROAD.

1. Proceeding to Condemn Lands. Locating the Road.

16. Power to take lands.*—Railroads are designed for public use, and under the right of eminent domain, may take private property, upon just compensation being made, although such property is in the nature of a franchise, derived from a grant of the legislature, the terms and conditions of which have been fully executed. Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford etc. R. R. Co., 42 D. 716.

A right is given to extend the road to and unite with any other road within prescribed limits, by a general power conferred upon a railroad company by its charter, "to extend to and unite its railroad with any other railroad now constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed in this state;" and this power is not limited by other provisions declaring that certain proceedings for the condemnation of lands shall be taken in a particular county. Belleville etc. R. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 D. 589.

Under a charter conferring the power to acquire by condemnation land for the construction of the road, the company has the right to divert a stream of water flowing across the line of their road. This right does not depend upon an express grant to be made and specified in the inquisition itself, but may be acquired by condemnation of the land duly confirmed, and payment or tender of the damages awarded; and proof dehors the inquisition is admissible to show that the attention of the jury of inquest was directed to the intended diversion at the time of taking and before they signed the inquisition. If the attention of the jury was thus directed to such diversion, and the same was made within the lines of the land condemned for the construction of the road, the owner of the land through which the road passes has no remedy, either at law or in equity, for any injury that may result therefrom. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., v. Magruder, 6 K. 310.

*Capacity of company to take title to land, see note, 94 D. 881-887.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The legislature of a state, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, can authorize and empower a railroad corporation to cross another railroad or turnpike road, on making compensation; and the exercise of such a right, whatever damage may result therefrom, cannot be considered as a condemnation of a franchise, nor the impairment of a contract, within the meaning of the United States constitution. Baltimore etc. Turnpikes Co. v. Union R'y Co., 6 K. 397.

A railroad company cannot take, without the owner's consent, land not contiguous or adjoining their road, but four hundred yards distant, for the purpose of a warehouse and road leading thereto, under a clause of its charter that authorizes them to lay out such contiguous lands as they may desire to occupy as sites for warehouses and other buildings; provided, that the adjoining land for the sites of buildings shall not exceed five acres in any one parcel, notwithstanding the space to be occupied by the proposed warehouse and railroad leading to it from the main road will not exceed five acres, since the intention of the act was to authorize only the extension of the width of the roadway for the enumerated purposes. Bird v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 64 D. 739.

A railroad company cannot appropriate ground for an engine and water stations after the lapse of five years, where it is authorized by its charter to appropriate a strip of land of but a certain width, except in deep cuts and fillings, or at points selected for depots, or engine or water stations, and is given five years to complete a locomotive road, but only a horse road was constructed within that time. Plymouth R. R. Co. v. Cobwell, 80 D. 526.

A railroad company has no authority to acquire land for purposes of speculation under a grant of power to acquire and hold sufficient real estate for the construction of its road, and for the erection of depots, engine-houses, etc. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Seely, 100 D. 369.

Where a railroad corporation takes possession of premises, under the right of eminent domain for railroad purposes, the occupation of buildings upon the premises, for the general purposes of trade and mechanical or manufacturing purposes, by lessees of the corporation, is a diversion of the premises from the corporate purposes, and a writ of entry will lie against the corporation by the original owners, in which they are entitled to judgment establishing their title as owners in fee, subject to the valid easement of the corporation, and for damages or mesne profits for the wrongful use of the premises. Proprietors v. Nashua etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 181.

The taking and condemnation by a railroad company of part of the road-bed of another company is an "interference with the rights and franchises" of such other company. Alexandria etc. R'y Co. v. Alexandria W. R. R. Co., 40 R. 743.

One railroad company has no right, without express statutory authority, to acquire for its own uses land already acquired by another railroad company. Id.

Lands belonging to a municipal corporation were reserved and set apart for the public use. Held, that the construction of a railroad thereon was a "public use" within the meaning of the reservation. Cook v. Burlington, 6 R. 649.

The statute authorized a railroad company to take, by right of eminent domain, any real estate that it may require "for the purpose of its incorporation and for the purpose of running and operating its road." Held, that the company could take land for depots, and that the election of the land and location of the buildings were within the discretion of the company. New York & H. R. R. Co. v. Kip, 7 R. 335.

17. What title or interest may be acquired.*—A railroad company is to be deemed owner, for the time being, of lands which it has lawfully acquired for a road-bed, in such sense that animals which stray upon the track are trespassers. Munger v. Tonawanda R. R. Co., 53 D. 384.

From the moment that compensation is paid or deposited, as the law directs, where land is appropriated for a railroad, the property is absolutely vested in the owners of such railroad for its use. Beelman v. Saratoga etc. R. R. Co., 22 D. 679.

A railroad company having acquired its road by purchase and grant from the state is the legal owner of the road, and has, by the express terms of its act of incorporation, the entire and exclusive right of its possession and control. Williams v. Michigan Central R. R. Co., 55 D. 59.

A railroad company may remove ornamental or other trees within the limits of the land taken under their charter for a roadway to fit their track for safe and convenient use, either when originally constructing the road or afterwards. Brainard v. Clapp, 57 D. 74.

The company are judges of the necessity of cutting trees inside their right of way, and may authorize it to be done by any officer or agent, and the burden of proof to justify it does not rest upon them. Ib.

A railroad company has a right to exclusive occupancy of land taken for its road, and to exclude all concurrent occupancy by the former owners, at any time or for any purpose. Jackson v. Busland etc. R. R. Co., 60 D. 246.

The right of the company in its road-bed, under an arrangement whereby they have the right to construct and use a track, and hold the same for railroad purposes, amounts only to a permissive license, and gives no right to the soil. Any stone, therefore, excavated in grading the track, and not actually used in the construction of the track, belongs to the owner of the land, and cannot be removed without his permission. Chapin v. Sullivan R. R., 75 D. 237.

The company may use stone and gravel from one portion of their line in the proper construction of any other portion thereof, even though they do not own the land, but only have a permissive license to use it for railroad purposes. Ib. But they have no right to sell such material to third parties. Aldrich v. Drury, 5 R. 624.

The owner of the land adjoining a railroad, and from whom the land was taken for the construction and use of the road, under the power conferred by the charter, has no right to enter upon the land after it is so taken, and while it is being so used, and cut and take therefrom the herbage and other products of the soil growing thereon. Troy & B. R. R. Co. v. Potter, 1 R. 325.

The franchise of a railroad corporation is an incorporeal hereditament, not included within the term "lands or tenements," and a railroad is a public work, entitled and bound to use its franchise; therefore, a proceeding of unlawful detainer does not lie to recover a part of such a public work. Gibbs v. Drew, 26 R. 700.

Under a condemnation of lands for railway purposes, the former owner of the soil still retains the fee, and the right to use the land for every purpose not incompatible with the use of it by the railway company for railway purposes; and therefore it is error to instruct a jury that he has no right to cross over or under the railroad. Kansas Cent. R'y Co. v. Allen, 31 R. 190.

Under a deed to a railway company of a right of way "for all purposes connected with the construction, use and occupation of the railway," the company has no right to take sand from the land conveyed to build a round-house. Vermilya v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 56 R. 279.

A railroad company, in the construction of a bridge upon its road, built stone piers and abutments on lands over which it had acquired the right of way. It subsequently abandoned the construction of the railroad at that place. Held, 1. That the piers and abutments did not pass to the land-owner; 2. That the fact, that upon such abandonment, the owner of the land had been allowed to take possession of that portion embraced in the right of way, and hold it for a period less than was required to extinguish the easement, did not, of itself, imply a relinquishment, by the railroad company, of its right to enter and remove the piers, etc. Wagner v. Cleveland etc. R. R. Co., 10 R. 770.

18. Compensation to land-owner. —Where a railroad company takes land belonging to a private person without tendering compensation, the owner is not confined to the statutory remedy for the assessment of damages, but can maintain ejectment against the company. Dankels v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 490.

Under a state constitution not in terms requiring payment as a condition precedent to an entry upon private property sought to be acquired for public uses, a railroad corporation, authorized by the legislature, may enter upon private property necessary to its uses, without such preliminary payment, provided the means of subsequently enforcing such payment have been provided by statute; and the right of way thus acquired cannot be affected by a constitutional provision, subsequently adopted, requiring repayment in such cases. Cairo etc. R. R. Co. v. Turner, 25 R. 564.

In such cases the land-owner is restricted to the statutory remedy for compensation, and cannot maintain ejectment. Ib.

It is no objection to a claim for damages occasioned by the erection of an embankment by a railroad corporation in altering the grade of a highway that the sectionmen neither authorized nor directed the making of the embankment. Parker v. Boston & M. R. R., 50 D. 709.

Compensation for incidental damage caused to land with buildings thereon by the construction of a railroad near to, but not crossing, the land, may be recovered where the damage is actual and real, and capable of being pointed out, described, and appreciated; a railroad corporation is therefore liable for impairing and cutting off access to such land by the construction of an embankment in front of the same, and for draining a well on the land by an excavation near thereto. Ib.

Damages for injuring a private way by the construction of a railroad across the same, may be recovered. Ib.

Bridges and lateral embankments constructed by a railroad for the purpose of raising a common road over its track, crossing such road, are as much a part of its structure authorized by its charter, as the railroad itself; and a person damnified thereby may recover damages. Ib.

A railroad corporation can not object that bridges and embankments erected by it for the purpose of carrying a highway over its road were made without authority, because preliminary steps had not been had, and thus defeat a claim for damages caused thereby. Ib.

A railway company constructed its road through a navigable lake, thereby cutting off the riparian owners from access to the lake, and leaving in front of their land a pool of stagnant water. Held, that they were entitled to damages. Delaplaine v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 24 R. 386.

A railroad company in constructing its road across a navigable lake occupied land which the riparian owner had made by filling in the lake in front of his land. Held, that he was not entitled to damages therefor. Diedrich v. Northwestern Union R'y Co., 24 R. 399.

In order to construct a telegraph line along its route for its own use, a railroad company may cut down trees standing on its way, without incurring any additional liability to the original owner of the land for compensation; and if such telegraph line is constructed by the railroad company and another for their joint use, the latter, and the latter alone, is liable to such land owner for the additional damage to the land by the use of the telegraph line. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rich, 27 R. 159.

In a proceeding for the condemnation of a right of way for a railroad across another railroad, no damages may be allowed on account of the statutory requirements to stop trains at such crossings, and the consequent impairment of the hauling capacity of the engines, such requirement being a police regulation subject to legislative repeal, and such damages being too vague and indefinite for computation. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Joliet etc. R. R. Co. 44 R. 799.

Owners of lots abutting upon streets only crossed by a railway are not entitled to damages for construction. Morgan v. Des Moines & St. L. R'y Co. 52 R. 462.

Where a railroad company has constructed and is operating its road through land of another, without having instituted condemnation proceedings or acquired title, the owner of the land may elect to sue for damages. Where a railroad grade has been constructed and abandoned, and another company takes possession and appropriates it, the owner of the land is entitled to recover the value of the land taken, as enhanced by such grade. Where a railroad company takes possession of land and constructs a track on it with the consent of the person in possession, under claim and color of title, and the paramount owner afterward sues for damages, the railroad company cannot be compelled to pay for improvements made by itself. Cohen v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 242.

19. Occupying city streets. — A railroad company may use a public street or highway when authorized by its charter, expressly or inferentially. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 94 D. 84.

The phrase "any land" in railroad charters has its common law and technical meaning, comprehending all structures upon it. Ib.

Where the charter of a railroad company expressly authorizes it to construct its road across a street, and imposes on it the burden of restoring the street to its former state, or in sufficient manner not to impair its usefulness, the company is not compelled to pay damages to a person who owns a lot lying adjacent to the track, unless it has done some injury to his property in performing the work. Nicholson v. New York etc. R. R. Co. 56 D. 390.

The owner of land used as a street may maintain trespass against a railroad company for injury caused to his property by the company's entering upon it and depositing materials thereon. So far as the company is justified in entering, in consequence of there being a highway there, it is not guilty of anything, but if it goes beyond its justification, then it is guilty of a direct trespass. If its justification fails, it is in the same condition as if it had entered upon a separate enclosure not subject to any public easement. Ib.

A city council cannot license a railroad company to injure private property by raising the grade of the street in front of it, and such a license will not defeat a recovery for the injury. Protzman v. Indianapolis etc. R. R. Co., 68 D. 650.

A railroad company may extend its track beyond the terminal depot, under the implied powers in its charter, for the accommodation of trains while discharging and loading, etc., where such extension is reasonable and necessary, and may appropriate private property therefor upon making compensation; and an extension of two hundred rods on an important road is not unreasonable. Ib.

Raising the grade of a street by a railroad company for the use of the track is not taking property of an abutter thereon so as to entitle him to pursue the statutory remedy for compensation, it seems, but his remedy is by an action for damages. Ib.

An agreement by a railroad company to locate a railroad through a city, and to cross a stream north of a certain street, requires the company to cross that stream where a northerly line from said street would intersect it. It is not necessary to cross in the city unless such line strikes the river within the city. New Albany & S. R. R. Co. v. McCormick, 71 D. 337.

While an incorporated town or city owning the fee of streets may rightfully authorize a railroad company to occupy its streets with a track, yet the railroad company is, under the organic law of the State, liable to the property-owners along the street for direct and physical damage resulting from the construction and operation of the railroad. Stone v. Fairbury etc. R. R. Co., 18 R. 556.

Where smoke and cinders are thrown from the engines of a railroad company upon plaintiff's property, adjoining a street through which the railroad runs, the company is liable therefor. Ib.

An abutting owner who does not own the soil of the street, cannot recover for any injury to his freehold resulting from the presence of a steam railway in the street, but only for damages resulting from such misconduct in its management as amounts to a nuisance, as leaving cars standing an unreasonable time, unnecessary noises and dangerous speed. Grand Rapids etc. R. Co. v. Heisel, 31 R. 306.

Where a street railway company unreasonably use a street in a city for storing and switching cars, to the special injury of an abutting land owner, the latter may maintain an action therefor against the company, although the fee of the street is in the city. Mahady v. Bushnick R. R. Co., 43 R. 661.

A railroad company, using a public street for a terminal yard, without having made compensation to the adjoining land-owners, and thereby causing a nuisance to neighboring dwellings, may be restrained by injunction, although such use is authorized by the legislature and is necessary to the business. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 56 R. 1.

The public authorities may authorize the construction and operation of a railway for passengers in a city street, without compensation to adjacent lot-owners, although the railway is operated by steam-motors, and is used also to transport passengers from its terminus in the city to a point eighteen miles outside the city. Newell v. Minneapolis etc. R'y Co., 59 R. 303.

Such a lot owner, the defendant being in possession of the street, may not raise the objection of ultra vires. Ib.

By the first section of a city ordinance a street railway company was authorized to build its road over and across certain streets of the city, provided, it should be built "on the grade of the city." By the second section the company was authorized to build a bridge across a river running through the city. Held, that the clause in the first section relative to grade did not prohibit the company from erecting suitable embankments, above grade, as approaches to the river; and that the company was not liable to a lot-owner for damages resulting from the erection of the embankment. Slatten v. Des Moines Valley R. R. Co., 4 R. 205.

20. Locating the route generally. — A railroad authorized to be built at one place, if built at other places, is a mere nuisance on every highway it touches in its illegal course. Com. v. Erie etc. R. R. Co., 67 D. 471.

A railroad corporation, as well as its directors, is chargeable with notice of the time, place, and manner of the location of its road. City of Aurora v. West, 85 D. 413.

A railroad company may locate its road and stations on such route and at such points as in its judgment will be beneficial to its own and the public interest, in the absence in its charter of any prescribed limit of approach towards buildings and bridges. Frankford T. Co. v. Philadelphia R. R. Co., 93 D. 708.

The exercise of discretion of a railroad company in location and construction of its road cannot be collaterally reviewed at the instance of a private individual, where the company is authorized to locate its road by the most direct and least expensive route, and the location and construction of the road has been completed; because the act of the company was not void. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 94 D. 84.

The commonwealth only can call a railroad company to account for a voidable act in locating and constructing its road, because other ground should have been taken, after the location and construction of the road has become complete under an authority to locate it by the most direct and least expensive route. Ib.

A railroad company cannot construct its road along the shore of tide water, below high-water mark, without a specific grant from the state. Stevens v. Paterson etc. R. R. Co., 3 R. 269.

The location of a railroad by a jury instead of by the company, under an act authorizing the company to locate the road, such location to be approved by the court of quarter sessions upon report of a jury after a view, is no ground of objection to the location, for the provision being for the benefit of the company it may waive it, or the jury may be regarded as its agent. Case of Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 36 D. 202.

An exception depending on a literal interpretation of a statute authorizing the location of a railroad is not to be favored. Ib.

The objection that the jurors were not sworn according to the general road law, under a special statute authorizing a view and report of the location of a railroad by a jury of six, is unavailing where the statute prescribes no oath. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

21. Changing the location or route.

— A railroad company having once located their road, under a charter that fixes merely a few points through which the road is to pass from its commencement to its terminus, leaving the location of the road between the points specified to the discretion of the corporation, has no right to change the location either upon the property of an individual or from one part of a street or highway to another. Little Miami R. R. Co. v. Naylor, 59 D. 667. But compare Mississippi & T. R. Co. v. Devaney, 2 R. 608.

A railroad company is liable for damage caused to a grocery and dwelling by a relocation of their road upon a public street so that the track lay near the premises, thereby depreciating their value. Little Miami R. R. Co. v. Naylor, 59 D. 667.

Under a statute authorizing railroad companies to take and hold "so much real estate as may be necessary for the location, construction, and convenient use of their road," they are not authorized, nor can they be compelled, to take and pay for a right of way which has been condemned, but which cannot be used for either of the purposes named in the statute. Gear v. Dubuque etc. R. R. Co., 89 D. 550.

A plan in accordance with which a right of way for a railroad across private land was condemned cannot be changed at the pleasure of the promoter. Lance's Appeal, 93 D. 722.

Where the Vermont Central Railroad Company acquired title to land in Vermont by warranty deeds in the usual form, which land they subsequently abandoned for railroad purposes, having changed the location of their road, — held, that the land did not revert by reason of such abandonment, but that the railroad company by said deeds acquired a title in fee to the same. Page v. Heineberg, 94 D. 378.

22. Proceedings to acquire title, generally.

— Where a land-owner agrees with a railroad company upon the compensation to be made for lands over which the road is laid, and permits the company to take possession of the land and construct their road thereon, it is too late for him to take advantage of the omission of the company to record the survey, as required by its charter. Troy & B. R. R. Co. v. Potter, 1 R. 325.

Where a railroad company entered upon land in good faith under the belief that it had title thereto, — held, that it was not a naked trespasser though the title was in fact in another; and that it was entitled to all legal protection to its improvements upon the premises given by the statute to the parties in possession under color of title, and that the rails and ties were not the property of the land-owner. Mississippi & T. R. R. Co. v. Devaney, 2 R. 608.

23. Assessment of damages for lands taken.

— In the appraisalment of damages for locating a railway on one's premises, every injury is included that the owner would suffer by the construction of the road in a reasonable manner, and its continuance with care and prudence. Waterman v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 73 D. 326.

An assessment of damages for land taken for a railroad does not cover damages occasioned to the owner by the diversion of a natural stream of water, although such diversion is necessary to the proper construction of the road-bed. Stodghill v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. 22 R. 211.

The damages paid to a land-owner by a railroad company, when it acquired, either by grant or condemnation, title of lands, do not cover any injury resulting from negligence or unskillfulness in constructing or operating the road. Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Salmon, 23 R. 214.

Where one railroad company seeks to acquire a right of way across the tracks of another, although it stipulates to construct and maintain all necessary frogs and crossings, yet the other may show and recover for injury to the value of the road and its capacity to do business. Chicago etc. Ind. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R'y Co. 56 R. 173.

Where a railroad company, without having acquired a right of way, enters upon land, and constructs its road thereon, and afterward proceeds in condemnation proceedings, the landowner is not entitled to have the value of the railroad placed on his land included in the damages in such proceedings. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Dickson, 56 R. 809.

24. Consequential damages.

— A "taking" of property for public use, within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition, refers to a taking of it altogether, and not to a mere consequential injury. Case of Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 36 D. 202.

In an action by the owner of land against a railroad company for damages in building their road, the jury may be properly instructed that they cannot compensate the plaintiff for risk of fire to his barn or its contents, nor hold the company responsible for anything that might be burned, nor for the risk of such burning. But if the proximity of the road to the building is such as to make danger from fire imminent, so that no man of common prudence would use it for the purpose of a barn, but would be driven from it and compelled to provide a barn elsewhere, then plaintiff is injured, and they must consider it in estimating the effect of the road upon the owner's property. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co. v. Stanger, 100 D. 574.

In estimating damages arising from building a railroad upon private property, a comparison of its value at the time that the road was projected, and its value at the time of its completion, should be made, and while the jury cannot compensate for risk from fire, still the effect which the proximity of the road to a barn would produce upon the market value of the property is a proper subject for compensation. Id. But the depreciation of value arising from the proximity of the road, and the running of trains should be considered only so far as is due to proximity, secured by means, and as a result of such taking. Walker v. Old Colony etc. R'y Co., 4 R. 509.

Injury from proximity of buildings, interruption to their ordinary use of the avenues of passage, inconvenience caused by embankments and cuts, and such matters, are proper subjects for consideration in estimating the depreciation of the value of the property as a whole. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co. v. Stauffer, 100 D. 574.

Every agency which works an injury or depreciates its value, recognized by the common law, should be taken into consideration, if they are the direct and immediate consequence of the construction of the road. Id.

The effects of noise, smoke, soot and the like, are not distinct elements of damage, but, in estimating the depreciation in value of the entire tract, these causes may be considered, in so far as the annoyance and inconvenience arising therefrom are increased by reason of, and as an incident to the taking of a part of the land. Walker v. Old Colony etc. R'y Co., 4 R. 509.

The turning of surface water upon land, by the embankment of a railroad, is a proper element in estimating the damage to the land-owner by the construction of a railroad. Id.

25. Deductions for benefits.—In awarding damages to the owner of lands taken the exposure of his remaining land and buildings to fire from the railroad engines may be taken into consideration, notwithstanding the company is by statute liable for any fire so caused; but the benefits which the owner in common with others derive from the railroad cannot be considered to reduce his damages. Adden v. White Mountains R. R. Co., 20 R. 220.

A railway was located through a farm, leaving land of the owner on each side. The company acquired the exclusive use of the land taken. Provision was made by the company for the owner's crossing the location, and for the drainage and flowage of his cranberry meadow thus cut off, he accepting and using the same with the mutual understanding that he had a right so to do. Held, that these facts could not be considered in reduction of the damages, the use of the privileges being merely submissive and subject to the paramount right of the corporation. Old Colony v. Miller, 28 R. 194.

2. Constructing the Road; and Liability for Defective Construction.

26. Duty of the company, generally.—A railroad company must construct its works with proper skill and care, and with due regard to the features of the ground over which its road passes. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Gilleland, 94 D. 97.

Prudence and care may require the company to keep open a ditch to prevent an accumulation of water on the land adjoining the track and owned by other parties, but it is a question of fact, and not of law. Waterman v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 73 D. 326.

A railroad company is not authorized to use a right of way taken under the right of eminent domain for any other independent purpose than that for which it is taken. Lance's Appeal, 93 D. 722.

Where work shall begin upon a railroad lies wholly in the discretion of the managers of the company where it has a lawful right to extend its road from a given point in one state to a certain point in another state. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 94 D. 84.

A railroad company, aided in the construction of its road by taxation of a township at one terminus of its proposed route, may be compelled to construct, maintain and operate its road to that point, and on a foreclosure sale of the road and the company's franchise, the purchaser incurs the same obligation. State v. Central Iowa R'y Co., 60 R. 806.

27. Liability for damage or injury caused by defects.*—1. In general.—A railroad corporation has right to construct its road in any suitable and proper manner for its own convenience and the public accommodation, and the right to vary and change that construction within the established limits of its road from time to time forever. Johnson v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 560.

A land-owner can maintain no action against the company for any loss or injury which results from building its road in a suitable and proper manner. Id.

The corporation is liable for all damages resulting from improper and unsuitable construction of its road over the lands of another. Id.

A railroad is bound to keep the road in repair, so that persons and property may at all proper times pass over it in safety, and is liable for injuries for neglect of this duty. Cumberland Valley R. R. Co. v. Hughes, 51 D. 513.

A company is liable for injury caused by making excavation on its own land so near to the land of an adjoining owner that the soil of the latter, without any artificial weight imposed upon it, slides into such excavation. Richardson v. Vermont Central R. R. Co., 60 D. 283.

Affecting land injuriously by the construction of a railroad is not a taking of it for public use within the purview of the constitution of Vermont; and a railroad company which constructs its road in a prudent and reasonable manner is not liable to individuals for consequential damages to their premises caused by the building of an embankment upon an adjoining public highway which such railroad crosses. Ib.

The company is liable for the manner of constructing an embankment, if the mode of construction is fairly within the charter powers of the company. Jones v. Western Vermont R. R. Co., 65 D. 206.

Consent to suffer land to be overflowed in consequence of building a railroad embankment is not a waiver to the right to damages for defective construction. Ib.

Negligence or carelessness of the company in executing work on their road is a tort for which an action at law will lie. The fact that it is not liable for the necessary consequences of the location and proper construction of its road, except so far as it is made liable by its charter, does not justify unskillfulness and unnecessary injury in the mode of performing the work, or in the character of the structures erected. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Gilleland, 94 D. 97.

A railroad company in constructing its road and works is bound to bring to their execution the engineering knowledge and skill ordinarily known and practiced in such works. Ib.

The corporation is not exempted from liability for injuries caused to public or private rights by the manner in which it has constructed or maintained its road, by a statute which "ratifies and confirms" the "location" of the railroad, and the "railroad" as "actually laid out and constructed." Solem v. Eastern R. R. Co. 96 D. 650.

2. Liability for negligence of contractors. — A railroad company is liable for the negligent acts of contractors engaged in constructing its road. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 71 D. 285. So held, where a railroad corporation contracted with other parties to build part of its road, and while they were blasting rocks a fragment struck plaintiff, injuring him. Stone v. C. R. R. Co. 51 D. 192.

The liability of the company and of their agents for injuries committed by their agents upon the road exists during the time of construction of the road, under the Michigan statute requiring every railroad corporation formed under it to "erect and maintain fences on the sides of their road," and does not for the first time attach when the road is operated. Gardner v. Smith, 74 D. 722.

A contractor for construction of the road is an agent of the company, within the letter and spirit of the above act, who, by assuming control of a section of road, assumes also the liability imposed by law upon the company. Ib.

A railway company is not liable for damages resulting from negligence in the management of one of its trains, while being used and governed by contractors in the construction of a portion of its road under a contract with the company. Cunningham v. International R. R. Co., 32 R. 632.

A railroad company employed a contractor to construct, "under the general supervision of the chief engineer of the company," a portion of its road; and the sub-contractors and their employees committed various trespasses and injuries on the lands of plaintiffs. Held, that the company, not having directed the acts complained of, nor having any control over the persons who committed them, and the injuries not being the natural result of the work contracted to be done, plaintiff could not recover of the company; notwithstanding the statutes provided that the company should be liable "for trespasses and injuries to lands and buildings adjoining, or in the vicinity of its roads, committed by a person in its employ or occasioned by its order." The statutory provision does not embrace the acts of contractors. Eaton v. European, etc. R'y Co., 8 R. 430.

A railroad company let by contract the entire work of constructing its road. The contractor sublet a part of the work. Through the negligence of men employed by the sub-contractor in performing the work, stones and rocks were thrown by a blast upon plaintiff's adjoining property, injuring it. Held, that the railroad company was not liable therefor. McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil etc. R. R. Co., 19 R. 267.

3. Interference with watercourses, drains, wells, etc. — A railroad corporation has a right to construct its road in a suitable and proper manner, whatever may be the injury to the residue of the lands of same owner; but the mere purchase of the fee-simple does not authorize it to flow water upon lands above its road and on a stream, although its rights in this respect are more extensive than it would have as an owner against the party whose lands have been taken for the road. Johnson v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co. 69 D. 560.

In all ordinary cases, a railroad company in building its road has no right to obstruct a natural watercourse, and must construct a culvert or drain, with a proper grade, to carry off the water. Ib.

In cases of necessity, the company in building its road in a suitable and proper manner may wholly obstruct a natural watercourse, and submerge lands of the owner other than those taken for the track, without being answerable for any damage resulting from that cause; for it will be regarded as having acquired the right to flow such lands. Ib.

A railroad company excavating for purposes of its road-bed within the limits of its right of way, is not liable for the draining of the well of an adjacent owner caused thereby. New Albany etc. R. R. Co. v. Peterson, 77 D. 60.

The company is not liable for making erections in running streams, where they are guilty of no want of proper care and skill, unless they directly affect the riparian owners. Henry v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 73 D. 329.

The company is liable for making erections in a running stream, where the riparian owner above is injured by the rise or flowing back of water, occasioned by such erections below him. This is a direct injury, and the company must guard against it. Ib.

The company is not liable for making necessary erections in a running stream, although a riparian proprietor's land below has been gradually washed away by a change in the course of the current of the stream; and it makes no difference whether such erections have been made in a careless and unskillful manner or not. The injury is merely consequential, and one of those remote consequences which the law will not make the basis of action. Ib.

Where a railway embankment obstructs and turns the surface water on to the land of an adjacent owner, through whose premises the railway goes, the owner may recover damages therefor, although he has received compensation for the taking of the land for the right of way. Drake v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 50 R. 746.

A railroad company obstructing the ditches and drains of a plantation and causing an overflow by its embankment is liable for the consequent loss of crops. Payne v. Morgan etc. S. S. Co. 58 R. 171.

28. Enjoining construction.—Where land has been conveyed in fee to a city in trust for the purposes of a street, abutting owners may enjoin the construction of a steam railway in such street, when it would be materially injurious to their adjoining premises, until the right has been acquired by condemnation proceedings. Railway Co. v. Lawrence, 43 R. 419.

A public street in a town ran through the yard of a railroad company. The town authorities granted to a street car company the right to lay and operate their track through that street. Held, that the street car company should not be enjoined from laying and using their track through the street in the yard. Texas & P. R'y Co. v. Rosedale Street R'y Co., 53 R. 739.

29. Switches and side-tracks.—The power to construct a railroad includes authority to make switches and side-tracks, although not expressed, because they are essential to the use of the road. Cleveland & P. R. R. Co. v. Speer, 94 D. 84.

The spot where switches should be placed lies in the absolute discretion of the company, and cannot be readjudged by a private citizen, where the right to side-tracks for standing room, or to pass from the main track to the shops or yards of the company, is clearly given. Ib.

An action cannot be maintained by a citizen for injury to his property from noise, smoke, and stench of locomotives and trains, arising from the location of railroad switches and side tracks near his house. Ib.

30. Interpretation of contracts for railroad construction.—Contracts for construction of railroads and canals made between parties engaged in such undertakings, although they contain provisions more stringent, arbitrary, and penal than those that usually characterize contracts between individuals, will be sustained and enforced, where there is no evidence of any fraud or imposition in their procurement. Faunce v. Burke, 55 D. 519.

Where, in a contract between a principal contractor and a subcontractor for the construction of a railroad, it is stipulated that the work shall be subject to the supervision and control of the engineer of the railroad company, and that the estimates made by him as to the quantity, character, and value of the work done shall be conclusive between the parties, the engineer thereby becomes the agent of both parties to make the estimates, and the estimates made by him will be final, in the absence of fraud, or of such gross mistake as amounts to fraud. The term "value" in such contract is to be distinguished from the term "price" as applied to the quantity of any of the different classes of work mentioned therein, and the engineer in making the estimate may deduct from the quantity of work done what will equalize the part taken out as to quality and value with the whole work. Ib.

A stipulation of forfeiture of twenty per cent. of the price to be paid for work in a contract for the construction of a section of a railroad, under the adjudication of a competent engineer, is no more than a reasonable provision for securing the progress of the work, and a limited indemnity to the person with whom the contract is made, to enable him to employ others to complete the unfinished work. The sum so stipulated is not a mere penalty, but the measure of reparation for failure to perform the contract. Ib.

A railroad company let certain work to a contractor, furnishing him with a construction train with an engineer to run it. Except in respect to speed and side-tracking for other trains, the train was under the control of the contractor. The company was bound to discharge the engineer on the contractor's complaint; otherwise the company controlled him; and it paid his wages, but deducted them from the amount due the contractor. Held, that the engineer was the servant of the company. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Norwood, 52 R. 191.

2. Fences, Crossings, Culverts, and Cattle-guards.

31. Fences. 1. *Validity of the statutes.—A railroad company is subject to reasonable police regulations, and in pursuance thereof, the legislature has power to require it to fence its road, and to erect and maintain cattle-guards at crossings, or to respond in damages to all injuries arising from a failure so to do; and this, though no such power is reserved to the state in the charter. Gorman v. Pacific R. R., 72 D. 220.

A statute regulating fencing of railroads and holding companies liable for injury to animals, caused by want of such fences, is a police regulation for the protection and safety of passengers, rather than for the protection of the owners of animals, and therefore the legislature possesses the power to prescribe such a regulation, either at the formation of the company, or after the charter has been granted and the road built, and though such charter is not amendable. New Albany etc. R. R. Co. v. Tilton, 74 D. 195; Winona etc. R. R. Co. v. Waldron, 88 D. 100.

A railroad company not required by its charter to make or rebuild fences along its track, was afterward, by a statute, directed to repair fences along its line "destroyed by fire caused by the running of trains or by the employees of the road." Held, a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Riblet, 5 R. 360.

2. And how construed.—An act of the legislature which provides a forfeiture of one hundred dollars by all railroads neglecting to erect and maintain certain fences along their line of road, being a remedial act passed for the protection of property peculiarly exposed by the introduction of railroads, applies to corporations existing before its passage. Norris v. Androscooggin R. R. Co., 63 D. 621; Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 20 R. 698.

In Indiana railroad companies are required by statute to fence their roads, and the law so providing is construed as a police regulation for the safety of the public; and therefore the fact that a railroad runs alongside of a public highway would seem to require peculiar care on the part of the company in complying with the law. Indiana etc. R. R. Co. v. Guard, 87 D. 327.

* Validity of statutes requiring fencing in of railroads, see note, 34 R. 115, 116.

The "suitable" fences which railroad corporations are required to erect and maintain on both sides of their roads, by Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 63, sec. 43, need not necessarily be such fences as are required to be maintained by adjoining owners of land, under Gen. Stat., ch. 25, sec. 1. Eames v. Salem & L. R. R. Co., 96 D. 676.

Under a statute requiring, under certain penalties, railroads to "erect and maintain fences on the sides of their road," a company is liable for neglecting to fence a road which it does not own, but over which its runs its cars in company with an association of railroad companies who use and maintain the road for their joint benefit. Statutes of this character should be liberally construed. Tracy v. Troy & B. R. R. Co., 98 D. 54.

Where a statute requires a railroad company to fence its track, a lessee of a road is bound to erect and maintain such fences. Id.

Under the statute, a railroad company must erect and maintain fences along the sides of its track, and proper cattle-guards, or be liable to any injury which its failure so to do occasions to stock. If it does so comply with the statute, it will be liable only for negligence. Id.

3. *The obligation to fence.—A provision in a charter of a railroad company requiring it to fence its track is for the benefit of the adjoining land-owners only, and merely places the company in the position of a proprietor, who is bound by contract or prescription to build the fences between himself and an adjoining proprietor. Jackson v. R. & B. R. R. Co. 60 D. 246.

The statutory obligation of a railroad company to erect and maintain a fence on each side of its track binds them to erect and maintain fences only as against cattle and other stock rightfully running upon the adjoining lands. Chapin v. Sullivan R. R. 75 D. 207.

Fences along a railroad track are for the benefit of adjoining land-owners, to prevent their cattle from escaping to the track and there getting killed, and to protect their crops from cattle rightfully on the railroad track. Id.

The company is not bound to maintain fences against cattle trespassing either upon lands adjoining their roads or upon their own track. Id.

A railroad company is not bound to keep a patrol at night along its road to see that the fence is not broken down. If the company uses all reasonable diligence to keep up a good and sufficient fence, it is not guilty of negligence in that particular. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 79 D. 394.

It is the duty of a railroad company, both as to adjoining proprietors and as to third parties, to properly fence its road, erect gates at private crossings, and to keep the same in repair. But when the road is properly fenced, and the company uses the necessary care in keeping it up and in good condition, and it is thrown or left down or open by the act of a third person, without the company's fault, he, and not the company, is liable for injury to stock getting on the track because of such fault or act. Russell v. Hanley, 89 D. 535.

The obligation only extends to the owner or rightful occupier of the adjoining fields, and not to mere trespassers there. Bemis v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 1 R. 339.

The obligation to fence attaches from the time when the necessity for protection to owners of land and stock arises, allowing a reasonable time to erect fences. Silver v. Kansas City, etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 118.

A railroad company is not relieved from the duty of fencing and making cattle-guards at a wagon-crossing by the facts that it is in the company's yard in a city and it would be difficult to do so. Greeley v. St. Paul etc. R'y Co., 53 R. 16.

4. Liability for neglect to build or repair fences. — When a railroad company neglects to maintain proper fences and erect cattle-guards along the line of their road, as a matter of law there is that neglect which will render the corporation liable for injuries arising solely from that cause. Norris v. Androscoggin R. R. Co., 63 D. 621.

Where a railroad is required to inclose its road by a good and sufficient fence where it passes through improved lands, and it neglects to do so, and horses and other animals, in consequence of this omission, stray upon the track and are killed or injured by the engine or appendages, the company is liable in damages. This, although the engineer exercised due care. Id.

A railroad company bound to keep fences along its road in repair, after a portion of the same has been down for several days, is presumed to have had notice of the fact. Id.

The fact that plaintiff, in an action against the company, for injuries to his horse occasioned by their fence being out of repair, originally built the fence for them in an imperfect manner does not excuse them from liability. Id.

A railroad company is liable for injuries occasioned by failure to erect and maintain substantial, legal, and sufficient fences on each side of the land taken by them for their railroad, where the same passes through inclosed and improved lands, if this is a duty imposed upon them by their charter. Whitney v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 103.

The question of care and diligence on the part of a railroad company does not arise in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained through omission of a railroad company to fence its road, where the existing statute requires that the company must fence its road and maintain cattle-guards, or be liable for all damage arising from an omission so to do. In such case, if the road be not fenced as required by law, it matters not that the corporation exercised the highest care. Gorman v. Pacific R. R., 72 D. 220.

Under the Indiana statute, a railroad company is liable, irrespective of negligence, for injuries to animals, but not to persons, where the road might be but is not fenced; but where the proper fence is maintained, it is not answerable for animals injured, except as at common law, where there is negligence on its part and the negligence of the owner of the stock does not contribute to its immediate injury. Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409.

A railroad company failing to fence its track as required by law, or erecting an insufficient fence, or failing to maintain a fence, is liable for all damages resulting from such omission of duty, and this without any reference to the manner in which its engines may have been controlled. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. Linder, 89 D. 319.

Where a railroad company is not bound to fence, but the duty rests upon others, the company will not be liable for injuries by its trains to stock straying along the track, unless the injury is imputable to its gross negligence. Id.

A railroad company must maintain as well as erect fences required by the statute, and its liability is absolute for damages resulting from its failure to do so. But if the fence was suddenly destroyed by some accident against which it would be impossible for the company to provide, it may be that the company would not be subject to the absolute liability of the statute if immediate steps were taken to rebuild. Brown v. Milwaukee etc. R'y Co., 91 D. 456.

In an action against a railroad company for damages occasioned by its fence being out of repair, evidence that its condition was defective two months before the time in question is admissible to show that its condition was or ought to have been known to the company. Id.

A railroad neglecting to fence its road is liable to the owner of adjoining lands for injury to his cattle on the track, although he turned them out to graze, knowing of that neglect. Cressey v. Northern R. R., 47 R. 227.

A railroad, neglecting to maintain a proper fence, is liable to the owner of adjoining lands for his horse, escaping through a defect in a fence and killed by a train, although the owner knew of the defect, and that the horse was breachy, and there was no negligence in running the train. Congdon v. Central Vt. R. R. Co., 48 R. 793.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The neglect of a railway company to fence its road may be considered by the jury in an action for an injury to a child straying upon the track. Keyser v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 56 R. 405.

Where a statute makes it the duty of railroad companies to fence their roads, and to keep their fences in repair, and also declares that such companies shall be liable for all injuries to animals arising from a neglect to perform this duty, — held, 1. That where such fences get out of repair, through some accident or event beyond the control of the company, and repairs are made with reasonable diligence, the company will not be liable for injuries to animals straying upon the track, notwithstanding the statute makes the liability absolute; 2. That in such cases, reasonable diligence in making repairs is a high degree of diligence, exceeding that which men in general exercise in their own affairs. Antisdel v. Chicago etc. R'y Co. 7 R. 44.

5. When the road need not be fenced. — A railroad company is not negligent in not fencing its line where it runs through common, vacant, or unenclosed lands. Perkins v. Eastern R. R. Co. 50 D. 589.

A railroad company is not bound to fence its road. Railroad Co. v. Skinner, 57 D. 654. Nor, on the other hand, is the owner of cattle compelled to prevent them from running at large. Chicago & Miss. R. R. Co. v. Patchin, 61 D. 65. But when the company leaves its road open and unfenced, they take the risk, without any remedy against the owner, of intrusions from animals running at large, as do other proprietors who leave their lands uninclosed; and the owner of the animals, in allowing them to run at large, takes the risk of the loss or injury to them by unavoidable accident. Kernohacker v. Cleveland etc. R. R. Co. 62 D. 246.

The grantor of a right of way to a railroad company through his property is not bound to fence the same, nor is the company under legal obligation to do so. Louisville & Frankfort R. R. Co. v. Milton, 58 D. 647.

The grantor of a right of way to a railroad company who permits his stock to run upon the road does so at his own risk, unless he retains the right to continue the use of that portion of the property as a pasture. Id.

The right of the company to land upon which their road is built is an absolute ownership in fee for railroad purposes. If it be allowable to graze cattle on such land, it is not a matter of right, but at most an immunity, not a privilege. Chicago & Miss. R. R. Co. v. Patchin, 61 D. 65.

A railroad company is under no greater obligation to fence its road than is any other proprietor of land, but if the road be not fenced, that fact should be considered in estimating the degree of care to be exercised by the company. Gorman v. Pacific R. R., 72 D. 220.

One whose cattle stray upon a railway, where they are run over by a train, which is damaged by the collision, is liable to the railway company therefor if he was negligent in his care of the cattle, but not otherwise. Annapolis and E. R. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 45 R. 711.

A railroad corporation has no right to fence its tracks in cities and towns where it is intersected by streets and alleys. Blanford v. Minneapolis etc. R'y Co., 60 R. 795.

A railroad fireman was killed by collision of the engine with a steer straying on the track. The railway company owned the right of way in fee simple; the owner of the steer owned the land adjoining on both sides; the railway was unfenced, and the owner of the steer was in the habit of turning his cattle loose on his land. There was no statutory duty to fence. Held, that there was no cause of action against the owner of the steer. Sherman v. Anderson, 41 R. 414.

6. Agreements to fence. — An agreement must be performed in a reasonable time, if no time is mentioned, where a railroad company agrees to fence its road through one's land. Lawton v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 54 D. 753.

Performance after action commenced of an agreement by a railroad company to fence its road through the plaintiff's land in adjustment of damages for the right of way, if such performance was without the plaintiff's consent, does not affect his right to recover damages for not fencing in a reasonable time. Id.

The measure of damages against the company for not fencing its road through the plaintiff's land in accordance with its agreement, in settling for the right of way, is such sum as it would fairly cost to make the fences as agreed, notwithstanding the erection of fences after the action was commenced, without the plaintiff's consent. Id.

The burden of proving an averment that there was no contract on the part of the plaintiff to fence the track, is not upon the plaintiff, but the defendant must disprove it, in an action against a railroad company for killing an animal on its track, brought under a statute which requires the company to fence its road where it runs through inclosed lands, except where the company has a contract with the proprietor of the lands that he shall fence the road. Great Western R. R. Co. v. Bacon, 83 D. 199.

32. Crossings. — Railroad companies may constitutionally be required to build and maintain highway crossings, although such liability is imposed by statute enacted subsequent to the chartering of such companies. Portland etc. R. R. Co. v. Inhab. of Deering, 57 R. 784; Illinois Cen. R. R. Co. v. Willenborg, 57 R. 862.

A railroad company whose road runs along and across a highway over which large droves of cattle are accustomed to travel is bound to take notice of the fact, and govern itself accordingly. When cattle are seen, or might have been seen, scattered for half a mile along such highway, just before a crossing which the train approaches round a curve, such crossing should be approached at a moderated and manageable rate of speed. Reeves v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co. 72 D. 713.

A drover of a large herd of cattle, about to cross a railroad track along which a railroad train is momentarily expected to run, must use reasonable care. In determining whether to attempt to cross the track with his herd before the arrival of the train, or to hold them until the train had passed, he should regulate his conduct by whatever a prudent man in general would do, or forbear to do, in similar circumstances. In deciding this question, he has a right to expect that the railroad company will also exercise reasonable care. Ib.

Such drover is not required, nor has he any right, to go upon the track and signal the approaching train. Ib.

Where cattle have escaped from an owner's enclosure and are crossing a railway at a highway crossing, and the engine-driver sees them but does not stop or slacken speed, but runs upon and kills one of them, this is gross negligence for which the railway company is liable. Chicago and A. R. R. Co. v. Kellam, 34 R. 128.

In an action against a railway company for an injury to a horse at a defective highway crossing, evidence of former similar accidents at the same place is inadmissible; and so of evidence that after the accident the company repaired the defect. Hudson v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 44 R. 692.

A railroad company is liable, for negligent construction of a highway crossing, to a traveller on the highway injured thereby. Mann v. Central Vt. R. R. Co., 45 R. 628.

It is not necessarily negligent in a railroad company to sound a locomotive whistle at a point where the railroad crosses a highway by a bridge overhead, although the crossing is known to be one of extraordinary danger, and the sounding of a whistle causes a horse to run away. Cincinnati etc. R'y Co. v. Gaines, 54 R. 334.

When a railroad company has long, constantly and notoriously permitted the public to cross its track at a place not in a highway, it is bound to use reasonable care towards persons so crossing, and to give notice and warning to them, and what constitutes reasonable care is a question of fact. Byrne v.

New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 58 R. 512; Barry v. New York Central etc. R. R. Co., 44 R. 377.

No rule of law requires a railroad company to keep a flagman at a street or road crossing to give notice of the approach of trains, and the omission to do so is not negligence, unless the company, by an established and hitherto uniform practice of that kind, have given ground for expectation that such warning would be given. Ernst v. Hudson R. R. Co. 100 D. 405; Welch v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 37 R. 440.

Where a railroad company has been accustomed to keep a flagman at a crossing, the fact of his absence or withdrawal does not excuse a traveller from a charge of negligence in omitting the use of his senses. He has no right to interpret the absence as an assurance of safety. McGrath v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 17 R. 359.

Accordingly—held, in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by a traveller at a crossing, that the receipt of evidence of such custom, and that the flagman was absent at the time of the accident, as a circumstance bearing on the question of plaintiff's negligence, was error. Ib.

The omission of a railroad company to maintain a flagman at a highway crossing may be considered on the question of its negligence, in an action for an injury to a traveller, driving on the highway, caused by the sudden escape of steam from a locomotive. Hart v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 41 R. 93.

In an action for personal injury sustained by a traveller upon a city street by collision with a railway train at a crossing, evidence of the absence of the flagman customarily stationed there to the plaintiff's knowledge is competent. Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co. v. Yundt, 41 R. 580.

In an action against a railroad company for an accident at a crossing, it is error to leave it to the jury to determine whether the omission to have a flagman at the point was negligent. Houghkirk v. Delaware etc. Co., 44 R. 370.

The obstruction of a public crossing over a railroad is a nuisance; and the company is liable for all the consequences that may ensue from leaving a crossing obstructed by a train of cars. Murray v. S. C. R. R. Co., 70 D. 219.

A railway company constructing its road over or across a public highway must, if possible, in so doing cause no inconvenience to the public; but where this cannot be done, the work must be performed with the least possible inconvenience. If a bridge or substituted road be necessary to prevent an obstruction of the highway, the company must build it within a reasonable time, and cannot delay until its road is completed. And this is the rule whether the obstruction of the highway be expressly prohibited in the charter or not. L. & N. E. R. Co. v. State, 75 D. 778.

A railroad charter empowered the company to lay its track across any public highway or street, if necessary, on condition that it should put such highway or street "in such condition and state of repair as not to impair nor interfere with its free and proper use." Held, that this was a continuing duty, and that although a crossing might have been adequate when constructed, yet if by reason of increase of business of the railroad or travel on the street it became dangerous or seriously obstructed travel on the street, the company was bound to provide some other mode of crossing, as by carrying the street over or under the track. State v. St. Paul etc. Co., 59 R. 313.

33. Culverts. — A railroad company is liable in damages for so unskillfully and negligently constructing a culvert as to be insufficient to vent the ordinary high water of the stream under it. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Gilleland, 94 D. 97.

Where the original proprietors of the railroad company so constructed a culvert that a nuisance was thereby created, the subsequent owners of the road would be responsible for its continuance after notice. Id.

The company is not liable for so constructing a culvert that it will not pass extraordinary floods. Id.

Three floods happened in quick succession, and damage resulted in each from the insufficiency of a railroad culvert to vent them; and the jury were instructed: "But even if the first flood were an extraordinary one, it will be for you to determine whether the defendants ought or ought not, after the first, or first and second floods, to alter their culvert by enlarging its cavity. Considering the frequency of these floods, was it or was it not negligence in them not to do so, after such repeated instances and positive notices, coupled with the request testified to," etc. Held, to be error. The jury should not be left to understand, as possibly they might from such instruction, that they could find a liability for extraordinary floods because of their recurrence in rapid succession. Id.

A railroad company, having acquired a right of way, and found it necessary to raise its track above the natural surface of the land, is not bound to provide culverts or other means for the passage through the embankment of surface-water or water overflowing from a river and descending in that direction from or over the lands of the adjoining owner. Cairo and V. R. R. Co. v. Stevens, 38 R. 139. Compare Little Rock etc. R'y Co. v. Chapman, 43 R. 280; Louisville and N. R. R. Co. v. Hays, 47 R. 291.

A railway company, in the construction of its road, is not liable in damages for filling up an artificial ditch by which surface-water was drained from lands of an adjacent owner into a river. O'Connor v. Fond Du Lac etc. R. R. Co., 38 R. 753.

A railroad is not liable to a landowner for an injury by an overflow of surface water occasioned by the road-bed skillfully constructed. Abbott v. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co., 53 R. 581.

34. Cattle-guards. — The legislature may, under the police power, require existing railroads to erect and maintain cattle-guards at all crossings, and fences on the lines of their roads, under penalty of paying all damage caused by their neglect to comply with such requirements. Thorpe v. Rutland etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 625; Trow v. Vermont Central R. R. Co., 58 D. 191.

The care and diligence required of a railroad corporation in constructing fences and cattle-guards depend upon the locality of the road and the place through which it passes. Trow v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 58 D. 191.

Neglect to construct fences and cattle-guards renders the corporation liable for injuries arising solely from that cause, when the omission was for a considerable distance in a place so public and common that it must know and reasonably expect that without such precautions injuries to horses and cattle will naturally and frequently arise. Id.

A railroad company being bound to transport passengers safely must exclude cattle from their track. Whether to do this by fencing, by mounted police, or by cattle-guards is for them to determine. If they do not exclude this risk, they are responsible in damages to a passenger who is injured because of their failure to do so. Sullivan v. Phila. etc. R. R. Co. 72 D. 698.

Railroad companies must construct and maintain cattle-guards at farm-crossings; and are liable for injuries to stock rightfully at such crossings, but occasioned in consequence of the companies' neglect to maintain such guards. Chapin v. Sullivan R. R., 75 D. 237.

It is the duty of a railroad company to keep its cattle-guards open. Dunnigan v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 86 D. 741. But see Blais v. Minneapolis etc. R. R. Co., 57 R. 36.

A railroad company is guilty of negligence in permitting its cattle-guards to remain filled with snow, so that cattle, which have escaped upon a highway without their owner's negligence, may pass on to the track and be liable to be killed. If any injury is thereby sustained, the company is liable for the damages, and the jury may be so instructed. Dunnigan v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 86 D. 741.

A statute requiring railroad companies to maintain cattle-guards at road crossings, applies as well to streets which are crossed by railroads in villages as to country highways; and the fact that a crossing is near a depot, and that a guard there would inconvenience the company, does not relieve them from the necessity of erecting it. Tracy v. Troy & B. R. R. Co., 98 D. 54.

III. RIGHTS, POWERS, AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS, AGENTS, AND SERVANTS.

35. The president.—The establishment and posting by the president of the corporation of tariffs of freights and fares, and the receipt and appropriation by the corporation of fares taken on such tariff, without objection, raises the legal presumption that the president acted by authority of the corporation in thus fixing and posting such tariffs. Hilkard v. Gould, 66 D. 765.

36. Directors.—The board of directors of a railroad company are its immediate representatives, and occupy the relation of master to the various employees engaged in operating the road and superintending and performing the business of the company in its various departments. Columbus & I. C. Ry Co. v. Arnold, 99 D. 615.

Rates of fare need not be fixed by the board of directors, and appear on the record of their proceedings. Agents other than the directors may be empowered to regulate such matters. Jeffersonville R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 92 D. 276.

37. Superintendents.—The superintendent of a railroad company, clothed with the power and authority of board of directors, in regard to the management of trains and all arrangements connected therewith, is the immediate representative and corporate executive officer; and his negligent or improper order, which causes an injury, renders the company liable as much as if it had emanated directly from the company's act in its corporate capacity. Washburn v. N. & C. R. R. Co., 75 D. 784.

A railroad division superintendent has no implied authority from the company to employ surgical aid for passengers injured in an accident. Union Pacific Ry Co. v. Beatty, 87 R. 160.

The superintendent of a railroad depot has not a right to order a person to leave the depot, and not to come there any more, and to remove him with force if he does come, merely because he has violated some supposed regulation of the company, in the opinion of the superintendent, or has conducted himself offensively to such superintendent. Hall v. Power, 46 D. 698.

Evidence of a former violation of other regulations of the corporation, by a person put out of a depot by force for a supposed violation of a certain regulation, is not admissible in an action of assault and battery by the person so put out against the superintendent of such depot. Id.

A railroad company itself or its superintendent has no right to fix an obstruction in its track. The track is a public highway, constructed for travel and transportation, and any use of it for other purposes is unlawful. Railroad v. Norton, 64 D. 672.

It is within scope of authority of a general superintendent of railroad to bind the company, on his consent implied, for the payment of expenses incurred on account of injuries received by the company's employees. Toledo R. R. Co. v. Rodriguez, 95 D. 484.

An employee of a railroad company was injured while in the discharge of his duty, and the station agent, as such, procured a nurse and medical attendants, promising that the company would pay such expenses. He then wrote to the general superintendent stating the facts. Held, that it must be presumed that the letter was received, and in the absence of any answer thereto, that the superintendent consented on the part of the company to assume the liabilities of the station agent. Id.

38. Station agents.—A railway station agent has implied authority to contract to furnish cars for the shipment of perishable property by a specified day. Wood v. Chicago & S. P. R. Co., 56 R. 861; Harrison v. Missouri Pacific Railway Co., 41 R. 318.

A station agent of a railroad corporation has not authority to bind such corporation as common carriers beyond the line of its own road, by signing receipts furnished in blank by a shipper, and by the terms of which the corporation undertakes to forward and deliver the goods to the order of the consignee at points on a connecting line, where it appears that such agent acted without special authority, and without the knowledge of the corporation, and that the officers of such corporation had furnished such agent with blank forms of receipts, to be given for goods shipped beyond their own line, by which it was provided, that, in case of loss or damage of the goods, the corporation only should be responsible in whose actual custody the goods should be at the time. Burroughs v. Norwich etc. R. R. Co., 1 R. 78.

39. Conductors.*—Where the conductor is the sole representative of the company so far as his train is concerned, it is his duty, as the conductor of such train, to use ordinary and reasonable skill and diligence, not simply in the management of the train, but also in supervising the due inspection of the cars, machinery, and apparatus, as to their sufficiency and safety, while under his charge; and on the discovery of any defect or insufficiency, to notify the company, and to take the proper precautions to guard against danger therefrom. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

* Liability of company for acts of conductor and agent, see note, 69 R. 601-604.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The company is liable to a passenger for failure to transport him within the agreed time, attributable to a faulty act of the conductor within the scope of his authority, whether such act was willful or merely negligent. Weed v. Panama R. R. Co., 72 D. 474.

A conductor of a train of cars on a railroad belonging to the state has the right to direct all the movements of the train; and the engineers, teamsters, and other means employed, whether the motive power is furnished by the state or not, are regarded as agencies employed by him, and therefore under his control; and for an injury resulting to a third person through the negligence of any of the agencies employed in the moving or management of the cars, the conductor and his employers are liable. Rauch v. Lloyd, 72 D. 747.

Where a conductor having control of a railroad train permits it to stand on a public street-crossing, and during his absence from it a teamster attaches horses to it and moves it, a resulting injury is as much the act of the conductor and his employers as if he had been present, and had directed it to be done. The doctrine of remote and proximate cause does not arise, and has no application to such a case. Id.

The conductor of a train acts under a general authority, and administers the rules of the company. In the exercise of this authority, he is allowed a discretion, and may apply or relax these rules, within reasonable bounds, according to circumstances. O'Donnell v. Alleghany V. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336.

In an action by a railway conductor against his employer for wages, the employer may set off and recover damages resulting to him from the conductor's negligence in performing the work; and the conductor is not relieved from his duty to exercise reasonable care by the known imperfect equipment of the train in respect to which his negligence occurred. Mobile and R'y Co. v. Olanton, 31 R. 15.

Where a railway brakeman is injured in the discharge of his duty at a point distant from the chief offices of the company, and stands in need of immediate surgical attendance, the conductor may bind the company by the employment of a surgeon, if there is no superior agent of the company present. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co. v. McMurray, 49 R. 752.

Where one falsely pretends to the conductor of a railway train that he is an officer of justice, and demands to put upon the train a person whom he pretends to have arrested for crime, and the conductor in good faith receives the prisoner on the train against his protest, the railway company is not liable therefor. Jackson v. St. Louis etc. R'y Co., 56 R. 460.

40. Engineers.*—Negligence of an engineer is negligence of the company, where he might have stopped the train and avoided a collision with a push-car, but did not do so though warned by signals of persons, and though the push-car was in sight for more than a mile; and it is no excuse that he supposed the car to be in the charge of section-men who would remove it from the track upon the approach of the train, for he should have known that the car was not under the control of railroad employees, by the fact that they did not attempt to remove it on the signal being given. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Bumstead, 95 D. 539.

41. Other servants and employees.—A railroad company is liable for the negligence of an agent in loaning a push-car to persons unaccustomed to its use, who left it upon the track, whereby a collision occurred. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Bumstead, 95 D. 539.

A railway road-master, having charge of the repairs of the roadway, has no implied authority to contract for the nursing of a person injured on the line of the road, there being no emergency calling for immediate action, and there being a superior agent within reach; but the corporation will be bound by the ratification of such contract by the general manager. Louisville etc. R'y Co. v. McVay, 49 R. 770.

IV. POWERS, DUTIES AND LIABILITIES IN RESPECT TO THE MANAGEMENT OF THE ROAD.

1. Under the Contract to Carry.

a. Carriage of Merchandise.

42. Obligation to carry.—Railroad corporations are common carriers and they occupy a peculiar relation to the public as invested with certain franchises for the public benefit, and they are bound to use them with fairness and for the common good. Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 18 R. 754.

Railroad companies, as common carriers, must furnish such facilities for transportation as will meet the ordinary demands of the public, but are not bound to anticipate or provide in advance for an unusual influx of freight. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Rae, 68 D. 574.

A railroad company is liable for the fraud or negligence of its servants in the course of their employment; and if such servants, by reason of bribes or other improper motives, give preference to one person over another, in receiving freight, the company may be held liable for damages for the injury sustained thereby. But because the company, from pressing necessity, takes grain from wagons or boats, while grain is standing in its private warehouse for shipment, if done in good faith, will not impose a liability. Id.

*Defects in track, whether engineer must take notice of, see note, 47 R. 480, 481.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A railway company is bound to receive the freight cars of other railway companies for transportation, and is subject to the liability of a common carrier in respect to them. Peoria etc. R. Co. v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 50 R. 605.

A railway company is not bound to transport perishable property to the exclusion of other general freight not perishable. Dixon v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 52 R. 460.

43. Delivery to the company. — A railroad company is not liable as a common carrier until it actually receives the goods for carriage. Maybin v. South Carolina R. R. Co., 64 D. 753.

A railroad company must receive freight according to its usage and custom, and if the company has been used to run cars upon a side track to a private warehouse to receive freight, a readiness to deliver at such warehouse will impose on the company a duty to take the freight therefrom. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Rae, 68 D. 574.

A railroad company incurs no risk as to the mode adopted in loading cars by shippers who hire the cars to be loaded with freight in such a manner as they might choose. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Dumbor, 71 D. 291.

Goods placed for shipment in the car of a railroad company, standing on a side track under exclusive control of the company, with the assent of the company, pass into the possession of the company whether they be placed in the car by its own employees or by other persons. Illinois Cen. R. R. Co. v. Smyser, 87 D. 301.

Where plaintiff's agent in loading cattle upon cars discovers upon closing the doors thereof that the fastening is defective, he must inform the station agent of the railroad company, or the latter will not be liable for loss occasioned thereby. The fact that plaintiff's agent secured the door by such means as were at hand, and in a manner which he considered safe, does not change the case. Betts v. Farmers' Loan etc. Co., 91 D. 460.

44. Liability for refusal to carry. — The privilege of making a railroad and taking tolls is a franchise, and the public have an interest in its use. Beekman v. Saratoga etc. R. R. Co., 22 D. 679.

Owners of a railroad are liable for damages sustained by a refusal to transport persons or property, without reasonable excuse, upon payment of the usual fare. Id.

A railroad company, as a forwarding agent, is liable for refusing to receive goods without a good excuse, and for neglecting to take reasonable care of them after receiving. Maybin v. South Carolina R. R. Co., 64 D. 753.

A railroad company refused to receive freight at a way station, to be delivered at an elevator five hundred feet beyond their terminus, on a track owned by another company, but which they had sometimes used for delivery at the elevator. Held, that a writ of mandamus would not lie compelling the company to receive freight for such delivery. People v. Chicago & A. R. R. Co., 8 R. 631.

45. — for failure to deliver. — A railroad company is not liable as a common carrier, but as a mere bailee for hire, where the agent of the company is guilty of negligence in failing to deliver a piece of machinery consigned to him for shipment with other pieces of machinery. Foard v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co., 78 D. 277.

The measure of damages against the company for the negligence of its agent in failing to deliver a piece of machinery consigned to him with other pieces of machinery, for shipment, and by which the whole is kept idle, is compensation for the capital invested — that is, legal interest; also for any workmen thus necessarily unemployed, expenses incurred in sending for the missing machinery, and any other damages which are the direct and necessary result of such negligence. Id.

The burden is upon plaintiff to prove that the defendant railroad company failed to exercise ordinary care and diligence in the transportation of his goods. Mann v. Birchard, 94 D. 398.

Although a railway company cannot be compelled to deliver freight beyond its own line, simply because there are connecting tracks over which it might pass by paying track service, but which it has never made a part of its own line, yet a writ of mandamus will lie compelling the company to deliver at an elevator situated upon tracks operated in common with other companies, notwithstanding the delivery may be at an additional expense and the company may have contracted with other elevators for exclusive delivery to them. Chicago etc. R'y Co. v. People ex rel., 8 R. 690.

46. — or for delay. — A railroad company must use proper diligence in the transportation of freight, and where there is delay, it must answer in damages, unless it can discharge itself by a proper excuse. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Rae, 68 D. 574.

Tender or readiness to pay freight charges should be proved in an action against the company for failure or delay in transportation of goods. Id.

The proprietors of a railroad who negligently delay transportation of goods delivered to them as common carriers, and then safely transport them to their destination, are not liable for injuries to the goods caused by a flood, while the goods are in their depot at the latter place, although the goods would not have been exposed to the injury but for such delay. Denny v. New York Central R. R. Co., 74 D. 645.

The company is liable for damages caused by delay in transporting freight, though such delay was the result of a strike among its servants which rendered the running of trains impossible, of which strike the company had two days' previous notice. Blackstock v. N. Y. & E. R. R. Co., 75 D. 372.

Prima facie evidence of want of ordinary care, on part of the company in carrying goods, is shown by an unusual and unexplained delay and failure to deliver the goods according to the general course of business. It raises a natural presumption of negligence; and it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that there was not some unavoidable accident, or other unforeseen occurrence, which would relieve the defendant from the natural presumption. Mann v. Birchard, 94 D. 398.

The company is bound, by its freight agent's contract to transport goods within a specified time if it be a reasonable time. Sirohn v. Detroit etc. R. R. Co., 99 D. 114.

The company is not an absolute insurer of goods which its agent has contracted to deliver within a specified time; but their non-delivery will be excused if they are destroyed within the prescribed time by the act of God or of the public enemy. Id.

A mere statement by a railroad company's agent that the ordinary time for transportation over the proposed route is a certain number of days does not constitute an agreement to carry in that time; nor is it sufficient to overcome the effect of the bills of lading or receipts as evidence of the real contract. Id.

47. What is a sufficient delivery.—Common carriers by railway are neither bound to deliver goods to the consignee personally nor to give notice of the arrival of the goods, in order to discharge themselves from liability as common carriers. Porter v. Chicago R. R. Co., 71 D. 286.

The duty assumed by a common carrier by railway, in the absence of a special contract limiting his liability, is to carry the goods safely to their destination, and there discharge them on the platform or other suitable place, so as to put them in readiness for convenient delivery to the consignee or party entitled to receive them. But the carrier is neither bound to deliver to the consignee personally nor give him notice of the arrival of the goods. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 91 D. 349.

And where the destination is a mere flag station, without any agent, depot or warehouse, and this is known to the consignee, and is not unreasonable in view of its business, its liability of every sort terminates with the delivery of the goods in its car on the side track at the destination. South etc. Ala. R. R. Co. v. Wood, 41 R. 749.

The owner, consignee, or other person authorized to receive goods, being present at the time of their arrival, and having an opportunity to take them away, this may be regarded as equivalent to a delivery. After this, they must be understood to remain in charge of the company as bailees for hire. Moses v. Boston and M. R. R. Co., 64 D. 381.

Where goods arrive at a depot at from one to three o'clock in the afternoon, from two to three hours are required to unload them from the cars, the gates of the depot are closed at five o'clock, and the consignee has no reasonable opportunity to see the goods or take them away before they are destroyed, the transit has not terminated, and the railroad company, as carriers, are liable for the value of the goods. Id.

The responsibility of the company as carriers in the transportation of wool and such commodities begins with the receipt of the goods, though not put by them at once on the transit, and ceases only when the goods have reached their destination and their control over them as carriers has terminated; the control must continue until delivery, or an offer to deliver, or some act which the law can regard as equivalent to delivery. Id.

Whether regulations made by a railroad company are reasonable is a question of fact to be determined by the jury, though their determination, when against the evidence, may be set aside by the court and a new trial granted. Morris and Essex R. R. Co. v. Ayers, 80 D. 215.

A regulation is reasonable and valid when it provides that a receipt shall be given for all the goods before any part are removed. Id.

The company is not bound to make more than one delivery of any shipment of goods transported by it. The owner has no right to require the company to deliver portions of the goods at different times; but may be required to receive and receipts for the whole at once, having first been afforded an opportunity of seeing the goods and determining whether they were all there and in good condition. Id.

48. Company when liable as warehousemen only.—A railroad company may assume a double character of carrier and warehouseman. Wood v. Crocker, 86 D. 773.

The liability of a railroad corporation as a common carrier ceases upon the goods being transported to their destination and safely deposited in the company's merchandise depot. It is then responsible only as a depositary, for want of ordinary care in the custody of the goods. Thomas v. B. & P. R. R. Corp., 43 D. 444; Porter v. Chicago R. R. Co., 71 D. 286; Bausmer v. Toledo etc. R'y Co., 87 D. 367. But if the goods should arrive out of time, and the company failed to notify the consignee, its liability as a common carrier might be extended. Francis v. Dubuque & S. O. R. R. Co., 95 D. 769.

A railroad company is liable as warehouseman for goods stored at the place to which they were consigned and have been brought, and as such it is required to keep the goods in store for the consignee for a reasonable time without additional reward. Bansemmer v. Toledo etc. R'y Co., 87 D. 367.

A common carrier by railroad may deliver the goods on his platform at their place of destination; or may store them there if no one is present to receive them. Until the goods are so delivered or stored they are liable as common carriers; but after such storage they are responsible only as warehousemen. Norway Plains Co. v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 61 D. 423.

If goods carried by a railroad corporation are destroyed by fire after they have reached their place of destination and been stored in the railroad warehouse, the transit being at an end, the corporation is not answerable as a common carrier, but only as a warehouseman. Norway Plains Co. v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 61 D. 423; Francis v. Dubuque & S. C. R. R. Co., 95 D. 769.

Until goods have passed out of custody and control of a railroad company into the hands of proper parties, it is their duty to preserve the property, even after their responsibilities as common carriers have ceased. Moses v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 D. 381.

The company is responsible as a warehouseman only, and not as a common carrier, for goods to which something remains to be done by the consignor or his agents, after their delivery to the company, before they are in a condition for transportation. Where, therefore, an arrangement exists between two railroad companies by which goods which have been carried to the end of one road, and are destined to some point upon or beyond the line of the other, are delivered to the second company with expense bills, upon receipt of which, if correct, way-bills are made out, such second company is, until the delivery of the expense bills, responsible only as warehousemen, and not as common carriers, for goods so received and stored by it. Judson v. Western R. R. Corp., 81 D. 718.

49. Liability for loss or damage to property carried.—Railroad corporations are liable as common carriers for losses occurring from any accident during the transit of the goods, except those arising from the act of God or the public enemy. They can not escape this liability by showing that the loss occurred from some cause for which neither they nor their agents are chargeable. Norway Plains Co. v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 61 D. 423. S. P., Bansemmer v. Toledo etc. R'y Co., 87 D. 367; Seina & M. R. R. Co. v. Butts, 94 D. 694.

A railroad company's liability for negligence should be strictly enforced on grounds of public policy. Cumberland Valley R. R. Co. v. Hughes, 51 D. 513.

The owner of a freight car injured by a defect in the road over which it is running under a "clearance" from the railroad company, owing to the company's neglect to repair, may recover therefor, though the "clearance" was obtained by another person who was at the time in possession of the car. Id.

A railroad company is liable as a common carrier for loss of goods destroyed by accidental fire while standing unloaded in a car at their destination. Porter v. Chicago R. R. Co., 71 D. 286.

The company is not liable as a common carrier for loss or destruction of goods deposited at the roadside, where there is no station or agent, though goods are sometimes taken on board there, and though a conductor of a freight train has promised to stop and take the goods lost. Wells v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 556.

Goods deposited at a roadside to save trouble of hauling to regular depot are at the risk of the owners until they are put on a freight car, and thus received by an agent of the railroad company. Id.

A railroad company is not liable in damages, as a common carrier, to one who hires or charters cars absolutely, in case of injury to his property. The remedy of the latter must be on the contract of hire, and the implied undertaking of the company that the hired cars are substantial, and will be duly carried to their destination. East Tenn. etc. R. R. Co. v. Whittle, 73 D. 741.

The duty which the company, in the management of its trains, owes to the shipper of freight while loading his property in one of the company's cars, under authority from the latter, is the exercise of that ordinary care which every man owes to his neighbor, to do him no injury by negligence while both are engaged in lawful pursuits. Stinson v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 68 D. 332.

A railroad company, in its capacity of warehouseman and forwarder, is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence over the property in its charge, such as a prudent man would exercise over his own property of like nature. What constitutes ordinary care may depend upon the nature, bulk, and value of the articles, and such care should be in proportion to the loss likely to be sustained by the want thereof. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. Schmacker, 96 D. 510.

A railway company, not undertaking to carry dogs, but permitting its servant, as an accommodation to passengers, to receive them for carriage and take pay therefor for himself, cannot be held as a common carrier where the passenger was notified of the rule. Honeyman v. Oregon and O. R. R. Co., 57 R. 20.

Plaintiff, not being permitted to take his dog with him in defendant's passenger car, delivered it to the baggage-master of the train and paid him for its transportation. By the defendant's regulations, which were posted at various stations, "live animals" were "allowed as baggage-men's perquisites," but plaintiff had no special notice of this regulation. The dog was lost through the baggage-man's negligence. Held, that the defendant was liable for the value of the dog. Canfield v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 476.

50. Liability as carriers of live stock.* — 1. In general. — A railway company undertaking to carry live-stock for such persons as chose to employ it assumes the relation of a common carrier, with the duties and obligations growing out of that relation, whether the transportation of cattle be its principal employment or merely incidental and subordinate. Kimball v. Rutland etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 567.

A railroad company, receiving cattle or live stock to be transported over its road from one place to another, assumes all the responsibility of common carriers, except so far as such responsibility may be modified by special contract. Kansas Pacific R'y Co. v. Nichols, 12 R. 494. Contra, see Michigan South. etc. R. R. Co. v. McDonough, 4 R. 468.

In an action against a railroad company for the value of live stock, alleged to have been killed through its negligence while in its possession as carriers, — held, (1) that the company, as to the live stock, was not an insurer, but was only liable for ordinary negligence; (2) that the fact of the injury was prima facie evidence of negligence; (3) that the company could not by contract relieve itself from liability for negligence. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Hedger, 15 R. 740.

A railroad company undertaking to transport live stock is bound to furnish suitable and safe cars, and is responsible for any loss arising from a neglect of duty in this particular. The mere presence of the owner of the stock does not lessen this responsibility, as the cars are necessarily under the control of the agents of the company. Peters v. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 578.

A railroad company undertaking to carry live animals for hire is bound to provide cars of sufficient strength to prevent the animals from breaking through the same; and will be responsible for the loss occurring through failure to do so, although the animals were unruly and vicious; but not for an injury to the animals occurring simply from their own viciousness or unruliness, while being carried in a proper car. Smith v. New Haven etc. R. R. Co., 80 D. 166.

It is negligence on part of railroad company to allow straw to be used in its cars for bedding; and if a fire occur from such use, occasioning the loss of live stock while being transported the company is liable for all loss sustained by the shipper. Powell v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 75 D. 564.

A common carrier cannot stipulate against his own gross negligence. And it is such gross negligence as a railroad company cannot stipulate against for one of its conductors to refuse to supply water to hogs that are being transported in its cars, after being requested so to do by the owner of the hogs, where water for that purpose was convenient and abundant, and several of the hogs died by reason of such refusal. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Adams, 92 D. 85.

2. Fault of, or assumption of risk by shipper. — Where a railway company, for a given hire, offers to assume the responsibility of a common carrier, and for a less hire offers to furnish the necessary means of transportation to the owner, who may thereby become his own carrier, the owner who chooses to pay the lower rate is bound by his election, and cannot hold the company liable as a common carrier. Whether in such a case there exists a special agreement between the parties, by which the company's liability is limited, is a question of law, to be determined by the court. Kimball v. Rutland etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 567.

A release signed by the shipper exonerating the company from liability for injury sustained to live-stock during transportation does not excuse negligence on the part of the company. Powell v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 75 D. 564.

A party who obstructs the track, or interferes with the transportation of a railroad company, cannot recover from an injury received. Id.

The company is not exempted from liability for furnishing defective cars for the transportation of live-stock, under a contract which provides that the owner takes all risks of loss and injury "in loading, unloading, conveyance, and otherwise," whether arising from the negligence, default, misconduct, or otherwise on the part of the company's employees; and unless the owner assented to the use of such cars, after proper opportunities of observation, and with notice of their actual condition, he is entitled to expect that reasonably proper cars would be furnished. Hawkins v. Great Western R. R. Co., 97 D. 179.

A railroad company is not responsible for injuries inflicted by one horse upon another while they were being carried in the company's car, if the injuries were caused by the fault or neglect of the owner of the horses in attaching their halters or not removing their shoes. Evans v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 15 R. 19.

The shipper of cattle by railway, having assumed, by special contract, the duty of loading and unloading, and having accepted

* See elaborate note on the liabilities and duties of railroad company carrying live animals, 67 D. 68-217.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

and loaded a car without objection, knowing that it was not "bedded," cannot hold the railroad company for negligence in failing to bed or for insufficient bedding in the car. East Tennessee etc. R. R. Co. v. Johnston, 51 R. 489.

Evidence of a custom of shippers of cattle to bed the cars, known to them and acted on by them in previous shipments, is competent to explain such contract. Ib.

3. Loss caused by vicious propensities of animals. A railroad company acting as a common carrier of animals is not liable for their dying or being injured from causes arising from their animal nature and propensities, and which diligent care could not have prevented; but is liable, in the absence of special agreement or proof of inevitable accident, for loss or damage which might have been avoided by use of care and foresight, whether due to conduct of the animals themselves or to incidents of the company's business. Clarks v. Rochester etc. R. R. Co., 67 D. 205.

In an action against a railroad company to recover for injuries done by one of the plaintiff's pair of horses to his mate, while being carried by the defendants, the defendants requested a ruling that if they used due care and provided a suitable car, and the injuries were caused by the peculiar character and propensities of the horses, such as fright or bad temper, they were not liable; the judge refused this ruling, but ruled that if the horse was injured by its mate in an outbreak of viciousness, quite unusual in horses worked together, the jury might find for the defendants. Held, that the defendants had good grounds of exception. Evans v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 15 R. 19.

51. Special contracts limiting liability. — Railroad companies are liable, as common carriers, for goods lost or injured, but they may by special contract limit this liability. Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409.

A railroad company cannot limit their liability as common carriers by public notice to the effect that they will not be responsible for loss or injury to goods in their hands as carriers, except such as may arise from negligence, even if knowledge of the notice can be brought home to the owner. Moses v. Boston & Maine R. R., 64 D. 381.

The company cannot restrict its liability by merely proving a usage on its part in giving bills of lading to notify shippers that the company would not be liable for certain kinds of losses. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Smyser, 87 D. 301.

The provision of the general railroad law preventing railroad companies from lessening or abridging their common-law liabilities as carriers does not prevent the company from entering into an agreement with a consignor of goods by which he specially contracts to limit their liability. McMillan v. Michigan South etc. R. R. Co., 93 D. 208.

Printed notices, receipts, and regulations of a railway company, even when brought to the shipper's notice, will not excuse the company, where they carry freights for a reward, from being liable for a failure to use ordinary care in transporting them. Mann v. Birchard, 94 D. 398.

Where the defendant's railroad, in consequence of the war, was in a dilapidated condition, and their supply of rolling stock limited, and they had refused to receive freight for shipment unless upon a qualified liability, to secure which they had printed bills of lading limiting their liability, and where plaintiff, through himself and his agents, had knowledge of the condition of the road and the terms upon which goods were received, and where plaintiff, desiring to ship goods, filled out one of said printed bills of lading and brought it to defendant to sign, he will be held to a knowledge of its contents and an assent to its terms. Wallace v. Matthews, 99 D. 473.

A railroad undertook to carry cattle at a reduced rate and to carry their owner, and in consideration thereof, it was agreed that the owner should care for the cattle at his own expense, and that the carrier should not be liable for any loss beyond $50 a head. Held, that the contract was reasonable and valid. South Ala. & W. R. R. Co. v. Henkin, 23 R. 578.

A stipulation in a bill of lading given by a railroad company for the transportation of goods over its own route and the routes of connecting railroads to a point beyond its own route, for exemption from liability for loss or damage while such goods are in the custody of any of such other connecting railroad companies, is valid. Taylor v. Little Rock etc. R. R. Co., 29 R. 1.

52. Right to tolls or freight. — The legislature may regulate the use of a railroad franchise, and limit the amount of tolls thereon, if not deprived of that power by a legislative contract with the owners of the road. Beekman v. Saratoga etc. R. R. Co., 22 D. 679.

A railroad company has a lien for freight charges, and can withhold delivery until payment. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Rae, 68 D. 574.

The company may demand prepayment of freight charges, but in omitting such demand, the company becomes bound to transport the freight according to its custom, and slight evidence of a willingness to pay will be sufficient to support an action for damages caused by refusal to receive such freight. Ib.

Whatever is carried into a passenger-car as baggage is so far in possession of conductor or agent of the road as to authorize him to exercise the right of retainer for dues for passage or freight on the article itself. Hutchings v. Western & A. R. R., 71 D. 156.

A statute authorized railroads to charge for freight "not exceeding the rate of fifty cents per hundred pounds per hundred miles." Held, that they might charge fifty cents for less than one hundred pounds. Murray v. Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co., 51 R. 650.

53. Discrimination, and remedy therefor.*—An agreement by a railroad company to carry goods for certain persons, at a cheaper rate than it will carry under the same conditions for others, is void, as creating an illegal preference. Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 13 R. 457.

An act prohibiting not only unjust discrimination but all discrimination in railway freights, is in violation of a State Constitution which provides for the passage of laws to prevent unjust discrimination. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. People, 16 R. 599.

It seems that the discrimination is unjust where less rates for greater distances are charged only on the ground of the existence of competing lines. Id.

In the grant of a franchise of building and using a public railway, there is an implied condition that it is held as a quasi public trust for the benefit of the public, and the company possessed of the grant must exercise a perfect impartiality to all who seek the benefit of the trust. Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. R., 18 R. 754.

A contract of a railroad company, which gives to certain persons an exclusive advantage or monopoly over all other transporters in the transportation of goods, is unjust and cannot be legally enforced. Id.

In order to secure freight which would otherwise go by a different route, a railroad company may discriminate in rates in favor of persons living at a distance from its route, provided its charges against others not similarly situated are reasonable. Ragan v. Allen, 42 R. 684.

Discrimination in freight tariffs by railway companies means charging different shippers unequal sums for carrying the same quantity equal distances. Freight Discrimination Cases, 59 R. 250.

A statute imposing a penalty on any railroad which shall charge for transportation of any freight over its road a greater amount than shall be charged at the same time by it for an equal quantity of the same class of freight, transported in the same direction over any portion of the same railroad, of equal distance, means that the compensation charged shippers for carrying an equal quantity of the same class of freight, going in the same direction, must be equal in amount for equal distances, no matter on what part of the road, at any time while its list of charges for carrying freight remains unchanged. Id.

A contract between a railroad company and a shipper, that the latter shall pay the regular and established rates of freight, the same as all other shippers, and that the company shall pay back to him a certain portion of the freight so charged and paid, whereby such shipper will pay a less rate for transportation than that paid by others, and the public generally, for like services, under similar circumstances and for like distances, is void as against public policy at common law, and under the statute against unjust discriminations. Illinois etc. R. R. Co. v. Ervin, 59 R. 369; Scofield v. Railway Co., 54 R. 846.

Plaintiff was accustomed to ship coal by defendants' railroad for transportation beyond their line upon the Delaware river. Defendants had also allowed plaintiff, for a certain consideration, to use their wharf at the river terminus of the railroad; but subsequently, there not being room for all the shippers, they denied plaintiff the wharf facilities, while they allowed others to use the wharf. Held, that although transportation by defendants, common carriers, was necessarily open to the public without discrimination, yet wharfage was within the discretion of defendants, and a mandatory injunction would not lie compelling them to allow wharfage facilities to plaintiff as well as others. Audenried v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 8 R. 195.

Where an action was brought against a railroad company for an alleged unjust discrimination in favor of an express company, by affording better and extra facilities to it for transportation than to the plaintiff, and the defendant demurred—Held, that an action would lie for damage caused by such discrimination; and also that though the unreasonable preference was practiced in another State, if in violation of the law thereof, the action would still lie. McDuffes v. Portland and R. R., 13 R. 72.

b. Carriage of Passengers and their Baggage.

54. Regulations of passenger traffic.*—A railroad company may make reasonable regulations respecting passengers and other persons using its road or houses and buildings connected therewith, the reasonableness of such regulations depending in some measure upon the locality of the depot at which they are adopted. Com. v. Power, 41 D. 465; Johnson v. Concord R. R. Corp. 88 D. 199.

The company has a right to require of its

*Rules and regulations which company may make respecting passengers and others not employees, see notes, 41 D. 471-486; 45 D. 192-199. Obligation, to stop for passenger at times advertised, see note 66 D. 605-606.

*Discrimination in freights and fares, see notes, 41 D. 484-486; 44 R. 563, 569; 54 R. 862-865.

passengers compliance with all reasonable rules tending to promote comfort, convenience, good order and behavior, and to secure the safety of its trains, and to enable the company to conduct its business as a common carrier with advantage to the public and to itself. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 92 D. 138.

The company is bound to carry a passenger who observes all the reasonable rules of the company. Id.

The court must determine whether a rule adopted by the company is a reasonable one. Such question is purely one of law, and must be determined by the court, and not the jury, although it is proper for the court to admit testimony as to the necessity of such rule. Id.

Such regulations need not be in form of by-laws, enforced by penalties and forfeitures. Com. v. Power, 41 D. 465; State v. Ouston, 61 D. 671.

The company may delegate to its superintendent of a particular depot the power to make regulations for the government of persons resorting there. Com. v. Power, 41 D. 465.

A license to the public to enter a depot, except for the purpose of taking passage, is revocable. Id.

The superintendent of the depot may prohibit innkeepers from coming upon the platform at such depot to solicit custom; and where the rule has been particularly violated by a certain person, he may be forcibly excluded from the platform, although he has a ticket and comes there to take passage on the train, if he does not show his ticket or declare his purpose, and the superintendent has ground to believe and does believe that he comes to solicit custom, and uses no more violence than necessary to expel him from the platform; and such expulsion is not indictable as an assault. Id.

It is the duty of the company to treat all persons alike; and if it holds itself out as a common carrier of passengers by steamboat across a navigable bay at the end of its route, and contracts generally with persons to carry them over its road and across the bay, it is bound to contract with and convey over the road and bay all persons who apply and tender the right fare. Wheeler v. San Francisco etc. R. R. Co., 89 D. 147.

Railroads, whether built, owned and conducted by the state or by private corporations, and whether exacting tolls or free, are public highways. In consideration of the franchise they receive from the state, railroad corporations agree to perform certain duties toward the public, and the power of determining those duties and enforcing their performance is vested in the appropriate tribunals of the state. Railroad Comm'rs v. Portland & O. R. R. Co., 18 R. 208.

A statute which prohibits any railroad corporation from demanding and receiving for the transportation of passengers more than three cents per mile, for a distance of more than eight miles, gives the party aggrieved a right to recover from such corporation a forfeiture of not less than twenty-five dollars for each case of overcharge. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Moore, 31 R. 543.

Even where the charter of a railroad company gives it the right to regulate its charges, the state may create a commission with the power to see that it keeps within its charter limits, to prevent unjust discrimination, and to enforce such reasonable regulations as the state may deem necessary. Stons v. Yanco etc. R. R. Co., 52 R. 193.

55. Railroad tickets; and respective rights of passenger and company.

— 1. In general. — The company's liabilities and the passenger's rights are the same, whether the passenger's ticket be purchased at the office of the company, of an agent elsewhere, or of a contiguous railroad company, entitling the purchaser to pass on both roads, and received by the former as an ordinary ticket. Schopman v. Boston etc. R'y Corp., 55 D. 41.

A person holding a ticket, who is about to take a train, has as much right to cross a side-track which is in the way provided by the company to reach the train as he would have to cross a public street or highway. Indiana Central R'y Co. v. Hudson, 74 D. 254.

A purchaser of a ticket to a station on the line of the railroad is entitled, in the absence of express stipulations, to be carried to that station in a reasonable time and manner, agreeably to the reasonable rules and regulations of the company. Johnson v. Concord R. Corp., 88 D. 199.

A passenger who purchases a ticket for a distant station and gets off the train temporarily and with no objection or notice, while it is stopping at an intermediate station, does no illegal act, but for the time he surrenders his place and rights as a passenger; but he may return and resume his place and rights as a passenger on the train before it starts, and the officers of the railway are bound to give reasonable notice of the starting of the train. State v. Grand Trunk R'y, 4 R. 258.

When a passenger has been lawfully ejected from a railway train, for non-payment of fare, he cannot demand to be carried forward on the same train without paying the disputed fare, and his purchase of a ticket at the point of ejection will not entitle him to readmission to the train. Stons v. C. etc. R. Co. 29 R. 458.

A railway ticket marked, "good on passenger trains only," does not imply that all the passenger trains of the railroad company issuing it will stop at the station designated on it, nor impose on the company any obligation to stop there contrary to its rules. Ohio and M. R'y Co. v. Searthout, 33 R. 104.

A railway company may lawfully issue tickets at a reduced rate and impose the condition of non-transferability; but has no right to take up the tickets and exclude the transferee from the train under the condition that it may refuse to accept it. The measure of damages is the value of such ticket. Post v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 45 R. 100.

One who purchased a ticket from New York to Philadelphia from a person who was not an authorized agent of the company, may maintain an action against the company for refusal to carry him, the sale being legal in New York but forbidden under penalty in Pennsylvania, but there being no authority in the statute for refusal to carry on tickets purchased from unauthorized agents. Sleeper v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 45 R. 380.

A railway passenger, with a ticket for a station at which the train does not stop, has a right to ride to an intermediate station at which it does stop. Richmond etc. R. R. Co. v. Ashby, 52 R. 620.

The plaintiff having purchased at Birmingham a ticket to Hanceville, a station ten miles beyond Blount Springs, entered a freight train which was not authorized to carry passengers beyond Blount Springs; he testified that the ticket agent directed him to take it; being informed by the conductor, after starting, that he could not be carried beyond Blount Springs, he declined to leave the train, as the conductor offered him an opportunity to do, and declared that he would go on, and having surrendered his ticket, which the conductor thereupon cancelled, he travelled to Blount Springs, and was there required by the conductor to leave the train. Held, that the company was not liable unless the ticket agent gave that direction. South etc. Ala. R. R. Co. v. Huffman, 52 R. 349.

2. Passengers bound by regulations of company. — Purchasers of tickets are bound to comply with all reasonable rules and orders of the company or their agents, as much when going to the cars from the station-house, or from the cars to a place of safety beyond a railroad track, as they are when actually on board the train, and while the transit continues. Warren v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 85 D. 700.

It is the duty of a passenger to inform himself beforehand of the regulations of the company for running its trains, and the fact that a ticket for a certain station is sold to him by the company without notice, and that he is permitted to enter the first train leaving thereafter, does not entitle him to require that the train be stopped at such station if it is not in accordance with the regulations for running trains. Pittsburg etc. R'y Co. v. Numm, 19 R. 703.

A railroad company may lawfully require passengers to exhibit their tickets before entering the cars, and may refuse to receive any person as a passenger although he exhibits a ticket, who is drunk to such a degree as to be disgusting, offensive, disagreeable, or annoying, and likely to violate the common proprieties, decencies, and civilities of life. Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co. v. Vandyne, 26 R. 68.

3. Time-table—changes of time. — A railroad company, by advertising the times when its trains run, agrees with holders of tickets that its trains will run at the times advertised, but with an implied reservation of a power to change the times upon giving reasonable notice. Sears v. Eastern R. R. Co., 92 D. 780.

Reasonable notice of change of time, as advertised in the newspapers, when a train will run, is not given to one who previously purchased tickets in accordance with the advertisement, by posting up handbills in the cars and stations, without his knowledge, announcing the change. Ib.

An express contract cannot be controlled or varied by usage; and therefore, where a railroad company advertises the times when its trains will run, and sells tickets accordingly, evidence of a usage of the company to change the times of running trains, without giving reasonable notice thereof, is inadmissible. Sears v. Eastern R. R. Co., 92 D. 780. And see Gordon v. Manchester & L. R. R. Co., 13 R. 97.

4. When ticket expires. — A passenger ticket, dated and having the words "good only two days after date," stamped upon its face, is not valid after the expiration of the two days, and the railroad company may recover its usual fare. Boston etc. R. R. Co. v. Proctor, 79 D. 729.

A rule established by a railroad company limiting the time within which tickets over its road should be used, provided that joint tickets should be good for such further time as might be necessary to enable the holders, by the regular trains of the road, to reach the station to which such tickets were sold, is not unreasonable. Johnson v. Concord R. R. Corp., 88 D. 199.

Evidence that in various instances conductors allowed tickets to be used contrary to the provisions of a reasonable rule established by a railroad company, and in violation of instructions, is not competent to show a usage on the part of the company in conflict with the rule, if such instances are not shown to have come to the knowledge of the governing officers of the corporation. Ib.

Where a ticket over connecting lines is limited to a specified number of days, the last day falling on Sunday, and the last line runs no train on that day, the passenger is entitled to passage on the next day. Little Rock etc. R'y Co. v. Dean, 51 R. 584.

A ticket conditioned "not to be good for passage" after nine days from date of sale does not require the passage to be completed within that time. Lundy v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 56 R. 100. Compare Auerbach v. New York Cen. etc. R. R. Co., 42 R. 290.

5. Right to a seat. — Plaintiff bought a ticket on defendant's road from W. to B. Not being able to obtain a seat in the car, he refused to surrender the ticket, and was ordered to leave the train on its arrival at F. At F. he obtained a seat and tendered his fare from there to B., but refused to either surrender his ticket or to pay the fare from W. The conductor ejected him. In an action for damages based upon the contract entered into at W.,—held, that under the contract plaintiff could not maintain the action. Davis v. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 457.

It seems that a passenger who exhibits his ticket and demands a seat has a right to have that demand complied with before he can be required to surrender his ticket. Id.

6. Separate car for women. — A regulation of a railroad company, setting apart one car of each passenger train for women and the men accompanying them, is reasonable. Base v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 17 R. 495.

If there be no sitting room in the ordinary passenger cars for men excluded by the regulation from the car for women, and there be room to seat them in the latter car, it is the duty of those having charge of the train either to admit them to such car, or to make room for them in the ordinary cars by admitting others to the women's car. Id.

Where a man is unable to find a seat in the ordinary cars and is not furnished with one within a reasonable time, by the officers of the train, he may enter the women's car, provided there be a seat for him there and he can enter peaceably and unforbidden, and he is entitled to remain, unless furnished with a seat elsewhere; but he has no right to attempt, by force, to enter the car. Id.

7. Excursion and commutation tickets. — The holder of a special excursion ticket for a round trip, surrendering it and receiving instead a regular ticket, substituted by the company for its own convenience, gets no right to return upon any other than the excursion train. McRae v. Wilmington & W. R. R. Co., 43 R. 745.

If a railway company attempts to discriminate against one by refusing to sell him commutation tickets at the same rate that it sells them to the public generally, the sale may be enforced by mandamus. State v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 57 R. 543.

D. purchased of a railroad company a commutation ticket that entitled him to ride upon their road a certain time upon certain conditions; one of the conditions was, that the ticket should be shown to the conductor on every trip the holder might make, and, in case it should not be shown when requested by the conductor, regular fare for that trip should be paid. On one occasion D. by mistake left his ticket at home, and when called for by the conductor, he stated that he had forgotten it and refused to pay the regular fare, whereupon he was ejected from the train at the next station. Held, that D. could not recover of the company. Downs v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 4 R. 77.

A commutation railway ticket, conditioned to be "good for 1,000 miles" and "within six months," is not good after six months, although the holder has not travelled 1,000 miles on it; and where, after the expiration of that period, he enters the baggage car of the company, and refuses to pay his fare except by presenting such ticket, he is a trespasser, and may be ejected at any point, and is not entitled to the benefit of a statute which prohibits the ejection of passengers except near a dwelling-house or at a station. Lillis v. St. Louis etc. R. Co., 27 R. 255.

56. *Regulations as to purchase and surrender of tickets, or payment of extra fare. — A railroad company has power to make all reasonable rules for the government of its trains; and may, as to certain classes of trains, require tickets to be purchased before allowing passage to be taken thereon. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

The company is not required to keep open its ticket-office for the sale of tickets to passengers beyond the advertised time fixed for the departure of trains; and Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 63 D. 562, and St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. Dally, 19 Ill. 353, are not to be considered as holding that such company must keep its office open for that purpose until the actual departure of the train. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. South, 92 D. 103.

The company is required to keep open its ticket-office for sale of tickets to passengers for a reasonable time before the departure of each train, and up to the advertised time for its departure, but not up to the time of its actual departure. Id.

The company is required to furnish a convenient and accessible place for the sale of tickets, and to afford the public a reasonable opportunity to purchase them; but parties who will not avail themselves of it, are alone at fault, and must pay the extra fare or be ejected from the train on refusal to pay it. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. South,

* Rule requiring the purchase and exhibition of tickets, see note, 41 D. 473-476.

Discrimination between fare paid on train and fare paid at ticket office, see note, 41 D. 483, 484.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

92 D. 103; Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

Failure of the company to give a reasonable opportunity for purchase of ticket, by one who desires to take passage on one of its trains, gives such person a right to enter and be carried to his place of destination on payment of the regular fare to the conductor; and his expulsion, under such circumstances would be unlawful. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

A railroad company having opened its freight trains for the conveyance of passengers, is bound to afford reasonable facilities to them for the procuring of tickets shortly before entering the trains, and neglecting to do so, cannot rightfully eject a passenger, offering to pay his fare on the train, for not having previously procured his ticket. Evans v. Memphis and C. R. R. Co., 28 R. 771.

Under a statute permitting railroad companies to make an extra charge for fares paid in the cars, when a reasonable time has been allowed to procure tickets before the starting of the train, it is not necessary to keep open the ticket office at a small station until the very moment of starting. Everett v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 58 R. 207.

Railroad charges for freights and fares must be uniform, and without favor or prejudice, as between all of each class established by the company. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 68 D. 562.

A railway company may lawfully make and enforce a rule that passengers not procuring tickets before entering a train shall pay a greater specified rate of fare, and passengers are bound to take notice of and conform to such rule. Toledo etc. R'y Co. v. Wright, 34 R. 277. S. P., Hilliard v. Gould, 66 D. 765; Jeffersonville R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 92 D. 276. And this rule applies to a passenger who pays only from one station to another without a ticket, and he may be compelled to pay the extra charge at each station as a new contract made at such station. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 68 D. 562.

A regulation making discrimination in passenger fares in favor of persons purchasing tickets before entering the cars imposes upon the railroad company the obligation to afford passengers the opportunity to avail themselves of the discrimination; and if this opportunity is not offered, the regulation is not binding, and a passenger who after tendering the regular ticket rate to the conductor is expelled from the train may recover from the company. Jeffersonville R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 92 D. 276; St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. South, 92 D. 103.

The rule of a railroad company requiring passengers to surrender their tickets to the conductor, when demanded, is a reasonable one and may be enforced. Illinois Cen. R. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 92 D. 138.

By the regulations of defendants, a railroad company, persons taking passage in their cars, at a place where a ticket office was established, without having first procured a ticket, were charged ten cents in addition to the regular fare. The plaintiff, finding the ticket office closed, entered the cars without a ticket, intending to go to M.; made known to the conductor his destination, and gave him fifty cents, which was the regular fare; the conductor demanded the additional ten cents, which was refused, and the plaintiff was expelled at J., the car fare to which was fifty cents. Held, in an action for damages: (1) that the conductor, having accepted and retained the fifty cents, could not afterwards eject the plaintiff; (2) that evidence was inadmissible to show the car fare to J.; and, (3) that the company, in order to enforce said regulations, were bound to keep their ticket office open a reasonable time in advance of the departure of the train, to enable passengers to procure their tickets. Du Lawrence v. St. Paul etc. R. R. Co., 2 R. 210.

57. Right to stop over.*—A rule of a railway company that a passenger must go through on same train to his destination, is reasonable, it seems, and forms part of the contract upon the purchase of a ticket, although the rule is unknown to the passenger. Chaney v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 45 D. 190.

A purchaser of a railway ticket from one place to another can not stop over at an intermediate point and continue his journey on the same ticket on another train, where a rule of the railway company provides that parties holding tickets from place to place must go through on the same train, although the passenger has no knowledge of the rule, and there is no restriction on the ticket itself, especially where he is informed of the rule before he stops off, and his money is tendered back to him, deducting the fare to the point where he leaves the train. Id.

A passenger by purchasing a ticket between two points, acquires a right to be carried directly from one point to the other without interruption, but not to be carried from one point to the other at different times and by different lines of conveyance. If he leaves the train before reaching his destination, he forfeits all rights under his contract, and cannot resume his journey on a different train by virtue of the check given to him by the conductor of the original train. State v. Overton, 61 D. 671; McChes v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 345.

The company may charge a way-passenger a higher fare for traveling over its road by different journeys than it charges through-passengers. State v. Overton, 61 D. 671.

* Passenger's right to stop over, see note, 34 R. 22, 23.

Rules as to stop-over tickets, see notes, 41 D. 479, 480; 45 D. 192-198.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The presumption is that a railroad ticket agent at a way station has no authority to change or modify contracts between the company and its through passengers. So held, where a conductor's "check" was pronounced good for another train and day (contrary to the face of the check,) by the agent. McClure v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 345.

One travelling on a "drover's ticket," which states that it is "good" only in his hands for one seat, and "good only until" a day named, has no right to stop over without permission, and if he does so, may be ejected when he enters another train the following day, if he refuses to pay fare. Dictick v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 10 R. 711.

A railway passage ticket only entitles the holder to a continuous passage, and he is not entitled to stop over without consent of the railway company. In an action by a passenger against a railway company for a breach of contract to carry, it appearing that he was not entitled to passage, and was ejected on that account it is immaterial that the conductor was drunk and used insulting language to him at the time. Stone v. O. etc. R'y Co., 29 R. 458.

A statute of Maine, enacting that the holder of a railway ticket shall have the right to stop over and that the ticket shall be good for six years, has no extra-territorial force. Carpenter v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 39 R. 340.

A regulation of a company, requiring passengers desiring to stop over between the starting point and the destination to procure stop-over tickets, is reasonable. Forten v. Milwaukee etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 23.

Plaintiff, before purchasing a ticket at a railway station for another station on the same line, informed the company's ticket agent that he wished to stop off at an intermediate station and then resume his journey to its destination. The agent told him he could do so, and he then purchased a ticket to such destination which contained a statement, "good for this day only." He stopped off at the intermediate station and resumed his journey by another train. Upon refusing to pay fare to the conductor, who declined to accept the ticket, he was ejected from the train, no tender of the extra amount he had paid on his ticket being made. To within a few days previous to the time, stop-over tickets had been given by conductors, but the rule had been changed. Held, that, under the circumstances, the ejection was wrongful, and a verdict against the railway company for damages therefor was sustained. Burnham v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 18 R. 220.

Plaintiff was a passenger on the cars of defendants, under a contract to carry him from Charlotte, N. C., to Augusta, Ga., with the privilege of stopping at Columbia. His ticket was a through ticket from New York to Savannah, with coupons for the different roads—for defendant's road there being two, one from Charlotte to Columbia, and one from Columbia to Augusta. On the passage from Charlotte to Columbia, W., the conductor on the train, detached both coupons, and gave plaintiff a conductor's check, which, by the rules of the company and the general usage of railroads, was good only for that trip. Plaintiff stopped at Columbia, and the next day took the train for Augusta, in charge of J., another conductor. On this train his ticket was again demanded, and on his exhibiting the conductor's check, and his ticket, without the coupon, to Augusta, was informed by J. that they did not answer, and that he must either pay the fare to Augusta, or leave the train. He failed to pay, and was ejected from the train. Held, that the act of J. in ejecting plaintiff from the train was wrongful, and that defendants were liable in damages therefor. Plaintiff's rights grew out of the terms of his contract, giving him the privilege of stopping at Columbia. He did not owe defendants the duty of giving notice of his intention to stop, or of making inquiries as to the force and effect of the conductor's check; and if he failed to give such notice or make such inquiries, he was guilty of no negligence of which defendants had the right to complain. On the contrary, the duty of taking notice of and regarding his right to stop was owed by defendants to him, and when conductor W. detached the coupon from Columbia to Augusta, he should have delivered in its place some token having the same force and effect. Palmer v. Railroad Co., 16 R. 750.

58. Liability for ejecting passenger from car. — 1. *Grounds for expulsion, and when proper. — A passenger on a railroad train who refuses to pay his fare may be removed therefrom at a suitable time and place, if no unnecessary force be used in effecting such removal. State v. Overton, 61 D. 671.

A statute requiring conductors to eject passengers from train on refusal to pay established fare is applicable to all persons properly acting as conductors, without regard to the formality of their appointment or the source of their compensation. Hilliard v. Gould, 66 D. 765.

An attempt of a passenger to use a cancelled ticket, without any explanation of how he became possessed of it, or why he offered it instead of his fare, is presumptive evidence of wrong on his part. Terre Haute etc. R. R. Co. v. Vanatta, 74 D. 96.

A passenger may be ejected for refusing to pay his fare, by the use of all lawful and proper means. O'Brien v. B. & W. R. R. Co., 77 D. 347.

If a railroad company regularly carries passengers by freight train, and holds itself out to the public as so doing, it thereby becomes a common carrier of passengers by such freight train, and has no more right to expel a passenger therefrom without cause than from a regular passenger train. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

A carrier has no right to expel a passenger for non-payment of full fare without first returning the fare paid, the passenger having offered to pay the balance before expulsion but after the train is stopped. Bland v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 36 R. 50.

A railway passenger, who ignorantly and in good faith tenders a tax-certificate for his fare, may not be ejected as a trespasser, and if before ejection another person offers to pay his fare for him, the carrier must receive it and carry him; and if notwithstanding he ejects him, he is liable to punitive damages. Louisville and N. R. R. Co. v. Garrett, 41 R. 640.

If a passenger asks a conductor for a stop-over ticket, and by his mistake receives only a trip check, the second conductor may lawfully eject him for non-payment of additional fare. Yorton v. Milwaukee etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 23.

Where a railway passenger has delirium tremens, annoys and frightens the other passengers, and becomes insensible, he may be removed at a station and put in charge of an overseer of the poor. Atchison etc. R. R. Co. v. Weber, 52 R. 543.

It is not only the right of a conductor to expel from a train a drunken, unruly, boisterous passenger, but when such a person endangers by his acts the lives of the people, it is the duty of such conductor to remove such passenger in order to protect others from violence and danger. But this right must be reasonably exercised, and not so as to inflict wanton or unnecessary injury upon the offending passenger, nor so as to needlessly place him in circumstances of unusual peril. If having exercised reasonable prudence, considering the time, place and circumstances, as also the condition of the drunken man himself, the conductor expels such passenger, who is afterward run over and killed by another train not in fault, the expulsion itself is not such proximate cause of the death as will make the company liable. Railway Co. v. Valleley, 30 R. 601.

The plaintiff, at Jacksonville, bought a ticket on the defendant's railway to Elkhart, and entered a train pointed out to him by the ticket-seller. The conductor accepted the ticket, but immediately notified him that the train did not stop at Elkhart, and that he could get off at Palestine and there resume his journey for Elkhart. He refused to get off and was ejected. Held, proper. International G. N. R'y Co. v. Hassell, 50 R. 525.

2. Place of expulsion. — A passenger may be ejected from a railroad car at any regular station, but not elsewhere, if he refuses to pay the fare required by the railroad company's tariff. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 68 D. 562; Terre Haute etc. R. R. Co. v. Vanatta, 74 D. 96.

A passenger may recover for injury sustained in being ejected from a railroad car elsewhere than at a station, for non-payment of fare, but if there is no misconduct on the part of the company's agents, nor any peculiar circumstances to justify it, a verdict of one thousand dollars damages for the act will be held to be excessive. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Parks, 68 D. 562.

A passenger can only be expelled at a regular station for violating a rule of the company requiring passengers to purchase tickets before entering the train. The willful neglect to comply with that rule and the refusal to pay the fare are substantially the same offense against the rights of the road, and the penalty for the one is no greater than that for the other. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Sutton, 92 D. 81; Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133; Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 92 D. 138.

The company is liable for expelling a passenger at a place other than a regular station, where the passenger, on being informed just before the train started of the rule of the company requiring tickets to be purchased before entering the cars, seeks to buy a ticket, but finds the office closed, and afterwards offers to pay his fare to the conductor, who refuses to receive it. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Sutton, 92 D. 81.

"Regular station" means the usual stopping-place for discharge of passengers. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

A water-tank, even if a "usual stopping-place for trains," is not a "regular station," within the spirit of the law. Ib.

A "regular station" cannot be created by local usage; thus a local usage adopted by persons of getting on or off a train, for their own convenience, at a place other than the regular station, does not make such place a "regular station" for the discharge of passengers. Ib.

The phrase "usual stopping-place," in a statute concerning railroad law, means a regular station for passengers to get on and off the train. Ib.

A passenger who refuses to pay fare may be expelled between stations where the charter of the railroad company is silent upon the subject, and there is no general statute requiring the expulsion to be made at a station. Jeffersonville R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 92 D. 276; McClure v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 345.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A passenger's refusal to surrender his ticket to the conductor when demanded does not constitute the same offense as the refusal to pay fare, and the statutory prohibition against the expulsion of a passenger for non-payment of fare, except at a regular station, does not apply to the former case. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Whittmore, 92 D. 138.

A railroad company may expel a passenger at a place other than a regular station, for the violation of any reasonable rule other than that of non-payment of fare. Id.

The company has a common-law right to expel a passenger from its train, where he has wantonly disregarded any reasonable rule; but the company must not select a dangerous or inconvenient place, and must use no more force than may be necessary for the expulsion; and this right has been restricted by statute in cases of non-payment of fare only. Id.

A statute providing that if any railway passenger shall refuse to pay his fare, he may be ejected at any usual stopping-place does not prohibit his ejection at any other safe point. Toledo etc. R'y Co. v. Wright, 34 R. 277.

A helpless drunken passenger refusing to pay fare, the conductor, knowing his condition, expelled him not at a station, and in the snow, by reason whereof the passenger was severely frozen. Held, that the company was liable. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 50 R. 186.

3. Putting passenger off moving train. — The company is liable for the act of one of its conductors in improperly putting a person off a freight-car while the train is in motion, if it has instructed its conductors not to allow any person to ride in any freight-car attached to its train. Holmes v. Wakefield, 90 D. 171.

A conductor, in excluding a person not entitled to remain on the cars, is acting within scope of his general authority, and the company is responsible for the manner in which he performs such duty. Kline v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 99 D. 282.

The conductor is bound to exercise reasonable care and prudence in removing a trespasser, or one who is unlawfully upon the car; and if he does not do so, and injury results, the company cannot be absolved from liability on the ground that the wrong was mutual. Id.

Where a boy sixteen years old sues for damages for injury sustained by being forcibly expelled from a railroad car while in motion, and the testimony tends to show that he was told that he could not ride, and that he was ordered by the conductor, with a show of force, to get off the car, a nonsuit should not be granted. Id.

Where such boy leaps from the car while in motion, in obedience to the conductor's command, accompanied by a show of force, the court cannot say judicially that his act was voluntary, but should leave it to the jury to say whether, under all the circumstances, the conductor's command did not amount to compulsion. Id.

Where a trespasser upon a locomotive engine was thrown off by the servants of the company, while the engine was moving at a dangerous speed, and run over and injured, the company is liable therefor. Carter v. Louisville etc. R. R. Co., 49 R. 780.

4. Ejecting passenger who has paid fare. — A railroad company sued for ejection by its conductor of a passenger who has paid his fare, has no ground for exception to instruction that if the conductor removed the passenger in wrongful exercise of discretion given him by the company, the company would be liable; and that the conductor would have the right to remove a passenger for refusal to pay fare if there was a regulation to that effect, but if in such a case he put out passengers who had paid their fare the company would be liable. Moore v. Fitchburg R. R. Corp., 64 D. 83.

The company would be liable for the act of the conductor in ejecting a passenger who had paid his fare, though the conductor was authorized to remove only those who had not paid their fare. Id.

5. The force used — resistance by passenger. — A railroad company must respond in damages if it uses unnecessary violence in expelling a passenger who has wantonly disregarded any of its reasonable rules. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Whittmore, 92 D. 138; Higgins v. Watervliet Turnpike etc. Co., 7 R. 293.

In an action against a railroad company, where plaintiff claims to recover solely for ejection from cars, and not on account of the manner of it, and a legal justification for the ejection is shown, it is immaterial whether unnecessary force was used by the conductor. Johnson v. Concord R. R. Corp., 88 D. 199.

A passenger attempted to be ejected from a railroad car while in motion will, from the dangerous nature of such act, be justified in making the same resistance as he would to a direct attack on his life. Sanford v. Eighth Avenue R. R. Co., 80 D. 286.

Though a passenger is liable to ejection in proper manner for refusing to pay fare, his resistance to an attempt to expel him without stopping the car does not present a case of contributory negligence on his part. Id.

Where a passenger on a railroad car has paid his fare and is lawfully upon the train, he has a right to resist any attempt of the train men to remove him, and if he resists to such an extent that extraordinary force is necessary to remove him and he is thereby injured, his resistance will not prevent his recovering damages therefor. English v. Delaware etc. Canal Co., 23 R. 69.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

6. Right to pay fare after refusal, and resume journey. — Passenger has no right to re-enter car from which he has been ejected for non-payment of fare, and demand transportation, upon tendering his fare, especially when he has been ejected at a place where there is no station. O'Brien v. B. & W. R. R. Co., 77 D. 347; Pease v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 54 R. 699. And this rule holds good even though the conductor retains the portion of the fare paid, and although after the stopping of the train to expel him and before expulsion the passenger offers the proper balance. Haffbauer v. Delhi etc. R. R. Co., 35 R. 278. Compare Swan v. Manchester & L. R. R., 42 R. 432; Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Harris, 42 R. 668.

A passenger on a railway train gave to the conductor the fare which he had been accustomed to pay, and the conductor demanded a further sum as due because the passenger had no ticket. This was refused, and the conductor stopped the train. Then the passenger tendered the additional sum, but the conductor refused it, and ejected him. Held, an unlawful ejection, unless the passenger's conduct was willful. Texas and P. R'y Co. v. Bond, 50 R. 532.

7. Right of action for wrongful ejection. — A railroad company is liable for injuries to a passenger, caused by the conductor's negligence or violence in removing him, upon refusal to pay his fare. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Vandiver, 82 D. 520; or where the expulsion arose from a mistake of facts or of judgment on the part of the conductor. Higgins v. Watervliet etc. R. R. Co., 7 R. 293; Maples v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 9 R. 434; Lobs Eric and W. R'y Co. v. Fox, 45 R. 484; Murdock v. Boston and A. R. Co., 50 R. 307; or was the result of the willfulness or wrong motive of the conductor in doing the act complained of. Passenger R. R. Co. v. Young, 8 R. 78; Clark v. Wilmington and W. R. R. Co., 49 R. 647.

Where a conductor of a railway company, acting under his instructions, refuses to accept a ticket issued by another company as agent of the former, and demands full fare, the passenger, if he refuses to leave, cannot recover for the necessary force used by the conductor in putting him off. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Connell, 54 R. 238.

If a railroad passenger rides on a train and refuses to surrender his ticket, or pay, for want of a seat, and is ejected, he may not recover for the ejection, but only for breach of contract to furnish a seat. St. Louis Railway v. Leigh, 55 R. 558.

Plaintiff purchased a ticket on defendant's line from S. to R., and took passage on a train which only went part of the way. The conductor on the train took up and retained the ticket, without giving any check or other evidence of a right to a passage on the next train. Plaintiff took the next train on defendant's line for R., and, when called on for his ticket, informed the conductor that the conductor of the preceding train had retained it. The conductor thereupon demanded the fare, and, it being refused, ejected the plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff was not justified in such refusal; the wrongful taking of his ticket by the preceding conductor not exonerating him from a compliance with the rule requiring passengers to present a ticket or pay the fare. Townsend v. New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 15 R. 419.

Plaintiff purchased a ticket on defendant's railroad from N. to W. He left the train at an intermediate station, and resumed his journey by another train. The conductor on such train took up the ticket and demanded fare from plaintiff, but refused to return the ticket. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a return of the ticket and that by a refusal to return it defendant lost the right to seek to enforce the payment of fare, by an ejection of plaintiff from the train. Vankirk v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 18 R. 404.

Where a passenger on a railroad train, who had paid his fare to a point beyond that evidenced by his ticket, refused on the demand of the conductor to pay the regular additional fare, and was consequently ejected from the train; — held, that he could not maintain an action of trespass on the case against the railroad company for such expulsion. It seems, that his remedy was an action for breach of contract. Frederick v. Marquette etc. R. R. Co., 26 R. 531.

The plaintiff took passage on defendant's railroad, asked the conductor the fare to his destination, which as the plaintiff knew was a short distance off the defendant's line, was informed of the amount, and paid it to the conductor, receiving a check. At W., the end of the defendant's road, he changed cars, giving up his check, and that car was switched off on another road. The conductor had really charged and taken fare only to W., and had no authority to take fare beyond. The new conductor on the second road demanded the additional fare, which the plaintiff refused to pay, and he was ordered off, and left the train without force or indignity on the part of the trainmen. Held, that he could not recover. Haggerty v. Flint etc. R. R. Co., 60 R. 301.

8. Matters of defence. — A railroad company may give evidence of a regulation concerning passengers who refuse to pay their fare, in justification, in an action against it for ejecting a passenger for non-payment of fare. O'Brien v. B. & W. R. R. Co., 77 D. 347.

A regulation by a railway company, restricting the holder of a certain class of tickets to special trains, nothing of the kind appearing on the tickets, will not justify the expulsion of the holder of such a ticket from the regular trains, he having taken passage thereon without knowledge of the regulation. Maroney v. Old Colony R'y Co., 8 R. 305.

A railroad company is not liable for the act of a brakeman in putting a trespasser off a freight train unless so directed by the conductor, who alone is authorized to order such ejection. Marion v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 42 R. 36, note.

Plaintiff bought a ticket over defendant's road with coupons attached. A conductor detached one of the coupons and gave him instead a conductor's check. Before reaching the point for which such check was given, another conductor took the train and demanded the check. Plaintiff could not find it, but tendered him the ticket with the remaining coupons, which was refused, and plaintiff was ejected, without unnecessary force. Held, that defendants were justified. Jerome v. Smith, 21 R. 125.

9. Evidence. — That a passenger was removed from the car by the conductor, that he fell on the road and hurt his head and back, and that he died from the effect of these injuries, is sufficient to justify the court in letting the question of the cause of the death go to the jury, and in refusing to instruct the jury "that under all the circumstances of the case, their verdict should be for the defendant," the railroad company. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Vandier, 82 D. 520.

Plaintiff was ejected from defendant's car for non-payment of fare, after he had tendered what he claimed, and what was afterwards held by the court, to be the legal fare. On the trial defendant offered evidence of plaintiff's declarations, subsequent to the ejection, that he took passage in order to test the question of fares and expecting to be ejected and to make money out of the transaction. Held, that the evidence was admissible and such facts being shown, plaintiff was not entitled to exemplary damages. Cincinnati etc. R. R. Co. v. Cole, 23 R. 729.

10. Question of fact. — It is question for the jury whether a conductor, in ejecting a person from a railroad train, acted within or in excess of his authority. Hillard v. Gould, 66 D. 765.

11. Damages recoverable. — An attempt by a passenger to impose on a railroad company will mitigate damages in an action by such passenger against the company for unlawfully putting him off its train at a place other than a regular station. Terre Haute etc. R. R. Co. v. Vanatta, 74 D. 96.

A passenger attempting to defraud the company by using a canceled ticket to get from one station to another, is entitled to no more than nominal damages against the company for putting him off their cars at a place other than a regular station. Id.

As a railroad company directing its conductor to eject passengers for failure to pay fare is responsible for his act in so doing, it becomes also responsible for any circumstances of aggravation which attends the wrong. Sanford v. Eighth Avenue R. R. Co., 80 D. 286.

A passenger wrongfully expelled from a train may recover more than nominal damages, even though he has received no personal injuries to his body by reason of such expulsion, and has suffered no pecuniary loss. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Flagg, 92 D. 133.

The jury, in estimating the damages, may consider not only the annoyance, vexation, delay, and risk to which the person was subjected, but also the indignity done to him by the mere fact of expulsion; and this, although the proof shows that the conductor acted in good faith, without violence or insult, and that no actual damage was sustained. Id.

In an action against a railroad company to recover damages for being wrongfully ejected from defendant's car by defendant's servants, exemplary or punitive damages are allowable. Atlantic etc. R'y Co. v. Dunn, 2 R. 382; Palmer v. Railroad, 16 R. 750; Cincinnati etc. R. R. Co. v. Cole, 23 R. 729. Contra, Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 20 R. 232; Townsend v. New York Cen. etc. Co., 15 R. 419.

A passenger, unable to purchase a ticket because of the failure of the company to furnish him an opportunity to do so, may pay the excess demanded on the train under protest, and recover it by suit, or refuse to pay it, and hold the corporation liable in damages for an ejection. But exemplary damages can only be recovered where the expulsion is characterized by malice, recklessness, rudeness, or willful wrong. Forbes v. Alabama Great Southern R. R. Co., 56 R. 801. And see Jeffersonville R. R. Co. v. Rogers, 10 R. 103.

Where the passenger is treated with unnecessary and reckless violence and indignity, and the defendant's servants act in a wanton, high-handed and outrageous manner, the jury may award exemplary or punitive damages, even though the plaintiff might in the first instance have rendered himself liable to expulsion on account of his disorderly conduct. Philadelphia etc. R. Co. v. Larkin, 28 R. 442.

A brakeman unlawfully removed plaintiff from defendant's car, and defendant with notice of the trespass retained the brakeman in its service and promoted him. Held, that this amounted to a ratification of the brakeman's act, and that therefore the defendant was liable for punitive damages. Bass v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 24 R. 437.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

59. Liability for expelling passenger from station house.* — A railroad station-house is open to the traveling public, and any person desiring to go upon the cars has the right to go into such house at the proper time, and remain there until the departure of the train, whether he has purchased a ticket or not. Harris v. Stevens, 73 D. 337.

The right to enter and remain at a station-house may be forfeited by improper conduct of the person, or by his violation of the rules of the company, and then the company by its servants may remove him. Id.

Such right to enter and remain at a station-house extends only so far as is reasonably necessary to secure to the traveler the full and perfect exercise and enjoyment of his right to be carried upon the cars, and as to what is a reasonable time will depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Id.

Railroad companies have not only a right to act as common carriers, but are bound to act as such. Id.

The company may remove from the station-house one not intending to travel upon their road, if after request he refuses to depart. Id.

The right to remain at the station-house depends on the intent of the party to take a train expected soon to leave, and, upon being requested to depart, he should make known his intent to the person so requesting him. Id.

A replication in trespass for removal from a station-house should show that plaintiff was there intending to go upon a train that was expected to leave soon, but need not allege that plaintiff went to the station-house for the purpose of traveling on the cars. It is sufficient if such intent was formed after the entry and before the assault. Id.

The platform of a railroad company, at its station, is in no sense a public highway, and is not dedicated to public use as such. It is erected expressly for the accommodation of passengers arriving and departing on trains. Being uninclosed, persons are allowed the privilege of walking over it for other purposes, but they have no rights there, and may, after being notified to leave, be removed by whatever force may be necessary. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 98 D. 317.

60. Liability for assaults upon passengers by employees.† — Where a railroad conductor attempts to seize articles of property in the hands of a passenger for the purpose of enforcing payment of fare, the corporation is liable to an action for assault and battery. Ramsden v. Boston & A. R. R. Co., 6 R. 200.

* Right of, to exclude persons because apprehending danger of annoyance to other passengers, see note, 57 D. 716, 717.

† Assault by employé, when company answerable for, see notes, 28 R. 112, 113; 41 R. 340-343; 42 R. 25-28.

A railroad company is liable for a malicious and criminal assault of a servant upon a passenger when committed in carrying out what the servant supposed to be an order from the company, although such order did not contemplate its enforcement by such means. McKinley v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 24 R. 748.

Where the plaintiff came lawfully upon the cab of a railroad freight train, treating with the conductor for passage, as has frequently been done and as was still being done at the time of the trial by others, the company will be liable for a violent and malicious assault upon him by the conductor. Western A. R. R. v. Turner, 53 R. 842.

The plaintiff, a passenger in defendants' railway car, gave up his ticket to a brakeman, who was authorized to demand and receive it. Shortly after the latter approached plaintiff, denied that he had received his ticket, and assaulted and grossly insulted him. In an action against the company to recover damages, — held, that the defendants were liable, and that plaintiff could recover exemplary damages, and where the defendants retained the servant in their employ after notice of his conduct, the court refused to set aside as excessive a verdict of $4,850. Goddard v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 2 R. 39.

Plaintiff entered defendant's car as a passenger, his dog accompanying him. While the train was in motion, a brakeman attempted to eject the dog but was forcibly prevented by the plaintiff. Afterward, the brakeman suddenly attacked plaintiff, inflicting upon him serious injuries. On the trial of an action for trespass therefor against the company, the court charged that if the brakeman "was acting in the performance of his duty as brakeman, he would be justified in using a reasonable degree of force, necessary and proper to accomplish the removal of the dog from the car, but if he used more violence than was necessary, and inflicted on plaintiff blows that were unnecessary to perform his duty, the company would be liable, and the jury may, in that case, award punitive or exemplary damages." — Held, correct. Hanson v. European etc. R'y Co., 16 R. 404.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for $4,000. Held, that the damages were not so clearly excessive as to justify the court in setting aside the verdict on that ground. Id.

The conductor of a railroad train kissed a female passenger against her will, for which act, upon learning of it, the company discharged him. In an action, by the passenger, against the company, for the assault, held, that the company was liable for compensatory damages, and that a verdict for $1,000 was not excessive. Crocker v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 17 R. 504.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A passenger on defendant's railway, finding no vacant seats in the ordinary coaches, the seats being occupied either by passengers or their baggage, proceeded to a drawing-room car, owned by a private individual, but forming part of the train, and regularly run with it by contract with the defendant, and there took a seat. When called on for extra fare for that seat, he refused, announcing his readiness to go into the other cars if a seat were provided for him there. Thereupon the porter of the drawing-room car, employed by its owner, attempted to eject him. Held, that the defendant was liable for this assault. Thorpe v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 32 R. 325.

A railway ticket-agent left another employee in charge of the ticket office. He returned to a purchaser too little change, and on being asked for it, assaulted him, Held, that the company was liable. Pick v. Chicago etc. Ry Co., 60 R. 878.

The plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's road, applied to the baggage master to have his trunk checked, which not being promptly done, the plaintiff became angry and used threatening and abusive language, whereupon the baggage master seized a hatchet and struck him. Held, that the company was not liable. Little Miami R. R. Co. v. Wetmore, 2 R. 373.

61. Liability of company in regard to baggage generally. 1. When liable as a common carrier. — A railroad company's liability respecting a passenger's baggage is that of a common carrier, and is only excused by the act of God, or of the enemies of the country. Dill v. So. Car. R. R. Co., 62 D. 407.

A railroad company, as a common carrier, is liable as an insurer for the safe transportation of goods and of the baggage of passengers. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506.

It appeared that the baggage had arrived at its destination and been placed in the depot by the company, where it was stolen by burglars during the night. Held, that the baggage "should have been stored in a safe and secure warehouse to exonerate the company" from liability as a common carrier. Bartholomew v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 5 R. 45.

Where baggage is carried past its destination, stored at the wrong station, stolen, and thereby lost to the owner, the company will be liable as a common carrier. Toledo etc. R. R. Co. v. Hammond, 5 R. 221.

2. Delivery to the company—baggage checks. — Baggage checks are evidence of delivery of baggage to the company issuing them; and as a trunk is the usual means of conveying baggage, a check is evidence of the delivery of a trunk, the burden of proof being on the railroad company to show that the baggage delivered was not a trunk.

Dill v. South Carolina R. R. Co., 62 D. 407; Davis v. Mich. South. etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 151.

A railroad company is presumed to receive baggage for transportation, and not for storage, and its liability commences as soon as the baggage is delivered to and received by its agent, notwithstanding the fact that it was not checked at the time it was received, and would not be for several hours, nor until fifteen minutes before the train started, and that the passenger was so informed. Hickox v. Naugatuck R. R. Co., 83 D. 143.

The delivery or non-delivery of a check for baggage is of no importance, as affecting the liability of a carrier, it being merely in the nature of a receipt, and intended as evidence of the ownership and identity of the baggage. Id.

By statute, all railroad corporations in Massachusetts must give checks, when requested to do so, to passengers, for the baggage of such passengers, when delivered for transportation. Najac v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 686.

A railway company whose baggageman accepts baggage from an intending passenger before his purchase of a ticket, contrary to the rule of the company, is liable for its loss without regard to that fact. Lake Shore etc. R. Co. v. Foster, 54 R. 319.

3. Delivery by the company. — The liability of the company as carrier is terminated as to a passenger's baggage by its delivery at the point of destination, either to the passenger or to his authorized agent; but a delivery at such point to the baggage-master of an independent steamboat company, who is not the passenger's authorized agent, but who has, under agreement between the carriers, always entered the cars prior to their arrival at the depot and took the baggage of through-passengers, giving his checks in exchange for those of the railroad company, will not discharge the railroad company from loss resulting after such delivery. Mobile & O. R. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 94 D. 607.

A passenger has a right to regard as an agent of the company a person who handles and takes charge of the baggage upon the arrival of the train at a station, and notice to such person by the passenger as to the destination of his baggage is notice to the company; and the act of such person in relation to the baggage is the act of the company. Ousmit v. Henshaw, 84 D. 646.

The company's custody of baggage during the night is that of carrier, and not of warehousemen, where trains arrive at a late hour of the night, and stop for a few hours, and it is the usual course of the company upon whose train baggage arrives, upon being informed that it is going on in the morning by the next train over a connecting road, to put it in their baggage-room, and keep it for delivery in the morning to the servants of the other road when called for by the owner, and requested to do so. Ib.

4. Duty of passenger to call for baggage. — The duty of the company as to baggage that has reached its final destination is to have it, upon its arrival, ready for delivery upon the platform at the usual place of delivery, until the owner can, in the use of due diligence, call for and receive it; and the owner must call for it within a reasonable time, and must use diligence in calling for and removing it; and if he does not so call for it, then the company shall put it in their baggage-room, and keep it for him; and their custody of it then is only that of warehousemen. Ib.

Reasonable time is generally, by the custom in such cases, immediately upon the arrival of the train. Ib.

The lateness of the hour of arrival will not excuse the passenger from immediately calling for his baggage. Ib.

Plaintiff purchased a ticket at a point on the defendant's railroad for New York and received a check for his trunk accordingly. On the second day after his arrival in New York, plaintiff presented his check at the depot and demanded his trunk, which could not be found. Held, that the defendant's railroad was liable on its contract of carriage for the proper storage of the trunk, although its liability as insurer had been changed by the delay in calling for the trunk to that of bailee. Burnell v. New York Cen. R. R. Co., 6 R. 61.

5. Carrying baggage on separate train. — If the company, by its agent, accepts and undertakes to carry and deliver a passenger's trunk on a subsequent train, it is liable, whether the agent had the authority or not, in the first instance, to bind the company by the agreement to obtain and forward the baggage. The agent's failure to forward the trunk might not make the company liable in case of loss, but it would be liable after assuming the responsibility of carrying it. Warner v. Burlington etc. R. R., 92 D. 389.

Where a passenger pays his fare, and the company, by its agent, undertakes to deliver his trunk by a subsequent train, the company takes upon itself the ordinary liabilities that are assumed by such companies when the passenger goes upon the same train. Ib.

The same rules of care and diligence on the part of the company apply whether baggage is forwarded on the same, preceding, or subsequent train, where the passenger has paid his fare, and his baggage is sent forward pursuant to an agreement, and as a part of the consideration moving from the company for the fare prepaid by the passenger. Ib.

Baggage, consisting of articles which had been purchased by the plaintiff and in use by the plaintiff, his wife and their child, was delivered to the defendant, a Pennsylvania corporation, at Scranton, Penn., for carriage to the city of New York. The plaintiff did not accompany it, but took another train, while the wife and child went by the train with the baggage. The baggage arrived at New York, and was there lost by the negligence of the defendant. Held, 1. That the contract of carriage was not affected by a Pennsylvania statute limiting the carrier's liability; 2. That it was not necessary that the plaintiff should have been on the same train; 3. That in the absence of proof of a gift to the wife, the husband could recover for the wife's paraphernalia; 4. That defendant was at least liable as a warehouseman. Curtis v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 30 R. 271.

6. Extent and limits of the company's liability. — A complaint stating the facts, and charging the company generally for loss of baggage, is good; and if the company is liable, either in the capacity of common carrier or as warehouseman, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. Warner v. Burlington etc. R. R., 92 D. 389.

A railway company is liable as an insurer for the loss of sample-trunks of a travelling salesman, accepted by it as baggage, when it knew their contents; but only for a reasonable time after reaching their destination. Hoeger v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 53 R. 271.

The plaintiff took passage on defendant's railroad at Cleveland, Ohio, for San Francisco. He purchased a ticket entitling him to ride in a certain sleeping-car forming a part of the train. On leaving that car at Toledo, where a stay for dinner was announced to the passengers, he inquired of an employee in that car whether his baggage would be safe if left in the car, and was told to leave it there, that it would be safe. He so left the baggage, and on his return found that car detached and his baggage removed to another, but a hand-bag was missing. He had no notice of the change. In an action to recover for the loss, an offer by the defendant to prove that the sleeping-car did not belong to the railroad company, but to a third person, who under a contract with defendant furnished conductors and servants for it, was rejected. Held, 1. That a finding that the bag was lost through the defendant's negligence was warranted; 2. That the ownership and control of the car formed no defense, it not appearing that the plaintiff knew the facts. Kingsley v. Lake Shore etc. R. R. Co., 28 R. 200.

At Montreal the plaintiff purchased of the Grand Trunk Railway Company a ticket for the city of New York etc rail to Troy or Albany, thence by steamboat. His portmanteau was checked for the same route. At Troy a railroad agent delivered it to defendant, and the latter carried it to New York on its railway and put it in its baggage-room. Three days afterward, as soon as the plaintiff had reason to believe that the defendant had it, he demanded it, but it could not be found. It contained thirty-nine sovereigns and some partly worn clothing. Held, 1. That the defendant, having taken the portmanteau without the plaintiff's knowledge or assent, was responsible for its contents without regard to their character; 2. That the plaintiff was not limited to the recovery for the cash value of the clothing, but might recover what it was worth for use to him. Fairfax v. New York Central etc. R. R. Co., 29 R. 119.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A railway passenger had merchandise checked without disclosing its character. There was no evidence of any agreement to carry it as freight, nor that the baggage-master had any authority to receive it as freight or as personal baggage. Held, that the company was not responsible for its loss, although the baggage-master knew the character of the baggage, and received similar packages from other passengers. Blumstein v. Fitchburg Railroad Co., 34 R. 376.

The plaintiff went to defendant's station at Philadelphia to take passage for Chicago. The baggage master refused checks for his baggage unless he paid for extra baggage. The plaintiff refused this and demanded his baggage. The baggage master declined to deliver it on the ground that it was not accessible before train time. The plaintiff refused to take passage. The next day the defendant's president promised to stop the baggage at Pittsburg and gave him an order for it. He thereupon took passage on defendant's road for Chicago. On arriving at Pittsburg he applied for the baggage, but was told that it had gone on to Chicago, and received an order on the Chicago agent for it. It arrived at Chicago that day, was stored at the station and the next night was destroyed by fire. The plaintiff stopped over at Pittsburg one day and arrived at Chicago the next. Held, that there was a conversion of the baggage at Philadelphia and no waiver of any claim therefor. McCormick v. Pennsylvania Cent. R. R. Co., 52 R. 6.

Plaintiff purchased a railroad ticket, and also a sleeping-car ticket, over the Louisville and Nashville railroad, from Cincinnati to Memphis. The sleeping-car ticket had printed upon its face, "wearing apparel or baggage placed in the car will be entirely at the risk of the owners." He gave his valises on entering the sleeping-car to the porter. It was lost. Held, 1. The railroad company was liable for the loss; 2. No contracts with the sleeping-car company could relieve the railroad company; 3. The condition printed on the sleeping-car ticket had no bearing in the suit against the railroad company. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Katzenberger, 67 R. 232.

7. When liable as bailee or warehouseman only.—Where a passenger on a railroad train, after arriving at the end of his route, takes his baggage into his own exclusive possession and control, but afterwards, for his own convenience, re-delivers it to the baggage master at the depot, to be kept until sent for, the railroad company is not liable for the baggage as a common carrier. It is a gratuitous bailment, and the company is liable only for gross negligence. Minor v. Chicago & N. W. R'y Co., 88 D. 670.

A railroad company is not liable for a passenger's trunk, where he did not call for it after reaching the place of destination, but left it in the hands of the company over night for his own convenience, and without any arrangement with them, and where it was destroyed by the burning of the depot before morning by an accidental fire, which did not occur from any negligence or fault on the part of the company. The subsequent liability of the company became simply that of an ordinary bailee. Roth v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 736.

A railroad company is liable as a warehouseman for loss of baggage, where it receives and undertakes to convey a passenger's trunk by a subsequent train to a given point, but puts it in the common passenger room at the place of destination, instead of the baggage room kept for that purpose, where it is broken open by burglars and rifled of its contents before the passenger has a reasonable time, after its arrival, in which to receive it. Warner v. Burlington etc. R. R., 92 D. 389.

A passenger has a reasonable time after arrival of baggage sent on a subsequent train in which to receive it; and even if the liability of the railroad company ceases, unless the passenger exercises the utmost watchfulness in calling for his baggage, it would still be liable as a warehouseman, at least for a reasonable time. Id.

62. *What is baggage.—C. purchased from defendant for himself and wife a through ticket over several connecting railroads and signed a contract attached, conditioned: "In selling this ticket this company acts as agent and is not responsible beyond its own line." "None of the companies represented in this ticket will assume any liability on baggage except for wearing apparel, and then only for a sum not exceeding $100." The trunk of the wife was robbed of a watch and chain and a diamond pin. The trunk was delivered in good condition by defendant to the connecting road. — Held 1. That the first condition referred only to personal injuries; 2. That the first company was liable for the loss of baggage by a subsequent carrier of the same line; 3. That common carriers cannot limit their liability for their own negligence; 4. That the watch and chain and diamond pin were wearing apparel. Coward v. East Tennessee & G. R. R. Co., 57 R. 226.

63. What is not. — A trunk in a baggage-car is not a proper place for a passenger to carry money for his traveling expenses, so that he may recover for its loss as baggage. Davis v. Mich. South. etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 151.

A railroad company cannot be held liable, either to the owner or his agent, on its ordinary contract to carry a passenger, for losing samples of merchandise delivered into its charge by the agent of the owner as his personal baggage; nor in tort, except for gross negligence. Stimson v. Connecticut R. R. Co., 93 D. 140.

A railroad company is not bound to carry a large amount of gold coin as luggage of a passenger, although he is a county treasurer on his way to pay such coin to the State treasurer, and although it has carried such coin as luggage of such officers for some years, and although it allows an express company on the same train to carry such coin for hire. A county treasurer so carrying coin is not a "public messenger." Pfister v. Cent. Pac. R. R. Co., 59 R. 404.

The plaintiff's travelling salesman delivered to the defendant railroad company at Worcester a trunk belonging to the plaintiff, and filled with samples of jewelry belonging to them, worth $10,000, for transportation as his baggage to Hartford, for which place he purchased a ticket for himself. He did not inform defendant of the character or value of the contents of the trunk. The trunk was of ordinary size and shape, but weighed 135 pounds, and was visibly bound on the outside with heavy iron braces, clamps and hinges. On the arrival of the train at Hartford the trunk was not delivered to the agent, but a bag had been fraudulently substituted by a change of checks, and the trunk was carried to New York, and there delivered to one who presented the check for it, and was afterward found there broken open and robbed of its contents. Held, 1. That the defendant was not liable to plaintiff in contract, for the only contract was to carry the personal baggage of the agent, and 2, was not liable in tort in the absence of gross negligence. Aling v. Boston and A. R. R. Co., 30 R. 667.

64. Retention of custody of baggage by passenger. — A railroad company is not liable for loss of a passenger's overcoat, left by him in his seat on quitting the cars, and subsequently stolen. Tower v. Utica etc. R. R. Co., 42 D. 36.

65. Liability of sleeping-car companies. — A sleeping-car company is bound to use reasonable care to guard a passenger on its cars from theft, and if through want of such care the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable. Lewis v. New York etc. Sleeping Car Co., 56 R. 852, note.

The fact that the company has posted a notice in its cars in which it disclaimed liability for the loss of valuables by passengers cannot be availed of by way of a defense to an action by a passenger whose money, which he had placed beneath the pillow in his berth on going to sleep, was stolen, where it appears that the passenger did not see or know of such notice. Id.

A sleeping-car company is liable to a passenger who while occupying a berth in its car suffers the loss of his personal effects by theft, owing to the company's neglect to maintain a reasonable watch. Woodruff Sleeping etc. Coach Co. v. Diehl, 43 R. 102. Contra see Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 24 R. 258.

A sleeping-car company is liable in an action on the case for excludng a passenger from a berth which it has assigned him and which he has offered to pay for. Nevin v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 46 R. 688. Compare Lawrence v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 59 R. 58.

If a passenger on a sleeping-car leaves his money in the car on leaving the car without the knowledge of the company, and it is stolen by some one not employed by the company, if the company has kept a reasonable guard and watch, it is not liable for the loss; and it is not liable for money stolen by its employees, except a reasonable sum for the expenses of the journey. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Handy, 56 R. 846.

A passenger, who had purchased a ticket for a berth in a sleeping-car, lost it and gave evidence to the conductor that he had done so, and refused to pay over again, whereupon the conductor expelled him, without violence, from the car, and he was compelled to ride in a common car. Held, that plaintiff could recover of the owners of the sleeping-car the price he paid for his ticket and a reasonable compensation for his trouble and inconvenience, but that he could not recover exemplary damages, and that a verdict for $3,000 was excessive. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 20 R. 232.

The plaintiff purchased of the defendant, a sleeping-car company, at Indianapolis, a ticket purporting to entitle him to accommodations in a designated sleeping-car, in a berth to be pointed out by the conductor, thence to New York city. A certain berth was accordingly assigned him, and designated on the ticket, but at Pittsburgh the car was detached, and a different and less safe and comfortable berth was offered him in another car, which he declined. In an action for damages for breach of contract, held,—that he was entitled to a continuous passage in the same car and berth, or in one equally safe, comfortable and convenient; and that it was no defense that the defendant simply rented the cars to the railway companies for the use of passengers. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Taylor, 32 R. 57.

66. Effect of notices and special contracts.*—A common carrier may limit his liability for baggage of passengers by a general notice that it is at their own risk. Loring v. Colder, 49 D. 533.

A limitation on a railroad ticket that it shall be "Good this day only" is reasonable and valid. Elmore v. Sands, 13 R. 617.

A carrier cannot limit his liability by words on a railway ticket or baggage check, even when brought to the passenger's notice, unless the latter agrees to such limitation, and it is for the carrier to show such agreement. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. Campbell, 38 R. 617. S. P., Indianapolis etc. R. Co. v. Cox, 95 D. 640.

A railroad passenger is not bound by a printed notice in his ticket limiting the weight and value of his baggage, unless his attention is called to the notice by the ticket agent, or unless he is aware of it when the ticket is purchased, in which case he will be presumed to have assented to the terms of the notice, in the absence of any objection on his part. Ransom v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 8 R. 543.

The law raises no presumption that a passenger on a railroad has read a notice limiting the company's liability for baggage, from the fact that such notice is printed on the back of a check delivered to the passenger, which check has on its face the words "look on the back," nor from the fact that such notice is printed on a placard posted in the car, and containing other notices which the passenger has read. Malone v. B. & W. R. Co., 74 D. 598.

A railroad company, having passenger trains sufficient to accommodate the public, is under no legal obligation to carry passengers on its freight trains; but where it undertakes to do so, that undertaking, and the extra care and expense involved in it form a sufficient consideration for a general contract, made with all passengers thus carried, limiting its liability. Arnold v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 25 R. 383.

A person was killed while riding on defendants' road, on a season-ticket containing this condition: "The corporation assumes no liability for any personal injury received while in a train to any season-ticket holder." Held—that this condition did not relieve the defendants from their legal liability, on an indictment under a penal statute, for gross negligence. Com. v. Vermont etc. R. R. Co., 11 R. 301.

Plaintiff purchased a ticket of a railroad company marked on its face "Good this day only," and with the date of issue stamped on the back. He did not attempt to use the ticket until seven days afterward, when he presented it to the conductor on the train, but refused to pay his fare. The conductor then ejected him from the train, in accordance with the company's regulations. Held, that the conductor was not liable to the plaintiff in damages. Elmore v. Sands, 13 R. 617.

67. Effect of free tickets and passes.*—A person travelling on a railroad upon a free pass from the company, upon which is indorsed a statement that "it is agreed that the person accepting this ticket assumes all risk of personal injury and loss or damage to property whilst using the same on the trains of the company," does not assume any risks arising from the gross negligence of the servants of the railroad company in running the train. Indiana Cent. R'y Co. v. Mundy, 83 D. 339; Jacobus v. St. Paul etc. R'y Co., 18 R. 360; Cleveland etc. R. R. Co. v. Curran, 2 R. 362.

An agreement in consideration of a free ticket to release the company from all liability for negligence of its servants is valid; and the company will not be liable to the holder of such free ticket for an injury which occurred through such cause. Kinney v. Central R. R. Co., 90 D. 675, S. O. 3 R. 265.

A drover riding on the defendant's railroad on a free pass, to take care of his stock, was killed by the defendant's negligence. The pass provided that he took his own risk of personal injury from any cause whatever, and he signed a release to that effect. Held, that this did not prevent a recovery. Carroll v. Missouri R'y Co., 57 R. 382; Ohio & Mississippi R'y Co. v. Selby, 17 R. 719; Lockwood v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 10 R. 366. Contra see Poucher v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 10 R. 364.

A person riding free and in a baggage-car with the knowledge of the conductor, is not, by reason of such facts, precluded from recovering for an injury caused by a collision, even though he might not, or would not have been injured if he had remained in the passenger car. Washburn v. Nashville etc. R. R. Co., 75 D. 784.

A drover travelling on a railway on a free pass is in effect a passenger for hire, but cannot recover for an injury sustained through the railway company's negligence by reason of his being on top of a cattle car, although he was instructed by a station-agent to ride there instead of in the passenger car, the agent having no authority in the premises, and the person in charge of the train being ignorant that he was in that position. Little Rock etc. R'y v. Miles, 48 R. 10.

Where the acceptor of a gratuitous pass from a railroad company "assumes all risks of accident, and especially agrees that the company shall not be liable, under any circumstances, whether of negligence of their agents or otherwise, for any injury to his person," the contract relieves the company from liability for injury to him by reason of a want of ordinary care of its servants unless the same is expressly made a crime, but not from liability for gross negligence. Assas v. Milwaukee & N. R. R. Co., 57 R. 388, note.

A government mail agent was killed by an accident on the defendant's railroad while riding upon a free pass stipulating for exemption from liability for injuries occasioned by its negligence. Held, that such stipulation was unauthorized and void. Seybolt v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 75.

The plaintiff, desiring to have his horse transported by defendant's railroad, induced A., who had several horses to go by the same train, to include his and have it billed as A.'s. It was the defendant's rule that only one person could go free with stock, and when A. told the conductor there might be another person to accompany him, he replied that he would have to pay fare. The defendant had no knowledge of the plaintiff's intention to go on the train. The plaintiff got no ticket, but intended to pay his fare on the train. Before he could pay there was a collision by the defendant's negligence, and he was injured. Held, that he could not recover. Gardner v. New Haven & N. Co., 50 R. 12.

The owner of horses shipped them for transportation on the defendant's railroad. By oral agreement with the defendant's station agent one person was to be allowed to ride free in the car with them to take care of them, and the plaintiff's intestate so rode to the knowledge of the conductor. While so riding he was killed by the gross negligence of the defendant, but owing to his position in the car. It was the custom of the defendant to allow one person to ride free in the car with stock to take care of it, and to exact a written contract from the owner waiving certain liabilities and conditioned that the person so riding should assume his own risk of personal injury, and to require such person to indorse the contract. In this case, after the accident and before the plaintiff's death, the owner and the agent executed such a contract and signed the name of the plaintiff's intestate on the back. Held, that the company was liable in damages. Lawson v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 54 R. 634.

A boy sixteen years old was employed by the keeper of a restaurant at a station on the defendant's railroad to sell sandwiches and fruit on the trains, and had a free pass for the purpose over the whole road, conditioned that the company should not be liable for any personal injury caused by the negligence of its agents. The boy, while going for a private purpose over a part of the road to which he was not called by his business, and while in a baggage car against the rule of the road, was killed by a collision caused by the gross negligence of the defendant's servants. The company had no interest in the restaurant, but gave the pass as a favor. Held, that the defendant was not liable. Grinwood v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 115.

Whether a railroad company is liable for the baggage of a passenger, in his wife's trunk, if he rides on a free pass over the road, but buys a ticket for his wife, and checks the trunk on her ticket, quære. Malone v. B. & W. R. R. Co., 74 D. 598.

Whether a railroad company is liable as upon an implied guaranty of security of its road to a gratuitous passenger contracting to exempt the company from liability for the negligence of its agents, when the injury resulted from the misconduct of a track master in using bad material in building a bridge, not shown to have been known to the managing officers, questioned. Perkins v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 82 D. 282.

68. Carrying passengers beyond destination. — Carriers are not bound to put passengers off at their place of destination as they are bound to deliver goods, but must allow them sufficient time and opportunity to leave the vehicle. Southern R. R. Co. v. Kendrick, 90 D. 332.

They must distinctly announce stations, and give reasonable warning and time for passengers to alight; but are not required to warn each passenger personally. Id.

Passengers must take notice of the established custom of railroads, and use reasonable care to leave the vehicle and to avoid accidents. Id.

Want of ordinary care by passenger will preclude recovery. If a passenger is asleep when the station is properly announced, he cannot recover for being carried past his destination. Id.

A passenger negligently carried beyond his station may recover from the company compensation for the inconvenience, loss of time, and labor of travelling back. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323.

A railway company is not liable for the neglect of its conductor to fulfil his promise to wake a passenger, whereby he is carried beyond his destination. Nunn v. Georgia Railroad, 51 R. 284; Sevier v. Vicksburg and M. R. R. Co., 48 R. 74.

Plaintiff entered the defendant's cars and paid his fare to B. The train did not stop there, but ran by two miles to a water tank. Plaintiff demanded that the train should return to B, but the conductor gave him the option to ride to the next station and return to B by the first train free of charge, or to leave the train at the tank. He chose the first alternative, and thus reached B. after some three hours' delay. Plaintiff sustained no bodily injury, mental suffering, insult, oppression or pecuniary loss. Held, that the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendants for failing to set him down at B, but that he could not recover punitive damages. Thompson v. N. O. etc. R. R. Co., 19 R. 12.

69. Indictment for causing death.—A statute imposed a penalty upon railroads by whose negligence the life of a person is lost, to be recovered by indictment to the use of the heirs of the deceased. Held, that to bring a case within the statute death must be instantaneous. State v. Grand Trunk R'y, 14 R. 552.

Where a railroad company is prosecuted in the form of an indictment, under a statute, for causing death, the same principles of law and rules of evidence are applicable, as in civil actions for damages resulting in a similar manner. State v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 4 R. 258.

2. Liability for Injuries caused by Negligence.

a. In general.

70. Duty of company as to stations, platforms, etc.—1. General rules.—It is the common-law duty of railway companies to provide reasonable accommodations at their stations for passengers who are invited and expected to travel on their roads. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

If the station room is full, or if it is intolerably offensive by reason of tobacco smoke, so that a passenger has good reasons for not remaining there, it will justify his endeavor to enter the cars as early as possible, especially if it is dark and cold without; and if in so doing he receives an injury from the unsafe and dangerous condition of the platform or steps where passengers would naturally go, the company is liable therefor, if the passenger used proper care, and violated no rule or regulation of the company of which he had actual knowledge, or which, as a reasonable man, he would be bound to presume existed. In such a case there is no error in permitting witnesses to testify as to the condition of the passenger-room with respect to tobacco smoke. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

Railroad companies, as general rule, are bound to keep in safe condition all portions of their platforms, and approaches thereto, to which the public do or would naturally resort, and all portions of their station-grounds reasonably near to the platforms, where passengers or those who have purchased tickets with a view to take passage on their cars would naturally or ordinarily be likely to go. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

Railroad companies are strictly accountable for the safety of passengers. To enable them to properly discharge this duty, they have power to make reasonable rules and regulations respecting the time, mode, and place of entering cars; and these, whether they have ever been written or published, or are posted up or not, when known to the passenger, he is bound to conform to, and he cannot violate them by pursuing another course, and hold the company liable for damages thus occasioned, and which would have been avoided by conforming to the rules and regulations of the company, though the jury may believe that an ordinarily prudent man might have adopted the same course. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

The company has a right to require all passengers about to enter its cars to do so only when the cars are brought up to the platform for that purpose. McDonald v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 114.

Where a husband and wife sue a railroad company as common carriers, to recover damages for injuries to the wife, caused by defective steps to a platform which the train had backed up to, and which was not the usual place for passengers to get on and off the cars, the jury should be instructed to ascertain from the evidence whether the company had designated or set apart the platform in front of the depot as the place where it required all passengers to enter the cars; if so, and this was known to the plaintiffs, and they, in disregard of such requirement, in advance of time, and without any justification, sought to enter the cars at another place, and in so doing met with the injury, then the company would not be liable as common carriers. Id.

If, however, there was no such rule or regulation known to plaintiffs, and they in good faith, and using reasonable care, were seeking to find and enter the cars, the company would be liable for an injury caused by the defective platform or steps leading to it, as the plaintiffs would have a right to presume, it being dark or nearly so, that the platform and its approaches were in a safe condition. Id.

guest are there by authority of the company, as much as a passenger, and as to all such, the platform must be strong enough to bear them no matter how numerous. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 98 D. 317; Hamilton v. Texas and Pac. R'y Co., 53 R. 756.

A railroad platform must be strong enough to bear all persons, no matter how numerous, who are on it by authority of the company, or to whom they occupy such relations as require care on their part. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 98 D. 317.

A person not a passenger, but lawfully on a railroad platform, may recover for injuries received by accidentally stepping through a hole, negligently left in the platform by the company's agent. Toledo etc. R. R. Co. v. Grush, 16 R. 618.

A railroad company is not liable for an injury to a person resulting from its failure to exercise ordinary skill and care in the erection or maintenance of its station-house, where, at the time of receiving the injury, such person was at such station-house by mere permission and sufferance, and not for the purpose of transacting any business with the company or its agents, or on any business connected with the operation of the road. Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co. v. Bingham, 23 R. 751.

Where a large crowd gathered upon a railroad platform in order to see a distinguished party of travelers, and the platform breaks under them, the company is not liable to one of the crowd who was injured, as he was on the platform without authority, and the company owed him no duty. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 98 D. 317.

A regulation by a railway company, forbidding hackmen, peddlers, expressmen and loafers from entering a passenger-room at the station is valid, but a hackman with a check for baggage may enter the baggage-room therefor. Summitt v. State, 41 R. 637.

A railroad company may be compelled to furnish and maintain stations for passengers and freight at all proper points on its line. State v. Republican Valley R. Co. 52 R. 424.

A railroad company is not liable in damages at the suit of a female passenger, on account of obscene and profane language, indecent exposure of the person, and other disorderly conduct by intruders at the station while plaintiff was awaiting the arrival of a train, when it was not shown that the company had notice of any facts which justified the expectation of such an outrage. Batton v. South etc. Ala. R. R. Co., 54 R. 80.

It is negligent in a railroad company to have a station platform higher than the car steps, and to require passengers to board the trains from a baggage-car. Turner v. Vicksburg etc. R. Co. 55 R. 514.

A railroad company is under no obligation to provide stations for passengers or warehouses for freight, unless expressly required by statute. People v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 58 R. 484.

An agreement to give a railroad company an interest in certain land or town lots, provided it would locate its station at a certain specified place, is void as against public policy. Pacific R. R. Co. v. Seely, 100 D. 389; St. Joseph etc. R. R. Co. v. Ryan, 15 R. 357. But compare Louisville etc. R. Co. v. Sumner, 55 R. 719.

2. Illustrations.—A railroad company negligently left its depot platform in a defective condition. A hackman, while carrying a passenger to the depot for transportation, stepped, without fault, into a cavity in the platform, and was injured. Held, that the company was liable, and the liability was the same, notwithstanding the platform was within the limits of the highway. Tobbs v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 8 R. 415.

The plaintiff, without invitation or business, intruded upon a visibly ruinous but uninclosed freight-house of the defendants, used only for storage, and while there a sudden storm blew a fragment of the building upon him and injured him. Held, that he was remediless. Lary v. Cleveland etc. R. R. Co., 41 R. 572.

The plaintiff, waiting on the platform of defendant's station for a train, was struck by a mail-bag thrown from the postal car in the approaching train by a clerk in the employ of the United States. It appeared that it had been long the well-known custom to throw off the bags when passengers were on the platform, and it did not appear that the defendant took any precautions to prevent injury. Held, that a recovery was justifiable. Carpenter v. Boston and A. R. R. Co., 49 R. 540.

A man waiting at a railway station for his wife, whom he expected by train, having a call of nature, and no special resort being provided, stepped off a walk on the grounds, in the dark, and fell into a hole and was hurt. Held, that the company was liable. McKone v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co., 47 R. 596. But compare, Montgomery and E. R'y Co. v. Thompson, 54 R. 72.

71. Liability for fires occasioned by sparks, etc.—1. *In general.—Where a building is set on fire by a spark from an engine of a passing railroad train, and consumed, the company is not liable, in an action of trespass on the case, if it was guilty of no negligence, but used due care and skill in carrying on the business for which it was incorporated by the legislature. Burroughs v. H. R. R. Co., 38 D. 64.

sured, and a release executed by such assured to the railroad company is no bar to such action by the insurance company. Hart v. Western R. R. Co., 46 D. 719.

A railroad company is liable for injury by fire, caused either by negligence in running a railroad train through a city at an unlawful speed, or in opening gates and flues of the engine in a careless manner, and thereby allowing lighted cinders to be thrown upon the plaintiff's premises. Martin v. Western Union R. R. Co., 99 D. 189.

A railway company is not liable for damage to property adjoining its road by a fire kindled by its section-men for the purpose of cooking their meals, while engaged in repairing the track. Morier v. St. Paul etc. R'y Co., 47 R. 793.

Fire caught from the sparks of the defendant's locomotive on the land of D. The defendant's servants were successfully extinguishing it when D. desired them to desist, as he wished to have it burn up the bogs. They desisted, but it communicated to and injured the plaintiff's adjoining land. Held, that the defendant was liable under the statute. Simmonds v. N. Y. etc. R'y Co., 52 R. 687.

2. The care required of the company.—The degree of negligence requisite to render a railroad company liable in damages for fire occasioned by its locomotives to property on the line of the road is that which arises from a want of reasonable care and diligence, and not that arising from the absence of the slightest or least care or caution. Baltimore & S. R. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 59 D. 72.

The term "reasonable care and diligence," as applied to fires on line of railroad caused by engines running on the same, means having engines, properly constructed, in good order, with suitable fixtures for preventing injuries by fire; the spark-catchers, such as are known to the company to have been used and approved of, and best calculated to prevent the emission of sparks, while allowing sufficient draft to create steam enough to propel the engine at proper speed; and such care and diligence in using the locomotive upon the road as would be exercised by skillful, prudent, and discreet persons having control of the engine, regarding their duty to the company, and having a proper desire to avoid injuring property along the road. Ib.

The company has a right to keep at its stations such supplies of wood as are, in its judgment, necessary for its present and future use, and it is not liable for any injury caused by the accidental burning thereof, unless it results from the gross negligence or carelessness of the company, or of its agents and servants. Macon & W. R. R. Co. v. McConnell, 76 D. 685.

The company is required to use greater care in running its trains through villages, where wooden buildings are so near its road as to be exposed to fire from locomotives, than in the open country. Fero v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 78 D. 178.

The company is bound to use the utmost care in running its trains through villages, to guard against fire to wooden buildings near its track, especially at a time when the wind is blowing from the engine towards the buildings. Ib.

The use of any ordinary fuel in locomotives is legal, but the latest improvements in its management in practical use must be applied. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Doak, 91 D. 166.

A railroad company is not liable in damages for the destruction of a bridge by sparks from its locomotive, if it used that degree of care and vigilance which the relative location of its road to other structures demanded. The exercise of ordinary care in procuring a good and safe spark-catcher, such as are in ordinary use, and approved by experienced railroad operators and mechanics, is sufficient on the part of the company. Frankford T. Co. v. Philadelphia R. R. Co., 93 D. 708.

The emission of sparks from the stack of a locomotive is not in itself illegal, and a loss of property adjacent to the railroad from the sparks, apart from misuse, is damnum absque injuria. Ib.

The law, in conferring a right to use an element of danger, protects the person using it, except for the abuse of his privilege; but in proportion to its danger will arise the degree of caution and care he must use. Ib.

It is the duty of a railroad company running its engines in close proximity to buildings to use the utmost vigilance and foresight to avoid injury. Ib.

The rule that all persons are required to so use their own as to prevent injuries to others applies to the same extent to railroad companies as it does to private individuals. Okto & C. R. R. Co. v. Shansfelt, 95 D. 504.

A railroad company is bound, both at common law and under the statute, to keep its line clear of material likely to be ignited from sparks issuing from its locomotives, although the latter be properly constructed and driven. Salmon v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 356; Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Salmon, 23 R. 214.

3. What constitutes negligence on the part of the company.—In an action against a railroad company for setting fire to plaintiff's growing grain by means of sparks escaping from its engine, where the proof shows that the result was not probable from the ordinary work of the engine, this establishes prima facie that negligence existed where there is no proof that the result happened from any unexpected or uncontrollable accident: and the matter should be left to the jury for them to determine the question of negligence or no negligence. This court will not review their finding. Hull v. Soc. V. R. R. Co., 73 D. 656.

Negligence is implied from the escape of fire from a locomotive engine, and the burden of proof is upon the company, in an action against it for such negligence, to show that the most approved mechanical contrivances were used to prevent the escape of fire. Bass v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 81 D. 254.

The company is guilty of negligence, in suffering dry grass and rubbish to be upon its right of way, or in permitting vegetation to grow thereon to such a height and density as to conceal cattle from view. Bass v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 81 D. 254; Richmond & D. R. R. Co. v. Medley, 40 R. 734. Contra, see Ohio & C. R. R. Co. v. Shanefelt, 95 D. 504.

Whether or not a railroad company is guilty of negligence in permitting combustible material to accumulate upon its lands is a question for the jury. Kenes v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 643; Kellogg v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 7 R. 69; Webb v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 10 R. 389.

Where a building near a railroad was discovered to be on fire as a train drawn by an engine without a spark-catcher was passing, the question of negligence on the part of the railroad company is properly submitted to the jury, though there was no direct evidence that the building was fired by sparks from the engine. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Doak, 91 D. 166.

Where, from the defect in the construction of a railway engine, carelessness in those operating it, or want of proper appliances to prevent the emission of sparks or coals of fire from the smokestack, property adjoining a railway is destroyed by fire, the railroad corporation is liable for the damages resulting from such fire; and the absence of the best contrivance known to prevent the spread of fire from a locomotive will be construed as negligence on the part of the railroad corporation. Jackson v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 7 R. 120; Steinweg v. Erie R'y Co., 3 R. 678.

It is evidence of negligence for a railroad company to run an engine without a screen on the smokestack, from which large sparks are emitted so as to set fire to an adjoining dwelling. Bedell v. Long Island R. R. Co., 4 R. 688.

It is a question for the jury whether a railroad company has taken reasonable precaution to prevent the escape of sparks from its engine. Toledo etc. R'y Co. v. Pindar, 5 R. 57.

The mere fact of injury from fire, set by sparks emitted from a railroad engine, is not prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that due care and caution have not been exercised by the company; but this fact may be satisfactorily established by evidence of circumstances bearing more or less directly upon the fact of negligence, such as the absence of, or defect in, the spark arrester, an unlawful speed or an extraordinarily heavy train. Gandy v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 682.

In an action against a railroad company for negligently setting fire to the plaintiff's premises, the plaintiff only proved that the fire originated near the track, and shortly after the passing of a train, and that recently the same engine had been seen to drop glowing cinders and to start other fires. The defendant offered to prove that it was an old custom of the farmers in that vicinity to set fire annually to the leaves and underbrush at that season to improve the pasturage. Held, 1. That the plaintiff's evidence was competent and sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence; 2. That the defendant's offer was incompetent. Green Ridge R. R. Co. v. Brinkman, 54 R. 755.

4. Contributory negligence on part of plaintiff.—The owner of buildings near a railroad track is bound to use such care in protecting them against fire from the locomotives as a man of ordinary prudence would have employed under the same circumstances; and he is not deprived of redress against the company for its negligence by the fact that had he been more vigilant, the injury might not have happened. Pero v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 78 D. 178.

The owner of land contiguous to a railroad is equally chargeable with the company for want of care in respect to the dry grass on his own land; and he cannot recover for injuries by fire thus arising, unless it appears that the negligence of the company was greater than his own. Ohio & O. R. R. Co. v. Shanefelt, 95 D. 504; Chicago etc. R'y Co. v. Stimson, 5 R. 155; Kenes v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 643; Murphy v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 30 R. 721; Richmond and D. R. R. Co. v. Medley, 40 R. 734; but, on the other hand—held, that the failure of a landowner to remove the dry grass or stubble from his own land in order to avoid anticipated danger from fire caused by the default or misconduct of a railroad company was not negligence on his part. Kellogg v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 7 R. 69; Salmon v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 20 R. 356; Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Salmon, 23 R. 214; Pittsburgh etc. R'y v. Jones, 44 R. 334.

It is a question of fact for the jury, whether leaving the door of a building in course of construction near a railroad track partly open, through which sparks from an engine were driven, constitutes such negligence on the part of the owner or his servants as would preclude his recovery against the railroad company for a fire caused thereby. Fero v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 78 D. 178. S. P., Martin v. Western Union R. R. Co., 99 D. 189; Louisville etc. Ry Co. v. Richardson, 32 R. 94.

Railroad companies were made liable by statute for damages caused by fire from their locomotives, and were given an insurable interest in the property exposed along their line. Held, that their liability was absolute and not dependent on the question whether adjoining property owners had been guilty of contributory negligence or not. Roswell v. Railroad, 24 R. 59.

The plaintiffs owned a warehouse, with a branch track connecting with defendant's railway, and employed the defendants to draw cars upon that track for their accommodation. The engine thus used emitted sparks; the plaintiffs complained of this to the defendants; the defendants promised to repair it, but neglected to do so; and the plaintiffs continued to employ the engine. The warehouse being set on fire by sparks from this engine—held, that the plaintiffs had no remedy therefor against defendants. Marquette etc. R. R. Co. v. Spear, 38 R. 242.

5. Proximate and remote cause of injury.—Where sparks from a locomotive set fire to a shop, and from the shop the fire spreads across a street to a dwelling-house, the owner of such house can recover from the railroad company his loss, under a statute making it liable for an injury done "by fire communicated by its locomotive engine." Hart v. Western R. R. Co., 46 D. 719.

A railroad corporation is liable for injury to woodland by fire "communicated" from a locomotive, under Mass. Gen. Stat., chap. 63, sec. 101, making such corporations responsible in damages to any person "whose buildings or other property may be injured by fire communicated by its locomotive engines," where a spark from the locomotive sets fire to grass near the track, and the fire spreads in a direct line, without any break, across land of several different proprietors, and a highway, to the woodland about half a mile distant from the track. Perley v. Eastern R. R. Co., 96 D. 645. And this, although back-fires were kindled by the owner, in good faith and proper exercise of discretion, in a vain effort to stop the fire, and while burning, were swallowed up in the advancing flame, which went on and destroyed the property. Id.

Where a locomotive, which is well constructed and properly managed, nevertheless emits sparks sufficient to set fire to cut and dried grass and weeds which the railroad company had permitted to lie in a combustible state upon its land along the track, and the fire is communicated thence to an adjoining field and, through stubble and uncut but dry grass, to a wheatstack, which is thus consumed, the company is liable for the loss.

Flynn v. San Francisco etc. R. R. Co., 6 R. 595.

The fact that natural agencies, as high winds or drought, contributed to cause the injury, or that the property destroyed was at a distance from the place where it originated, does not affect the question as to the liability of the railroad company, or render the fire the remote and not the proximate cause of the injury done. Kellogg v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 7 R. 69.

Through the negligence of the defendant, a railroad company, sparks from a locomotive set fire to a warehouse. The wind was high, and the building of plaintiff's, two hundred feet from the warehouse, took fire therefrom, and was consumed. In an action to recover for the loss of plaintiff's building,—held, that the question of proximate or remote cause was for the jury, to be determined under the instruction that the railroad company is to be held responsible, if the loss is a natural consequence of its alleged carelessness, which might have been foreseen by any reasonable person, but it is not to be held responsible for injuries, which could not have been foreseen or expected as the results of its negligence or misconduct. Fent v. Toledo etc. Ry Co., 14 R. 13.

In a time of extreme drought, one of defendant's locomotives, in passing along its road, opposite plaintiff's land, dropped live coals upon the track, which set fire to a tie, the fire thence communicated to weeds, grass and rubbish, which defendant had suffered to accumulate by the side of its track, and thence it spread to plaintiff's land, burning and destroying his growing forest trees. Held, that the damages to plaintiff were not too remote. Webb v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 10 R. 389.

A railway locomotive engine emitted sparks to land adjoining the plaintiff's where they ignited leaves, briars, brush, stumps, and logs, and the fire was continuously conducted by the same, in about two hours, to a pile of lumber on the plaintiff's land, three hundred feet distant, which it consumed. The weather was dry, and the wind was high in that direction. There was some evidence of another origin. Held, that it was a question of fact whether the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of injury. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. McKeen, 35 R. 644.

A railroad company is liable for injury to land by fire, caused by its negligence, although there is land belonging to another owner intermediate between the railroad and the plaintiff's land. Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Salmon, 23 R. 214. S. P., Clemens v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 460; Atchison etc. R. R. Co. v. Stanford, 15 R. 362; Poeppers v. Missouri etc. Ry Co., 29 R. 518.

By reason of defendant's negligence sparks from one of its locomotives set fire large through the land of a stranger upon its road, under a statute requiring it to guard the sides of its track by fences and cattle-guards, if the injury is solely the result of the company's negligence in not placing and keeping such fences and guards where needful. Broune v. Providence etc. R. R. Co., 71 D. 736.

Whether a railroad company is liable for injuries to cattle straying on its track, in cases where the owner's negligence contributed to the injury, quare. Id.

Whether or not a company is bound to fence their track, in the absence of a statute requiring them to do so, when their roads run where cattle usually roam, they are bound to use means to exclude them from their track, by fencing, forcing the owner to keep them home, by moderating the speed of their trains, or otherwise. Sullivan v. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 698.

The owner of cattle found on an unfenced railroad is not a trespasser or wrong-doer, but is entitled to the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care on the part of the railroad company, under all the circumstances, to avoid any injury to his cattle. Central Ohio R. R. Co. v. Lawrence, 82 D. 434.

A company operating an unfenced road is not liable for injuries to cattle found on its track, if its use of the track is reasonable, and it exercises reasonable care under all circumstances to avoid the injury; but for an injury to cattle resulting from the unreasonable and dangerous use of the railroad or from the want of such care, the company will be liable. Id.

The company is not bound to consider the increased risk to cattle on its unfenced track in determining the rate of speed at which its train shall run, such speed being otherwise reasonable and proper in view of the object to be accomplished. A high rate of speed, though dangerous, is a reasonable use of the land, because it is for a proper object, and a highly beneficial purpose, and the danger may be avoided by proper care. Id.

The owners of cattle who permit them to run at large in the vicinity of an uninclosed railroad track can ask no more than that the agents of the railroad company, in the legitimate conduct of its business, running its trains with a speed regulated by the grade of its road, the capacity of its locomotive power, and the safety of the persons and property carried, shall, with due regard to the safety of the persons and property in their charge as the paramount consideration, exercise ordinary and reasonable care to avoid unnecessary injury to animals casually coming upon their uninclosed road. Id.

Where there is nothing in the running of a train or its rate of speed at a particular time and place inconsistent with the general and legitimate conduct of the business of the railroad company, the occasion and necessity therefor do not concern the owner of cattle running at large, and he cannot inquire whether the rate of speed was greater than usual for a particular train at a particular place, and what was the object of such rate. Id.

Where it does not appear that the rate of speed at which a train was running was a rate at which the railroad company, in the ordinary and legitimate conduct of its business, might not reasonably run its train, the inquiry in an action for injuries to cattle on an uninclosed track must be confined to the question whether, under the circumstances of the case, the defendants exercised reasonable and proper care in running their engine to avoid injury to the cattle of plaintiff, and this question is for the jury. Id.

If the company fail to fence its track, it is absolutely liable for twice the value of stock injured or killed by reason of the want of such fence, unless the injury is caused by the willful act of the owner. But if such track is properly fenced or inclosed, the company is liable only for gross negligence. Such is the statutory rule in Iowa. Russell v. Hanley, 89 D. 535.

A railroad corporation is not liable to owner of sheep killed upon its track, under the Mass. Gen. Stat. ch. 63, where he negligently suffers them to escape from his own land, or where they escape from land adjoining the railroad, upon which he suffers them to be wrongfully, although through a defective fence which the corporation is bound to suitably make and maintain. Hames v. Salem etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 676.

Where the live stock of plaintiff, running in his field, strayed upon the defendant's unfenced railroad and were killed by a passing train, these facts unexplained make a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant. The plaintiff was not chargeable with contributory negligence, from the fact that he knew that the railroad was not fenced when he turned the stock into the field. McCoy v. California Pac. R. R. Co., 6 R. 623.

A horse, while being led on a highway, escaped without his keeper's fault, and running some fifty rods, pursued by his keeper, entered upon an unfenced railway track, and was there injured by a train. Held, that the defendant was liable. Amstein v. Gardner, 42 R. 421.

A statute making railways liable for stock killed by reason of neglect to fence their tracks, and for attorneys' fees in addition, is not unconstitutional. Peoria etc. R. Co. v. Duggan, 50 R. 619.

4. Effect of negligence of owner. — If cattle trespass on a railroad track and are run over by the cars, the owner cannot recover damages therefor, though he exercised ordinary care and prudence to take care of them. He is bound at his peril to keep his cattle away from the track where they have no right to be. Tonawanda R. R. Co. v. Munger, 49 D. 239.

Negligence contributing to the loss is imputed by law to the owner of animals which escape from his inclosure and stray upon a railroad track, where they are run over; and evidence that his fences were good, or that the animals were quiet and orderly, will not enable him to recover from the company for the accidental or careless killing of them. Munger v. Tonawanda R. R. Co., 53 D. 384.

An owner permitting a horse to run at large upon a highway is chargeable with same degree of negligence, when he knows of the exposure and liability to injuries from passing trains, as is a railroad corporation in not constructing its fences and cattle-guards; and as much care and prudence is required of the owner in keeping his property from exposure to such injuries as is required of the corporation in guarding against their commission. Trow v. Vermont Cent. R. R. Co., 58 D. 191.

A party permitting his cattle to be on a railroad track is not blameless. Chicago & Miss. R. R. Co. v. Patchin, 61 D. 65.

In determining whether negligence on part of plaintiff is proximate or remote, as affecting his right to recover, in an action against a railroad company for damages for killing animals, the degrees of negligence (as slight, ordinary, or gross) are as much to be considered as is the question whether his contributory negligence was proximate or remote in the sense of its having occurred, or of his being present, at the time of the alleged injury; and it would be error for a court to instruct the jury that "proximate negligence is negligence at the time of the happening of the injury complained of"; that "remote negligence is that which does not occur at the time of such injury"; that "the plaintiff, in suffering his animals to run at large in the vicinity of the railroad, was only guilty of remote negligence"; and that if so, and if the defendant was guilty of gross negligence, the latter was liable for the damage. Chicago etc. R'y Co. v. Goss, 84 D. 755.

A distinction is to be made, in determining whether plaintiff's negligence would preclude his recovery, between the case of an owner whose cattle escape from his inclosure and stray upon a railroad against his will, and that of one who voluntarily permits them to go there, or to range in places where it is probable that they will do so. Id.

Plaintiff's horse escaped from his own land on to defendant's railroad and was killed by a locomotive. Held, that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in turning the horse upon his land knowing that it was not fenced, when it was the legal duty of the railroad company to build the fence. Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 20 R. 698.

S. P., Burlington etc. R. R. Co. v. Webb, 53 R. 809.

5. Pleading, evidence, damages, etc.—A declaration against a railroad company for killing stock need not negative the possibility that the stock may have been killed at a properly fenced farm-crossing; in which case, the company would not have been liable under the statute. Great Western R. R. Co. v. Helm, 81 D. 226.

Evidence of previous habits and conduct of a person in charge of a train at the time when an accident happened, by which injury was done to the plaintiff's cattle, is admissible in an action to recover for such injury, for the purpose of showing that his alleged misconduct at the time of the injury was in keeping with his general character. Vicksburg & J. R. R. Co. v. Patton, 66 D. 552.

To sustain an action for killing cattle the plaintiff must prove negligence on the part of the company, and the absence of contributory negligence on his part. Perkins v. Eastern R. R. Co., 50 D. 589.

Negligence of the engineer in running over cattle must appear to render the company liable therefor. Danner v. So. Car. R. R. Co., 55 D. 678.

Proof of damage done by a railroad train establishes a case of negligence, and not of accident, where nothing more appears; and the burden of proof is thereby thrown upon the railroad company to show want of negligence in its agents in charge of the train; and their absence at the trial creates a strong presumption against the company, for they alone could give the circumstances attending the doing of the injury. Murray v. So. Car. R. R. Co., 70 D. 219; Danner v. So. Car. R. R. Co., 55 D. 678.

Mere proof of killing of cattle on a railroad track is not sufficient to charge the company with negligence. Wanton, willful, or gross negligence on the part of the company must be shown in order to make it liable. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Patchin, 61 D. 65.

That a horse was killed in the night-time by a train does not relieve the company of the burden of proof that the killing was accidental, and not by negligence. Murray v. So. Car. R. R. Co., 70 D. 219.

Exemplary damages may be assessed against a railroad company, in an action for killing cattle upon its track, where the evidence shows gross negligence, or a wanton and reckless disposition on the part of its agents to injure or destroy the plaintiff's property. Vicksburg & J. R. R. Co. v. Patton, 66 D. 552.

78. Liability for injuries to strangers assisting employees.—Where an employee of a railroad company, engaged in its service summons his son, eleven years old, to his temporary assistance, and the son while so assisting is injured by the negligence of another railroad company, the latter is liable to the son therefor. Pennsylvania Cem. v. Gallagher, 48 R. 689.

At a station where defendants' train of cars had stopped, the engine, tender and one car ran down to the water-tank in charge of the fireman, who asked a boy ten years old, standing there, to put in the hose and turn on the water. While the boy was climbing upon the tender to comply with the request, some detached cars belonging to the train came down with ordinary force, and struck the car next to the tender, whereby the boy was thrown down and crushed to death. In an action by the parents of the boy — Held, that the defendants were not liable. Flower v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 8 R. 251.

The conductor of a train ordered a boy standing by, and who was not in the employ of the railroad company, to uncouple the cars, the boy refused, but on being threatened by the conductor uncoupled the cars, and in doing so was injured. Held, that the railroad company was not liable. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Harrison, 12 R. 356.

An infant rode upon a freight car in a freight train, without the consent of his parents and without the knowledge of the conductor, and without paying his fare. The rules of the company prohibited the carrying of passengers without fare, or on freight trains except in the caboose. The conductor knowingly suffered him to remain on the freight car. A brakeman, without authority, set him at a dangerous service on the car, in trying to perform which he was injured. Held, that the company was not liable. Sherman v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co. 87 R. 423.

On the request of a railway employee, the plaintiff, not in the company's employment, got on a slowly moving car on a switch and applied the brake, and while so occupied was injured by a collision with other cars, negligently produced by other servants of the company. Held, that he had no remedy against the company. Everhart v. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co., 41 R. 567.

b. Injuries to Passengers.

74. The care required from the company.*—1. General rules.—A railroad carrying passengers is bound to the most exact care and diligence in all arrangements necessary for their safety, including not only the management of the trains and cars, but also the structure and care of the track. McElroy v. Nashua etc. R. R. Corp., 50 D. 794; McPadden v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 4 R. 706.

The company contracts with a passenger that they will furnish a safe and sufficient roadway to the place of his destination,

* Degree of care required from the company as carriers of passengers, see note, 43 D. 856-862.

that their cars are staunch and roadworthy, that they have taken means beforehand to guard against any danger that might beset travel, and that their servants are sober, competent men. Sullivan v. Phila. etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 698.

The company is bound to provide safe and secure carriage for the transportation of passengers. Nothing exempts it from this responsibility but the existence of latent defects which no reasonable degree of human skill and foresight could guard against. This obligation extends to every species of appliance used by the company in the business in which it is engaged. Curtis v. R. & S. R. R. Co., 75 D. 258; Powell v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 75 D. 564.

Carriers of passengers on railroads are not insurers of the lives and limbs of their passengers, but the implied contract binds them to exercise the highest degree of care and prudence, and makes them liable for the slightest neglect. Peters v. Rylands, 59 D. 746; Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323; Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506; Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409; Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. Breinig, 90 D. 49; Taylor v. Grand Trunk Ry Co., 2 R. 229. But the party injured must be free from such negligence as contributes to the injury complained of. Chicago & Miss. R. R. Co. v. Patchin, 61 D. 65.

Railroad companies are not distinguished from stage companies in the degree of diligence required and the extent of liability incurred. Gillemwater v. Madison & I. R. R. Co., 61 D. 101.

Public policy demands that the law should be applied as rigidly to railroad companies as to any other species of passenger carriers. Id.

Railroad companies must make proper regulations for the running of trains and conform to them, or be responsible for all consequences. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. George, 71 D. 239.

The public is entitled without distinction to travel upon railroads, but it is entitled to do so only in a particular manner, and in vehicles controlled and managed by the company. This control and management extends to every part of the service. Powell v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 75 D. 564.

A railroad company is not bound to receive an unusual number of passengers, beyond what it may be bound to provide with safe accommodations; but if it does receive them without condition or notice of its inability to provide for their safety, it assumes all the obligations usually incumbent upon a carrier of passengers. Evansville etc. R. R. Co. v. Duncan, 92 D. 322.

A railroad company is charged with the duty of preserving order on its trains, and is liable for injuries sustained by a passenger at the hands of a fellow-passenger in consequence of a failure on the part of the agents of the company to discharge this duty. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Burke, 24 R. 689.

2. As to the selection of employees. — A careful selection of servants with reference to skill and competence by a railroad company, and the occurrence of a negligent act without its sanction, will not relieve it from liability for injury suffered by a passenger from such negligent act. Gillevater v. Madison & I. R. R. Co., 61 D. 101.

The company is bound to employ all necessary officers and agents, and to instruct them in their respective duties, so as to secure to the public a safe transportation. Powell v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 75 D. 564.

A scarcity of competent hands does not excuse the company in employing incompetent or intemperate men to run its trains. And testimony on the part of the company to show the efforts it made to secure competent train-hands is not admissible in an action against it for negligence. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Boots, 98 D. 229.

3. As respects access to and from cars. — Owners of railroads that are public highways are bound to make suitable places of access to their roads, and keep the same in such condition that they may safely accommodate those who may be reasonably expected to use them; but there is no obligation to do anything, either for the convenience or safety of passengers, at points where none are expected to pass. Murch v. Concord R. R. Corp., 61 D. 631. S. P., Warren v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 85 D. 700.

A railroad company, as a passenger carrier, is bound to the most exact care, not only in the management of its trains and cars, but also in the structure and care of its track, and in all subsidiary arrangements necessary to the safety of passengers; and a wharf, which is a passage way for those going to and from the cars, is a subsidiary arrangement, which passengers have a right to require to be safe. Knight v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 96 D. 449.

Railroad companies are not required to have special agents wearing badges, to prevent passengers from injuring themselves by negligent acts in getting on or off railroad trains. They have a right to assume that travelers can take care of themselves in traveling upon railroads constructed with proper care and skill. Detroit etc. R. R. Co. v. Curtis, 99 D. 141.

4. Duty towards passengers on freight, or construction trains. — Railroad companies occasionally transporting passengers upon freight trains are not common carriers of passengers upon such trains, and are not chargeable for the want of accommodations such as would be otherwise justly required. Murch v. Concord R. R. Corp., 61 D. 631.

A railroad company carrying passengers on construction trains must be held to the same degree of diligence as when regular passenger coaches are used. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Muhling, 81 D. 336.

5. *Duty towards persons not passengers. — A passenger carrier need exercise only ordinary care toward one who enters the cars not as a passenger, but to assist an aged and infirm relative to a seat, and is not bound to give such person any special notice of the time of the departure of the train. Lucas v. New Bedford etc. R. R. Co., 66 D. 406. In such case the carrier is only required to use such care and diligence as would be exercised by skillful, prudent, and discreet persons having the control and management of such business, regarding their duty to the interests of all concerned: such a party is not entitled to recover if his negligence directly contributed to his injury, or if the accident could have been avoided by such care as might under all the circumstances have been reasonably expected to be exercised by one of his age and intelligence. This is true although the injury could have been prevented by the exercise of the utmost care and diligence on the part of the carrier. State v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 87 D. 600.

6. Illustrations. — In an action against a railroad company to recover for injuries sustained by an accident, the court charged the jury that "defendants must use such degree of care as is practicable short of incurring an expense which would render it altogether impossible to conduct the business." Held, to be erroneous, as making the ability of the corporation the measure of the care and diligence required. While, as a rule, railroad corporations are not bound to exercise such a degree of care as would render it practically impossible to continue this mode of transportation, yet the standard of care and diligence for a particular railroad cannot be made to depend upon its pecuniary condition. It is bound to provide all the agencies suited to the nature and extent of the business it purposes to do, irrespective of any fluctuation in its revenue. Taylor v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 2 R. 229.

Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's cars, was assaulted by other passengers and appealed to the train conductor for protection. The conductor, after asking the assailants to desist, became frightened and ran away, and made no further effort to protect the plaintiff, who was thereupon beaten and injured. Held, that the conductor having failed to use the means at his disposal to protect the plaintiff, the defendant was liable. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Burke, 24 R. 689. And see Goddard v. Grand Trunk R'y Co., 2 R. 39.

The plaintiff was a passenger on a railway train. On its arrival in New York city, the cars were disconnected and drawn by horses, and the car in which plaintiff was riding was left standing alone, with no employee of the defendant in charge of it. While there, persons, not passengers nor employees, robbed him of $16,000 in bonds which he had about him. In an action to recover the value of the bonds,—held, that they were not a part of the property the risk of which he could impose on the defendant, without notice to or knowledge by them that he was carrying them; and thus could not be considered in fixing the damages for which they were liable by reason of their negligent failure to protect his person. Weeks v. N. Y. etc. R. Co., 28 R. 104.

The plaintiffs, colored persons, purchased tickets over the defendant's road, upon an excursion, and took seats in a car with white persons. There were separate cars provided for colored people but they did not know it. The white persons annoyed and insulted them, and they complained to the conductor. He accepted their tickets, and said they might sit in that car, but that as it was an excursion train he could not control the conduct of the other passengers, and that they might expect rude treatment. The treatment continuing, similar appeals to the conductor met with a refusal of protection. Subsequently the white passengers violently ejected the plaintiffs from that car, and they entered one furnished for colored people, but were obliged to stand up for some time. The instructions of the company to conductors were to advise colored passengers found in cars set apart for white persons, to go to the cars provided for colored persons, but if they declined to do so, to allow them to remain. Held, that the defendant was liable for the assault. Britton v. Atlanta etc. R'y Co., 43 R. 749.

75. Who are deemed passengers.

—1. General rules.—Every one riding in a railway car is presumed to be there lawfully as a passenger, and the onus is upon the carrier to prove that he was a trespasser. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Books, 98 D. 229.

One who has been employed by the company, but who, in pursuit of his private business, takes passage on its cars is a passenger, though no fare is collected from him. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Muhling, 81 D. 336.

A railroad owes the same duty to mail agents riding in postal cars that it does to passengers. Seybolt v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 75.

One who by permission of the engineer of a freight train, acting as conductor, takes passage on such train and pays fare, is entitled to the privileges of a passenger, although the engineer has been forbidden to receive passengers on the train, provided the passenger does not know of such rules. Hanson v. Mansfield R'y and T. Co., 58 R. 162.

It is not negligent in such passenger to ride on the locomotive by direction of the engineer-conductor. Id.

A person who has secured a railroad ticket and is merely crossing a side-track for the purpose of taking the train, is not a passenger, and cannot recover as such, if he is injured by being struck by the train. Indiana Central R'y Co. v. Hudelson, 74 D. 254. Contra see Warren v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 85 D. 700.

In the absence of proof that a railway company is accustomed to carry passengers upon hand-cars, one who is injured while thus riding has no cause of action against the company, although invited thus to ride by the section foreman. Hoar v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 35 R. 299.

One who entered a railway train as an escort for a woman, to find her a seat, and who was injured in the endeavor to leave the train while it was under way, with some papers in his hands, is without remedy. Central R. R. & B. Co. v. Letcher, 44 R. 505.

One who is injured by the negligence of a railway company while traveling on one of its trains upon a commutation ticket issued to another person, and by its terms not transferable, has no remedy against the company. Way v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 52 R. 431.

2. Illustrations.—A passenger was riding in the saloon-car of a freight train, contrary to the rules of the railroad company, but the conductor made no objection, and collected fare of him for a first-class passage. Held, that he could recover for injuries received from the negligence of the railroad company. Dunn v. Grand Trunk R'y, 4 R. 267.

A railroad corporation, in consideration of the payment by a person of a certain sum of money, and of his agreement to supply the passengers on the trains with iced water, issued to him a season ticket over their road, and permitted him to sell popped corn on their trains. Held, that while traveling under this contract he was a passenger, and not a servant of the corporation. Com. v. Vermont and M. R. R. Co., 11 R. 301.

An express company had, by contract with a railroad company, the use of a car in which their agent rode without paying fare. The agent, without the authority of his employers, took the plaintiff with him in the car for the purpose of teaching him the business, and the conductor, supposing plaintiff to be an agent of the express company, suffered him to ride without paying fare. An accident happening, plaintiff was injured. Held, that plaintiff was not a passenger, and could not maintain an action against the railroad company. Union Pacific R'y Co. v. Nichols, 12 R. 475.

Plaintiff was injured while riding upon a car attached to defendant's freight train. It appeared that defendant permitted passengers to be carried upon some of its freight trains, but not upon this one; that the plaintiff went aboard said train in good faith, supposing that it was authorized to carry passengers, and was not informed to the contrary until after said accident; that the train was not brought to the passenger platform, and that the ticket office was not open. Held, that the jury might find that the plaintiff was a passenger and entitled to recover. Lucas v. Milwaukee etc. R'y Co., 14 R. 735. S. P., Creed v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 27 R. 693. Contra see Eaton v. Delaware etc. R. Co., 15 R. 513; Houston and T. Cent. R'y Co. v. Moore, 30 R. 98.

The plaintiff's intestate having been riding on the engine, got off at a station where the train stopped, and ran to get into a car, but did not reach it until the train had started, and then stood on the platform until he fell off, owing to the swaying of the train, and was killed. Held, that he had not become a "passenger" within the statute, and the railroad company was not liable. Merrill v. Eastern R. R. Co., 52 R. 705.

On the person of a passenger, killed by the negligence of a railway company, were found a non-transferable pass issued to another person, and a conductor's check. Held, that it must be presumed that he was a lawful passenger. Louisville R'y Co. v. Thompson, 57 R. 120.

76. Duty towards sick passengers.* — Sick persons have the right to enter the cars of a railroad company; and as common carriers of passengers, the company cannot prevent them from entering their cars. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Statham, 97 D. 478.

The company owes no enhanced duty to sick persons and persons unable to take care of themselves. Railroad cars are not traveling hospitals, nor their employees nurses. It is the duty of such disabled persons to provide for themselves proper assistance while traveling in railroad cars. It is not the duty of railroad companies to supply it. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Statham, 97 D. 478. Contra see Sheridan v. Brooklyn & N. R. R. Co., 93 D. 490.

The duty of a railroad conductor extends no further than to have stations announced, and to have the train stop long enough at each station for passengers to get on and off. Any assistance he may extend to sick persons getting on or off a train is merely an act of courtesy, and not in the line of his duty. It is not the duty of conductors to see to the debarkation of passengers, even though they are sick. New Orleans etc. R. R. Co. v. Statham, 97 D. 478.

If a passenger is sick, unable to walk, and requires assistance to get from the car, and longer delay than usual is necessary at the station for him to be safely removed, he should give timely notice of the same to the conductor. Id.

The rights of well passengers must be consulted and respected as well as those of sick passengers by the employees of railroad companies in the discharge of their public duties. Id.

77. For what injuries the company is liable.*—Railroads are answerable for every injury caused by defects in roads, cars, or engines, or by any negligence, however slight, of the company or its agents. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323; Black v. Carrollton R. R. Co., 63 D. 586.

The company is liable for injury to a passenger by misplacement of a switch constituting part of its road, by the negligence of the servant of another company connecting with such road, by whom such switch is provided. McElroy v. Nashua etc. R. R. Corp., 50 D. 79.

The owner of passenger cars engaged in carrying passengers over a track belonging to the state, by which also the motive power is furnished, is liable for injuries to a passenger from a collision, though it were caused by the negligence of the engineer who is employed by the state; and if there be a common liability, that of the state can not be enforced by action, and this circumstance does not diminish that of the carrier. Peters v. Rylands, 59 D. 746.

A railroad company is liable for injury sustained by a passenger in consequence of the breaking of an axle, attributable to a defect in the material of which it was made, notwithstanding the defect was latent and could not have been discovered by ordinary inspection, if it could have been ascertained by any tests known to manufacturers of such articles. The fact that the company purchased the car from experienced and skillful manufacturers does not shield them from liability. Hegeman v. Western R. R. Corp., 64 D. 517.

A verdict against a railroad company for injury to a passenger is warranted, where the passenger, while awaiting a train in a proper place, and believing that she was in danger from the approach of the train in an unexpected direction by reason of the switch being misplaced through culpable negligence of servants of the company, became alarmed, and in running away to escape the apprehended peril, tripped over the rail of the track on which she was running, fell, and was injured, although by running she was brought into a more perilous position than she was in had she remained where she was standing. Caswell v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 93 D. 151.

A railroad company is liable in damages for the death of a child who, being seated in a crowded car, was compelled by the conductor to leave the seat and to stand upon the platform, from which, by the hasty and careless exit of another passenger, he was thrown and killed; and the wrongful act of such passenger would not relieve the company from the consequences of the wrongful act of their conductor in placing the deceased on the platform. Sheridan v. Brooklyn & N. R. R. Co., 93 D. 490.

The rule that there is a legal presumption of negligence on the part of a railway company where an injury to a passenger is caused by a want of diligence or care in those employed by the company, or by any other thing which it can or ought to control, as a part of its duty to carry passengers safely, applies without distinction between accidents arising from negligence in the equipment or management of the train, and those arising from the misconduct of passengers upon it. Pittsburg and C. R. R. Co. v. Pillow, 18 R. 424.

A passenger on a railway train was injured through a quarrel between two drunken men, who were also passengers. The conductor of the train witnessed the quarrel, but refused to interfere. Held, that the railway company was presumptively negligent and liable for the injury. Id.

Plaintiff went on board of defendant's railroad train, not as a passenger, but to find seats for a lady and child whom he had in charge. After finding seats he attempted to get off the train and in so doing was injured. Held, that even though he got off after the train was in motion, yet if sufficient notice of a start and a reasonable time to get off were not given, the company was liable. Doss v. Missouri etc. R. R. Co., 21 R. 371.

A railway passenger traveling in the coach of a sleeping-car company, may properly assume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that the whole train is under one management; and where he sustains injury by the negligence of the sleeping-car company he may maintain an action against the railroad company. Railroad Co. v. Walrath, 43 R. 433.

On proof of injury sustained by a passenger on a railroad train, by the fall of a berth in a sleeping-car, and that the passenger was without fault, a presumption arises that the railroad company is liable. Id.

Railway companies are bound to afford to passengers on long routes easy and safe modes and reasonable time for obtaining food, and safe ingress and egress to and from refreshment stations, whether controlled by the company or by others; and where a passenger sustains injury on returning from such a station to the train by want of sufficient light and the removal of the train without notice in his absence, the company is liable. Pentston v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 44 R. 444.

The plaintiff entered a car of a train of the defendant's railroad, but could find no vacant seat and remained standing for some time and until the conductor told him to go to a forward car and take a seat. The train was moving, and in endeavoring to obey the direction he was either purposely or carelessly jostled from the train by a brakeman. Held, that defendant was liable for the injury. Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Kelly, 47 R. 149.

The plaintiff, while sitting near the front door of a crowded and dark car on the defendant's railway, in passing through a long tunnel attempted to shut the door, there being no servant of the defendant at hand to do it, in order to keep out the smoke and cinders, and received an injury in doing so. Held, that the defendant was liable. Western Maryland R. R. Co. v. Stanley, 48 R. 96.

78. When the company is not liable.—A railroad company is not liable to a passenger for an injury which he might have avoided by ordinary attention to his own safety, though the negligence of their agents also contributed to the accident. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323.

A passenger on a train must comply with all the company's reasonable rules for entering, leaving, or occupying their cars. If he is injured through a disregard of these rules, although the negligence of the company's servants concurred in causing the injury, the company is not liable. Sullivan v. Phila. etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 698.

Where the company has a legal right to run a train upon a side track, it is immaterial whether it was run upon that track by design or accident, no greater degree of care being required in case of such an accident than if the train was thrown upon the track by design; and if the train was managed with due care, one injured thereby cannot recover. Indiana Central R'y Co. v. Hudson, 74 D. 254.

Where the company leaves cars on a switch securely fastened for the use of a mill company, the latter thereafter control them on their own account, and if they so move the cars upon the switch that a passenger on a passing train whose arm protrudes from the window is injured by striking the car, the company could not be held liable unless some kind of an agency is established for the company on the part of the mill proprietors. Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Sickings, 96 D. 320.

When a railway car is perfect in appearance, but imperfect from some latent defect, which the utmost skill and care could neither perceive nor provide against, the railway company is not responsible for injuries to a passenger arising from such defect. Thus, a carrier is not liable for an injury caused by the breaking of an axle of the car caused by a latent defect, while running at a proper speed upon a well-constructed road. Meier v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 3 R. 581. S. P., Ladd v. New Bedford R. R. Co., 20 R. 331.

By a sudden and extraordinarily heavy rainfall, about dark, confined to a limited locality, a portion of a railway bed was so undermined that it gave way under the weight of a train, three or four hours afterward, and a passenger was injured. The railway bed was in safe condition before the rainfall; a train had safely passed over it two hours before the accident, and it had been inspected between the time of the passage of that train and the time of the accident, and was apparently in safe condition. The defect was not visible at the time of the accident. The train in question was carefully run at half speed at the time in question. Held, that no action would lie against the company. Railroad Co. v. Halgren, 37 R. 744.

A railway passenger was ejected from a car at one end of the trestle, and his gun, which was in the baggage car, at the other. He crossed to get it, and in returning, fell and was injured. Held, that the company was not liable therefor. I. & G. N. R'y Co. v. Folhard, 59 R. 632.

79. Injury to passenger in alighting from train.* 1. General rules. — A railroad company is responsible for injuries to passengers, where too little time is afforded them to alight at their destination. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Kilgore, 72 D. 787; Fairmount etc. R'y Co. v. Stutler, 93 D. 714; Toledo etc. R. R. Co., v. Baddeley, 5 R. 71.

Concurrent negligence on part of passenger, when the railroad is also negligent in not affording the passenger time to leave the train at stations, will not excuse the company. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Kilgore, 72 D. 787.

A passenger who voluntarily jumps from cars while in motion, to avoid being carried beyond her destination, where the cars did not stop as they were in the constant habit of doing, is guilty of such imprudence as relieves the railroad company from liability for injuries thereby sustained. Dumont v. New Orleans & C. R. R. Co., 61 D. 214.

One entering the cars of a passenger carrier, not as a passenger, but to accompany an infirm relative to a seat as a passenger, cannot recover for injuries received in leaving the cars, if he attempted to leave the cars after the train was started, or finding the cars in motion as he was going out, persisted in making progress to get out, and if such attempt was the cause of or contributed to the accident, even though there was negligence in the carrier in moving the train and in a jerk occurred after the starting, which concurred in producing the injury. Lucas v. New Bedford etc. R. R. Co., 66 D. 406.

Where a railroad train is stopped on a dark night, merely waiting for a train from the opposite direction to pass, at a place several rods from a passenger station, and no notice is given by the servants of the company to passengers that they may leave the cars, one who leaves the cars and receives a personal injury by walking into an open cattle-guard cannot recover damages of the company therefor; and it makes no difference that he was misinformed by some individual not in the company's employment that he must go and see to having his baggage passed at the custom-house, supposed to have been reached by the train, or that the train was near a passenger station which was not the place of his destination. Frost v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co., 87 D. 668.

A passenger carried in a freight car from which no means of descent is provided, who leaps from the car after the train has stopped at the passenger's destination, and is thereby injured, is not guilty of negligence such as will relieve the carrier from liability, merely because she was not in peril, or had not reason to believe that she was in peril; and an instruction to this effect is properly refused for not containing the further element that the circumstances were such that a person of ordinary prudence would have apprehended danger from the leap. Beansville etc. R. R. Co. v. Duncan, 92 D. 322.

A passenger who to prevent being carried beyond her destination voluntarily jumped from the car, from which no means of descent were provided, after the train had stopped at the station, and was injured thereby, was guilty of contributory negligence, since the evidence showed that the leap was dangerous, that she considered it to be such, and that she was warned not to make it. Id.

The question of due care on part of plaintiff, and of negligence on part of defendants, should be submitted to the jury in an action against a railroad corporation for an injury sustained by a passenger, who, on a dark night, upon the arrival of a train on the main track next to the station-house, alighted on a narrow platform between that track and a side-track, and in crossing from the platform to the highway was struck by an engine backing on the side-track, if the evidence at the trial has any tendency to show, according to the general knowledge and experience of men, that the situation, arrangement, and use of the premises were such as to invite the plaintiff to cross to the highway in the manner in which he attempted to do so, that he used ordinary care in the attempt, and that the defendants did not provide proper safeguards against such an accident. Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R'y Co., 97 D. 96.

One who alights from a train upon a track running parallel therewith, along which he knew another train was due at any moment, was guilty of negligence if he neglected to look up said track to see if the train was coming; and if he did look up the track, and saw the train coming within a few feet of him, and still attempted to cross, he was guilty of greater negligence. Gonzales v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 98 D. 58.

A railway company, inviting a passenger to alight after dark at a freight depot, instead of a regular passenger depot, is bound to keep the platform and approaches in a safe condition for the passenger's reception and egress, and to provide lights if necessary to his safety. Stewart v. Internat. etc. R. R. Co., 37 R. 753.

A passenger is not guilty of negligence in attempting to leave a car, under a reasonable belief that by so doing he will escape injury from an impending accident, where he is injured by the company's negligence in so doing, although he would have escaped had he remained. Iron R'y Co. v. Mowery, 38 R. 597.

When a train draws up at a platform so that only the forward end of the smoking car is at the platform, a woman passenger in a rear car is not bound to go through the smoking car to alight, nor to alight from the front end of the rear car, and if she is injured in alighting from the rear end, in consequence of the position of the train, the company is liable. Curtwright v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 50 R. 274.

2. Illustrations.—Plaintiff purchased a ticket at L., on defendant's railroad, for A. and got upon a freight train, while it was moving slowly. The conductor took the ticket; the train did not stop at A., and plaintiff in getting off was injured. Held, 1. That if plaintiff left the train voluntarily, although at the suggestion of the conductor, it was a question for the jury whether he acted as a prudent man, under the circumstances; 2. That, as the train was a freight train, and not advertised to stop at A., the taking up of the ticket did not imply an undertaking on the part of the company to put plaintiff off safely at that place. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Randolph, 5 R. 60.

In an action to recover for the death of a passenger, it appeared that the train, upon which the deceased was traveling, having stopped at a station, remained a reasonable time for passengers to alight, but he, not availing himself of the opportunity, waited until the train began to move, when, in attempting to leave the cars, he was fatally injured. Held, that the company was not liable, there being no proof of mismanagement of the train or careless conduct of the employees. Ill. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Station, 5 R. 109.

Defendant's freight and passenger train, on which plaintiff was a passenger, having reached the station at which plaintiff was to alight, passed several hundred yards beyond the depot, stopping at an unusual place where it was low and icy. Plaintiff demanded of the conductor that the train should be backed, which was refused. In attempting to alight plaintiff dislocated his knee. The jury found negligence in defendant and a verdict for plaintiff. Held, on appeal, that defendant had no ground for exception. Memphis & C. R. R. Co. v. Whitfield, 7 R. 699.

Plaintiff's intestate was killed in alighting from defendant's train, while moving at the rate of from two to four miles per hour. It appeared that the conductor went with the intestate, who was a passenger, out on the platform, to assist him to alight. Held, that "if the intestate, without any direction from the conductor, voluntarily incurred danger by jumping off the train while in motion, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover; but if the motion of the train was so slow that the danger of jumping off would not be apparent to a reasonable person, and the intestate acted under the instructions of the conductor, then the resulting injury was not caused by contributory negligence or want of care." Lambeth v. North Carolina R. R. Co., 8 R. 508.

Plaintiff, a passenger upon defendant's railroad, had a ticket for E., where the train was advertised to stop. The train did not stop, but passed by the station very slowly, and a brakeman told plaintiff that the train would not stop, and that she had better get off, which she did, and in doing so was thrown down and injured. Held, that the plaintiff was not, as a matter of law, negligent, but that the question should go to the jury. Filer v. N. Y. O. R. R. Co., 10 R. 327; Georgia R. R. Co. v. McCurdy, 12 R. 577.

A passenger, in the night, while asleep, was carried beyond his station, and when the train stopped upon an open bridge over a stream to take water, got up, and without any direction from any one connected with the company, but upon the encouragement of other passengers, stepped off the car and received injury. Held, that the company was not negligent in not notifying passengers not to get off, and that the passenger was guilty of such contributory negligence as prevented a recovery. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Green, 25 R. 255.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A train having overhauled a station, a passenger for that station got off while the train was in motion, and was killed by another train while making his way to the station. Held, that he had ceased to be a passenger, and the railway company was not criminally liable under the statute. Com. v. Boston and M. R. R., 37 R. 382.

A passenger was aroused at 10 o'clock at night by the conductor, and informed that his station was reached, and told by him and the brakeman to hurry and get off. The train moving very slowly, he stepped off, and as the train had overshot the platform, he fell and was injured. Held, that an action therefor was maintainable. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. Cantrell, 40 R. 106.

A train not stopping at a station a reasonable length of time to allow passengers to alight, one undertook in spite of warnings to get off after the train had started, and was injured. Held, that she was guilty of contributory negligence fatal to recovery. Jewell v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 63.

A railway train, approaching a station where there was a crossing of railways, stopped, as required by law, several hundred feet before reaching the station. The name of the station had been called, and the plaintiff, a woman, hurriedly attempted to alight; the train starting, she fell and was injured. It was daylight, and there was no appearance of any landing place for passengers at that point. None of the employees knew that she was endeavoring to leave the car. Held, that the railroad company was not liable. Mitchell v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 47 R. 566.

A railway brakeman announced a station, and shortly after the train stopped, but short of the station, and in the dark. The plaintiff supposing he had reached his destination, got off as soon as he could, but after the train had slowly started again, fell, and was injured. Held, that the company was liable. Memphis etc. R'y Co. v. Stringfellow, 51 R. 598.

The plaintiff, in attempting to step from a car on defendant's railroad to a station platform, fell between the steps and the platform and was injured. The car-steps and platform were constructed in the ordinary way, the intervening space being no more than was necessary, and no accident of the kind had happened before. Held, that the action could not be maintained. Lafayette v. Buffalo etc. R. R. Co., 60 R. 433.

80. What evidence is sufficient to show negligence on part of the company.*—In an action against a railroad company, the facts that a collision took place, and that plaintiff was injured, are prima facie evidence of negligence and want of skill in the party in charge, and casts the onus probandi on the defendant to prove that there has been no disregard of duty, and that the damage resulted from a cause which human care and foresight could not prevent. N. O. etc. R. R. Co. v. Albritton, 75 D. 98.

The fact of cattle being on the track at the time of an accident raises a question of negligence on the part of the company which is properly submitted to the jury. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Cheneveth, 91 D. 168.

Where, by reason of the misplacement of a switch by a servant of the company, a train is diverted from the main track of the railroad to a side track, and there collides with other cars, and imperils passengers on an adjoining platform, it is competent for a jury to find that the omission to replace the switch was culpable negligence. Caswell v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 93 D. 151.

It is negligence for a railroad to permit its track to get out of repair, and the ties supporting the rails to get rotten. O'Donnell v. Allegheny F. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336.

If the evidence tends to show that a train had come to a full stop, that the persons waiting to get upon it were told to go on board by the persons in charge, and that the plaintiff, in attempting to get aboard, was injured in consequence of the sudden starting of the train, it is not error to submit the question of the negligence of the parties to the jury. Detroit etc. R. R. Co. v. Curtis, 99 D. 141.

It is negligence in the servants of the company to tell passengers to go aboard when the train is not ready for their reception. After being told to go on board in any case a passenger has a right to draw the conclusion that the train is ready for his reception, and he cannot be considered negligent in attempting to do so. Id.

In an action for injuries sustained in consequence of a broken rail, the mere fact that a train had just passed over the road is not sufficient evidence to raise a question for the jury as to whether the rail was broken before plaintiff's train reached it. McPadden v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 4 R. 706.

Where a passenger is injured by an accident caused by the washing away of the embankment, the occurrence of the accident is presumptive evidence of the carrier's negligence, and this rule applies to a lessee of the railway. Philadelphia and R. R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 39 R. 787.

In such a case the carrier is not relieved from liability, although the embankment was constructed by a competent engineer, and the washing away was the result of an unprecedented storm, provided the provision for drainage at the point in question was defective. Id.

81. Negligence of company must be proximate cause of injury. — A railroad train, running three-quarters of an hour behind time, was upset by a gust of wind and plaintiff was injured. The wind did not extend to that part of the road where the train would have been if running on time. Held, that the negligence of the company in running behind time was not the proximate cause of the injury, and that it was not liable therefor. McClary v. Sioux City etc. R'y Co., 19 R. 631.

A passenger on a railway train, being directed to change cars at a way-station, entered another car, but was ordered out by an employee as the train was not ready. He stood a short time on the platform of the car, and then stepped to a neighboring track, and while waiting there was there injured by another train. Held, that his expulsion was not the proximate cause of the injury. Henry v. St. Louis etc. R'y Co., 43 R. 762.

A railway passenger was carried a little past the station of his destination on a dark night, and on leaving the train was misinformed by the conductor as to where he was, but being acquainted with the neighborhood he soon discovered the mistake. If he had got off where he was told he had, it was his intention to follow the track, and cross a culvert, although he might have avoided it, but he pursued his way intending to cross another culvert. He fell into this and was hurt. Held, that the company's negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury. Lewis v. Flint etc. R. R. Co., 52 R. 790.

82. What amounts to contributory negligence on part of passenger.* — Where a passenger permits his arm to extend out of the car, whereby it is broken in crossing a bridge, the company are not liable if they gave timely warning of the danger. Loring v. Colder, 49 D. 533. S. P., Todd v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 80 D. 49; Todd v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 679; Spencer v. Milwaukee etc. R. R. Co., 84 D. 758; Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Sickings, 96 D. 320; Pittsburg & O. R. R. Co. v. Andrews, 17 R. 568.

A passenger who jumps from a running train to avoid being carried beyond his place of destination cannot recover for injuries thereby suffered. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323. S. P., Detroit etc. R. R. Co. v. Curtis, 99 D. 141; Bardwell v. Mobile & O. Railroad Co., 56 R. 842.

One who is injured by accident while unnecessarily riding in a baggage-car, and who would have escaped had he been in a passenger car, cannot recover. Houston and T. C. R. R. Co. v. Olemmons, 40 R. 799; Kentucky Cent. R. R. Co. v. Thomas, 42 R. 208.

The announcement of the name of a station before the cars stop, by the conductor, does not indicate any negligence or want of diligence on his part, nor afford any justification for a passenger's jumping off while the train is in motion. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 62 D. 323.

The question whether a passenger is bound to wait in the station-house until arrival of train at a platform provided for passing to trains, or may cross over an intervening side-track and stand on the platform, depends, in the absence of directions thereto, upon what is a reasonably safe and prudent course for him to pursue, in determining which the jury may consider what is the usage of passengers there, and whether such usage is known to and permitted by the company. Cassell v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 93 D. 151.

In an action for damages sustained by a person in trying to get on board a train in motion, the court charged, that starting the train at the instant of giving the signal of departure was negligence on the part of the defendant; and that while the attempt to board a train moving rapidly would be negligence on the part of the plaintiff, such an attempt, if the train were moving slowly, would not be negligence on his part. Held, error; the question was for the jury. Texas and P. R'y Co. v. Murphy, 26 R. 272.

Lumber negligently loaded fell from a freight train against a caboose, frightening a passenger, who thereupon jumped from the train when it was moving at the rate of fourteen or fifteen miles a hour, and was killed. He would have been unharmed had he remained on board. The jury found that he was imprudent in jumping. Held, that there could be no recovery. Woolery v. Louisville etc. R'y Co., 57 R. 114.

83. What does not. — Persons in perilous positions on railroad trains are not required to exercise the presence of mind and care of a prudent, careful man, with impending danger. The law makes allowance for them, and leaves the circumstances of their conduct to the jury. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Yarwood, 65 D. 682.

A passenger is not to be deemed guilty of contributory negligence when injured in attempting to leave a car on seeing a train approaching at such a speed that a collision was inevitable. Buel v. New York Central R. R. Co., 88 D. 271.

An unauthorized change of position by a passenger, if it did not contribute to the injury, will not per se prevent a recovery, and the question is properly left to the jury. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Chenoweth, 91 D. 168.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Ordinary capacity and ordinary care in protecting himself is all that is required of a passenger in a railroad car. Sheridan v. Brooklyn & N. R. R. Co., 93 D. 490.

Where the plaintiff, who was employed by a railroad company, when returning from his work as a passenger, left the passenger-car, and went into the baggage-car, without the direction or invitation of the conductor, it is erroneous to instruct the jury that this was improper and negligent, where the evidence showed that he had long been accustomed to do so, and that this course of conduct was within the knowledge and without the objection of the conductor. O'Donnell v. Alleghany F. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336. Compare Jacobus v. St. Paul etc. R'y Co., 18 R. 360.

Where a plaintiff, in attempting to get aboard a railroad train, was injured in consequence of its sudden starting, the fact that he was told by the company's servants to get on the hind car, and that he was injured in trying to get on another passenger-car, is not such conclusive proof of negligence on his part as to take the case from the jury. Detroit etc. R. R. Co. v. Curtis, 99 D. 141.

Plaintiff's arm while projecting from a car window was injured by coming in contact with a car standing near the track. Held, that defendants were liable. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Pondrom, 2 R. 306.

Where a passenger in a horse car is injured by the carelessness of the engineer of a railroad company in the management of his locomotive, it is no defense to show contributory negligence in the driver of the horse car. Bennett v. N. J. R. R. etc. Co., 13 R. 435; Robinson v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. Co., 23 R. 1.

In an action against a railroad company by a passenger to recover for the negligent breaking of his arm, the evidence tended to show that at the time of the injury the plaintiff had his arm outside the car window. Held, that this was not per se negligence in the plaintiff, but that whether it contributed to the injury was a question for the jury. Barton v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 418.

It is not necessarily negligent in a passenger to jump from a rapidly moving railway train, in the attempt to escape from an impending collision. Wilson v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 37 R. 410.

Where a railroad train overshoots a station and is stopped at a dangerous place in a dark night, it is not necessarily negligent for a passenger to alight. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co. v. Buck, 49 R. 168.

It is not necessarily negligent for a passenger to board a railway train at a place other than the station platform. Stoner v. Pennsylvania Co., 49 R. 764.

Where a railway passenger is injured by the concurrent negligence of his carrier and another, the negligence of his carrier is not imputable to him. Hokab v. New Orleans and C. R. R. Co., 58 R. 177.

84. Passenger riding on platform.* — Notice that passengers should not stand on the platform does not discharge the liability of the carrier to an injured passenger when the notice was upon the rear of two cars, the passenger's seat was in the forward car, and the passenger, just before the accident, had left his seat and was standing upon the front platform of the rear car. Zemp v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 64 D. 763.

An injured passenger, although standing on the platform of a car at the time of accident, may recover where the accident was caused by derailment, and the track was in an unfinished condition, the cross-ties were too wide apart, the rails were insufficiently spiked, and the accident occurred from the breaking of a cleat at the end of one of the rails. Id.

A passenger is wanting in ordinary care, if, knowing that the train is in motion, he goes out on the platform of the car, and steps therefrom upon the platform of the station while the car is still in motion, and he cannot recover from the railroad company for an injury resulting therefrom. Gavett v. Manchester & L. R. R. Co., 77 D. 422.

The company is not absolved from liability for injury to a passenger on a platform, occurring while he was attempting to leave the car to escape a collision, under a regulation, pursuant to statute, prohibiting passengers from standing or riding on the platform. Buel v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 88 D. 271.

A passenger riding on the steps of a platform of a car is in a place of danger and prima facie negligent, and in an action for injuries by a collision, the burden is on him to rebut the presumption of negligence arising from such fact, which may be done by showing that the car and platform were full of passengers, with no room for more, and that the conductor stopped the cars to allow him to get on, and called for and received his fare, as this implied on the part of the defendant an invitation to ride in the place in which he did, and also an implied assurance that such place was a suitable and safe place to ride. Clark v. Eighth Ave. R. R. Co., 93 D. 495.

A passenger on a steam railway train, unable to find a seat, although there was standing room inside, stood on the platform of a car, near the edge and was thrown off by an ordinary jolt and injured. Held, that he had no cause of action against the railway company. Camden and A. R. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 44 R. 120. S. P., Gravelle v. Munchattan R. R. Co., 59 R. 516.

gence.*—The doctrine in relation to mutual negligence of parties in causing injury is applicable to carriers of passengers by railroad; Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Fay, 63 D. 323.

A passenger takes on himself the risk of the mode of travel he adopts; but the care, vigilance, and skill on the part of the carrier must be adapted to the motive power and means employed by him. The carrier and the passenger owe reciprocal duties to each other. Id.

As between the company and the passenger, the duty of safe conveyance is measured by a severe rule arising out of the nature of the obligation, and a principle of public policy; and passengers undertake to run those risks only which cannot be avoided by the utmost degree of care and skill on the part of the carrier in the preparation and management of the means of conveyance. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

A passenger who voluntarily rides in a baggage-car, by permission of the conductor, but against the rules of the railroad conspicuously posted in that car, and is injured in consequence of riding there, cannot recover from the railroad company on the ground of its negligence. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Langdon, 37 R. 651.

86. Burden of proof. — The mere happening of an injurious accident to a passenger raises prima facie a presumption of negligence, and throws upon the carrier the onus of showing it did not exist. Laing v. Colder, 49 D. 533; Zamp v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 64 D. 763.

Negligence is not presumed from the bare fact that a railroad passenger is injured; but the passenger suing for damages must prove that the circumstances attending the injury were such as to raise a reasonable presumption that it was caused by some fault or want of care on the part of the company's servants. Such proof may warrant a verdict in his favor. Holbrook v. Utica & Schenectady R. R. Co., 64 D. 502. Compare Curtis v. R. & S. R. R. Co., 75 D. 258.

The burden of proof, where a person, not a passenger, is injured by a passenger carrier is upon such person to show that he exercised due care, and that the carrier was guilty of negligence, which was the cause of the injury. Lucas v. New Bedford etc. R. R. Co., 66 D. 406.

When a passenger is injured while traveling upon a train without fault of his, the law raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the company, and throws upon it the onus of showing that negligence did not exist. This is done by showing that the injury occurred through the act of God, or that it was caused by something against which no human foresight or prudence could provide. Sullivan v. Phila. etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 698.

Where a passenger is injured without his fault, by the train being overturned by running over a cow, the presumption of negligence which the law raises against the company remains in force until a countervailing presumption of fact is established to the satisfaction of the jury, and evidence which the court thinks calculated to repel this presumption of negligence should be submitted to their consideration. Whether the point on the road where the injury occurred was not so commonly infested with cows as to require a fence or cattle-guard of some sort; whether the speed of the cars was not too great for a curve exposed at all times to the incursions of cattle; whether the engineer discovered the cow as soon as he might and used his best endeavors to avert the collision;—these were questions which ought to have been submitted to the jury. Id.

An accident occasioned by a train running off the track is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad company, and throws upon them the onus of rebutting this presumption by proving there was no negligence. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. Worthington, 83 D. 578; Seybolt v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 76.

In an action to recover for injuries so occasioned, an instruction that it was a question of fact for the jury to determine, from all the evidence in the case, whether the injury to the plaintiff arose from any neglect on the part of the defendants, or their agents, and if the jury should find that the injury in question was the result of an accident or act against which human care or foresight could not guard, and was not the result of negligence in any degree on the part of the defendants, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and that in considering this question, the jury were to have regard to the character of railway transportation, is correct. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. Worthington, 83 D. 578.

After instructing the jury that the presumption of negligence on part of the company arose upon the happening of the accident, the court need not prescribe a measure of proof by which that presumption can be rebutted, as it would be impossible for it to do so. Id.

One who sues the company for injuries sustained while traveling on its train must show that it was guilty of some negligence producing or contributing to the injury, and that he was not guilty of any want of ordinary care which directly contributed to the same. Exceptions to this rule are where the injury was intentionally done, or where it could have been avoided by the company by ordinary care. Louisville & N. E. R. R. Co. v. Sickings, 36 D. 320.

In case of a collision of railway trains a presumption of negligence arises against the carrier. Iron R'y Co. v. Mowery, 38 R. 597.

87. Liability for injuries to persons stealing rides.* — Where a trespasser rides on the pilot of an engine of a construction train, in violation of the rules of the company but with the assent of the engineer, and is injured in consequence, the company is not liable. Darwin v. Charlotte etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 32.

Plaintiff jumped upon the baggage car of defendant's train. The baggageman ordered him off; the plaintiff replied that he could not get off because of a pile of wood beside the track. Whereupon the baggageman kicked him off and he fell against the wood, and then under the cars, and was injured. Defendant's rules forbade persons riding on the baggage cars, and required baggagemen to strictly enforce the order. Held, that the court was correct in charging the jury that, although the plaintiff was a trespasser, if the baggageman, in the discharge of his duty, pushed him off the train in an improper manner, and at a dangerous place, the defendant was liable; but that if he was acting wilfully and maliciously toward the plaintiff outside and in excess of his duty, the defendant was not liable. Bounds v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 21 R. 597.

A boy eight years old jumped upon the steps of a passenger railway car and sat on the platform, to steal a ride. The conductor or brakeman kicked him off the car while the train was moving some ten miles an hour, and he was injured. Held, that a recovery against the railway company was warranted. Hoffman v. New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 41 R. 337.

A boy fifteen years old wrongfully boarded a freight train to ride without paying fare, and a brakeman ordered him to jump off while the train was moving rapidly, and he tearing being thrown off, jumped and was injured. Held, that the company was liable. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co. v. Kelly, 59 R. 596.

88. — or riding on free passes. — A railroad company is liable to a passenger, carried free of charge, for injuries caused by its omission to use due and reasonable care. Todd v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 80 D. 49; Gillenswater v. Madison & I. R. R. Co., 61 D. 101; Norton v. Western R. R. Corp., 69 D. 623; Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Muhling, 81 D. 336.

An agreement exempting the company from liability for any injury to the person or property of a free passenger is valid, so far as the consequences of its ordinary negligence are concerned, but not as regards its gross negligence, recklessness, or willful misfeasance. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Read, 87 D. 260.

The acceptance and use of a free ticket establishes as an agreement an indorsement thereon to the effect that the railroad company will not be liable for any injury to the person or property of the passenger, so far as it is consistent with the rules of public policy. Id.

A railroad company in New York has power to contract that a person riding free must do so at their own risk of personal injury from whatever cause. Stinson v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 88 D. 332.

A cattle dealer accompanying his cattle on a train, but paying no additional fare for himself, in consideration of the fact that he assumes all risk of personal injury, from whatever cause, while so riding free, cannot hold the carrier liable for injury resulting from negligence of the latter's agents or servants. Bissell v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 82 D. 369.

Such contract of a cattle dealer to exempt the carrier from liability for negligence, in consideration of the privilege of riding with his cattle, if he pays full fare, is void, as being without consideration, semble. Id.

The owner of a freight-car which is attached to a passenger train upon his assuming to run all risks assumes all risks arising from attaching the car, not the risk of negligence on the part of the railroad company or its agents; nor could the company contract for such exemption. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Okenowith, 91 D. 168.

The company cannot repudiate the act of agents so as to free itself from responsibility for negligence, where the agents, at the request of the owner of a freight-car, and upon his agreement to run all risks, attached it to a passenger train contrary to the regulations of the company. Id.

The owner of a freight-car who is permitted by the agents of the company to attach his car to a passenger train, contrary to the regulations of the company is not to be treated as a trespasser so as to be barred from recovery for injuries from negligence, if he used no improper influence to obtain the consent of the agent. Id.

A mail agent who is transported by a railroad company under a contract with the government to carry its mail agents free of charge may maintain an action against the company to recover damages for injuries arising from negligence. Hammond v. North Eastern R. R. Co., 24 R. 467.

A railroad company is not liable for the accidental death of a boy permitted by the conductor, against its rules, to ride gratuitously on the train to sell newspapers. Duff v. Alleghany R. R. Co., 36 R. 675.

such person, was injured by the alleged negligence of the defendant. Held, that he was guilty of such fraud as to prevent a recovery for such injury, unless the negligence was so gross as to amount to a willful injury. Toledo etc. R'y Co. v. Beggs, 28 R. 613.

89. Damages recoverable.* — In an action against a railroad company for injuries sustained by a collision, if it is not shown that the engineer in charge was in every respect qualified, and acted with reasonable skill and the utmost caution to prevent such collision, the defendant is liable for all actual and consequential damages proved, and for exemplary damages, in the discretion of the jury, provided it is proved that plaintiff received bodily injury, caused by the gross negligence, or wanton and willful misconduct, of the engineer. N. O. etc. R. R. Co. v. Allbritton, 75 D. 98.

c. Injuries to Persons Crossing the Track.

90. Nature of the liability, generally.† — A railroad company's liability for injury to one neither a passenger nor employee is governed by that pervading principle of social duty founded on the common law, that every person must so conduct his own affairs as not to injure the rights of another, expressed in the legal maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. In such cases there is no relation arising out of any privity of contract. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

A passenger in the caboose of a railway freight train, on the stopping of the train a quarter of a mile short of his destination, got up to walk to the door and was thrown down and injured by the sudden backing of the train. Held, that his negligence prevented his recovery of damages. Harris v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 58 R. 111.

The company must exercise the utmost care and diligence to avoid running over a person on their track. East Tennessee etc. R. R. Co. v. St. John, 73 D. 149.

Railroad companies are liable for injuries to persons not passengers, where the injuries arise from negligence on their part, to which injuries the negligence of the injured party does not immediately contribute. Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409.

That the deceased was rightfully and not negligently or improperly on the track must be shown by plaintiff, either by direct testimony, or by presumption from facts and circumstances proved, in an action against the company to recover damages for negligently running over and killing the deceased. *Donaldson v. for failure of their agents and employees to exercise ordinary care and skill in operating their trains. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Collins, 87 D. 486.

A railroad company is to be regarded as constructively present through its acting agents, who represent it, within range of their ordinary employment. Id.

No relation of contract, trust, or confidence exists between a railroad company and a stranger; each party being in the lawful pursuit of his own business, or the lawful exercise of his own rights, is required only to exercise such reasonable care to avoid injuring the other as ordinary prudence suggests. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. Breinig, 90 D. 49. S. P., Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 96 D. 528.

A railroad company in the lawful pursuit of its business employs useful but dangerous powers, and hence is required to observe a degree of caution and care proportioned to the increased risk and danger of inflicting irreparable injury upon others in like lawful pursuit of their vocations; but the duty is not imposed upon it of using every possible contrivance that human ingenuity might provide. It should, however, be vigilant in making use of every reasonable safeguard, to avoid unjust interference with others, which the nature of its business will admit. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. State, 96 D. 528.

The company is bound to exercise more caution and a higher degree of care when running their cars through a village or city than in the open country. Betsiegel v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 90 D. 741.

A railroad company is not liable for the death of one who while walking on its track without right intermeddled with a torpedo which had been placed there as a danger signal, and was killed by its explosion. Carter v. Columbia and G. R. R. Co., 45 R. 754.

If the public, with the knowledge and acquiescence of a railroad company, have been long and constantly accustomed to walk upon its tracks, although it is a statutory offense to walk upon a railroad track, it amounts to a license, and the company is liable to one injured while so walking, by the negligent act or omission of its servants. Davis v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 46 R. 667.

Where a trespasser upon a railway track is injured by the negligence of the railway company, he may not recover unless such negligence was willful; mere gross negligence is not sufficient. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co. v. Graham, 48 R. 719.

Plaintiff, while passing, for his own convenience, over a portion of defendants' railroad line, where the public were in the habit of passing and repassing, was injured through the alleged negligence of the defendant. Held, that the right of way was the exclusive property of the defendant; that the fact that the defendant had passively permitted others to use it as a foot-way gave plaintiff no right thereon, and imposed no duty on the defendant to provide safeguards against the dangers incident to such use, and that the defendant would only be liable for willful injury or gross negligence. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 22 R. 112.

The plaintiff was driving his horse along a highway parallel and adjacent to a railroad, and the horse being frightened by smoke from the engine of a train coming in the opposite direction, the plaintiff was injured in consequence. The engine had been necessarily freshly fired up, which increased the smoke. Held, that the company was not liable. Lamb v. Old Colony R. R. Co., 54 R. 449.

91. What is negligence on part of the company.—The rules of the company regulating the distance at which trains shall run from each other are intended solely for the protection of the property of the company, and the safety of their employees and passengers, and not for persons who may be traveling along the highway; and no inference of negligence can be drawn from the proximity of trains, in an action to recover damages for an injury done to a person while crossing the railroad track at a place not known or used as a public crossing. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Spearren, 86 D. 544.

Where a railroad company has made a private crossing over their track, in a city, allowed the public to use it as a highway, and stationed a flagman there to prevent persons from undertaking to cross when there is danger, they are liable in damages to one who, using due care, is induced to undertake to cross by a signal from the flagman that it is safe, and who is injured by a collision which occurs through the flagman's carelessness. The case comes within that class in which parties have been held liable in damages by reason of having held out an invitation or inducement to persons to enter upon the pass over their premises. Sweeney v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 87 D. 644.

The company is guilty of gross and criminal negligence in making a "running switch" over a public crossing of its track in the street of a populous village, where travelers are constantly passing; and the question as to whether a railroad company has exercised its right of making a "running switch" at a proper place, and with the use of due care, may be properly submitted to the jury. Brown v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 88 D. 353.

Damages for injury received by a "running switch" may be recovered without other proof of negligence on defendant's part than the act of making such a running switch over a public crossing in a populous village, constantly passed by travelers, where the person injured at such crossing is without negligence on his part. Id.

A railroad company has a right to establish reasonable signals for starting trains from its stations; but it is the province of the jury to determine, upon the circumstances of the particular case, whether the loud and sudden sounding of a steam-whistle was a reasonable signal for such purposes, and within the rule of ordinary care. Hill v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 92 D. 601.

It is competent for plaintiff in an action for a personal injury, caused by the fright of his horse at the sound of a locomotive whistle at a railroad crossing, to show that the sound of the whistle frightened other horses at the same time and place, and also to show the usual effect of that whistle on ordinary horses at the same place. Id.

Permitting a fireman to run an engine in the absence of the engineer is a fact from which the jury may find negligence and a want of proper care on the part of the railroad company. O'Mara v. Hudson R. R. Co., 98 D. 61.

A person about to cross a track within the limits of a city, where the rate of speed of trains is regulated by ordinance, has a right to assume that trains will not be run at a speed greater than that allowed by the ordinance. Correll v. B. O. R. & M. R. R. Co., 18 R. 22.

If the engineer unnecessarily and wantonly sounds the whistle near a highway, and thus frightens a team of horses on the highway, causing it to run away and kill another horse, the owner of the latter may recover therefor from the railroad company. Billman v. Indianapolis etc. R. R. Co., 40 R. 230.

It is the duty of the company toward a person injured by its train to stop the train, and remove him to a place of safety; and in so doing, the company's agents must be regarded as acting in the course of their employment, and for their negligence therein the company is liable. Where, therefore, a person who was injured by a train, and was apparently dead, was removed by the agents of the company to a warehouse, where he was locked up for the night, and it was found on opening the warehouse in the morning that he had come to consciousness during the night, and had afterwards died from hemorrhage of an artery which had been severed by the collision,—held, that the company was liable for the negligence which caused his death. Northern Cent. R'y Co. v. State, 96 D. 545.

Plaintiff desired to cross defendant's track at a public crossing, but was prevented from doing so by a train of defendant's cars standing at that point. She then attempted to cross at another place, where there was no public crossing, and, in so doing, was struck and injured by defendant's car.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Held, that notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff was not rightfully on the track at the place of the injury, yet, if the injury might have been avoided by the use of ordinary care and caution by the defendant, the latter was liable therefor. Brown v. Hannibal etc. R. R. Co., 11 R. 420.

The plaintiff's intestate was engaged in peddling kindling wood, with a horse and wagon, in a city street, near a railroad crossing. The rails were laid without any planking or filling. While the intestate was very near the team soliciting a customer, an approaching train frightened the horse, and it ran partly across the track, but owing to the absence of planking or filling the wheels of the wagon were prevented from crossing. The intestate instantly started in pursuit on the horse's running, and caught the horse on the track, and while there endeavoring to get it off the track, he was struck by the train and killed. The horse had not been tied, and the intestate was not holding him. There was a city ordinance forbidding any man to leave his horse in the street unless securely tied. The train was running at a rate forbidden by a city ordinance. Held, that a verdict in favor of the plaintiff should be sustained. Wanner v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 36 R. 608.

92. Omitting to give signal on approaching crossing.—A train should approach a crossing of a public street at a moderate rate of speed, and should give timely warning, by whistle or other usual notice, of approach of train, to those lawfully passing along the street; and if by neglect or omission that duty is not fulfilled, the railroad company is liable for injury or death resulting therefrom, unless it be affirmatively shown that ordinary care was not taken by the party injured to avoid the accident. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Hagan, 86 D. 541. S. P., Murray v. S. O. R. R. Co., 70 D. 219; Ernet v. Hudson R. R. Co., 90 D. 761; O'Mara v. Hudson R. R. Co., 98 D. 61; Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Barnett, 98 D. 346; St. Louis etc. R. R. Co. v. Terhune, 99 D. 504; Tabor v. Missouri Valley R. R. Co., 2 R. 517; Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Com., 26 R. 205; Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co. v. Brown, 33 R. 73.

A general law requiring a bell or whistle to be attached to each locomotive of a railroad company, and to be rung or whistled before crossing any other road, is applicable to and binding on a corporation created prior to its passage; and an omission to give the required signal is prima facie proof of negligence on the part of such corporation. Galena etc. R. R. Co. v. Loomis, 56 D. 471.

Railroad corporations are not liable for any and all damages that a person may sus-tain, when they have omitted to give a signal required by law. Until some proof is given tending to show that the injury resulted from a failure to give such signal, the burden of proving that it did not arise from such failure is not thrown upon the corporation. Id.

The lessee of a railroad is liable for injury by neglect to keep and ring a bell upon a locomotive, as required by the Massachusetts statute, whereby a collision with a vehicle crossing the track is caused. Linfield v. Old Colony R. R. Co. 57 D. 124.

A railroad company neglecting reasonable precautions besides ringing bell, as required by statute, to avoid collision with a vehicle at a turnpike crossing, is liable for an injury arising from such neglect, and it is for the jury to judge as to whether or not such additional precautions have been neglected. Id.

Negligence of a railroad company is shown from evidence that plaintiff was injured by a train of the defendant, which approached without signals and ran into a loaded team of the plaintiff, which he was endeavoring to drive over the railroad crossing, which had been recently raised and rendered difficult to cross. Milwaukee etc. R. R. Co. v. Hunter, 78 D. 699.

A statutory requirement that a bell on an engine be rung, or whistle blown, for a specified distance at crossings, imposes a duty upon railroad companies, not only in reference to persons approaching or in the act of passing the crossing, but in reference to all persons who, being lawfully at or in the vicinity of the crossing, may be subjected to accident and injury by the passing train. Wakefield v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 86 D. 711; Ransom v. Chi. etc. R'y Co., 51 R. 718.

In case of omission to give signal at crossings, as required by statute, and damage ensues in consequence, the railroad company must show that the omission was reasonable and prudent. Wakefield v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 86 D. 711.

No culpable negligence is established by proving that a stage-coach driver, in attempting to cross a railroad track, did not look in the direction from which the cars were approaching until his horses were on the track, where the usual signal of danger was not given as the stage advanced toward the crossing; and this although it appeared in evidence that if he had looked before he would have seen the cars in time to have avoided a collision. Brown v. N. Y. Cen. R. R. Co., 88 D. 353.

A person who on a public highway approaches a railway track, and can neither see nor hear any indication of a moving train, is not chargeable in law with negligence for assuming that there is no car sufficiently near to make the crossing dangerous. Ernst v. Hudson R. R. Co., 90 D. 761.

The degree of care demanded of the company in running its trains depends upon circumstances, and whether it used due care in approaching a bridge, or was negligent in not sounding an alarm, is a question for a jury. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Barnett, 68 D. 346.

The obligation of the company to give signals or alarms of approaching trains depends upon circumstances. Where there is no reasonable apprehension of danger, no such notice is required. But if danger to persons or property may be reasonably apprehended from a failure to give notice of an approaching train, it is the duty of the company to give such notice, and its failure to do so is negligence. Id.

Whether a railroad train should whistle or give other notice of its approach to where the road crosses the track is for the jury to say from all the circumstances of the case, and they should consider the relative positions of the two roads at the crossing, — whether it was difficult for a traveler to see an approaching train, in which case the care of the company should be increased, whether the wagon-road was much traveled, whether the whistle could be heard on it by a traveler, etc. Id.

Where plaintiff was crossing a bridge over a track, and a passing train whistled when directly under the bridge, causing his horses to take fright and run away, overturn his carriage, and injure him, if under the circumstances the sounding of the whistle was negligence, it was a sufficiently proximate cause of injury to warrant recovery against the company. Id.

A railroad corporation whose road passes over a highway by a bridge is not liable to a traveler on the highway for damages caused by the fright of his horse at the noise made by a train of cars passing over the bridge in the customary manner, although the corporation know that, because of special circumstances, accidents of a similar character are peculiarly liable to happen there, and although they give no warning of the approach of the train. Favor v. Boston and L. R. R. Co., 19 R. 364.

In an action against a railway company for an injury by collision at a street crossing in a city, it being proved that the whistle was not sounded nor the bell rung, evidence is competent to show an ordinance prohibiting such signals. Pennsylvania Co. v. Henkel, 36 R. 188.

An ordinance requiring a railway company to keep a watchman at a street crossing, the omission so to do is not negligent unless it is the proximate cause of an injury. Id.

If a traveler, driving on a highway and approaching a railroad crossing, is personally free from negligence, and the railway company neglects to give warning of the approach of a train, the traveler is not debarred from recovering for injury by collision by the fact that his horse, frightened by the engine, suddenly starts forward, and draws the driver into the danger. Cosgrove v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 41 R. 355.

It is negligent in a railroad company to run trains so near together at a highway crossing as to make the statutory signals unavailing to warn travelers on the highway. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Boggs, 51 R. 761.

93. Effect of contributory negligence on part of person crossing the track. — A railroad company should provide a suitable warning of danger at a common road crossing, so as to prevent injury to others as far as possible; but this duty on the railroad company's part will not justify the omission of any proper act of vigilance to avoid a collision by a person using such crossing, which he must know to be a place of danger; and if he is negligent, he must suffer the consequences, unless the railroad company has been guilty of negligence more gross and willful than his own. Chicago & R. I. R. R. Co. v. Still, 71 D. 236. S. P., Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409; Baltimore etc. R. R. Co. v. Breinig, 90 D. 49; Beisiegel v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 90 D. 741; Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. State, 96 D. 528; Pittsburgh etc. R'y etc. Co. v. Collins, 30 R. 371.

A traveler and persons running a train whose tracks cross must mutually exercise reasonable care. Reeves v. Delaware etc. R. R. Co., 72 D. 713.

Contributory negligence, in an action against a railroad company for injuries caused by a train running into a team at a crossing, is not shown by evidence that the plaintiff's horse balked at the crossing, where the horse was a young horse whose habits were not confirmed, and where his balking might well be attributed to his inability to raise the loaded wagon over the track, which was being raised at the crossing, and had been left in an unfinished condition. Such evidence is, therefore, not ground for a new trial as newly discovered evidence. Mishwaukee etc. R. R. Co. v. Hunter, 78 D. 699.

An adult is guilty of such negligence as will defeat recovery against a railroad company for injuries, where he attempts, in the night time, when he would not probably be seen by the engineer or conductor, to get to a passenger train by passing through a freight train, which he knew was ready to move at any moment. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Dewey, 79 D. 374.

One, who without authority, enters upon a railway track, and while there becomes insensible from providential causes, and while in this state, and in plain view, is injured by a train, may recover damages of the company, although the injuries were not wanton or willful; but otherwise if his insensibility was by reason of his voluntary intoxication. Houston and T. Cent. R'y Co. v. Symptkins, 38 R. 632.

One in the full possession of his faculties, who undertakes to cross a railroad track when a train of cars is about passing, and is struck by it, is prima facie guilty of negligence. State v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 49 R. 622.

A railway company constructed, for its track, in an ungraded and unimproved city street, an elevated embankment, and in connection with it a trestle-work crossing a creek, high above the water, without railings or flooring. The plaintiff's wife while attempting to walk over the trestle-work was injured by a car. Held, that the plaintiff was without remedy, in the absence of wanton negligence on the defendant's part, and that proof of a custom of foot passengers to cross the trestle-work was improper. Mason v. Missouri Pac. R'y Co., 41 R. 405.

Where one attempting to cross a railway at a public crossing was found thereon killed by a train, and there was no proof as to his exercise of care, but it appeared that he was a careful man, and familiar with the crossing and the time of the passing of trains, and the evidence showed negligence on the part of the railway company, — held, that the question of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Goetz, 42 R. 227.

An intelligent boy, ten years of age, was sent by his parents on an errand, on a street in a populous city, and while unnecessarily walking along a steam railway laid in the street was killed by a train. Held, that his contributory negligence defeated a recovery by the parents. Moore v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 44 R. 106.

94. Duty to look out for trains.* — A traveler on a highway approaching its intersection with a railroad is bound to look out for approaching trains, and his failure to do so is negligence, and not merely evidence of negligence. North Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Heilman, 88 D. 482. S. P., Butterfield v. Western R. R. Corp., 87 D. 678; Gonzales v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 98 D. 58; Wilcox v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 440; Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Beale, 13 R. 753; Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Weber, 18 R. 407; Tolman v. Syracuse etc. R. R. Co., 50 R. 649.

A traveler approaching a railroad track is bound to use his eyes and ears, so far as there is opportunity; and negligence of the railroad company in giving signals will not excuse his omission to be diligent in such use of his own means of avoiding danger. Ernst v. Hudson R. R. R., 100 D. 405; Gonzales v. New York & H. R. R. Co., 98 D. 58; Wilcox v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 440; Bellefontaine R'y Co. v. Hunter, 5 R. 201; Ormsbee v. Boston & P. R. R. Corp., 51 R. 354. Contra see Ernst v. Hudson R. R. Co., 90 D. 761.

A person crossing a railroad track is guilty of negligence, such as will prevent his recovery for injuries, where he could have seen the cars approach, but turned his back to the direction in which they were coming, and had his ears so bandaged that he could not hear, unless he can prove a greater degree of negligence on the part of the railroad company. Chicago & R. I. R. R. Co. v. Still, 71 D. 236.

A deaf person is guilty of negligence, who attempts to drive an unmanageable horse across a railroad track when a train is approaching. It is his duty to keep a vigilant lookout, in order to see and avoid the danger. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Buckner, 81 D. 282.

Crossing a railroad track without looking to see if a train is coming is not conclusive proof of a want of care, where it appears that there is a double track, that the person injured had just bought a ticket at a station for a train which was to pass upon the farther track, and that the station agent said to him, "The train is coming; we will cross over." Warren v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 85 D. 700.

When the question whether a traveler used ordinary care and prudence, in any given case, becomes so complicated and involves so many details that honest and intelligent men, acting without bias or partiality, in a single and sincere desire to determine according to the truth, may reasonably differ in their conclusions, then the question should be left to the jury. Ernst v. Hudson R. R. R. Co., 100 D. 405.

It will be presumed that a person injured in attempting to cross a railroad track did not look before crossing, if it appears that, had he done so, he would have seen the approaching train in season to have avoided it. Wilcox v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 440.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a person who has been killed by a train at a railway crossing will be presumed to have observed the precautions the law requires, and the burden of proof is on the railway company to show that he has not. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Weber, 18 R. 407.

The plaintiff driving over a railway at a highway crossing, his horse caught his foot between the rail and planking, and fell down. For two minutes the plaintiff was busied in trying to disengage the foot, when a train passing broke the horse's leg. Held, that the rule that the plaintiff should have stopped, looked and listened before driving on the track, was not applicable. Baughman v. Shenango and A. R. R. Co., 37 R. 690.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

95. Effect of obstructed view of track. — A railroad company accumulated on its own land, near a highway crossing, a large quantity of stumps and roots, from excavations in preparing for additional tracks. In an action on behalf of a person killed by the defendant's train in attempting to pass over the crossing, — held, that such accumulation, although it might have a material bearing on the subject of negligence on the part of both parties, yet did not in itself establish negligence on the part of the defendants nor constitute an independent ground of recovery. Cordell v. New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 26 R. 550.

In an action for a fatal injury at a street and a railway crossing, it appeared that the deceased was approaching the crossing in a wagon, that the crossing was at an acute angle, and the view was so obstructed by trees and corn that a train could not be seen beyond ten yards from the track and then for only fifty yards. The train was moving forty miles an hour without giving warning. It did not appear that the deceased stopped or looked and listened. Held, that a nonsuit for contributory negligence was improper. Schem v. Penn. R. R. Co., 52 R. 468.

96. Plaintiff must show himself free from negligence. — The use of a railroad track, cutting, or embankment, belongs exclusively to the company except where public ways cross it. Philadelphia and Read. R. R. Co. v. Hummel, 84 D. 457.

The company is not liable for injury to a person on its road where he had no right to be, unless want of ordinary care on the part of the company is affirmatively shown. Id.

In an action against a railway for killing a person at a highway crossing, it must be affirmatively shown that the deceased was free from negligence. Indiana etc. R'y Co. v. Greene, 55 R. 736. Contra see Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Weiser, 18 R. 407.

97. Injuries to children playing on track. — A railroad company is bound to exercise a high degree of caution at places and under circumstances where persons may be upon its tracks; and if, by its failure to do so, a child of tender years is injured, the company is liable in an action by the child, although the parent or custodian of the child is negligent in permitting it to be upon the track, or in not keeping a proper lookout for the cars. Bellefontaine & I. R. R. Co. v. Snyder, 98 D. 175.

If an infant eighteen months old gets upon a railroad track in consequence of the failure of the railroad company to erect a fence as required by law, and is run over and injured by a train on the track, the company is liable to it for the injury, if the parents exercised ordinary care in guarding the child. Schmidt v. Milwaukee etc. R'y Co., 99 D. 156; Fitzgerald v. St. Paul etc. R'y Co., 43 R. 212.

An infant, six or seven years old, lying insensible or asleep on a railway track, near a highway crossing, was injured by a train. He was perceived by the fireman and engineer in time to stop, but they supposed him a bunch of leaves or weeds, until too late. No warning signal was given. His parents had forbidden him to go on the track. Held, that a recovery was warranted. Meeks v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 38 R. 67.

A boy seven years old, without the fault of his parents, wandered to a railroad station, entered a passenger train and was carried to a distant station, where the conductor put him off, leaving him in charge of no one, and giving no instructions concerning him. The child, left to himself, went upon the track near a highway crossing, where he could be seen for three-fourths of a mile by persons in charge of a train coming from the south. A freight train moving northward in the day-time, on an ascending grade, where it could easily have been stopped, ran upon and killed the child. Held, that the railroad company was liable. Indianapolis etc. R'y Co. v. Pitzer, 58 R. 387.

A railroad company is not answerable in damages for injury to a five-year-old child, resulting from being struck by one of the company's engines while attempting to cross the track between such engine and a coal train which was running ahead of it, unless there is proof of want of ordinary care on the engineer at the time when and place where the injury occurred. Philadelphia etc. R. R. Co. v. Spearen, 86 D. 544.

Defendant's railway train ran over and injured a child four years of age, playing on its track. The place in question was a cutting through a ledge, near which the plaintiff lived with his mother. There were houses on both sides of the track upon the ledge and beyond it, and the cutting was unfenced at both ends. The cutting was 400 feet from any public street, but people were accustomed to pass through it. Held, that the plaintiff was a trespasser, and could not maintain an action for the injury, there being no evidence of malice or gross and reckless carelessness. Morrissey v. Eastern R. R. Co., 30 R. 686.

A boy, four or five years old, unaccompanied, climbed upon a railroad car, standing alone on a switch-track on a slightly descending grade, with brakes fastened, unfastened the brakes, and thus started the car, and then jumping or falling off, was run over by the car and killed. Held, that there was no liability on the part of the railroad company. Central Branch etc. R. R. Co. v. Henigh, 33 R. 167.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Except at public crossings a railway company owes no duty to the parents of a young child on its track, nor to the child itself. Casley v. Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co., 40 R. 664.

A boy, five or six years old, went for his own amusement on the platform of a railway station, and stood at the edge to watch an approaching train. The train drew up at the rate of three or four miles an hour, and an iron step, bent and projecting a few inches outward, struck and injured him. Held, that he could not recover therefor. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. v. Schwinding, 47 R. 706.

A railway turn-table, which was attractive, but dangerous to children, was left exposed and unfastened in a public place, and many children were in the habit of going on it to play. Held, that the railway company were liable for an injury done by the turn-table, while being moved by other children, to a child seven years old, and that the fact that the child was a trespasser did not relieve such company. Keffe v. Missouri Pac. R. R. Co., 18 R. 393; Nagel v. Missouri Pac. R. R. Co., 42 R. 418; Evansich v. G. etc. R'y Co., 44 R. 586; Contra see St. Louis etc. R. Co. v. Bell, 25 R. 269.

A boy, twelve years of age, was injured while playing on a railway turn-table, left unlooked and unguarded, in an open prairie, where persons frequently passed. Held, that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury. Kansas Cent. R'y Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 31 R. 203.

2. Injuries to Employees.

98. Duty of company to provide against accidents.—A railroad company must furnish its servants safe materials and structures, and keep its road and works and all portions of the track in such repair, and so watched and tended, as to secure the safety of all who may lawfully be upon them, whether passengers, servants, or others; and if the company fails in this respect, its employees not knowing of the defects, and not contracting with express reference to them, and being unable to ascertain them by the exercise of ordinary precaution or prudence, the company will be held liable for such injuries as their employees may suffer thereby. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Sweet, 92 D. 206. S. P., Mad River etc. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312; Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506; Thayer v. St. Louis R'y Co., 85 D. 409; O'Donnell v. Alleghany V. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336.

Where a railroad company itself is in fault as to its own peculiar duties, and by means of its neglect of that reasonable and ordinary care which it must be presumed to exercise in regard to its own business an injury is occasioned to one of its conductors or other employees, the company is liable in damages, unless the servant was also in fault, and his negligence or misconduct contributed as a proximate cause to the injury. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

The company is not liable, so far as the simple question of negligence is concerned, to parents, guardians, or representatives of a servant killed upon the road, when they would not have been liable to such person had he been injured simply, and not killed. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Tindall, 74 D. 259.

The company's obligation to introduce improvements in construction, apparatus, and machinery important to human safety extends in favor of all persons lawfully using its road; it is not limited to passengers holding tickets issued by the company. Smith v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 75 D. 305.

The duty of the company to furnish its servants safe materials and structures cannot be avoided by the delegation of its power or authority to do so to any other or number of persons; for its undertaking with its servants in this regard is direct. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Sweet, 92 D. 206.

A corporation can be held liable for injuries to its servants only when the injury has been caused by the neglect of its board of directors to perform some duty which devolved upon them. Columbus & I. C. R'y Co. v. Arnold, 99 D. 615.

The company is not required to provide against all such unforeseen accidents or misfortunes as could not be averted by the utmost care and diligence; and it is misloading and erroneous to instruct, in an action for causing the death of an engineer who was killed by a dead tree falling across the track, that it was the duty of the corporation to keep the road free from all objects and obstructions which might imperil the safe transit of trains. Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Filbern, 99 D. 690.

A railroad company, receiving a loaded car from another company to be run over its road, is not bound to test the safety of the car for its servants, but may assume its safety unless the contrary appears. Ballou v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 31.

A railroad company is not liable for the death of a brakeman caused by his falling through a bridge in process of repair, upon which the train had stopped at night. Koons v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 54 R. 5.

A railroad company is bound to adopt and promulgate rules for the protection of its employees against one another's negligence. So held as to repairmen working under cars. Abel v. Del. and Hud. Canal Co., 57 R. 773.

Plaintiff's intestate was employed by defendant—a railroad company—as a common laborer, for the purpose of loading and unloading freight cars. While thus engaged he was ordered by the depot superintendent to couple a freight car with other cars attached to a locomotive; and, having to go between the cars for this purpose, the engine was so carelessly managed that he was crushed to death. The duty of coupling the cars was entirely different from that for which deceased was hired. Held, that plaintiff could recover, on the ground of the misconduct of the company in exposing the intestate to the extra peril and then so carelessly managing the engine as to cause his death. Lalor v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 4 R. 616.

Defendant's agent, whose duty it was to make up and dispatch trains and to employ and station brakemen thereon, sent out a train without the requisite number of brakemen. The train parted, and in consequence of the want of necessary brakemen, one part collided with another train, killing plaintiff's intestate, who was also a servant of defendant. Held, that the defendant was liable, and that it was no defense that the agent had employed necessary brakemen, who failed to appear in time to go upon the train. Fiske v. Boston & A. R. R. Co., 13 R. 545; S. P., Booth v. Boston & A. R. R. Co., 29 R. 97.

A brakeman in defendant's employ, descending the ladder of a moving freight car, to throw a switch, was struck by a telegraph pole standing only eighteen inches from the car and killed. The pole had been suffered to remain in that position three years, but there was no evidence that the defendant put it there or knew of its existence. There was no evidence that the brakeman knew of it. Held, that an action of damages for the killing was maintainable. Chicago and I. R. R. Co. v. Russell, 33 R. 54.

The plaintiff, in the employ of a railway company, went under a car standing alone on a repair track, by order of his foreman, to repair it, and was there injured by the starting of the car by an advancing train. The track was usually protected. There was no proof of any precautions to protect it on this occasion. Held, that a nonsuit was improper. Luebke v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 48 R. 483. Compare, Luebke v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 53 R. 266.

A railway brakeman, suddenly called to supper, by the conductor, slipped on snow and ice accumulated near the station platform, and was injured. Held, that the company was not liable. Piquegno v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 50 R. 243.

A railroad company engaged in enlarging a tunnel on its line, constructed a magazine for storing dynamite 32 feet from the main line, and about 160 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, containing a stove and about 1,100 pounds of dynamite. An explosion took place from an unknown cause, killing one of the company's flagmen standing near the track. Held, that the question of negligence was for the jury. Tissue v. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. 56 R. 310.

99. Injuries occasioned by defective construction. — Negligence of a fellow-servant cannot be set up as a defense in an action against a railroad company to recover damages for the death of a servant employed on the road, occasioned by accident arising from the defective construction of the road. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Sweett, 92 D. 206.

An employee of the company upon a train of cars is not bound to know whether the road and its culverts and bridges have been properly constructed, or not; he has a right to rely upon the implied undertaking of his employers that they have been properly constructed, and are safe for the passage of trains, and that his superiors will exercise all the necessary diligence to keep them in proper repair. Id.

Plaintiff was injured, while in the discharge of his duty as brakeman of a freight train, by an awning projecting from a station-house, to the dangerous position of which the attention of the company's agent had been called. In an action against the company, it did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the danger. Held, that he could recover; but that $10,000 was excessive damages, the loss of an arm being the extent of the injury. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Welch, 4 R. 593.

A release of all claims arising from the injury, signed by the brakeman, in consideration of a small sum, would be a bar to an action, unless obtained by false representations. Id.

Where a railway company buys the line of another company, embracing a bridge obviously unsafe in plan and construction, and fails to correct the defects, and one of its employees is injured by the fall of the bridge, the company is liable, although the bridge had been in use for several years before the purchase without accident. Vorburgh v. Lake Shore etc. R'y Co. 46 R. 148.

It is negligent in a railway company to have cars in a construction train furnished with buffers of unequal heights. Towns v. Vicksburg etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 508.

A railway is liable for a personal injury to a locomotive engineer caused by an unsafe bridge, while the road was in course of construction and not open for trade or travel. Van Amburg v. Vicksburg etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 517.

100. — or want of repairs. — A railroad company is liable for injury to one of its servants, caused by a want of repair in the road-bed of the railroad. Snow v. Housatonic R. R. Co., 85 D. 720.

Where the duty of a servant of a railroad company requires him to uncouple the cars of a train, which is ordinarily done while the train is in motion, thereby loosening the bolt sufficiently to enable it to be withdrawn from its socket, and which cannot be done while the train is standing still, and he, in endeavoring to uncouple them while the train is in motion, steps between the cars, but meets with an injury caused by a want of repair of the road-bed of the railroad, the court cannot rule, as a matter of law, that he was careless, and should submit the question to be determined by the jury; although he continued in the employment of the company after he knew of the defect. Ib.

Remote negligence of servants in failing to keep the track in repair will not relieve the company from liability to one of their fellow-servants who was injured thereby. O'Donnell v. Allegheny V. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336.

A servant will be held, generally, to have assumed all the risks of his master's business, which the master cannot control; but where an employee of a railroad is injured by the track being out of repair, and the ties rotten, this is not one of those ordinary perils which presumptively every one incurs who takes service with the company, and they are liable. Ib.

A railway brakeman can maintain an action against the corporation for an injury sustained through its negligence to have its cars inspected. Brann v. Chicago etc. P. R. Co., 36 R. 243.

Plaintiff, while in the defendant's employ as a brakeman, was injured by a defect in defendant's road-bed, of which the section foreman, whose duty it was to keep the road-bed in repair, had notice. Held, that the negligence of such foreman was the negligence of the company, and that defendant was liable. Lewis v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 21 R. 335. S. P., Patterson v. Pittsburgh & C. R. R. Co., 18 R. 412.

An engineer on a railway locomotive was killed by its explosion resulting from its unsafe condition and want of proper repair. The engine was known to be out of repairs, and had been frequently laid up for repair. Held, that the defendant, operating the railroad, was liable, although he employed a competent superintendent of repairs and master mechanics, and made proper regulations, and the negligence was that of the mechanics directed to make the repairs. Fuller v. Jewett, 36 R. 575.

A brakeman in coupling freight-cars for the defendant was injured by a loose dead-wood on a car which had come from another road. The defendant had competent inspectors whose business it was to reject such cars. Held, that the brakeman could not recover of the defendant. Smith v. Flint etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 161.

101. — by low bridges. — A railroad company is not bound to build its bridges high enough to enable its employees safely to stand upright on the top of its cars, and a brakeman or a conductor who in the performance of his duty is injured while in that position cannot maintain an action therefor, although he was suddenly called upon to discharge that duty. Baylor v. Delaware etc. R. Co., 29 R. 208; Clark v. Richmond and D. R. R. Co., 49 R. 394; Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. v. Stricker, 34 R. 291.

An employee of a railroad company, who rides on the top of a freight train, voluntarily and out of the line of his employment, and while there is struck and killed by a low bridge, the situation and character of which he is acquainted with, is guilty of such contributory negligence as prevents a recovery. Pittsburg and C. R. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer, 37 R. 684.

A railway company is not liable for the death of a brakeman caused by a low bridge, with the situation of which he was acquainted, and of which he had not complained. Brosman v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 57 R. 479; Rains v. St. Louis etc. R'y Co., 36 R. 459. And this although it had not erected danger signal cords. Hooper v. Columbia and G. R. R. Co., 53 R. 691.

102. Imperfect machinery, tools, etc.* — 1. General rules. — An employer or master is liable for injuries to servants or workmen which happen by reason of improper and defective machinery and appliances used in the prosecution of a work. It is on this principle that the proprietors of a railroad are responsible for accidents happening by tracks improperly laid, etc. Snow v. Housatonic R. R. Co., 85 D. 720.

Where a locomotive, by accident, runs off the track and injures a servant of the railroad company, the latter is liable to the servant for such injury if it was occasioned by any imperfection in the road or machinery, of which the company had knowledge, or of which they, in the exercise of ordinary care, might have known; or by associating the servant with other servants wanting in ordinary skill or care; or by other culpable negligence on the part of the company. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506.

A railroad company is obliged to see that engines and apparatus are suitable, sufficient, and "as safe as care and skill can make them." This general doctrine is regulated by the proportion and importance of the business, and the perils incident to it. But if an engine, though not constructed according to the latest model, is shown to be safe, and is well adapted, in all respects, to the service, as one of more recent invention but of different construction, it is sufficient. Ib.

A complaint charges a sufficient cause of action for injury caused through defective machinery of a railroad company when it states what defects were in the machinery; that the defendant had full notice thereof;

* Liability of the company to employees for defects in machinery, see notes, 41 R. 38-41; 57 R. 727-729.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

that, nevertheless, it carelessly and recklessly caused the same to be used; that by reason of such use and defects, a fireman, an employee of the company, was injured; and that said servant had no knowledge, or means of knowing, of such defects. Columbus & I. R. R'y Co. v. Arnold, 99 D. 615.

An employee of a railway company cannot recover for an injury sustained by reason of an alleged defective brake, unless it was shown that the company was negligent, either in providing the machinery which caused the injury, or in selecting the mechanics whose duty it is to keep it in good order. Wonder v. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co., 3 R. 143.

One employed by a railroad corporation to drive a locomotive engine over its road may recover damages against the corporation for personal injuries caused by a defect in the engine, which was due to the neglect of the agents of the corporation charged with keeping the engine in proper repair, although the directors and superintendent had no reason to suspect negligence or incompetence on the part of such agents. Ford v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 14 R. 598.

An engineer is not debarred from recovering damages against the corporation for injuries from an explosion caused by a defect in the boiler of the engine, by the fact that he was acting in intentional violation of the rules of the company, unless the accident was due, in whole or in part, to such violation; nor by the fact that such rules provided that the driver of an engine should be held responsible for the condition of his engine, must be sure that it was in good working order, and must immediately stop, draw his fire, station his signal men and procure assistance, whenever any defect was detected in an engine that would make it, in his judgment, unsafe to proceed; nor by the fact that he knew the engine was not in good working order, if he did not know and ought not to have known that it was unsafe. Id.

The company is not liable to an employee for an injury occurring through neglect of any defects in an engine which simply diminish its motive power. Bajus v. Syracuse etc. R. R. Co., 57 R. 723.

2. Notice to company of defect.—An employee of a railroad company may recover damages for a personal injury received through defects in the machinery intrusted to him to use (here, through the bursting of the boiler of a locomotive on which he was employed as fireman), upon proof that the corporation had been notified of the weak or defective condition of the machinery, and had failed to repair or replace it. Keegan v. Western R. R. Corp., 59 D. 476.

The company is not liable for injury received by a conductor, in consequence of the insufficiency of the cars, or defects in the machinery, or running apparatus of the train under his charge and control, where such insufficiency or defects were unknown to both parties, and neither party was in fault. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

Where a brakeman was thrown from a car and killed by reason of the brakehead coming off the upright shaft, through the nut at the top being loose and coming off, the company will not be liable, as it was the brakeman's duty to see that the brake was in good repair and in fit condition for use, and to report its defects to the company. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Jewell, 92 D. 240.

Notices to the directors of the company that an engine is out of repair and unsafe for use is not of itself sufficient to render the company liable for injuries which may result from such defect to the employees of the company. Where they have placed it in the hands of a competent and trustworthy master-machinist, and have furnished him with adequate materials and resources for the repair thereof, they must have notice that the engine is being used while unsafe and out of repair, or they will not be liable for injuries to a fireman employed by the company, occasioned by the explosion of the engine's boilers. Columbus & I. C. R'y Co. v. Arnold, 99 D. 615.

3. Knowledge of servant when binds company.—If an engineer knows that the road or machinery is defective, his knowledge is knowledge of such defect on the part of the company. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506.

Where a section foreman furnishes to a laborer engaged in driving spikes an iron maul which he knows to be defective, and the laborer is injured in consequence of such defect, the company may be held liable although the laborer might have seen the defect if he had inspected the tool. Guthrie v. Louisville & M. R. R. Co., 47 R. 286; East Tennessee etc. R. R. Co. v. Duffield, 47 R. 319.

Where an engineer and fireman were killed by an explosion of a locomotive boiler which had been recently and insufficiently repaired in the shops of the railroad company, the company is not relieved from liability on the ground that the repairers and the deceased were fellow servants, although under the same superintendent. Pennsylvania etc. Canal and R. R. Co. v. Mason, 58 R. 722.

4. Illustrations.—Plaintiff's intestate, a brakeman on a freight train, was killed on defendant's railroad. The accident occurred while deceased was assisting in making what is termed a "flying switch," which is considered extra hazardous. Deceased was seen to stand upon a car for the purpose of uncoupling it while in motion, and immediately afterward his lifeless body was found under the advancing cars. There was no evidence as to what took place during the interval; but it appeared that the car on which the deceased stood was not supplied with the usual ladder or handle. Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not bound to raise, by his proof, more than a reasonable presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, and that if it appeared that the brakeman, by the exercise of due care, had from time to time discharged his duty without injury, this might raise a fair presumption against defendant, and it would be for it to show that his negligence or some circumstance which it could not control contributed to or caused the accident: (2) that it was a question for the jury as to how deceased got under the cars, or what caused him to fall, and they might presume care and caution on his part to save himself from harm. Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co., 4 R. 181.

An employee of a railway company, while obeying a signal to make a "flying switch" upon a very dark night, was run over and killed. He was run over by four platform cars which had just been detached from a passing train. There was on the four cars only one good brake, which was on the rear car, and only one light, which the brakeman had necessarily carried to the rear car. The defective brakes had been out of order a considerable time before the accident. Held, that the company was negligent in providing insufficient brakes and not enough lights, and was liable to the representatives of the employee for his death. Chicago etc. R'y Co. v. Taylor, 18 R. 626.

A railway engineer was killed by the explosion of a locomotive boiler. The boiler was made of the best material, and by first-class manufacturers; it had not been used long enough to create a reasonable suspicion of its unsafe condition; the defect could not have been discovered by any of the usual tests, and its appearance did not indicate its unsafe condition. Held, that the company was not answerable, being bound only to provide machinery of good material, constructed in a workmanlike manner. Indianapolis etc. R'y Co. v. Toy, 33 R. 57.

A railroad locomotive engineer, killed by defects in a foot-board, was shown to have been competent and careful, and exercising due care a few minutes before his death. Held, that the question of due care on his part was for the jury. Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 47 R. 425.

103. Risks assumed by employees.

—An employee, who voluntarily engages to serve a railroad company, in view of all the hazards to which he will be exposed, undertakes, as between himself and his employer, to run all the ordinary risks of the service; and this includes the risk of injuries, not only from his own want of skill or care, but likewise the risk of injuries from the negligence of his fellow-servants. But this doctrine is subject to the qualification that the employer must take care not to expose the servant to any risk, by associating him with other servants wanting in ordinary skill or care, or by the use of unsafe or unsuitable machinery, or by other culpable negligence. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506; Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

A servant or employee of the company, who voluntarily engages to serve it, is presumed to know that there are extraordinary dangers inseparable from such service, which human care and foresight cannot guard against. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Elliott, 78 D. 506.

A conductor or other employee of the company waives his own rights, and takes risk upon himself, if, with the full knowledge of the neglect and omission of said company to employ a sufficient number of hands to manage and safely run a train, to employ suitable and competent persons, to keep its road in proper repair, to provide it with sufficient, safe, and sound machinery, or to otherwise perform its own peculiar duties, he continues on in the business of the company, without any correction of such omission or neglect. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

A railway company is not bound to change its machinery in order to apply every new invention or supposed improvement in appliances; and an employee who consents to operate the machinery already provided by the company, knowing its defects, does so at his own risk. Wonder v. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co., 3 R. 143.

A railroad company may not contract in advance with its employees for the waiver and release of the statutory liability imposed on such companies for negligence of one employee causing injury to another employee without regard to the negligence of the company. Kansas Pacific R'y Co. v. Peavey, 44 R. 630; Railway Co. v. Spangle, 58 R. 833.

A brakeman twenty-four years old, who has been warned of the danger of coupling cars, takes upon himself the manifest risk of coupling cars with double dead-woods. Hathaway v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co., 47 R. 569.

A fireman on a railway locomotive must take the risk of "bucking snow." Bryant v. Burlington, etc. R. Co., 55 R. 275.

In an action by the servant of a railroad company against the company for an injury sustained by means of a car's being thrown from the track by the breaking of a switch, the declaration alleged that the injury was caused by the defendant's negligence, 1st, in not having a proper switch at the place, and 2d, in the imperfection of its cars by the want of proper check-chains. Held, 1.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

That the company was not responsible for hidden defects not discoverable by the most careful inspection; and 2, it appearing that plaintiff knew that some of the defendant's cars had no check-chains and were, therefore, not safe, that he assumed the risk incident thereto, although he had not prior to the accident noticed the absence of them from the particular car. Ladd v. New Bedford R. R. Co., 20 R. 331.

A locomotive engineer, while leaning outside an engine in motion, and looking back for a signal from the conductor, was injured by his head coming in contact with a signal post three feet eight inches distant from the track, and visible half a mile away. There were many other signal posts and other erections along the track at the same distance from it. He knew of those facts, but had not noticed this particular post. Held, that he was not entitled to recover for the injury, as he knew the danger and assumed the risk. Loejoy v. Boston and L. R. R. Corp., 28 R. 206.

A brakeman was injured by catching his foot in the guard of a switch. The guard was of T rail, the kind in general use, and it appeared that U rail would have been safer, although not in general use. The brakeman knew the character of the rail and continued in the service without objection. Held, that the railway company was not responsible. Smith v. St. Louis etc. R'y Co., 33 R. 484.

A switchman had been sent by the defendants to switch a car owned by another railroad company to be loaded with nitroglycerine by the consignor of that company. Owing to the negligence of the servants of that consignor there was an explosion, by which the switchman was killed. The switchman knew the dangerous character of the work. Held, that defendant was not liable. Foley v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 42 R. 481.

A brakeman was killed in trying to couple a freight car from another road, to a caboose, by reason of the difference in height of the couplings, which was apparent. Held, that his employer was not liable. Kelly v. Abbott, 53 R. 292.

An employee complained to the yardmaster that the work on which he was engaged was unsafe, because enough hands were not furnished to perform it. No promise to furnish more was given. The employee continued in the service and was injured. Held, that he was not negligent as a matter of law. Thorpe v. Mo. Pac. R'y Co., 58 R. 120.

A track-walker sued the company for personal injuries by the fall of a lump of coal from a tender on which it was carelessly piled up. His own testimony showed that he knew the habit of thus overloading tenders and had seen lumps of coal on the track.

Held, that he could not recover, 1. Because he assumed the risk; 2. Because there was not necessarily any negligence in this manner of piling the coal; 3. Because the coal-heavers and firemen were fellow-servants with the track-walkers. Schultz v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 58 R. 881.

104. Effect of contributory negligence of servant injured. — A plaintiff seeking to recover damages from the company for injury received by him while acting as conductor, and caused by the company's failure and neglect to provide the train with sufficient hands, and suitable and safe machinery, etc., must lay a sufficient foundation for a recovery and judgment, in addition to the allegation that he had not a knowledge of the insufficiency or defects which were the alleged cause of the injury, that he had exercised due care and diligence in the use and examination or inspection of the cars, machinery, etc., belonging to the train, while the same were in his charge and under his direction. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312.

A conductor was knocked from a freight train and killed by a projecting roof of defendant's depot. He was familiar with the road, had passed over it daily for a long time, and the roof had not been altered after he entered the defendant's employ. Held, that the company was not liable. Gibson v. Erie R'y Co., 20 R. 552.

It is not negligent for the engineer of a railway passenger train to stay at his post in the face of an impending collision. Pennsylvania Co. v. Roney, 46 R. 173.

Where an engineer is killed by the derailment of the engine in consequence of a negligent defect in the track, he is not chargeable with contributory negligence, although he knew that the air brake was out of order, and if it had been in order the accident might have been prevented. Flynn v. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 99.

An employee was killed, while coupling cars loaded with iron, by being caught between the projecting ends of the iron. The iron was loaded in the ordinary way, and the deceased knew and had been warned of the danger, and had been specially warned, on the day of his death to stoop when coupling cars. Held, that it was error to submit the question of extraordinary risk to the jury, and that there could be no recovery. Northern Cent. R'y Co. v. Huson, 47 R. 690.

An employee was sent on a wrecking train in charge of one person as engineer and conductor. In violation of the rule of the company he rode on the engine. By the negligence of the engineer an accident occurred by which he was killed, in consequence of his position on the engine. Held, 1. That he was guilty of contributory negligence; 2. That he and the engineer and conductor were fellow-servants, and no action would lie. Abend v. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co., 53 R. 616.

On the defendant's railway was a bridge with sides five feet high, coming up one foot above the floor of the engine-cab, and thirteen and a half inches from the sides of passing engines. The plaintiff's intestate, a fireman, well knowing the character and situation of the bridge, without orders and in violation of the rules, opened the ash-pan, whereby fire was communicated to woolen waste in a journal box. Then without orders or necessity, he stood outside of the engine on the steps of the engine and tender, and endeavored to extinguish the fire with a hose, and while so employed he was struck by the side of the bridge and killed. Held, that the company was not liable. Shreder v. Chesapeake and O. R. R. Co., 59 R. 654.

105. Company when liable for act of co-servant.—A railroad company which employs a servant known by it to be unfit for the business is chargeable with the consequences of such servant's carelessness. Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 80 D. 467. S. P., Gilman v. Eastern R. R. Co., 90 D. 210.

A servant of the company, improperly absent without leave, if received on one of the company's trains, other than that to which he belongs, without objection from the conductor, who is authorized and charged with the duty of excluding all persons not lawfully entitled to be on the train, may recover for an injury caused by a collision while on such train. Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. R. Co., 75 D. 784.

The responsibility of railroad companies for injuries resulting from negligence of engineers is graduated by the class of persons injured. As to strangers, ordinary negligence is sufficient; as to subordinate employees associated with the engineer in conducting the cars, the negligence must be gross; but as to employees in a different department of service, unconnected with the running operations, ordinary negligence may be sufficient. Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Collins, 87 D. 486.

Where plaintiff was injured through the alleged intemperance of a switchman in defendants' employ, and it is claimed that he is habitually intemperate, evidence that that is his general reputation is admissible to show that the defendants, if they used due care, might have known that he was habitually intemperate, and therefore an unsuitable servant to be employed by them. Gilman v. Eastern R. R. Co., 90 D. 210.

Where a railroad engineer is wild, reckless, and careless, and is going down grade at such an improper and excessive rate of speed as to necessitate the setting of the brakes, and where the setting of the brakes caused the train to oscillate violently, throwing the brakeman from the train and killing him, the railroad company is liable for damages for such killing, if the incompetence of the engineer was so generally known that they would be held to a knowledge of it. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Jewell, 92 D. 240.

The implied undertaking of employees in the same service to risk contingencies which the ordinary skill and care of each, in his line of service, could not avert, does not exonerate the company from liability for damages resulting to one of such co-agents from the extraordinary or gross negligence of another of them. Louisville & N. E. R. Co. v. Filbern, 99 D. 690.

The company is liable for the death of an engineer, if the section boss or some other agent of the company than the engineer was alone guilty of willful negligence causing the death, notwithstanding, in his own sphere, the engineer may have been guilty of some neglect of duty. Id.

Under a statute making railroad companies liable to their employees for injuries sustained by them by the negligence of their other employees, a railroad company is liable for an injury suffered by a detective in its employ, while in the discharge of his duty, through the negligence of an engineer on a passenger train. Pyne v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 37 R. 198.

A railway company is liable for an injury sustained by one of its brakemen, by the fall of a derrick erected by its employees at the side of its track, in such a position as to be liable to cave away with the bank, and negligently suffered so to remain. Holden v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 37 R. 343.

In an action on behalf of a fireman killed by the washing out of a culvert, the negligence of the company's bridge-builder in constructing, and of the roadmaster in repairing the culvert is attributable to the company, although they were ordinarily skillful and careful men in their several employments. Davis v. Cent. Vt. R. R. Co., 45 R. 590.

A railroad company cannot free itself from liability for negligence, by an agreement of lease placing its employees and trains under the control of the manager of another railroad. Wabash etc. R'y Co. v. Peyton, 46 R. 705.

As to whether a brakeman can recover against his company for an injury received in consequence of the conductor's managing the locomotive in the engineer's absence, the court were equally divided. Rodman v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co., 54 R. 348.

A railway company is liable for the death of its engineer on one train, caused by the negligence of its conductor on another train and its telegraph operator. Madden v. Chesapeake and O. R'y Co., 57 R. 695.

The conductor of a train of cars was in.

jured in consequence of the mismanagement of the locomotive by a fireman who had been placed in charge of the engine by the agents of the company. In an action for damages against the company,—held, that they were responsible on the ground that they were "negligent or unmindful of their duty in employing competent and skillful servants in the execution of their business, and injury resulted therefrom to a fellow-servant." Harper v. Indianapolis etc. R. R. Co., 4 R. 353.

A fireman on a locomotive engine carelessly threw a lump of coal from the tender, which struck and killed a track repairer, servant of the same company, standing near. Held, that the company was liable in damages. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Moranda, 34 R. 168.

An employee of a railroad company was injured by one of its locomotive engines, owing to the negligence or incompetency of the fireman, who against the rules of the company had been temporarily left in charge of the engine by the engineer. The master mechanic of the company, whose duty it was to employ and discharge the engineers and firemen, knew that the engineers generally were in the habit of so leaving their engines. Held, that the company was liable for the injury. Ohio and M. R'y Co. v. Collarn, 38 R. 134.

A railway section foreman, returning from work with his crew on a hand car, and meeting a train, transferred the car to a parallel track operated by another company, as had previously been done occasionally, but without the knowledge of either company, and on that track his car was negligently run against a car containing section men of that road, whereby one of the men was injured. Held, that the foreman's employers were liable. Pittsburgh etc. R'y Co. v. Kirk, 52 R. 675.

106. When not so liable.—A railroad company is not liable to a conductor or other employee for injury resulting from the carelessness, negligence, or misconduct of another employee, when both are engaged in a common service and no power or control is exercised by the one over the other. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312. S. P., Chicago & A. R. R. Co. v. Murphy, 5 R. 48.

A railroad company is not liable to one employee for injuries occasioned by another, where both are engaged in the same undertaking; and it makes no difference that the injury is the result of negligence of an employee of higher authority, to whom the injured employee is subject, and from the consequences of whose negligence he cannot guard. Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 85 D. 409. S. P., Laning v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 10 R. 417.

A railroad corporation must use every reasonable care in proper construction of its road, and in supplying it with necessary equipments, including properly constructed engines, and necessary and proper materials for its repair, and the selection of competent, skillful, and trusty subordinates. If these duties are performed with care and diligence by the directors, and one of the employees so employed is guilty of negligence, by which an injury occurs to another employee, the company is not responsible. Columbus & I. C. R'y Co. v. Arnold, 99 D. 615. S. P., O'Connell v. Baltimore etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 549; Davis v. Detroit & M. R. R. Co., 4 R. 364.

Where a brakeman knows his conductor to be habitually careless, and chooses to continue in service with him, and does not inform the company of his known acts of carelessness and refuse to serve with him, he cannot recover against the company for injuries suffered from further carelessness, even though the company also knows it. Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 80 D. 467.

An employee of a railroad, traveling from his home to his post of duty and back upon the cars of the company, free of charge, as stipulated for in the contract of service, is not a passenger, and the company is not liable for his death caused by so traveling by the negligence of a co-employee. Vick v. New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 36.

One employed about a railway engine-house, to wipe the engines and open and shut the doors, and the like, is not entitled to recover of the company for an injury sustained by him in shutting the doors by the negligence of a co-employee, under a statute giving the right of recovery in such cases when the injury is "in any manner connected with the use and operation" of the railway. Malone v. Burlington etc. R'y Co. 47 R. 813.

The fireman of a locomotive was killed through the alleged negligence of a switchman of the road. A prior act of neglect had been charged upon the switchman, but upon investigation by the defendant's general agent, he was retained in his position. He had at all other times appeared competent and faithful. Held, that no negligence could be imputed to defendants in retaining the switchman in their employ, and that, therefore, they were not liable for the death of the fireman. Baulec v. New York and H. R. R. Co., 17 R. 325.

A fireman was killed by a collision between his train and another which was behind time. It was the custom and rule of the company, when a train was behind time, to move it in conformity to telegraphic orders from the train dispatcher, to be delivered by the receiving operator to the conductor and engineer in presence of one another. In this instance the train dispatcher telegraphed, directing the late train to await the other at a specified station.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The operator gave the message to the conductor but not to the engineer; the conductor receipted for it in the engineer's name, without the engineer's knowledge; and the operator advised the train dispatcher that it had been duly communicated. The conductor forgot to deliver the order to the engineer, and the engineer proceeded, and thus caused the collision. It did not appear but that the conductor and operator were competent and skillful, and it appeared that the rule had worked well for several years. Held, that the negligence was that of fellow-servants of the deceased, and there could be no recovery therefor against the company. Slater v. Jewett, 39 R. 627.

A mechanic employed in the repair shop of a railway company was killed by the explosion of the boiler of a locomotive engine sent there for repairs, and upon which he was at work. This happened through the failure of other employees, competent and skillful at the last stage of the repairs, to discover and repair defects in the boiler overlooked at a previous stage of the repairs, by other competent and skillful employees. Held, that no action would lie against the company. Murphy v. Boston and A. R. R. Co., 42 R. 240.

A gang of track-repairers on a railroad quit work fifteen minutes before the usual hour, by order of the foreman, to take a train for a certain station, whither they were to be carried free, according to a monthly custom, to be paid off. The plaintiff in endeavoring to board the train was injured by a hand-car worked by other men in the company's employment. Held, that he could not recover therefor. O'Brien v. Boston and A. R. R. Co., 52 R. 279.

107. Who are co-servants within the rule.*—Whether the rule that a master is not liable for injuries to a servant, caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant, is applicable to servants of railroad companies in different grades of employment, one being subordinate to the other, quære. Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. R. Co., 75 D. 784.

An engineer of a construction train, and a workman engaged in repairing the track who rides back and forth on such train, are persons engaged in the same general undertaking, and the representatives of the workman cannot recover of the railroad company for his death caused by the negligence of such engineer. Ohio etc. R. R. Co. v. Tindall, 74 D. 259.

A master-machinist who has the immediate charge, control, and direction of the engines and other machinery of a railroad company, and the repairs thereof, and the control and direction of the engineers and firemen on the trains, is a fellow-servant of such a fireman. Columbus & I. O. R'y Co. v. Arnold, 90 D. 615.

A railroad company is not liable to its brakeman for an injury by the neglect of its competent inspector to inspect a car received from another road for transportation. Mackin v. Boston and A. R. R., 46 R. 456; Smith v. Flint etc. R'y Co., 41 R. 161; Foley v. Chicago and N. W. R'y Co., 42 R. 481.

A railway company is not liable to a brakeman for an injury sustained through the negligence of an engineer. Nashville etc. R. R. Co. v. Wheelis, 43 R. 317.

A foreman of a railroad company, with power to hire and discharge hands, is a co-employee, with men under him, within a statute authorizing employees to recover from the employer for injuries by the negligence of other employees. Houser v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 46 R. 65.

A railroad yard-master and a car repairer are fellow-servants. Kirk v. Atlanta etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 621.

A railway brakeman was injured by collision with another train, moving in the opposite direction, and which had been negligently sent out by the train dispatcher. Held, that he had no cause of action against the railway company. Robertson v. Terre Haute and I. R. R. Co., 41 R. 552.

A declaration alleged that plaintiff was employed as a laborer, in repairing a culvert for defendants, which was in a dangerous condition; that the danger was unknown to him, but known to defendants' agent and road-master in charge of the repairs; and that defendants, by their agent and road-master, so negligently conducted the repairs that plaintiff was injured. Held, insufficient; the plaintiff and the road-master were fellow-servants, and the defendants were therefore not liable in the absence of allegations of negligence in selecting competent servants, or that the injury was caused by the dangerous condition of the culvert. Lawler v. Androscoggin R. R. Co., 16 R. 492.

108. Who are not.*—A carpenter employed in building a bridge is not a fellow-servant of those employed in the management of the company's train, while traveling on such train by direction of the company in order to assist at another place in loading bridge timbers; and if he is injured during the journey by the negligence of such employees, the company is liable to him as to a passenger and stranger. Gilkenwater v. Madison & I. R. Co., 61 D. 101. S. P., O'Donnell v. Allegheny V. R. R. Co., 98 D. 336; Ryan v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 14 R. 32.

ing for injuries from negligence. Lackawanna etc. R. R. Co. v. Chencowith, 91 D. 168.

The conductor of a railway train material is not a fellow-servant of the trainmen; nor is a section foreman. Moon v. Richmond & A. R. R. Co., 49 R. 401; Chicago etc. R'y Co. v. Swanson, 49 R. 718; Coleman v. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co., 60 R. 516.

A railway train-dispatcher and a locomotive engineer are not fellow-servants. Darvign v. New York etc. R. R. Co., 52 R. 590.

A railroad car-inspector and car-coupler are not fellow-servants. Tierney v. Minneapolis etc. R. R. Co., 53 R. 35.

A railway locomotive engineer and a section-master of track-repairers are not fellow-servants within the rule as to master's liability for injury by one servant to another. Calvo v. Charlotte etc. R. R. Co., 55 R. 28. S. P., Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Conroy, 56 R. 835; St. Louis etc. R'y Co. v. Weaver, 57 R. 176.

The plaintiff was a train hand employed by the defendant, a railroad company, in digging gravel under the direction of L., who was engineer, superintendent and conductor and master of the gravel and material train of defendant, and who had entire charge of that branch of the business on a section of the railroad, with power to employ and discharge hands. Held, that the plaintiff and L. were not mere fellow-servants, and that the plaintiff might recover of defendant for an injury sustained by L.'s negligence. Dobbin v. Richmond and D. R. R. Co., 31 R. 512.

109. The company's alter ego.—A railroad company placing one person in its employ under direction of another in its employ is liable for injuries to the person placed in the subordinate situation by the negligence of his superior, upon the ground that the injured person, at the time of the injury, was acting under the immediate control and direction of his superior, by whose neglect the injury was received; and thus occupied a position which precluded him from exercising his own discretion in looking to and providing for his own safety. Mad River etc. R. R. Co. v. Barber, 67 D. 312; Cowles v. Richmond and D. R. R. Co., 37 R. 620.

An officer of a railroad company having charge of a department of its business in which injury occurs, is the person who is expected to use ordinary care in the employment of proper conductors and other servants. His carelessness in that respect is the carelessness of the company, and his knowledge is its knowledge. It is, therefore, error to exclude evidence that such officer did not know that the person through whose improper conduct the alleged injury occurred was a careless conductor. Fraser v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 80 D. 467.

3. Relative Rights and Liabilities of Connecting Lines.

110. Interpretation of contracts and leases between associated companies.*—One railroad company by merely permitting another to use its road is not obliged to put the road in repair, or to make any change whatever in the arrangements of the road, or alterations in the road itself. Murch v. Concord R. R. Corp., 61 D. 631.

A provision in the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to connect with a point at the further end of another railroad "by railroad, canal, or slack-water navigation," justifies the company in making an arrangement with such other company for the joint ownership of locomotives to run over both their roads. Okott v. Tioga R. R. Co., 84 D. 298.

A railroad company is liable as common carrier for injuries to cars of a connecting company while they are in transit over its road, and which it receives with their passengers and freight into its exclusive custody and control. Vermont etc. R. R. Co. v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 92 D. 785.

A railroad company is liable to a connecting company for injuries to the cars of the latter arising from a defective condition of the road of the former, whether attributable to negligence or not, if the contract be construed to include cars, where the former company agreed to draw over its road the cars of the latter with their passengers and freight, and the latter agreed to save the former harmless from all claims and damages arising from any injury to passengers, or loss of or damage to baggage, goods and freight, while in transit over the same, "unless such injury, loss, or damage shall be clearly shown to arise from or be occasioned by the negligence or default" of the transporting company, "or from some defect in the road." Id.

In the absence of any contract between the owners of two connecting railroads, one cannot maintain an action against the other for failing to ship cotton over plaintiff's road which the other road had transported to the point of connection; and the fact that the owners of the cotton had contracted with the plaintiff to ship the cotton over its road does not give it a right of action against the defendant. Wilmington etc. R. R. Co. v. Greenville etc. R. R. Co., 30 R. 23.

By agreement between the parties, connecting railway companies, the defendant was to receive the defendant's cars for delivery at a point on the defendant's line, and to return them in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear by use excepted. Both parties were to share the profits of the freight so carried, and defendant was to pay the plaintiff a fixed sum for the use of its cars. Without fault on the defendant's part, certain of the plaintiff's cars were destroyed by fire on the defendant's line, while being thus transported. Held, that the defendant was not liable. St. Paul etc. R. Co. v. Minneapolis etc. R'y Co., 37 R. 404.

111. Their liabilities as carriers of merchandise. *—1. When liable beyond own particular line.—Railroad companies may contract to carry passengers and freight beyond their own routes. Wheeler v. San Francisco etc. R. R. Co., 89 D. 147.

Railroad companies as common carriers may make valid contracts to carry beyond the limits of their own road, either by land or water, and thus become liable for the acts and neglect of other carriers in no sense under their control. Ib.

Receiving goods destined beyond the terminus of a particular railway, accepting the carriage through, and giving a ticket or check through, imports an undertaking to carry through, and this contract is binding upon the company. Ib.

Each carrier is liable for the whole distance where several companies combine their operations as common carriers, and transport passengers and merchandise by a mutual arrangement over all their lines upon one contract for one price; and a company may be bound, even without any actual arrangement with the connecting lines, if by their agents they hold themselves out to the public as common carriers to a place beyond the limits of their own road. Wheeler v. San Francisco etc. R. R. Co., 89 D. 147; Bradford v. So. Cal. R. R. Co., 62 D. 411.

The company cannot answer that the contract to carry beyond their own route is ultra vires. Wheeler v. San Francisco etc. R. R. Co., 89 D. 147.

If the company holds itself out as a common carrier to a point beyond the termination of its road, it is a common carrier for the whole distance; and if it professes to contract and does contract with and carry persons generally the entire distance, it must treat all alike, and contract with and carry all who apply. This principle applies to the carriage of property as well as passengers. Ib.

The company may own and control steamboats, for transporting its passengers and freight across navigable waters on the line of its road and constituting a part thereof; and where the carriage must end in water transportation in order to reach the substantial termini of the company's route, it is as much bound to carry over a navigable bay at the end of its route as it would be to carry across a navigable body of water in the middle of the route. Ib.

A railroad company will be estopped from denying that it is a common carrier beyond the line of its own road, if its agents so represent the company to the public, in such a manner, or for such a length of time, that the corporators may be presumed to know it and therefore assent to it. Perkins v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 507.

Where several companies are sued for delay on a joint contract of transportation, evidence introduced by them as to which of them should have furnished cars at a particular point of the transportation is immaterial, since they were jointly liable for a failure to fulfill the contract, and the plaintiff had no concern with any arrangement of the defendants among themselves. Sisson v. Cleveland etc. R. R. Co., 90 D. 252.

Where a railroad company, whose southern terminus was Chicago, Illinois, received flour at its depot at Neenah, Wisconsin, directed to New York, etc., and gave a receipt containing the written clause, "Contract from Neenah to New York at $2.25 per bbl.," the contract was held, to be one to deliver the flour at New York for a fixed compensation, and the company was held liable as a common carrier for the whole route. Peet v. Chicago etc. R'y Co. 91 D. 446.

In an action against a railroad company to recover for the loss of a box of goods, it appeared that the box, marked to the plaintiff at Washington, D. C., was delivered to the company at Peoria, Ill., for which a receipt was given, headed "through freight contract," but stipulating that their responsibility should cease at the terminus of their road. Among the conditions attached to the bill of lading was the following: "The responsibility of this company as a common carrier, under this bill of lading * * * to terminate when the goods are unloaded from the cars at the place of delivery." The evidence showed that through freight was never unloaded or delivered at the terminus of the company's road, but forwarded to its place of destination in the cars in which it was received. Held, that plaintiff could recover whether the loss occurred on the company's road or beyond the terminus. Toledo etc. R'y Co. v. Merriman, 4 R. 590.

Defendants received goods as the last of a series of connecting railroads, the first of which had contracted with plaintiff to transport the goods "all rail," and to deliver them, "unavoidable accidents of the railroad and fire in depot excepted." Held, (1) that the terms of the contract permitted all necessary transportation by water, as by ferries, and that the connecting companies were entitled to the benefit of the exception in case of loss; but (2) that as defendants

* Connecting lines, respective liability of, see note, 42 R. 664-667.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

line was out of the usual "all rail" route to destination, and required extended transportation by water, some twenty miles, they were not entitled to the benefit of the exceptions, but were liable as insurers in case of loss by one of the perils excepted. Maghee v. Camden & Amboy R. R. Co., 8 R. 124.

2. When not so liable.—A railroad company does not, by merely receiving goods marked to go to a place beyond its terminus, undertake to carry them beyond the line of its own road. Neither an advertisement published by the company, setting forth the facilities for transportation possessed by the company, nor a receipt given by it to the shipper, stating that it has received the goods for transportation, is evidence of a special contract to carry the goods to the place to which they are directed; such receipt proves nothing more than a promise to carry the goods to the end of the road and thence forward them by the usual conveyance. Elmore v. Naugatuck R. R. Co., 63 D. 143. S. P., Crawford v. Southern R. R. Assoc., 24 R. 626.

Where a railroad company transports highly inflammable material, and then delivers it over to a second carrier, where it occasions a conflagration, the company cannot be held liable for the damage, as if their carrying the material, if negligence, was too remote a cause to charge them. McMillan v. Michigan South etc. R. Co., 93 D. 208.

Where a railroad company receives goods marked for transportation beyond its line, it assumes the common-law liability for loss or damage, whether occurring on its own or another line; but a receipt specifying that it will not be liable for any loss unless occurring on its own line, will be construed as a special contract, limiting its liability to its own line if it is found, by a jury, that the consignors understood the terms of the receipt and assented to them. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Frankenberg, 5 R. 92.

Where defendant's station agent at Ludlow, Vermont, billed the plaintiff's goods through to Charlestown, Massachusetts, a point upon a connecting road, and receipted the pay for "transporting the merchandise from Ludlow to Charlestown," this being shown to be in accordance with the usual course of business upon the defendant's road—held, that these facts, without further proof, constituted proper and sufficient evidence to warrant the court in submitting to the jury the question whether or not the defendants undertook to transport the goods over the connecting road to the point of their ultimate destination. Mann v. Birchard, 94 D. 398.

3. Right to freight, and how enforced.—Where one of several connecting lines of railway receives goods from another, and, without knowledge of any special contract between the shipper and the company first receiving them, pays, in accordance with the usual custom in such cases, the freight and charges demanded at the point where the goods are so received by it, in the absence of any arrangement or understanding between the companies with reference to through transportation, such company may retain possession of the goods until the consignee pays its customary charges for transportation, and also the freight and charges paid by it on its receipt of the goods, although this sum may exceed the amount for which the company which first received the goods agreed that they should be carried to their ultimate destination. Wells v. Thomas, 72 D. 228.

4. Liability as respects the leased road.—A railroad corporation which has leased a portion of another connecting road is not exempt from liability to the owner of goods delivered to it at a depot on the leased portion of the road, by reason of an agreement with the proprietors of the latter road, by which the two corporations, upon their respective roads, mutually agree to furnish suitable depot accommodations, and receive and deliver freights, and that the liability of the first corporation for upward freight upon the road of the second shall not commence until delivery on the cars of the first. McCheser v. Manchester etc. R. R., 74 D. 624.

A railroad corporation receiving freight for delivery over a railroad leased to them cannot dispute their liability therefor on the ground that such lease is void. Id.

112. Liabilities as carriers of passengers and their baggage. 1. Carriers of passengers.—A railroad company may be bound by a special contract to transport persons or property beyond the line of its own road and this without any actual arrangement with connecting lines, if by its agents it holds itself out to the public as a common carrier to a place beyond such limits. Perkins v. Portland etc. R. R. Co., 74 D. 507.

A railroad company is liable as a common carrier of persons, when cars of another railroad containing passengers are transferred to its road, attached to its engine, and wholly committed to the supervision and control of its agents and conductors. Schopman v. Boston etc. R. R. Corp., 55 D. 41.

A railroad company does not assume duty to passengers of another railroad company by merely giving the latter permission to use its road; nor, it seems, by contracting to make its road safe for such passengers. The remedy of a passenger injured is against the company with whom he contracted. Murch v. Concord R. R. Corp., 61 D. 631.

Railroads are not necessarily public ways; and if it could be inferred from the nature of their chartered powers that they are such, or if the court is bound to take notice that they had become public corporations, it does not follow that all their tracks are public ways. Id.

Railroad corporations, both chargeable with negligence causing collision of their trains, are liable to a joint action for damages for injuries sustained by a passenger. Colegrove v. N. Y. etc. R. R. Co., 75 D. 418.

A passenger who buys a through ticket, indicating no particular route, on a railroad, is bound to pursue the usual and direct route from the place of starting to the place of destination, and is not entitled to take a circuitous route from one point to another between those places. Bennett v. New York Cent. etc. R. Co., 25 R. 250.

A passenger by railway, purchasing a ticket over the line of the seller and connecting lines, and injured by the negligence of one of such connecting lines, cannot maintain an action therefor against the seller. Nashville and C. R. R. Co. v. Sprayberry, 35 R. 705.

A railroad company selling passenger tickets over its own road and connecting roads is bound for the transportation of passengers to the destination, notwithstanding notice on the tickets that it will not be liable except as to its own road. Central Railroad v. Combs, 48 R. 582.

By contract between the Missouri Pacific Railway company and the defendant, the passenger trains of the latter were to be drawn over the road of the former between the town of Pacific, defendant's eastern terminus, and the city of St. Louis, the Missouri Pacific Company using its own locomotives and crews, and the defendant furnishing at its own expense all the train men, the manner of running the trains and the control of the train men being subject to the rules and regulations of the Missouri Pacific Company. Held, there could be no recovery against the defendant for the death of a passenger caused by the failure of the train to stop long enough for him to alight at the destination between St. Louis and Pacific, the deceased having purchased his ticket from the Missouri Pacific Company, for transportation from St. Louis to Webster where the accident occurred. Smith v. St. Louis etc. R'y Co., 55 R. 380.

2. Carriage of baggage—liability of first company.—A railroad company selling tickets and checking baggage over its own and other lines is liable for loss of baggage anywhere upon the route. Ill. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Copeland, 76 D. 749; Najac v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 686; Hawley v. Screven, 35 R. 126; Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. v. Campbell, 38 R. 617; Louisville etc. R. R. Co. v. Weaver, 42 R. 654.

Independent railroad companies operating roads which form a connecting route, under an agreement which authorizes the agents of each to sell through tickets, are each so far liable for the performance of passage contracts that a passenger may sustain an action against the corporation of whose agent he bought his ticket for loss of baggage, on proof that it was not delivered to him at the end of the trip by the agents of the corporation whose road is the last on the connection. Hart v. R. & S. R. R. Co., 59 D. 447.

A railroad company is under no obligation to carry passengers beyond the termination of its route over connecting lines, or to transport their baggage over such lines. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Schwarzenberger, 84 D. 490.

Acceptance of fare over the whole route raises no implied agreement on part of the company to transport passengers and their baggage over connecting lines, where there has been an express disclaimer of personal liability on the part of the company, by giving to each passenger a ticket in which he is informed that the company assumes no responsibility for their carriage beyond its own lines. Id.

One railroad company may act as agent for connecting railroad lines. Id.

A railroad company is not liable to a passenger for loss of baggage not occurring upon the line of its own road, where the ticket sold by the company to a point upon a connecting road contained a printed stipulation that, in selling, the company acted as agent only, for roads beyond the terminus of its own road. Id.

For loss of baggage while being transported over connecting lines, the passenger's remedy is against the company which undertook for that portion of the route upon which the baggage was lost. Id.

Mere failure of a railroad company to deliver baggage of a passenger at a point on its road is not evidence of negligence on the part of a connecting railroad which sold the passenger tickets over both roads to such point, and checked his baggage accordingly. Stinson v. Connecticut R. R. Co., 93 D. 140.

Where various railroad companies having connecting lines from Boston to Montreal have arranged among themselves for an excursion train over their several roads, and the company at the Massachusetts end of the route issues tickets with coupons attached for the whole distance, and its agent refuses to give a check for the trunks of one who has purchased such excursion ticket, saying that the same "would be perfectly safe, as he was to go through with them," and the baggage is put into one of the company's baggage-cars, which is sent through the whole distance in charge of its agent, the company is liable if the trunks are lost anywhere upon the route, and interest may properly be allowed from the date of default. Najac v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 83 D. 686.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The plaintiff bought a passage ticket over defendant's road from New York to Niagara Falls. He then had a ticket from the latter place to New Orleans by the "Mobile route." He presented the ticket to defendant's baggage-master at New York, and asked him to check his baggage to New Orleans by the route indicated by the tickets, the baggage-master examined the tickets, and gave him checks, which he put in his pocket without examination. The checks were stamped, "New Orleans and New York," and also with certain abbreviations indicating roads forming the "Great Jackson route." At Niagara Falls the defendant delivered the baggage to the agent of the latter route, and while in transit it was destroyed by accident. Held, that defendant was liable. Isaacson v. New York Cent. etc. R. R. Co., 46 R. 142.

On changing from one railroad to another, which used the same baggage-room and platform, an employee of the road took plaintiff's check, agreeing to put her trunk on the train. He did not do so and the trunk was lost. Held, that the first-mentioned railroad company, with which plaintiff contracted for the whole distance, was liable. Rome Railroad v. Wimberly, 58 R. 468.

2. — of second company. — A railroad company must be held to have received baggage, and to be liable for its loss, where it exchanges the baggage-checks of a connecting line for its own, and does not give immediate notice to the passenger, on the exchange, of its inability to find the baggage. Davis v. Mich. South etc. R. R. Co. 74 D. 151.

A railroad company selling a through-ticket to a passenger to some point out of the state and beyond its terminus, by a specified route over its lines and the lines of other companies, and receiving the whole fare therefor, is liable to him for injury to his person or baggage occurring on any of the connecting lines; but a connecting carrier is not liable, if at all, unless the loss occurred upon its road or through its negligence. Candes v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co. 94 D. 566.

Where a railroad company sells a through-ticket over its own and connecting lines by a specified route, with permission to the passenger to stop at a certain point and go by other named lines to the point of destination, and gives a through baggage-check over one of the specified routes, and the party, on reaching the point designated, elects to go by the other route, the act of the connecting company at that point in changing the baggage-check and giving one of its own through-checks to the point of destination does not constitute a new contract so as to change the liability of the parties, but the first carrier is liable, and the connecting carrier cannot be held responsible unless the loss is proved to have occurred through his negligence. Id.

The plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's road, but had lost her trunk while traveling over a connecting road. A few days after, a conductor on the connecting road found the trunk and left it in charge of the defendant's baggage-master, stating the facts, and requesting him to forward it to plaintiff, which he agreed to do. Nothing was said about freight, nor whether the trunk should go by the freight or passenger train. The trunk being lost, — held, that the defendants were liable for its value. Wilson v. Grand Trunk R'y, 2 R. 26.

Where a person purchases a through ticket over several railroads, and procures a corresponding check for his baggage, and the baggage was afterward lost, the company on whose road it was lost is responsible therefor; but the evidence must show that it came to the hands of the company charged with the loss, and that it was lost by them. Chicago etc. R. R. Co. v. Fahey, 4 R. 587.

Where a passenger with a through ticket over a connecting line of railroad checks his baggage at the starting point through to his destination, and upon arriving it is damaged or has been broken open and robbed, he may sue the company which issued the check, or the company delivering the baggage in bad order. Wolff v. Central R. R. Co., 45 R. 501.

Where baggage, for the transportation of which over three connecting railroads, operated by separate and independent companies, through checks have been issued by one of the terminal roads, is shown to have been in good condition when delivered to the intermediate road, but damaged when delivered at the destination, it does not devolve on the intermediate road, in the absence of any special contract or arrangement between the companies, to show that it was in good condition when delivered to the last terminal road. Montgomery & E. R'y Co. v. Oliver, 51 R. 483.

The sale of a through ticket over two connecting railroads is not evidence of a joint contract by which the second is liable for the loss of baggage by the first. Felder v. Columbia and G. R. R. Co., 53 R. 656; Atchison etc. Railroad Co. v. Roach, 57 R. 199.

4. Loss of baggage on leased road. — A railroad company is responsible for baggage delivered to an agent of another line on whose road it is running, by one taking passage at a station, where such agent has been in the habit of receiving baggage for such company, and it has no agent of its own present at the station. Jordan v. Fall River R. R. Co., 51 D. 44.

113. Liability for injuries to stock on track. — A lease and assignment of a railroad by its owners does not relieve the company themselves from any liability for losses or injuries imposed upon them by their charter and the laws of the state. Whitney v. Atlantic etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 103.

A railroad company which, in pursuance of a contract with another company, is allowed to run its trains over the track of the latter is liable as a matter of public policy for injuries to stock caused by its train, though resulting solely from the failure of the company owning the track to fence it as required by law. But in such case the company owning the road is also liable, the injury being the result of its neglect of duty. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Kanouse, 89 D. 307.

114. Liability of company using line of another company.* — A railroad company is liable for acts of its lessees who are running its road under a long lease. Nelson v. Vermont etc. R. R. Co., 62 D. 614; Macon etc. R. R. Co. v. Mayes, 15 R. 678; Singleton v. Southwestern R. R. 48 R. 574; Lakin v. Willamette Valley etc. R. R. Co., 57 R. 25; Balsley v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 59 R. 784.

It is immaterial to whom a train causing injury belongs, if it was in the care of the defendant's servants, subject to their exclusive direction and control at the time of the accident. Fletcher v. Boston etc. R. R., 79 D. 695.

A railroad company is not liable for injury caused by a collision with a freight-car of another company which the plaintiff was loading, and which for the purpose of being loaded was placed by such other company upon the side-track of the defendants, which was in constant use by other roads, if such other company failed to use reasonable care that no collision should take place with the freight-car. Id.

A railroad company is not liable for injury caused by a collision which resulted from the negligence of another company, which in connection with the defendants made use of the defendants' track under a lease from the defendants, and ran trains on its own account over the track. Id.

A railroad company has no implied power to lease its road, and if it does so is responsible to a private person for the negligent operation of the road by the lessees, resulting in injury to him. Abbott v. Johnston etc. Horse R. R. Co., 36 R. 672.

V. HORSE AND STREET RAILROADS.

115. Their right to use city streets.† — The law as well as public policy is opposed to transporters using railroads so as to obstruct public highways and streets. Rauch v. Lloyd, 72 D. 747.

An instruction submitting to the jury the question whether an obstruction of a public street by a railroad train was inevitable is erroneous, if the evidence showed that it could have been avoided by the exercise of proper care and diligence on the part of the conductor; and it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as a matter of law that such obstruction is unauthorized and illegal. Id.

Owners of a train of cars negligently left standing on a public street-crossing are liable for injury caused thereby to a child of tender years who attempts to pass under such train. Id.

A railroad company has no right to use a highway as part of its freight-yard, but it may pass and repass upon the highway for any lawful purpose, provided it uses it only to a reasonable extent and in a reasonable manner, without encroaching upon the rights of others who have an equal right to use it. Gahagan v. Boston etc. R. R. Co., 79 D. 724.

A railroad company cannot appropriate and occupy a public street with the track of its road, without the consent of proprietors of lots bounded by such street, or without compensation made to them, and neither the legislature nor the municipal authorities have any power to dispense with the making of such compensation. Ford v. Chicago etc. R. R. Co., 80 D. 791.

The company may be restrained by injunction from laying its track in a public street without first taking steps to acquire the right of way by the assessment and payment of damages to the owners of lots bounded by the street. Id.

Railroad companies will be held to exercise of increased care and diligence, commensurate with the greater hazard, in operating their franchises in populous cities and over public thoroughfares. Toledo etc. R. R. Co. v. Harmon, 95 D. 489.

A street railway corporation accepts its charter on the implied condition that it will not injure others by the construction or maintenance of its road. Alton & U. A. H. R'y v. Deitz, 99 D. 509.

Such corporation is responsible for injuries to property of others, resulting from the defective construction of its road, although constructed, as provided for by its charter, under the ordinances of the city, and the control of the city engineer. Id.

The use of a street as a site for a railroad track does not give a right of action to the owners of adjacent lots, unless it materially hinders the ordinary use of the street; but when such use does unreasonably abridge the right of lot owners to use the street as a means of ingress and egress, an action for damages will lie against the railroad company. Elizabeth etc. R.R. Co. v. Combs, 19 R. 67.

A municipal license under statutory authority, for the reasonable use of a highway by a street railway corporation, does not create such an additional easement in the highway as will entitle abutters to compensation; and is constitutional. Attorney-General v. Metropolitan R. R. Co., 28 R. 264.

A street railway company, having a franchise to operate its road on a city street, has a right to remove the snow from its track and place it upon another part of the street, and if it exercises ordinary care and prudence in doing these acts it will not be held liable for injury done to adjoining property by reason of such snow obstructing the flow of water in the street. Short v. Baltimore City Pass. R'y Co., 33 R. 298.

A street railway corporation may exclude competing vehicles from the habitual and continuous use of its track. Citizens' Coach Co. v. Camden Horse R. R. Co., 36 R. 542.

A horse railway may not be laid in a city street, solely as a freight transfer track between two steam railways without compensation to the adjoining land owners; and this is so, although the street is on land made by filling below low-water mark in a navigable river or lake. Carli v. Stillwater Street R'y etc. Co., 41 R. 290.

In clearing the snow from its track a street railway company is bound to dispose of it so as not to interfere unnecessarily with the safety and convenience of persons using the street, and in case of extraordinary snowfalls must use extraordinary efforts to that end. Bowen v. Detroit City R'y, 52 R. 822.

116. Municipal regulations concerning them. — Compliance with a city ordinance requiring that "when a locomotive engine is used within the limits of the city, a man shall ride on the front of the locomotive when going forward, and when going backward on the tender, not more than twelve inches from the bed of the road," is not due to persons walking on the private way of the railroad company, at an uninhabited point and not at a street crossing, although in a path used by the public with the silent acquiescence of the company. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. v. State, 50 R. 233.

117. Liability as carriers of goods. — In an action against a street-railroad company to recover damages for the loss of a box of merchandise delivered to it to be carried for hire on the front platform of one of its cars, evidence that other persons had paid money to its conductors, with the knowledge of its superintendent, for the carriage of merchandise, is admissible to show the defendant to be a common carrier of goods. Levi v. Lynn etc. R. R. Co., 87 D. 713.

A street-railway company, if proved to be a common carrier of goods, is liable as such for loss of a box of merchandise delivered to it to be carried for hire on the front platform of one of its cars. Ib.

118. Fares and tolls. — A municipal ordinance provided that the fare on any horse railway in the city should not exceed five cents. When it was enacted the defendant was operating a single line of railway. Afterwards it constructed and operated other lines diverging from the main line. Held, that the ordinance did not confer the right, upon payment of five cents, to ride on a car bound for one terminus, and at a point of divergence, to take another car to a different terminus. Ellis v. Milwaukee City R'y Co., 58 R. 858.

119. Expulsion of passengers. — The conductor of a street-car may exclude or expel therefrom a person whose condition, by reason of intoxication or otherwise, is such that it is reasonably certain that by act or speech he will become offensive or annoying to other passengers therein, although he has not committed any act of offense or annoyance. Vinton v. Middlesex R. R. Co., 87 D. 714.

A passenger in a street railway car, who is unable to sit up and is sick to vomiting, may lawfully be expelled, whether his sickness proceeds from drunkenness or not. Lemont v. Washington and G. B. R. Co., 47 R. 238.

Plaintiff was a passenger in a street-car, and wishing to alight, passed out upon the platform and asked the conductor to stop the car, telling him that she would not get out until the car had come to a full stop; whereupon he, and while the car was in motion, threw her from the car with great violence breaking her leg. Held, a wanton and willful trespass, for which the company was not liable. Isaacs v. Third Avenue R. R. Co., 7 R. 418.

The conductor of a street railroad car was authorized by the company to remove every passenger from the car who should refuse to pay the fare. While attempting to remove plaintiff, a passenger, for non-payment of fare, the conductor struck him in the face, for which he brought action against the company. Held, that the company was liable, if the jury should find that the act was without malice or ill feeling toward the plaintiff. Jackson v. Second Ave. R. R. Co., 7 R. 448.

The conductor of a street-car mistakenly gave a passenger a wrong transfer ticket, and the conductor of the second car, refusing it, and the passenger declining to pay his fare, ejected him. Held, that he had no cause of action against the company. Bradshaw v. South Boston R. R. Co., 46 R. 481.

120. Liability for injuries to passengers. — A driver of a street-car who checks the speed of his car, after being notified to stop, and then without stopping or notice to the passenger who was about to alight, starts up with a sudden jerk, is guilty of negligence. Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. R. Co., 97 D. 780.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Street railroad companies are carriers of passengers, bound to extraordinary diligence, and liable for negligence of their agents and employees in and about such carriage; and when passengers are injured by riotous fighting among other passengers, the question of negligence is one of fact, and a declaration alleging negligence in the company, in the failure to have a conductor aboard to preserve order, and in the failure of the driver to suppress the fight or to eject the combatants, is good, and should not be dismissed on demurrer. Holly v. Atlanta Street R. R., 34 R. 97.

The plaintiff, while riding on defendant's horse-car, upon invitation of the driver as a passenger without hire, was injured, without fault on her part, through the negligence of the driver, in the course of his employment. Held, that defendant was liable. Wilton v. Middlesex R. R. Co., 9 R. 11.

A street-car conductor is not bound to eject a passenger who addresses insulting remarks to his fellow-passengers, although he is intoxicated, provided he remains quiet and inoffensive after being admonished by the conductor; and the company is not responsible for the results of a sudden, unlooked for and violent attack committed by him on a fellow-passenger. Putnam v. Broadway etc. R. R. Co., 14 R. 190.

P., accompanied by two ladies, was riding in a street-car, when F., who was intoxicated, got upon the car and made insulting remarks and signs to the ladies. The attention of the conductor was called to this, and he told F. to be quiet. F. then made threats of violence against P., but in a voice so low that the conductor did not hear. F. then went out upon the front platform and remained quiet. When the car stopped to allow P. and the ladies to alight, F. seized the car hook, ran to the back platform and struck P. blows on the head from which he subsequently died. Held, that the railroad company was not liable. Id.

The plaintiff signalled a street-car to stop, the car was open with a side step or rail; the driver applied the brake, and while the car was moving slowly, the plaintiff put his foot on the step, took hold of the end of a seat, and raised himself to get on, when the driver, who was looking at him, started the car with a jerk; the plaintiff slipped under the car and was injured. Held, that the case was proper for the jury. Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City etc. R. R. Co., 25 R. 171.

Evidence of the fact, that plaintiff was in the habit of jumping upon the defendant's cars in motion, was properly excluded. Id.

The plaintiff was a passenger on a car of a street railway having but one track, with occasional turnouts. In turning out to avoid a car coming in the other direction, the car ran beyond the turn-out, and the driver requested the plaintiff to assist him in backing it upon the turn-out. While so engaged he was injured by the negligence of the driver of the other car. Held, that the railway company was liable. Street Railway Co. v. Bolton, 54 R. 803.

121. — or other persons. — A flagman charged with duty of protecting the public, at a place constructed and used as a public way by great numbers of people, such as a private railroad crossing in a city, is bound to indicate to persons when it is safe for them to pass as well as when it is necessary or prudent for them to refrain from passing. Sweeney v. Old Colony etc. R. Co., 87 D. 644.

A railroad company will be liable, where its employee performs an act incident to his employment, so unskillfully, negligently, recklessly, or wantonly that the persons whose fault does not contribute are thereby injured; and the company is not released from liability by the fact that the wrongful acts were in violation of rules or by-laws, or against particular instructions of the company. Toledo etc. R. R. Co. v. Harmon, 95 D. 489.

A railroad Company in lawful pursuit of its business is liable only for failure to use reasonable care and diligence, such as ordinary prudence would suggest and require in the passage of its locomotives through the thoroughfares of a city. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co. v. State, 96 D. 528.

A company failing to conform to city ordinances, providing certain safe-guards in the use of engines, is not in the lawful pursuit of its business, and is responsible, for any injury which it may occasion, if the party injured be not in fault. Id.

A street railway company is bound to exercise the highest degree of diligence to discover and avoid injuring a young child on its track. Galveston City R. Co. v. Hewitt, 60 R. 32.

Where a railroad company was running its horse-car without light or bells, in the streets of a city on a dark night over a track obstructed by a sewer in process of construction, and it appeared that plaintiff's decedent, a sober cartman, was found dead on such track under circumstances showing that he was struck by defendant's car while groping in the dark for a safe passage for his team, in the absence of any other evidence, there being no witness to the accident, the dangerous tendency of defendant's conduct was such as to authorize the attributing of the accident to the negligence of the defendant and to justify the refusal of a nonsuit, the presumption being that plaintiff had the same regard for his own safety as other men ordinarily have. Johnson v. Hudson R. R. Co., 75 D. 375.

Defendant's street-car was stopped so as to obstruct the street; plaintiff, a foot passenger, wishing to cross the street, stepped upon the platform of the car in order to do so, and was thrown off by the driver and hurt. On demurrer to a complaint alleging these facts, and that the driver acted "forcibly, willfully and violently," and was the "servant and agent" of the defendants, — Arld, that the demurrer was properly overruled. Shea v. Sixth Avenue R. R. Co., 20 R. 480.

The plaintiff, a boy ten years old, was riding on one of the defendant's street-cars, with the knowledge and consent of the conductor and driver, but without paying fare. They had no authority to carry passengers free. The driver requested him to take a package from the car and deliver it at the place where he was intending to get off. He took the papers, and without notice to the conductor or driver, while the car was in motion, and before it reached the crossing where it usually stopped, he jumped off the front platform, and was thrown under the wheel and injured. A printed notice was posted conspicuously in the car, forbidding passengers to stand upon, or get on or off at, the front platform, or to get on or off the car when in motion, and declaring that the company would not be responsible for any accident happening thereby. The trial court found that the injury was caused by the careless driving and management of the car; that the plaintiff in getting off under the circumstances used as much care as could be expected from a person of his age, and that no contributory negligence on his part was proved. Held, that on these findings the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Brennan v. Fairhaven etc. R. R. Co., 29 R. 679.

A child, six years and nine months old, running at large in the streets, suddenly and unexpectedly attempted to mount the front platform of a street-car, and was injured thereby. The driver, who was also conductor, was on the rear platform at the time, engaged in putting off another boy who was hanging on in a dangerous position. There was no fender on the front platform. Held, that prima facie there was no negligence to warrant a recovery. Hestonville Pass. R'y Co. v. Connell, 32 R. 472.

A child sixteen months old was injured by being run over by a street railway car. The court admitted evidence of how many hours the drivers and conductors were daily employed, in order to show that the driver was physically unable to discharge his duty at the time. Held, error. The court charged that if the driver saw the child in the street, approaching the car, and in such close proximity, that the child might reach the track before the car passed, it was negligent not to stop the car. Held, error. Philadelphia etc. Pass. R'y Co. v. Henrice, 37 R. 699.

Two street-cars were being drawn by a single horse, in charge of a driver on the front platform, from the stables to the repair shops, when the plaintiff, a lad six years old, in play jumped on the rear platform, and fell off or jumped off, sustaining injury. The driver knew nothing of it. Held, that there was no negligence on the part of the railroad company. Bishop v. Union R. R. Co., 51 R. 386.

A city ordinance provided that cars driven in the same direction should not approach each other within three hundred feet except in case of accident, when it may be necessary to connect two cars, and also at stations. Held, inapplicable. Id.

122. What is contributory negligence on part of person injured. * — It is negligence for a passenger on a street-car to leave or attempt to leave the car while it is in motion, but after he has given notice for it to stop, and there are indications of its doing so, he has a right to prepare to leave. Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. R. Co., 97 D. 780.

If there is standing room inside a street-car, with pendant straps for holding on, it is negligent to ride on the platform. Andrews v. Capitol etc. R. R. Co., 47 R. 266.

Plaintiff was a passenger on one of defendant's horse-cars; at a crossing of a steam railway, the driver carelessly drove upon the latter track, directly in front of an approaching train; the plaintiff, and all the other passengers but one, seeing the danger, rushed and jumped, and the plaintiff in so doing fell and received injury; the driver got his car across the track in time to escape the train. Held, that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury; that the plaintiff was only bound to exercise ordinary prudence, and an error of judgment does not constitute negligence; and that evidence of the conduct of the other passengers was proper as part of the transaction and as showing what ordinary prudence was under the circumstances. Twomley v. Central Park etc. R. Co., 25 R. 162.

123. What is not. — A passenger on a street-car is not required to keep his seat until the very moment the car actually stops. After he has notified the driver to stop, and the speed of the car is checked, it is not negligence for him to go upon the steps of the car so as to be ready to alight. Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. R. Co., 97 D. 780.

Mere preparation to leave a street-car while it is in motion is not of itself negligence, if there are indications that the car is about to stop. Id.

A passenger riding on the rear platform of a crowded street-car leaned his back against the dasher, and was struck and injured by the pole of a following car. Held, that he was not negligent. Thirteenth etc. R'y Co. v. Boudreau, 37 R. 707.

* Contributory negligence in riding on front platform of street-car, see note, 37 R. 710-712.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

It is not conclusively negligent for a passenger on a crowded street-car to stand on the front platform, with the assent of the conductor or driver. Germantown Pass. R'y Co. v. Walling, 37 R. 711, note; Nolan v. Brooklyn City and N. R. R. Co., 41 R. 345.

It is negligent in a street railway company to have two tracks laid so near together that a passenger's arm projecting a few inches from a car window may be hit by a passing car, and it is not necessarily negligent in the passenger to allow his arm so to project. Summers v. Crescent City R. Co., 44 R. 419.

While it is a reasonable safeguard against accidents to forbid departure from a car while it is in motion, a passenger on the upper floor of a horse-car does not violate this regulation in walking, the car being in motion, towards the rear end for the purpose of descending to the lower platform. President etc. v. Leonhardt, 58 R. 113, note.

124. Elevated railroads. — In an action against an elevated street railway by an adjacent lot-owner for damage by occupation of the street, evidence is competent to show that since the building of the railroad the trade and business of the street has diminished and changed. Druck v. Manhattan R. Co., 60 R. 437.

It appeared that the result was partly due to a tendency in business to move "up town." Held, that it was for the jury to estimate the proportion of the loss chargeable to the defendant, and that a recovery for such estimated loss was proper. Id.

RAPE.

[Includes the offense of sexual intercourse without the consent of the female, whether the same be procured by fraud or force.]

Assault with intent to commit, see ASSAULT, 32-34.

1. Construction of statutes. — In a statute punishing carnal knowledge, or "abuse" in an attempt to have carnal knowledge, of a female child under ten years of age, the word "abuse" applies only to injuries to the genital organs in an unsuccessful attempt at rape, and does not include mere forcible or wrongful ill-usage. Dankins v. State, 29 R. 754.

2. What constitutes the offense.* — Where a man has carnal intercourse with a woman (not his wife), without her consent, while she is, as he knows, wholly insensible, he is guilty of rape. Com. v. Burke, 7 R. 531.

A statute fixing the age of puberty in females at twelve, carnal intercourse with a female under that age is rape. State v. Tithman, 31 R. 236.

*See monographic note on crime of rape, 80 D. 861-875.

Rape, where assent was procured by fraud, see note, 12 R. 290-291.

Sexual connection with a woman of weak intellect by means of a fictitious marriage does not constitute rape. Bloodworth v. State, 32 R. 546.

Sexual intercourse without the consent of the woman and under the pretense of a surgical operation is rape. Pomeroy v. State, 48 R. 146.

3. — or an attempt to commit it. — A person who stands by when an attempt is made by others to commit a rape, but who does no act to aid, assist or abet its commission, is not guilty of an attempt to commit a rape; the question of his complicity is for the jury. People v. Woodward, 13 R. 176.

4. The necessary force and resistance.* — Force is a necessary ingredient in the crime of rape; but the force may be constructive. Lewis v. State, 68 D. 113; State v. Murphy, 41 D. 79.

Cohabitation procured by means of a fraudulent personation of a female's husband does not amount to crime of rape; there is neither actual nor constructive force. Lewis v. State, 68 D. 113.

If the woman consent in the belief that an illegal marriage is legal, upon the fraudulent assertion of the pretended husband, the latter will not be guilty of rape. State v. Murphy, 41 D. 79.

Reluctance and resistance on the part of an adult woman are essential to the commission of this offense. Perhaps an exception to this rule exists when the woman shows by her words and conduct that the act was against her will, but finally ceases to resist because of insensibility produced by liquors administered to her by the accused. People v. Crosswell, 87 D. 774.

To constitute rape of a woman in possession of physical and mental powers, not overcome by threats nor so placed that resistance would be useless, it must appear that she resisted to the extent of her ability. Oleson v. State, 38 R. 366; People v. Dohring, 17 R. 349.

One may be convicted of rape on a woman who failed to resist because of imbecility. State v. Atherton, 32 R. 134.

Sexual intercourse with a demented or insane woman who does not resist, and who apparently assents thereto, is not rape. If, however, a man, knowing a woman to be insane, takes advantage of that fact to carnally know her, when her mental powers are so impaired that she is unconscious of the nature of the act, and is not a willing participator therein, his offense is rape, though there is no distinct proof of her resistance. People v. Crosswell, 87 D. 774.

5. Liability of aiders and abettors. — A woman, aiding and abetting an attempt to commit a rape, is guilty as a principal. State v. Jones, 35 R. 586.

*Resistance on part of prosecutrix, to what extent must be carried, see note, 36 R. 860-862.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

6. What indictments are sufficient.

— An indictment which alleges that the defendant "violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know" the woman is sufficient. Com. v. Fogarty, 69 D. 264.

An indictment need not allege that the woman ravished was not the wife of the defendant. Id.

The allegation of "did forcibly ravish," is sufficient without adding, "against her will." Williams v. State, 28 R. 399.

An indictment charging an attempt to commit rape upon "Theresa Gaudaloupe," and referring to that person as "her," is good without alleging that person to be a woman. Battle v. State, 30 R. 169.

In an indictment for abetting a rape actually committed by a "person unknown," it is not necessary to allege that such person was a male, or capable of committing rape; the use of the word "violently" instead of "forcibly" does not vitiate it; and the omission of the words "against the form of the statute," etc., cannot be urged on motion in arrest. State v. Williams, 36 R. 272.

7. Evidence to convict, generally.

— On the trial of a prisoner for rape committed on his ward, a copy or certificate of the grant of letters would be sufficient to prove actual guardianship during the minority of the ward, but the whole record of his guardianship, extending over eight or nine years, might be admitted, to anticipate any resignation or removal of the guardian and establish the continuance of the guardianship up to the time of the outrage. Turney v. State, 47 D. 74.

Evidence of an unsuccessful attempt by the defendant a few days previous is competent. People v. O'Sullivan, 58 R. 530.

8. Showing capacity to commit.

— On the trial of an indictment for rape, against a boy under fourteen years of age, the burden is on the state to prove his capacity to commit rape, and a statute dispensing with proof of emission does not change the rule. Hittabiddle v. State, 35 R. 592.

The presumption that a boy under fourteen cannot commit rape may be rebutted by proof of the actual commission. Wagner v. State, 40 R. 36.

9. Proof of complaint made by prosecutrix.*— The testimony of the complainant may be confirmed by evidence not only that she had communicated her complaint to persons out of court about the time of the offense, but the details of such communication may be given by the witnesses. State v. Kinney, 26 R. 436; Benstine v. State, 31 R. 593.

The particulars of the complaint of the prosecutrix to third persons cannot be admitted as evidence in chief. Oleson v. State, 38 R. 366; People v. Mayes, 56 R. 126.

* Complaints of prosecutrix, when admissible in prosecutions for rape, see note, 36 R. 369, 370.

The victim's complaints of the commission of the offense may be proved, but not the details nor the name of the ravisher. State v. Robertson, 58 R. 201.

Evidence of the first complaint of the prosecutrix, ten months after the offense, is incompetent. People v. O'Sullivan, 58 R. 530.

The delay is not excused by threats of the defendant, a priest, to the prosecutrix at confession, that if she told of him she would go to hell. Id.

10. Variance.— Proof of rape sustains an indictment for an attempt to commit rape. Levis v. State, 68 D. 113.

The statute of Indiana defines two classes of rape, one upon a woman against her will, the other upon a female child under twelve years of age. Held, that an indictment setting forth an offense of one class could not be sustained by proof of one of the other class. Greer v. State, 19 R. 709.

11. Examination of prosecutrix.

— The prosecutrix may be asked on cross-examination whether she did not at a certain time and place have illicit intercourse with another person. State v. Reed, 94 D. 337.

On the trial of a complaint for indecent assault upon a woman in disordered health, it is proper to show that such persons are subject to hallucinations, and to ask her if she had not made similar charges before, without mentioning the one in question; but not proper to ask her if she had not been undergoing medical treatment at a college in presence of a class, nor to show that the defendant had improperly approached the judge or been charged with buying votes. Dervin v. Parsons, 50 R. 262.

12. Corroborating her testimony.

— Declarations of an injured party, made out of court, are admissible on the trial of an indictment for rape, to show that the testimony of such party as given at the trial agree with such declaration. State v. De Wolf, 20 D. 90.

A defendant having attempted to discredit the testimony of the prosecuting witness on the trial of an indictment for rape, by showing she had concealed the transaction for more than a year, and assigned as a reason therefor her fear of the defendant, evidence by the prosecution that the prosecuting witness was deaf and dumb, and that such persons have a sense of inferiority to other people, and as a class are easily intimidated, and that they are credulous and submissive, and that such was the character of the prosecuting witness, is inadmissible. Id.

Statements by a prosecutrix made soon after the occurrence, detailing the circumstances, are admissible in corroboration of her testimony on the trial, but not as independent evidence. Phillips v. State, 49 D. 709; Laughlin v. State, 1 D. 444.

It is competent to introduce evidence of the good character of the person outraged, she being a witness for the prosecution. Turney v. State, 47 D. 74.

13. Evidence in defence, generally.

—Any fact tending to the inference that there was not the utmost reluctance and resistance by the prosecutrix, where she is the sole witness, and the defendant is compelled to rely on circumstantial evidence, is always admissible; as, that there was no immediate disclosure, no outcry, though help was known to be at hand, etc. People v. Benson, 65 D. 506.

14. — consent. — A female's failure to make any outcry when a violation of her person is attempted, and the fact that her garments do not get injured in the struggle with her assailant, as well as the fact that she keeps the injury silent for several days, tend strongly to show consent, but are not conclusive, and should always be considered in connection with her age and intelligence. State v. Cross, 79 D. 519.

Consent involves a submission; but a mere submission by no means necessarily involves consent, as where a child is in the power of a strong man. Id.

If consent is shown, there may be a conviction of assault with intent to commit rape, if there was force sufficient to indicate that intent before consent was given. State v. Atherton, 32 R. 134.

If a woman finally consents, although such consent is reluctant, and is obtained through fear, duress, and fraud, or partly through fear and partly by force, the offense is not rape. Whittaker v. State, 36 R. 856.

15. Bad character of prosecutrix.

—The general character of a prosecutrix for chastity is in issue in prosecutions for rape, but particular acts of lewdness with persons other than the accused cannot be proved on the trial: First, because she is presumed to be unprepared to disprove such specific accusations without previous notice; and secondly, because it would create collateral issues, indecisive of the guilt or innocence of the accused, but well calculated to embarrass and mislead the jury. McDermott v. State, 82 D. 444; State v. Foraker, 80 D. 132; State v. DeWolf, 20 D. 90; Shartzer v. State, 52 R. 501. But her previous intercourse with the prisoner, is always admissible as tending to show that the act of which she complains was not against her will. State v. Reed, 94 D. 337.

The rule that only evidence of the prosecutrix' general reputation for unchastity, and not evidence of particular acts, is admissible to impeach her testimony, admitting the general soundness of such rule, should not be applied where the prosecutrix is young, inexperienced, has lived a secluded life, and where her proclivities can be shown only by proof of specific acts of lewdness. People v. Benson, 65 D. 506.

The defendant may prove, by the complainant or others, particular acts of unchastity on the part of the complainant. Bensline v. State, 31 R. 593; though the prosecutrix was not asked concerning them, for the purpose, not so much of impeaching her as rebutting the presumption of want of assent, when she is the only witness for the prosecution. People v. Benson, 65 D. 506.

Evidence of the unchastity of the complainant is competent upon the question of consent. On a trial of W. for a rape upon M., — held, that evidence was admissible to show that M. was in the habit of receiving men at her dwelling for promiscuous intercourse. Woods v. People, 14 R. 309.

Evidence of an agreement for sexual intercourse with a third person, made by prosecutrix on the day of the commission of a rape upon her, is inadmissible on the trial of an indictment for the rape. McDermott v. State, 82 D. 444.

Allusions to specific reports of the improper intimacy of the prosecutrix with third persons, made on a trial for rape by the witnesses of the accused, without objection from the prosecution, do not authorize the prosecution to introduce evidence contradicting the truth of such reports. The issue is not whether a bad reputation of the prosecutrix for chastity is deserved, but whether it is generally accredited. Id.

Inquiries as to bad character for chastity, in cases both civil and criminal, where the character is regarded as involved in the issue are limited to the time previous to the transaction in question. State v. Foraker, 80 D. 132.

Witnesses called to impeach the character of prosecutrix for chastity, must confine their testimony to what they knew before the offense was committed. They will not be permitted to testify to any knowledge acquired afterwards. Id.

16. Instructions. — The jury should be cautioned against convicting for rape on prosecutrix' testimony alone uncorroborated by other evidence, direct or circumstantial. People v. Benson, 65 D. 506.

The jury were instructed that they might convict if they found that defendant procured the woman to have connection with him by fraudulent representations, which she believed, that it was a necessary part of his medical treatment of her. Held, error, for the reason that it did not recognize force as an essential element of the crime. Don Moran v. People, 12 R. 283.

17. Conviction and punishment. — A defendant charged with the commission of rape may be convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, upon evidence showing that he intended to gratify his passions upon the person of the female, notwithstanding any resistance on her part, and that the offense was consummated under circumstances satisfying the jury that the assault was made without her consent. And the jury may do this where they are not satisfied that the resistance on her part was so continued and persistent as to prove guilt of the higher crime, when he succeeds in having carnal knowledge. State v. Cross, 79 D. 519.

1. How distinguished from personal. — A dam is not necessarily real estate. If built by one person on the land of another, with the latter's consent, it would be personal estate. Southard v. Hill, 69 D. 85.

2. The title and possession, generally. — 1. Nature of the title, generally. — The foundation of property consists in its being an exclusive right, and persons other than the owner cannot impose burdens on it, or impair its enjoyment without the latter's permission, or by color of legal authority. Orest v. Jack, 27 D. 353.

2. The privilege of reclaimed land under water in front of one's premises, under the Maryland statute of 1745, confers no property or possession which can be encroached upon by another until the land is reclaimed. Casey v. Inloes, 39 D. 658.

The general rule that a derivative title cannot be better than that from which it is derived, is subject to many necessary exceptions. McAusland v. Pundt, 93 D. 358.

Ownership of land carries with it the right to its products, at law and in equity. No change can take place in the title to the fruits of the soil, without the owner parts with his title or possession, or permits its cultivation for the benefit of another. Rush v. Vought, 93 D. 769.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The labor of others for the owner of the soil creates no title to products, though mingling in the production. Id.

2. Acquisition of title.—A release when neither of the parties to it have any possession, actual or legal, in the land released, is without effect. Porter v. Perkins, 4 D. 52.

One entering upon land under a deed duly acknowledged and recorded, acquires a freehold either by right or wrong; if by wrong, it is an actual disseisin of all claiming the same land under a different title. Higbee v. Rice, 4 D. 63.

Actual possession is not necessary to give a valid title. It is sufficient if there be no adverse possession. Pitts v. Bullard, 46 D. 405.

A possession in right of the possessor's wife is not seisin in the strict legal sense. Pearce v. McClenaghan, 55 D. 710.

Seisin and possession do not mean same thing; seisin is the possession of a freehold estate, created at common law by livery of seisin. Ferguson v. Wisell, 57 D. 744.

Where there is no adverse holding, the possession is considered as following the property, and is deemed to be in him who has the title. Holley v. Hawley, 94 D. 350.

One who first takes possession of land makes it his own by occupancy as against all the world, except the true owner; and the land remains his as against all persons entering afterwards without his consent, and without title, unless he abandons it, or it is taken from him by some method known to the law. Moon v. Rollins, 95 D. 181.

3. Conflicting titles.—A party being in possession of a part of a tract of land, under a deed conveying to him the whole tract, may grant the whole by a deed of bargain and sale, without entering on that part of which he is not in possession, notwithstanding an adverse possession of the said part by inclosure. Gittings v. Hall, 2 D. 502.

Where two persons are in possession of land, each claiming an exclusive right, the law adjudges the rightful possession to be in the one who has the right to the land. Mother v. Trinity Church, 8 D. 663.

Land comprehends, as between a vendor and vendee, a mortgagor and mortgagee, etc., all soil or earth, whether covered by water or not, all minerals, all houses, fences, and structures on the ground, and all vegetable productions standing and growing on it. Coombs v. Jordan, 22 D. 236.

B, under the direction of A, purchased for him a tract of land, taking the title thereto in A's name, and permitted A's son to occupy it, he having paid a part of the purchase price. Held that the title both legal and equitable, was vested in A, and that the land was not liable for the son's debts, it appearing that the purchase was made on A's account alone. Brown v. Benight, 23 D. 373.

Only a possessor in good faith, believing himself to be the owner of land, can recover of the true owner for amelioration inseparable in their nature from the soil. Gibson v. Hutchins, 68 D. 772.

The doctrine of relation has never been extended by courts further than to hold that a legal title when acquired shall relate back to the period when the right accrued to the property, so as to defeat subsequent claimants or incumbrancers holding adversely to the right. Laurissini v. Corquette, 57 D. 200.

A mere possessor of land is presumed to have made any changes in its condition for his own amelioration, and to have received a sufficient reward in the immediate benefit which he reaps from the enhanced production of the soil. Gibson v. Hutchins, 68 D. 772.

One who has the mere possession of land has the right to grass growing thereon as against a stranger, although such stranger severs the grass from the soil. Morse v. Iman, 89 D. 417.

8. Possession as notice of title or claim.—The possession of real estate gives constructive notice of the title under which the occupant claims. Johnston v. Glancy, 28 D. 45; but such possession must be notorious and exclusive. Boyce v. Mculloch, 30 D. 35.

4. Effect of law of place upon title.—Land is held and alienated according to the law of the place where it is situated. Sneed v. Thwing, 22 D. 41; Baxter v. Willey, 31 D. 623.

The law of the state in which real estate is situated must decide all questions concerning the title thereto, either legal or equitable. Depas v. Mayo, 49 D. 88.

5. — or upon transfers of title. — The right to control the disposal of property is fundamental, but must be so regulated as not to conflict with high public interests. Dobson v. Ball, 100 D. 586.

6. Legal and equitable titles.—The complete legal title is the right and the possession united. Kishugh v. Croghan, 19 D. 139.

7. Evidence to prove title.—Possession is prima facie evidence of legal title. Jackson v. Town, 15 D. 405; and no further or higher evidence of title is required to enable a plaintiff to recover in ejectment, until the defendant shows an anterior possession, or traces title from a paramount source. Keane v. Cannovan, 82 D. 738; and a purchaser under a judgment against such possessor can recover against any one who can not show a better right or prior possession. Tuttle v. Jackson, 21 D. 306.

* Possession as evidence of title, see note 60 D. 601-604.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A party in possession having two titles, one valid and the other invalid, will be presumed to have entered under the valid title. Tuttle v. Jackson, 21 D. 306.

Prior possession is evidence of title, and this evidence may be destroyed by abandonment. Bird v. Liebras, 70 D. 617.

8. Duty of owner in use of land.—The absolute dominion of a proprietor over his land to center of earth is restrained by the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 84 D. 511; but it is only when one deviates, either by intention or neglect, from the ordinary use of his property, that he is liable for an injury done thereby to another. Durham v. Musseman, 18 D. 133; Schwartz v. Gilmore, 92 D. 227. This doctrine is applied to the use of streets by cities, and highways by the state and counties, through their officers, and is to some extent applicable to private corporations. Wabash and E. Canal v. Spears, 79 D. 444.

Where an act is unlawful, the actor is liable for an injury done, without reference to the probability that it would occasion that particular injury. Durham v. Musseman, 18 D. 133.

Where an act is unlawful, the liability of the actor for an injury occasioned by it depends upon the question whether the injury was the natural or probable consequence of the act, or was merely accidental. Id.

A land-owner who, in excavating his land for a contemplated improvement, has cast dirt, stones, and rubbish upon adjoining land, to the injury thereof, cannot defend an action for compensatory damages by evidence that the work was done with care and skill; he is liable for the actual injury, irrespective of negligence. Tranaka v. Cohoes Co., 51 D. 284.

The right of a land-owner to make excavations in his land (such as are involved in making a canal) is subject to the limitation that he must not cast the soil, stones, etc., upon neighboring land, to the annoyance or inconvenience of its owners. Hay v. Cohoes Co., 51 D. 279.

The rightful use of one's land may cause damage to another without any legal wrong. Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 84 D. 511.

An act done, causing damage which the law will redress, must not only be hurtful, but wrongful. There must be damnum et injuria, an act, not merely hurtful but an infringement of another's right. Id.

The owner of property is not an insurer to all the world against injury from its use or condition; he is liable only for injury arising from a failure to exercise the same intelligence, prudence, and care in regard to his property for the security of others that prudent men would exercise toward their own. Schwartz v. Gilmore, 92 D. 227.

The owner of a steam boiler who operates and uses the same upon his own premises, in such a manner that it is not a nuisance, is not liable for damages done to an adjoining owner by its explosion, without proof of fault or negligence on his part. Loose v. Buchanan, 10 R. 623; Marshall v. Welwood, 20 R. 394.

A person who uses his property in such a manner as necessarily tends to injure the property of another is liable to that other for an injury which may result from such use, without regard to consideration of care and skill therein. Cahill v. Eastman, 10 R. 184.

The erection by defendant upon his own land of a high board fence within two feet of plaintiff's dwelling, whereby light and air was shut off from the windows and doors of such dwelling, and the rooms therein rendered dark, unwholesome and unfit for habitation—plaintiff showing no prescriptive right to light and air—held, not actionable. Guest v. Reynolds, 18 R. 570.

Where the owner of a stone quarry, by blasting with gunpowder, destroys the buildings of an adjoining land-owner, it is no defense to show that ordinary care was exercised in the manner in which the quarry was worked. City of Tiffin v. McCormack, 32 R. 408.

9. Duty as towards trespassers.—The owner of property is not liable to a trespasser, or to one who is on it by mere permission or sufferance, for the negligence of himself or servants, or for that which would be a nuisance if it were in a public street or common where all had a legal right to be. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 98 D. 317; such as obstructions or pitfalls. Sweeney v. Old Colony etc. R. R. Co., 87 D. 644; but if he directly or by implication induces persons to enter on and pass over his premises, he thereby assumes an obligation that they are in a safe condition, suitable for such use, and for a breach of this obligation he is liable in damages to a person injured thereby. Id.

The owner of a house must have an approach to it strong enough to support all persons visiting it on business or otherwise; but if a crowd gather upon it to witness a passing parade, and it breaks down, even though it be shown not to have been strong enough for ordinary purposes, the owner is not liable to one of the crowd, as he owes him no duty. So if a railroad bridge which ought to be strong enough to support an engine and train of cars breaks under a footman, the company are not liable to him, as they are under no obligations to him. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 96 D. 317.

Spring-guns and other deadly engines may in England, after proper notice, be set upon the owner's inclosure without subjecting him to liability for injury occasioned thereby in his absence. Johnson v. Patterson, 35 D. 96.

Defendant set a spring-gun in his vineyard to protect his fruit from trespassers who were in the habit of invading it. Plaintiff, having no knowledge of the gun, entered the vineyard for the purpose of stealing fruit, and was injured by a discharge of the gun. Held, that he was entitled to recover damages for the injuries sustained thereby. Hooker v. Miller, 18 R. 18.

To an action for damages for killing the plaintiff's intestate, the defendant pleaded that the deceased in the night time came on defendant's premises with intent to steal his chickens, and while the deceased was so engaged, and before he had completed the offense, the defendant, to prevent the offense and protect his property, killed him; held, 1. That the killing was not justifiable, there being no averment of any attempt to arrest, or that the property could not have been otherwise protected; 2. That the conduct of the deceased did not constitute such contributory wrong as to defeat a recovery. Marks v. Borem, 25 R. 764.

Scattering poison within one's inclosure for the purpose of poisoning the fowls of another if they should come there, is not justifiable, though notice thereof be given to their owner, and he may recover for the killing of his fowls resulting therefrom. Johnson v. Patterson, 35 D. 96.

A trespasser on the land of another may maintain an action for wanton or intentional injury inflicted on him by the owner. Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 96 D. 317.

10. Right to defend possession by force. — A person having the legal title to land, and being in the actual possession thereof, has a right to repel by force any attempt to molest him in the enjoyment thereof, or in the free use of anything appertaining thereto. Tribble v. Frame, 23 D. 439.

A trespassing man or beast may be expelled or removed by force; but may not be destroyed or subjected to permanent injury or unnecessary force. Johnson v. Patterson, 35 D. 96.

It is not trespass, and the party cannot be indicted for removing a fence, "unlawfully and without license," put upon his land by another, under a statute making it a misdemeanor "if any person shall unlawfully and willfully burn, destroy, pull down, injure or remove any fence, wall, or other inclosure, or any part thereof, surrounding or about any yard, garden, cultivated field, or pasture." State v. Headrick, 67 D. 249.

11. Liability for negligence. — The owner of property upon which a building is being erected is not generally liable for injury resulting from the negligence of the contractor or his servants, where entire possession has been surrendered to the latter, and he proceeds with his work according to his own judgment, and is not subject to the control or interference of the owner. But if the injury was caused or contributed to by the fact that the plans for the building were essentially defective, the owner as well as the contractor would be liable. Schwartz v. Gilmore, 92 D. 227.

The owner of property has not so far given its control to a contractor for building as to be relieved from liability for the contractor's negligence, where by the terms of the contract the builder is to carry forward the work under the control of a superintendent, and "to remove all improper work or materials upon being directed to do so by the superintendent," to whose judgment, both as to work and materials, he agrees to submit, and whose acts the owner agrees to recognize, and the owner also reserves the right to change his plan, and the architect is declared to be the superintendent for the owner. Id.

The owner of a building will not be held liable for damages caused by falling of the walls of his building, though it appears that he was informed on Sunday, the day previous to the injury, that the walls were settling and leaning, and had said that he would attend to the matter, but really did not do so on that day, unless it also appears that the danger was so obvious that a reasonable and prudent man, the safety of whose person and property depended upon the walls, would have taken immediate measures on that day to have secured them. Id.

The owner of a city lot let parts of the work of constructing a building to different persons; to one the excavation; to another the stone work; to another the superstructure; while himself delivered stone, lime and sand. Held, that the owner, and not the contractors, was responsible for an injury to a traveler caused by the excavation being insufficiently guarded. Homan v. Stanley, 5 R. 389.

Defendant, being the owner of land on which was a kiln for drying lumber, leased the same, knowing that the kiln would be used by the lessee for drying lumber, and knowing, or having reason to know, that such use would be dangerous to plaintiff's adjoining property. Held, that defendant was liable to plaintiff for injuries occasioned to his adjoining property by the kiln. Hehnig v. Jordan, 21 R. 189.

The owner of a house which had been burned suffered the walls to stand in an unsafe and tottering condition for three weeks, meantime removing the rubbish. He then contracted for the rebuilding of the house. About seven or eight weeks after the fire, and while the premises were in the charge and possession of the contractor, one of the walls fell on the buildings of an adjoining owner. Held, that the owner of the ruinous premises was liable for the damage. See-seyut v. Poey, 33 R. 98.

12. — for fires which spread upon another's land. — The owner of land firing a prairie thereon must use reasonable precautions to prevent injury to others, though he is authorized by statute to set such fire, and is liable for a failure to do so, although he may be guilty of no subsequent negligence. Johnson v. Barber, 50 D. 416.

If a defendant uses due diligence in firing his land, and notwithstanding, on account of inevitable accident, the fire escapes and burns the plaintiff's rails, the defendant is not liable. Miller v. Martin, 57 D. 242.

A man who negligently sets fire on his own land, and keeps it negligently, is liable for injuries done by its direct communication to the property of another, whether through the air or along the ground, and whether he might or might not have reasonably anticipated the particular manner and direction in which it was actually communicated. Higgins v. Dewey, 9 R. 63; Webb v. Rome etc. R. R. Co., 10 R. 389.

The statute 6 Anne, chap. 3, § 6, providing that "no action shall be maintained against any person in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally begin," is part of the common law of this country; otherwise of the statute 14 Geo. III., chap. 78, § 86, which exempts from liability persons "in whose house, chamber, stable, barn or other building, or on whose estate any fire shall accidentally begin." Spaulding v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 11 R. 550.

13. Liability for flowage of adjoining lands. — 1. In general. — In an action for the overflowing of the plaintiff's land, he need not prove his title, though it be set forth in the declaration, for possession alone is sufficient to support this action against a wrong-doer. Yeagrain v. Johnston, 1 D. 581.

The proprietor of land fronting on a bayou cannot maintain an artificial drainage, throwing the water upon the rear plantation, when the natural drainage is lateral, in consequence of being intercepted by a ridge. Kilgore v. Grevenberg, 63 D. 597.

The owner of land wrongfully overflowed cannot erect obstructions to such overflow so as to cast it upon the land of innocent third persons. Amick v. Tharp, 67 D. 787.

Defendant excavated a tunnel in his own land, extending under the bed of a stream. The pressure of the water having broken in the roof of the tunnel, the water rushed in and through the tunnel and undermined plaintiff's land. Held, that defendant was liable for the damage without proof of negligence or want of skill on his part. Cahill v. Eastman, 10 R. 184.

So where defendant accumulated water in a reservoir, which by percolation escaped upon the plaintiff's land and injured it, — held, that defendant was liable even though plaintiff sold the land to defendant for the purpose of constructing the reservoir. Wilson v. City of New Bedford, 11 R. 352.

Defendant employed a contractor to build a drain from the cellar of its building to the common sewer. It was necessary to cut through a plank barrier which had been constructed beneath the surface of the street to prevent the tide from flowing into the cellars in that locality. The contractor so negligently performed this part of his work that the tide water flowed through the opening made by him into the cellar of a building owned by plaintiff, adjoining that of defendant. Held, that defendant was liable for the injury done by the tide water to plaintiff's premises. Sturges v. Theological etc. Soc. 39 R. 463.

2. Surface water, rights and liabilities of upper owner. — The right to have water flow off land through a natural drain belongs to the owner of the land, without the acquisition of the easement by prescription, and he may lawfully remove an embankment erected by another, which obstructs or cuts off such flow. Overton v. Sawyer, 62 D. 170.

No right to regulate or control surface drainage of water can be asserted by the owner of one lot over that of his neighbor, where there is no watercourse by grant or prescription, and no stipulation exists between such co-terminous proprietors of land concerning the mode in which their respective parcels shall be occupied and improved. Gannon v. Hargaden, 87 D. 625.

The owner of land may lawfully occupy and improve it in such a manner as to prevent surface water which accumulates elsewhere from coming upon it, or he may alter the course of surface water which has accumulated thereon or come upon it from elsewhere, although the water is thereby made to flow upon the adjoining land of another, and to stand there in unusual quantities, or to pass into and over the same in greater quantities or in other directions than it was accustomed to flow, thereby occasioning loss to the co-terminous owner. Id.

The right of a party to the free and unfettered control of his own land above, upon, and beneath the surface cannot be interfered with or restrained by any considerations of injury to others which may be occasioned by the flow of mere surface water in consequence of the lawful appropriation of land by its owner to a particular use or mode of enjoyment. If such an act causes damages to adjacent land, it is damnum absque injuria. Id.

The owner of land adjoining a highway may erect upon his land a dam or obstruction to prevent water flowing through a culvert which the public had built for the purpose of draining off the surface water upon the road. Provided he does not exceed the limits of his own land, he may do anything to prevent the surface water upon the highway from being drained upon his premises. Franklin v. Fisk, 90 D. 194.

Defendant dug ditches in its own land to drain the surface water therefrom into a stream which was its natural outlet, thereby sometimes increasing and at other times decreasing the quantity of water in the stream, to the injury of plaintiff, who was an inferior proprietor. Held, that plaintiff had no cause of action. Waggle v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 13 R. 467.

One has no right to concentrate the surface-water on his land and discharge it on his neighbor's, although it would naturally flow in that direction. McCormick v. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co., 35 R. 431.

The parties owned adjacent lots on a street. Surface-water naturally and usually accumulated in the street in front of the plaintiff's lot, and sometimes ran off through a natural depression over defendant's lot and other low land to a river. Defendant built a house on his lot, filling in the lot and grading it up to the level of the sidewalk on the street, thereby cutting off the flow of the surface-water and causing it sometimes to flow on plaintiff's lot and flood his cellar. Held, that no action would lie therefor. Barkley v. Wilcox, 40 R. 519.

The owner of lands may drain them by ditches, although he thereby precipitates the water more rapidly and in greater volume upon the land of an adjoining owner, provided he acts with a prudent regard for his welfare; but he may not turn water upon such adjoining lands which would not otherwise have flowed there. Hughes v. Anderson, 44 R. 147.

The owner of upper land, on which there is a pond fed only by surface water, when good husbandry requires it, may drain the same by an artificial drain into its accustomed outlet or natural drain, notwithstanding the flow over the land of a lower proprietor may thereby be increased. Pack v. Herrington, 50 R. 627.

3. Rights and liabilities of lower owner.—The owner of a lot upon which a city has diverted a drain, obstructing it so as to throw the water back upon a lot above him, is liable therefor, whether the act of the city was lawful or not. Nor is it material that the plaintiff was street commissioner and superintended the work at the time of the original diversion, where neither party owned his lot at that time. Awick v. Tharp, 67 D. 787.

The diversion of surface water from the land of another, by excavations on one's own land; and the backing of water, by means of dams, etc., upon the lands of another, were injuries for which an action lay at common law. Wabash Canal v. Spears, 79 D. 444.

A land-owner may, in the reasonable use of his own land, lawfully prevent the flow of surface water on to his premises from the adjacent higher land of another, although such adjacent land is thereby injured; and the fact that such water had been wont to flow upon the inferior land for over twenty years will not amount to a prescription. Swett v. Cutts, 9 R. 276.

The erection of an embankment on one's own land, whereby the surface water accumulating on the land of another is prevented from flowing off in its natural courses, and caused to flow in a different direction over his land, is an act for which an action may be maintained by the latter, without showing any actual injury or damage. Tootle v. Clifton, 10 R. 732.

Defendant, owning lands adjoining and below unoccupied public lands of the United States, built an embankment along his lands to obstruct the flow of the surface-water from the adjoining lands. Plaintiff afterward purchased said public lands, and brought this action to recover for damages done to his land and crops by means of said embankment. Held, 1. That plaintiff had a natural easement to have the surface-water from his lands flow off upon the lands below, and that defendant was liable for injuries occasioned by obstructing such flow; 2. That defendant could gain no prescriptive right against the United States, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the fact that the embankment was built before he purchased the land. Ogburn v. Connor, 13 R. 213.

The owner of a lower tract of land has no right to throw back surface-water naturally flowing across his land from an upper tract, to the damage of the latter, and a court of equity may enjoin such conduct. Niminger v. Norwood, 47 R. 412.

A land-owner may protect his land by an embankment against surface-water flowing through a ravine which ordinarily is dry. Lessard v. Stram, 51 R. 715.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

A farm owner may not erect such barriers as will flood his neighbor's land with surface-water that would otherwise escape over his own, in order to reclaim the bed of a pond that has always existed on his own land, and get rid of the inflow. Boyd v. Conklin, 52 R. 831.

4. Rainwater. — The owner of a city lot must provide for carrying off the water that falls or accumulates upon it, so as not to allow it to run upon the lot of his neighbor. Bent v. Armstrong, 42 D. 265.

The owner of land may, at his pleasure, withhold the water falling on his property from passing in its natural course on to that of his neighbor, and in the same manner may prevent the water falling on the land of the latter from coming on his own. Bowlsby v. Spear, 86 D. 216.

Where the rainwater which fell upon the lands of defendant, and into and upon a certain pond above his place, fed exclusively by rainwater, was accustomed to flow through a kind of channel over defendants' land, and away from plaintiff's, and defendant erects a stable over this channel, by which a part of this flow of surface water was diverted upon the lands of plaintiff, the injury is not actionable; it is damnum absque injuria. Id.

One has no right by grading the surface of his land, to turn surface water falling upon or running over it upon the adjoining land of another; and it makes no difference that in doing this he has no intention to injure the adjoining owner. Adams v. Walker, 91 D. 742.

The owner of a city lot may turn the rain from it to the adjacent street, although it may injure a neighboring lot below grade. Phillips v. Waterhouse, 58 R. 220.

14. Right to lateral support. — There is incident to land, in its natural condition, a right to support from adjoining land; and if the land sinks or falls away in consequence of the removal of such support, the owner is entitled to damages to the extent of the injury sustained. McGuire v. Grant, 67 D. 49; Beard v. Murphy, 86 D. 693; Lasala v. Holbrook, 25 D. 524. But this rule does not extend to cases where the owner of the land has, by buildings, or other artificial erections, increased the lateral pressure of his land upon the adjoining soil. Moody v. McClelland, 84 D. 770; Lasala v. Holbrook, 25 D. 524.

A land-owner cannot, by altering the natural condition of his land, deprive the adjoining proprietor of the privilege of using his land as he might have done before; therefore, the owner cannot, by building near the margin of his land, prevent his neighbor from excavating his own soil, although it may endanger the building. Moody v. McClelland, 84 D. 770.

A wall built to the dividing line of adacent lots must be built of such materials and in such manner that the owner of the adjacent lot may excavate with safety the contiguous earth, and dig below it if it becomes necessary to do so, when he desires to build; and if any damage occurs to the wall from such excavations, which are made with reasonable care and diligence, they must be borne by the owner of the wall. Richard v. Scott, 32 D. 779.

One who erects a building on his own lot, adjoining the house of another, may lawfully dig a foundation below that of his neighbor, and is not liable for any consequential damage, provided he has used due care and diligence to prevent injury to the adjoining house. Panton v. Holland, 8 D. 369.

The owner of a lot, in digging upon his own ground, and for his own lawful purposes, is bound to proceed with a reasonable care and regard for the safety of a neighboring house; and in an action on the case for damages occasioned by a breach of such duty, it is sufficient to allege that the defendant proceeded so carelessly and negligently as to cause the damage complained of. Shrieve v. Stokes, 48 D. 401.

A count which alleges that the defendant "dug the earth from under the plaintiff's house, and from his lot, so carelessly and negligently as to cause the house to fall," states an action of case and not of trespass. In such an action, evidence of the probable cost of rebuilding a wall may be considered in estimating the damages sustained by the plaintiff from the falling of the old wall. Id.

Evidence as to what was usually done by builders in digging under similar circumstances, is admissible as bearing upon the question of reasonable care. Id.

The owner of a lot is not responsible for damages sustained by an adjoining owner by reason of his digging a cellar thereon, unless he knew, or had good reason to believe, that the removal of the earth would occasion the loss before the necessary support could be supplied, or unless the loss could be fairly attributed to his want of ordinary skill or care. Id.

The owner of land cannot claim the support of adjoining soil for any artificial structure he may erect upon his land, and which increases the lateral pressure. Beard v. Murphy, 86 D. 693; Tunstall v. Christian, 56 R. 581.

The owner of a building erected on the line of his lot, cannot by lapse of time acquire a prescriptive right to the lateral support of the adjacent soil. Mitchell v. Mayor, 15 R. 669. Particularly as against the municipal corporation. City of Quincy v. Jones, 20 R. 243.

A prescriptive right cannot be acquired from a user to which the owner of the property over which the right is claimed could not have objected. Richard v. Scott, 32 D. 779.

15. — and what is an invasion of the right. — 1. In general. — The owner of land making excavations thereon is liable for damage thereby caused to the property of an adjacent owner, if such damage might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care in making the excavations. Charles v. Rankin, 66 D. 642.

The owner of land making an excavation so near to adjoining land of another as to cause the soil of the latter to break away is responsible for all injury thereby occasioned to the land, and also for the disturbance of a right of way over the land, without proof of carelessness, negligence, or want of skill in making the excavation; but not for injury to buildings which have been placed upon the land. Foley v. Wyeth, 79 D. 771.

In an action for injury to plaintiff's land from an excavation by defendant on his adjoining land, whereby plaintiff's soil has broken away and fallen, the fact that the injury would not have occurred but for the acts of persons other than the plaintiff, in erecting buildings upon their own land, is no defense. Id.

One who digs a pit on land, so that by the operation of natural and ordinary causes, which he takes no precaution to guard against, the land of another falls into the pit, is liable to an action by the latter for the injury to his land in its natural condition, but not for injuries to buildings or improvements thereon, such as fences and shrubbery, without proof of actual negligence; the measure of damages is the actual loss of, or injury to the soil; and it is immaterial that the defendant is not the owner of the land dug upon, but removes the soil therefrom for his own benefit by permission of the owner thereof. Gilmore v. Dricoll, 23 R. 312.

The owner of land is not liable for injuries caused to an adjacent lot, by excavations made for building purposes on his own land by a contractor to whom he had let the job. Meyer v. Hobbs, 29 R. 719.

2. As to buildings. — Where one built a house on his own land, within two feet of the boundary line, and ten years after the owner of the land adjoining, dug so deep into his own land as to endanger the house, and the owner of the house on that account, left it and took it down, — held that the latter could not recover for injuries done to the building, but was entitled to damages arising from the fall of the soil into the pit so dug. Thurston v. Hancock, 7 D. 57.

One who is about to endanger his neighbor's building, by making excavations on his land, is bound to give the owner of the adjacent soil proper notice of the intended improvement, and to use ordinary skill in conducting the same; and it is the duty of the latter to prop up his own building so as to render it secure in the meantime. La-sala v. Holbrook, 25 D. 524.

Certain buildings are entitled to full protection against the consequences of any new excavation; these are ancient buildings, or those erected upon ancient foundations, by reason of prescription, and those which were granted by the owners of the adjacent lot, or by those under whom they claim. Id.

The owner of land making excavations thereon, by which an adjacent owner's building is injured, is not protected by the fact that he used such care as his builder, who was a skillful and careful person, deemed necessary. The question as to his liability for such injury depends upon whether or not he was negligent in the performance of the work. Charles v. Rankin, 66 D. 642.

A person excavating on his own land, by the side of another's building, is not bound to use such care and caution to prevent injury to such building as a sensible and prudent man, experienced in such work, would exercise if he were the owner of the building. He is bound to use ordinary care to avoid doing harm to his neighbor's building; but the law does not exact from him the same care and expense for the security of his neighbor's property that he may have found it for his interest to have taken for his own. Id.

The owner cannot recover for an injury done to a building standing on the boundary line of a lot, which tumbles down by reason of excavations made upon an adjoining lot, where there has been no improper motive or carelessness in the execution of the work. The loss is damnum absque injuria. McGuire v. Grant, 67 D. 49.

A defendant is personally responsible for his injurious act in removing the natural support of land not subjected to artificial pressure, or not having buildings thereon, if such act were done by himself, or by his direction, or by persons in his employ. Id.

16. Ice, and right of property therein. — Under a statute making it an indictable offense to remove, without license, from the land of another, "any tree, stone, timber, or other valuable article," ice formed in a stream not navigable is a part of the realty, and a "valuable article." State v. Pottmeyer, 5 R. 224.

Ice formed on a pond belongs to the owner of the fee and not to the owner of a mere easement to flow. Brookville etc. Hydraulic Co. v. Butler, 46 R. 580.

17. Accretion. — Sea-weed which has been thrown upon land by the sea is considered an accretion, and belongs to the owner of the soil. Emans v. Turnbull, 3 D. 427.

An act of Congress, laying out the city of Burlington, provided that a strip of land along the river should be reserved for public use. Held, that the natural accretions from the river partook of the same character as the original strip. Cook v. Burlington, 6 R. 549.

18. Accession.—Improvements placed by a stranger upon the land of another, become the latter's property. Crest v. Jack 27 D. 353.

If one build a house with his materials upon the land of another, or if he build a house upon his land with the materials of another, the property in the land vests the property in the building by right of accession, and the owner of the land can only be obliged to answer to the owner of the materials for the value of them. Reese v. Jared, 77 D. 85.

One who cuts and stacks hay on another's uninclosed land, without permission, cannot maintain an action for its destruction. Murphy v. S. C. and Pac. R. Co., 39 R. 175.

19. Conflicting rights of adjoining owners.—1. *Generally.—A person is entitled to recover damages for any encroachment by another on his legal rights, to the extent of the injury thereby sustained. Hutchinson v. Schimmelfeder, 80 D. 582.

A person owning a lot lying below the grade of a street on which it fronts, in grading up to street, must confine the earth within his own line; and if a person owning an adjoining lot has built a wall and erected a house thereon within his own line, the former can neither build to the wall nor throw earth against it; and if he does so, he is responsible in damages. Id.

The owner of land may maintain an action against an adjoining owner for erecting a bay-window so as to extend over his, plaintiff's land, although that portion of the land which is covered by the bay-window has been laid out and is used as a highway; and evidence of a custom to so erect a bay-window is inadmissible. Codman v. Evans, 81 D. 748.

Each of two persons will be regarded as in exclusive possession of several portions of land, so that neither will have the right to license a stranger to enter on the portion of the other, where such persons inclose a tract of land which does not belong to them, for the purpose of using the grass thereon, and agree with each other that each shall use a certain portion, there being no division fence, and each using his respective portion accordingly. Morse v. Iman, 89 D. 417.

Where one person owns the lower story of a building, and another the upper story, with right of way thereto, the latter cannot recover of the former for necessary repairs of the roof, made by him. Ottumwa Lodge v. Lewis, 11 R. 135.

The owner of one part of a building has no action against the owner of the other part for willfully permitting his part to get out of repair, whereby the plaintiff's part is injured. Pierce v. Dyer, 12 R. 716.

The owner of one part of a building has no action to recover damages at law for the willful neglect of the owner of the other part in permitting his part to become ruinous and fall into decay, whereby the plaintiff's part is injured. Id.

2. *As to growing trees.—A tree growing near the division line so that its roots extend on each side is wholly the property of him on whose property the trunk stands, semble. Dubois v. Beaver, 82 D. 326.

Trespass for the destruction of a line-tree lies by the proprietor of the land against an adjoining proprietor, whether the plaintiff's interest be several or as a tenant in common. Id.

A tree, the trunk of which is divided by a boundary line, belongs to the adjoining proprietors as tenants in common. Dubois v. Beaver, 82 D. 326; but this principle does not apply to a tree standing exclusively on the land of one of the parties, its roots extending into the land of both. Such tree belongs solely to the party out of whose land it grows. Skinner v. Wilder, 88 D. 645.

A tree and its produce are the sole property of him on whose land it is situated, and its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body thereof above the soil, rather than by the roots within or branches above it. Id.

The owner of land overhanging by the branches of a fruit tree, standing wholly on the land of an adjoining owner, is not entitled to any of the fruit growing thereon. Hoffman v. Armstrong, 8 R. 537. Defendant is liable either in trespass or in trover for picking, carrying away, and converting to his own use the fruit. Skinner v. Wilder, 88 D. 645.

20. Abandonment of property.—The question of abandonment of property is one of intention of which the jury is to judge exclusively, and in order to do so they must take into consideration all the facts and circumstances before them. Keane v. Cannovan, 82 D. 738; Mallett v. Uncle Sam etc. Mining Co., 90 D. 484; Moon v. Rollins, 95 D. 181.

Abandonment of land does not occur if the person in possession leaves it with the intention of returning. An abandonment takes place only when one in possession leaves with the intention of not again resuming possession. Moon v. Rollins, 95 D. 181.

* Line-trees growing across or adjacent thereto, see note, 83 D. 330, 331.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Lapse of time is a circumstance, when connected with others, to prove intention to abandon, although bare lapse of time, short of the statute of limitations, and unaccompanied by other circumstances, will, at law, be no evidence of abandonment. Mallett v. Uncle Sam etc. Mining Co., 90 D. 484; Moon v. Rollins, 95 D. 181.

Abandonment may be inferred in some cases from a lapse of time, and the delay of the first occupant in asserting his claim to the possession against parties subsequently entering upon the premises; but in such cases the leaving of the premises must have been voluntary, and without any expressed intention to resume the possession. Keane v. Cannonan, 82 D. 738.

Where a person, when he ceases to occupy premises in person, leaves an agent in charge of them, this fact is in itself sufficient to rebut the presumption of abandonment arising from the fact that he ceased to occupy them, and to render the question whether, in fact, he did or did not abandon them, one for the consideration of the jury. Id.

After a title by prior possession is once shown, there is no presumption of its loss; but an abandonment must be made to appear affirmatively by the party relying on it to defeat a recovery. Moon v. Rollins, 95 D. 181.

1. Validity and effect, generally. — A receipt executed with a knowledge of all the circumstances, and without mistake or surprise on one part, or fraud or imposition on the other, is a good defense to a claim. Fuller v. Crittenden, 23 D. 364.

The court cannot say that an instrument purporting to be a receipt may not carry marks upon its face conclusive to show that it is not a genuine receipt. Aday v. Echols, 52 D. 225.

A receipt is not contract, as a general rule. Pribble v. Kent, 71 D. 327.

A receipt may be so drawn as to constitute a contract. Id.

2. — as evidence. — The validity of a receipt which has been introduced in evidence, but not acted upon as such, may be questioned at a subsequent period by the master to whom it has been referred to determine compensation, where its only use is to swell said compensation, for reasons appearing upon its face. Aday v. Echols, 52 D. 225.

3. How far subject to explanation by extrinsic proof. — To destroy the effect of a receipt, such circumstances may be shown at law as would lead a court of equity to set aside a contract, such as fraud, mistake, or surprise. Fuller v. Crittenden, 23 D. 364.

4. Receipts in full, and their effect. — Where a receipt in full for a claim was given by the agent, who was fully authorized, the principal is not precluded from giving evidence to show that the receipt was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation and imposition on the part of the debtor. Trisler v. Williamson, 1 D. 396.

A receipt in full of all demands is prima facie evidence of a settlement between the parties, and of the payment of the balance; and it is not merely evidence of the sum specified in it. Reid v. Reid, 18 D. 570.

A receipt expressed to be in full of all demands may be pleaded in bar, though it is not sealed. Tucker v. Baldwin, 33 D. 384.

A written receipt expressed to be in full of all demands may at law be shown not to have been intended to release the particular demand sued upon. Id.

A receipt given by a constable to a defendant in an execution, for money purporting to have been received by him in full of the judgment in his hands, is not conclusive against him in an action on his bond, but he may show that he did not in fact receive the money, and that he was unable to make it by reason of the debtor's insolvency. State v. Barnett, 62 D. 188.

A receipt for a sum designated as in satisfaction of a certain judgment, and containing the following clause: "And said sum is in full satisfaction of all claims and demands I have or hold against said B. and W., or either of them, up to this date,"—will be confined in its effect to the judgment therein named, and not permitted to release another action then pending between the same parties. Grumley v. Webb, 100 D. 304.

Under a contract for the delivery of hides, plaintiff was to receive a bonus on each hide delivered. At each delivery defendant paid the value of the hides, and received a receipt from plaintiff expressed to be in full. The bonus was not paid. Held, that plaintiff could recover the bonus, notwithstanding the receipt. Ryan v. Ward, 8 R. 539.

Of insolvent bank, see BANKS AND BANKING, 56.

Of insolvent corporation, see CORPORATIONS, VII.

When appointed in suits between partners, see PARTNERSHIP, 63.

1. Power of the court to appoint receivers. — Tenants who have attorned to a receiver will not be permitted to question the right of the court to appoint him, nor to disturb his possession. Albany City Bank v. Schermerhorn, 38 D. 551.

2. Its control over them. — Where a receiver is appointed in equity, and sells the property of the defendant, who, before the final decree, and while the fund is still in the receiver's hands, becomes an insolvent petitioner, and has the receiver appointed his permanent trustee, the court of equity in which the fund is found at the moment of insolvency is not debarred from taking all steps necessary to its preservation. Henry v. Kaufman, 87 D. 591.

A receiver cannot, by becoming a trustee of an insolvent, defy the authority of the court from which he received his appointment, and refuse to account for the funds committed to him as receiver. Ib.

The order of court requiring a receiver to bring the fund in his hands into the court from which he received his appointment as receiver does not conflict with the power of the insolvent court in appointing him the permanent trustee of the party whose property he had sold as receiver, but is ancillary to it. The fund being brought in and the amount ascertained, an order to pay over to the insolvent trustee would follow as a matter of course. Ib.

When a fund in the hands of a receiver is in the custody of the court of equity which appointed him, his office as receiver is not functus officio until his liability as to the fund is determined, and his subsequent appointment by an insolvent court as permanent trustee for the party whose property he had sold as receiver does not release him from responsibility to the court of equity for the faithful discharge of his trust as receiver. Ib.

Ordinarily, no appeal will lie from an order requiring a trustee or receiver to bring money into court; such orders rest in its discretion and where they determine no right, are not the subject of review on appeal. Ib.

3. In what cases a receiver will be appointed.* — The manifest abuse of a trust by an habitual and prospective course of dealing, bringing the property into danger, is sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver. Chase's case, 17 D. 277.

Property, or its rents and profits must be in danger to warrant the appointment of a receiver. Ib.

The insolvency of a party receiving the rents and profits exposes them to danger of loss, and will be a sufficient ground to appoint a receiver. Ib.

A receiver will not ordinarily be appointed at a suit of the first mortgagee, as he has his remedy at law by ejectment, whereby he may get into the receipts of the rents and profits; but as subsequent mortgagees have no right to the possession at law, as against the prior mortgagees, they are better entitled to relief, and a receiver will generally be appointed at their suit, if the first mortgagee refuses to exercise his legal rights. Cortleyes v. Hathaway, 64 D. 478.

A receiver will not be appointed for a mere inadequacy in value of the mortgaged premises and insolvency of the mortgagor, but in a case where the buildings have been burned down, and the property generally permitted to go to waste through the fault of the person in possession, or where fraud or bad faith is shown by misappropriation of rents and profits, a receiver may properly be appointed. Ib.

The rule that where mortgaged premises are inadequate security for the mortgage debt, and the mortgagor is insolvent, a receiver of the premises and of the rents and profits will be appointed, as established by the New York decisions, has not been adopted by the chancery court of New Jersey. Ib.

* When, and over what property a receiver will be appointed, see monographic note, 64 D. 482-485.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

4. When a receiver will be refused. — An order appointing a receiver in a suit to foreclose a mortgage is erroneous, and must be reversed. Gwy v. Ide, 65 D. 490.

5. When appointed in creditors' suits. — A bill is insufficient for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, if it alleges only that the defendant is indebted to the complainants, and that he is disposing of his property, collecting money due him, and secreting the same, with intent to defraud the complainants, and that they are informed and believe that he intends to abscond and defraud his creditors; it does not show that the complainants have any lien as judgment creditors or otherwise upon the defendant's property. Uhl v. Dillon, 69 D. 172.

A receiver may be appointed and an injunction granted at the suit of a judgment creditor to restrain the debtor from selling his goods, notwithstanding a prior mortgage thereon, not yet due, to another person. Rose v. Bevan, 69 D. 170.

A bill is sufficient for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver if it alleges that executions upon valid judgments have been levied upon goods in a store; that a sale thereof to satisfy the judgments is sought to be prevented by the holder of a prior mortgage thereon; that the property is more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgage, and the debtor has no other property; that since the execution of the mortgage the goods remaining in possession of the mortgagor, some of them have been sold and other goods substituted in their place, and that if the debtor is allowed to retain the possession of the goods he would so dispose of them that the complainants' claim would be wholly lost. Id.

A mortgagee, before having the right to foreclose, may have a receiver appointed in case of danger of loss of the goods mortgaged. Id.

6. — in actions by or against corporations. — The supreme court has jurisdiction, by statute, to appoint receivers in cases of insolvent corporations; and when an order is made appointing such an officer, the presumption is, that all things were done required by the statute to be done, in order to authorize it to make such order. Potter v. Merchants' Bank, 86 D. 273.

7. The application for a receiver. — A claim of the whole title is unnecessary to authorize a party to make application for the appointment of a receiver; hence, a widow claiming dower in the premises may make the application. Chase's case, 17 D. 277.

8. Effect of the appointment. — The appointment of a receiver does not affect the title or involve a determination of it, but it can only be made on the application of one having an acknowledged interest. Chase's case, 17 D. 277.

The appointment of a receiver in a creditor's suit does not of itself effect a transfer of the debtor's real property; that is accomplished by a deed from the debtor. Chautauque Co. Bank v. Kelsey, 75 D. 347.

Evidence of fraud against creditors need not be produced by one who impeaches a deed of land as against a purchaser from a receiver, if the defendant, to show his own title, introduces the decree appointing the receiver and the receiver's deed to him, and these recite that the appointment was made in a suit by other creditors brought on the ground that the deed was fraudulent. Such recitals estop the purchaser from denying the fraudulent character of the deed. Id.

9. The receiver's title. — The receiver's possession will be protected by the court. Albany City Bank v. Schermerhorn, 38 D. 551.

A particular description of land in an assignment to a receiver pursuant to an order of court in a creditor's suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance is unnecessary, but a description in general terms of all the debtor's personal and real property is sufficient. Chautauque Co. Bank v. White, 57 D. 442.

A manufacturing company in New Jersey had contracted to build a bridge in Connecticut. Becoming insolvent, a receiver was appointed in New Jersey, who purchased iron with the funds of the estate and sent it to Connecticut to complete the bridge. Held, that a Connecticut creditor could not attach it. Pond v. Cooke, 29 R. 668.

The receiver of an insolvent packet company, appointed in Missouri, there took possession of a barge of the company, and chartered it to a steamboat, and it was brought into Illinois, where it was detained by ice, and given up by the captain to the receiver, who took possession of it. Held, that his possession was valid against an Illinois attaching creditor. Chicago etc. Ry. Co. v. Keokuk etc. Co., 48 R. 557.

10. Rights, powers, and duties, generally. — A receiver is not required to take the property forcibly out of the possession of a stranger, or even of the defendant, without the express direction of the court. Parker v. Browning, 35 D. 717.

The appointment of a receiver on the application of a subsequent mortgagee is without prejudice to the rights of prior mortgagees or incumbrancers, and such a receiver will be directed to keep down the interest upon the prior incumbrances. Cortleyou v. Hathaway, 64 D. 478.

The legal authority of receivers duly appointed is co-extensive only with the jurisdiction of the court by whom they were appointed. Hunt v. Columbian Ins. Co., 92 D. 592.

State comity does not require the courts of one state to permit receivers, appointed by the court of another state, to exercise privileges detrimental to the citizens of the former, while pursuing appropriate legal remedies there. Id.

The receiver of a National bank, directed to sell the assets on such terms and in such manner as he deems best for the interest of all concerned, has no power to exchange, barter or trade the assets. Ellis v. Little, 41 R. 434.

11. Right to sue. — A receiver must proceed by suit to try his right to property in the possession of a third person who claims the right to retain it, or the complainant must make such claimant a party to the suit, and have the receivership extended to the property in his hands, so that he will be bound by an order for its delivery. Parker v. Browning, 35 D. 717.

Where receivers of a bank brings suit in one state in their names as receivers, and at the same time institute suit in another state in the name of the bank, both suits involving the same cause of action, and being against the same defendant, — held, that the receivers having power by law, either in their own names or in the name of the bank, to commence and prosecute suits, in law or equity, on claims in favor of the bank, that a judgment recovered by them as receivers would have the same effect as if recovered in the name of the bank, and would bar the action in the other state. Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 73 D. 683.

Receivers of insolvent foreign corporations and assignees of bankrupt and insolvent debtors under the laws of other states and countries are allowed to sue in the courts of New York. It is true, their titles are not permitted to overreach the claims of domestic creditors of the same debtor pursuing their remedies under the laws of that state; but in the absence of such contestants they fully represent the rights of the foreign debtors. Petersen v. Chemical Bank, 88 D. 298.

A receiver, duly appointed in another State, may maintain replevin here for property sent here by him for sale, as against an attaching creditor. Oagill v. Woodbridge, 35 R. 716.

12. Liabilities, generally. — A receiver of a corporation appointed under State laws is liable in his official capacity the same as the corporation would be. Meera v. Holbrook, 5 R. 633.

Certificates of indebtedness issued by a receiver are not negotiable instruments. Turner v. Peoria & S. R. R. Co., 35 R. 144.

The receiver of an insolvent railroad company is liable to an action for the negligence of his agents in operating the road. Little v. Dusenberry, 50 R. 445.

13. Suits against receivers — leave to sue. — A court will not protect a receiver who attempts forcibly to take property from the possession of a stranger claiming title thereto, any farther than the law will protect him, where his authority to take possession of the property of which he is appointed receiver is not questioned. Parker v. Browning, 35 D. 717.

An order authorizing a suit at law against a receiver for seizing property in the possession of a third person, and holding it until a certain sum is paid into court to abide its order, should direct that, in case of a recovery against the receiver, the fund in the court be applied in part payment of the damages, and should further direct that the claimants stipulate to abide the result of the action at law, and that, if they fail to recover because the property in fact belonged to the defendant, the fund in court be delivered to the receiver as the property of the defendant. Id.

Suing a receiver without leave of court only raises a question of contempt; it does not affect the right involved in the suit. Chautauque Co. Bank v. Risley, 75 D. 347.

The owner of a locomotive engine may maintain replevin for it against the agent of a railroad corporation, whose property is in the hands of receivers, without obtaining leave of the court appointing the receivers, if the corporation has no interest in the engine, although it is used on the railroad. Hills v. Parker, 15 R. 63.

The custody of a receiver is the custody of the court, and he cannot be sued or garnished without leave of the court that appointed him. People v. Brooks, 29 R. 534.

A suit against a receiver of a foreign corporation for damages will not be sustained without leave of the court which appointed the receiver. Barton v. Barbour, 36 R. 104.

14. — Jurisdiction. — Jurisdiction of a suit against a receiver for forcibly taking goods from the possession of a third person, under color of authority merely, without any direction from the court to that effect, may be assumed by the court of chancery, or it may, in its discretion, permit the party aggrieved to proceed at law; but where the property is taken under an express direction of the court of chancery, its jurisdiction is exclusive. Parker v. Browning, 35 D. 717.

15. Punishment for interference with receiver. — A receiver is a servant of the court, and acts for the benefit of all the parties in the suit in which he is appointed. His possession is the possession of the court, and any attempt to interfere with it, without leave of court, is a contempt. Morrill v. Noyes, 96 D. 486.

The levy of an execution on property in the hands of a receiver may be ordered withdrawn, and the sheriff compelled to answer to the court for contempt in making it. Coe v. C. P. & I. R. R. Co., 75 D. 518.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

Consult LARCENY.

1. What constitutes the offense.*—An indictment will lie against the receiver of goods stolen in New Hampshire, and brought into this state. Com. v. Andrews, 3 D. 17.

A person is guilty of receiving stolen goods if he takes them under circumstances that would put a reasonable man of ordinary observation on his guard. Collins v. State, 73 D. 428.

If a person receives stolen goods, knowing them to be such, not for the purpose of making them his own, or of deriving profit from them, but simply to aid the thief in carrying them off, he is guilty of the crime of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. State v. Rushing, 12 R. 641.

2. Indictment.—An indictment for fraudulently receiving stolen goods need not allege the name of the person from whom such goods were received, nor that his name is unknown. State v. Hazard, 60 D. 96.

3. Matters of defense.—On trial of an indictment for receiving "three bonds of the United States, each of the value of ten thousand dollars, the property of S., knowing them to have been stolen," it appeared that after the larceny and before defendant received the bonds, they had been fraudulently altered by erasing the name of S. and inserting that of C. The verdict was "guilty of receiving two bonds." Held, that the alteration did not destroy the character of the bonds, nor the ownership of S. Commonwealth v. White, 25 R. 116.

4. Evidence.—Guilty knowledge of defendant is essential to constitute the offense. Evidence that defendant purchased the goods at a price much below their value; or that he denied that he had them in his possession; or the unsupported testimony of the thief that defendant received them knowing that they had been stolen, though circumstances tending to show defendant's guilty knowledge, will neither of them alone constitute conclusive proof of guilt; and an instruction that either one of these facts is sufficient of itself to establish defendant's guilt is erroneous. People v. Levison, 76 D. 505.

On the trial of an indictment for receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, evidence that the thief was reputed in the community to be a regular and honest dealer in such goods is admissible. Com. v. Gamolo, 25 R. 79.

5. Conviction and punishment.—Receivers of stolen goods, knowing them to be such, are punishable in Connecticut, the same as a principal. State v. Weston, 25 D. 46.

* See note on receiving stolen property, 26 D. 261.

Receiving goods, knowing them to be stolen, with a fraudulent intent, at the time, to deprive the owner of them, is a felony although the guilty party may have been authorized by the owner of the goods to receive them for him. Wright v. State, 26 D. 258.

1. Power of the court to refer issues.*—The power of reference is not restricted to matters of account, or even to actions arising ex contractu, under the New York statute. Lee v. Tillotson, 35 D. 624.

Power of court to refer actions at law, see note, 70 D. 205-211.

References are not prohibited by the seventh article of the constitution of New York, preserving inviolate the right of trial by jury, as "heretofore used," in cases where references were in use before the constitution. Id.

A cause cannot be referred unless there is an account, in the ordinary sense of that term, between the parties, even though there may be many items of damage. Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 41 D. 750.

Where the plaintiff sues on a covenant in a lease reserving rent, payable in grain, fowl, and services, and the defense does not go to the items in the claim, but denies the defendant's liability altogether, there can be no reference. Id.

Under the Minnesota statute, a referee is a person appointed by the court to perform certain offices in the progress of a cause depending in the court of his appointment, and it may be to try the whole issue. Such appointment is not in conflict with the state constitution, which provides that the judicial power of the state shall be vested in certain courts, naming them. Carson v. Smith, 77 D. 539.

The California statute authorizing a reference of cases is solely applicable to proceedings in equity. The right of trial by jury, in all common-law actions, is secured by the constitution of the state. Grinn v. Norris, 79 D. 206.

A statute authorized the courts, without the consent of parties, to commit any cause to a referee for trial, and provided that after such trial the cause should, at the request of either party, be tried by a jury, and that upon such trial the report of the referee should be evidence of all the facts stated therein, subject to be impeached by either party. Held, that the act was constitutional so far as it authorized a compulsory reference; but quære, as to the provision making the referee's report admissible. Copp v. Hemiker, 20 R. 194.

2. Reference by consent.—A party may waive the constitutional provision made for his benefit, and may therefore bind himself by submitting to a reference, even where the constitution would secure to him a jury trial. Lee v. Tillotson, 35 D. 624.

Parties to an action having stipulated to waive a trial by jury, to take the evidence before a referee, and submit the case to a judge for his decision at chambers, and the evidence having been so taken and submitted, the judge decided the case and entered judgment in term. Held, valid. Roy v. Horsley, 25 R. 537.

3. Cases of long accounts.—What is a long account.—Courts of equity have a general jurisdiction where there are mutual accounts, and also where the accounts are on one side, but a discovery is sought, and is material to the relief. But where the accounts are all on one side, and mere set-offs on the other, and no discovery is sought or required, courts of equity have no jurisdiction. McMartin v. Bingham, 1 R. 265.

Fourteen items, under eight different dates, and two credits, the account being all on one side and no discovery sought, and the defenses being denial, payment and the statute of limitation will not deprive the parties of a right to a jury trial. Ib.

4. When reference will be refused, notwithstanding long account. — A court has no power to send an ordinary action at law to a referee for trial, against the objection of either party, whether the action requires the examination of a long account, or not. Grinn v. Norris, 79 D. 206.

A statute of Minnesota authorized a compulsory reference when the trial of an issue of fact required the examination of a long account. Held, to be in conflict with the provision of the State Constitution, that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, and shall extend to all cases at law," etc., and void. St. Paul etc. R. R. Co. v. Gardner, 18 R. 334.

5. The appointment; who may be appointed. — An order of reference is irregular if one of the parties was not before the court. It is irregular in a chancery proceeding to make any order generally affecting the merits of the case until it is at issue as to all parties; this is not excused by the supposition that the party not before the court was not a necessary one. It is enough that he was represented by the bill as having some interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and is regularly made a party by proper allegations and prayer for subpoena to bring him in. Belava v. Lepretre, 56 D. 266.

It seems, a judge cannot appoint himself referee, even by consent. Woodin v. Phenix, 32 R. 172.

6. Referee's oath. — A referee is not an officer within the meaning of the constitutional provision requiring all executive and judicial officers to be sworn before assuming their duties. Underwood v. McDuffee, 93 D. 194.

Judicial power, in a constitutional sense, is not exercised by a referee in determining facts in a cause submitted to him, but by the court in giving judgment. Ib.

7. Powers and duties of referees, generally. — Referees have the power to allow damages for a breach of a special agreement in a cause properly referred to them, under the statute, because requiring the examination of a long account. Lee v. Tillotson, 35 D. 624.

A referee has no power to review an action of the court upon an order of reference, deciding the principles upon which an account should be taken and settled; his duty is to take the account in pursuance of the principles thus settled. Smith v. Walker, 99 D. 415.

A statute appropriated a specified sum to be paid to the relator for the purchase of certain relics of General Washington, by the state, to be paid only upon the certificate of three persons named therein, that the relics were genuine, etc. Held, that a certificate signed by two of the persons named, which stated that the third met with them, but refused to join in the certificate, was sufficient. People v. Nichols, 11 R. 734.

8. The hearing before them. — Referees comparing an account with a book of entries in the absence of one party, the other being present, after the hearing before them has been closed, does not constitute an ex parte hearing, where such comparison is not charged to have been fraudulently made, but was in fact made solely to prevent mistake, and the reward is not thereby vitiated. Small v. Trickey, 66 D. 255.

Upon a pending action being submitted to a referee, and the submission made a rule of court, plaintiff must proceed for the same cause of action named in his declaration. Waterman v. Connecticut etc. R. R. Co., 78 D. 326.

Questions of variance between a declaration and the proof are considered as waived by reference, provided that the matter set up as the plaintiff's ground of recovery before the referee is that for which he sued. Ib.

Every matter which, by the rules of law, could properly have been introduced by way of amendment to the declaration will be considered to have been added, and its absence waived or cured by the reference. Ib.

A referee is not bound by a particular declaration and pleadings, but may award upon the subject-matter of the action without regard to them, when the parties agree to a reference of a pending action, under a rule of court, so that the court is to render a judgment on the report; even where it is a part of the submission or rule of reference that the referee is to be governed by the rules of the law. Cook v. Carpenter, 89 D. 670.

The power of a referee, under a rule of court, extends to what the parties agreed to submit, and no more; and if he undertakes to try and award upon other matters not submitted, the award is invalid. Ib.

9. Review of report, generally. — Unless it is certain that a referee is in error in findings of fact, the court will sustain such findings. Westerlo v. De Witt, 93 D. 517.

10. Motion to set aside, and how determined. — An opinion previously formed by a referee upon a case submitted to him is no objection to the report, if it appear that his mind was open to conviction. Graves v. Fisher, 17 D. 203.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The report of a referee should be set aside for uncertainty, if, where the statute of limitations is pleaded as a defense, it is impossible to ascertain from the report when the limitation commenced to run. Doyle v. Reilly, 85 D. 582.

11. Review by appeal, or error.—The finding of a referee will not be disturbed by the appellate court, if there was any evidence proper to be considered by him tending to sustain his finding, sufficient to justify the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. Olcott v. Tioga R. R. Co., 84 D. 296.

A referee's finding on a question of fact may be reviewed in the supreme court of New York, but it is conclusive in the court of appeals. Stockwell v. Phelps, 90 D. 710.

12. When a new trial will be granted.—A new trial should be granted for any material error occurring on a trial before a referee, or in the findings of fact by him; but where the only error appearing is in the judgment which the referee directs to be entered on the facts found, the court may correct it by rendering the appropriate judgment. Beach v. Cooke, 86 D. 260.

Errors occurring in determining principles upon which an account should be taken cannot be reviewed by the appellate court, on an application for a new trial, on the ground that the referee adopted and applied those principles in the adjustment of the accounts, but can only be corrected in a direct proceeding for that purpose. Smith v. Walker, 99 D. 415.

Satisfaction of judgment by, see JUDGMENT, 109.

1. What constitutes a release. — A release is a discharge of debt by the act of the party. Extinguishment is a discharge by operation of law. Baker v. Baker, 75 D. 243.

The delivery of a release will be presumed from the nature of the writing, if it was executed as such, and was intended to have that effect. Williamson v. McGinnis, 52 D. 561.

A written acknowledgment of money as received "in full" for a demand for unliquidated damages is not within the rule which allows a simple receipt to be contradicted by parol; but is treated as a release, and, unless obtained by fraud, etc., bars any further claim. Coon v. Knop, 59 D. 502.

2. Who may give a release. — The power to release an absolute debt necessarily includes the authority to release a contingent liability. Shaw v. Berry, 58 D. 702.

3. What may be released. — A judgment is a contract of record and demand within the meaning of an instrument releasing "all demands" of one person against another. Henry v. Henry, 71 D. 354.

4. Release by one of several creditors. — Where an action is strictly a personal one, and the plaintiffs are bound to join in it, as in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, brought by tenants in common, a release by two of the plaintiffs will be a bar to the action. Austin v. Hall, 7 D. 376.

A release by one of several plaintiffs, in an action on the case in the nature of waste, is a good bar. Kimball v. Wilson, 14 D. 342.

5. — or to one of several debtors. — The release of one joint obligor releases both. Williamson v. McGinnis, 52 D. 561; even though the release contains a proviso that such other party shall not take advantage of it. Benjamin v. McConnell, 46 D. 474.

A release by a creditor of one of several obligors is a discharge of all. Bosman v. State Bank, 46 D. 291.

A release of one of two sureties releases the other from one-half the debt. Gordon v. Moore, 51 R. 606.

6. — or joint trespassers. — The release of one of several joint trespassers discharges all of them. Gilpatrick v. Hunter, 41 D. 370; Ayer v. Ashmead, 83 D. 154; though the party giving the release stipulated that it should not discharge the others. Ellis v. Bitter, 15 D. 534; Gumther v. Lee, 24 R. 504; but to have this effect, it must be a technical release, under seal, expressly stating the cause of action to be discharged without conditions or exceptions. No release will be allowed by implication. Bloss v. Phymale, 100 D. 752.

The acceptance of the note of one of several co-trespassers in satisfaction of the wrong done by him, releases the others, although the note remains unpaid, and is brought into court to be canceled. Ellis v. Bitter, 15 D. 534.

Where separate actions are pending against several joint trespassers, settlement of one of the actions, and discharge of the defendant therein, will operate as a discharge of the entire cause of action against all, and there can be no recovery in the other suits, either of nominal damages or of costs, although it was the intention of the parties to the agreement for the discharge that it should affect only the cause of action against the defendant, and not the plaintiff's right of recovery in the other suits. Ayer v. Ashmead, 83 D. 154.

Where several have jointly trespassed on real estate, the receipt of money from one will not bar an action against the others, the amount received being less than the damage, and it not being understood to be in full satisfaction. Ellis v. Eason, 36 R. 830.

7. Necessity and effect of a seal. — A release without consideration, and not under seal, is void. Jackson v. Stackhouse, 13 D. 514.

A release not under seal will not operate to release the parties defendant in an action for damages caused by an unlawful assault and battery. Smithwick v. Ward, 75 D. 453.

A release need not be averred to be under seal. A release imports a seal, and it is a matter of evidence whether it have a seal or not, if a seal be necessary. Illinois Central R. Co. v. Read, 87 D. 260.

A release not under seal is valid, if it expresses or is supported by a consideration, or if evidenced by a valid decree of a court of record. Benjamin v. McConnell, 46 D. 474.

An instrument under seal may be released or discharged by an executed parol agreement, although this cannot be done by a mere parol agreement. Dickerson v. Commissioners, 63 D. 373.

8. Validity and interpretation, generally. — A release of a debt discharges the mortgage. Jackson v. Stackhouse, 13 D. 514.

General words in a release are to be construed against the releasor; but general words following a particular recital are to be qualified by the recital. Jackson v. Stackhouse, 13 D. 514; Grumley v. Webb, 100 D. 304.

A "release of all demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights, and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons," etc. Grumley v. Webb, 100 D. 304.

A settlement and release of a trespass by which the goods of a party are carried away, necessarily operates as a transfer of the property to the trespasser. Bradley v. Boynton, 29 D. 582.

The plaintiff lent his note to the defendant, payable to his order; the latter indorsed it and had it discounted at the bank, and received the money. The note was protested, and the defendant being insolvent, the plaintiff signed a written agreement, discharging him from all debts and demands. The bank as a creditor, also executed the agreement by its corporate seal. The plaintiff afterwards paid the bank the amount of the note, and brought an action against the defendant for so much money paid to his use. It was held that the release of the defendant by the bank did not discharge the plaintiff as maker, especially as the bank did not know for whose accommodation the money was discounted, and that, therefore, the plaintiff did not afterwards pay the money wrongfully. Smyrnour v. Minturn, 8 D. 380.

9. How pleaded and proved. — A general release after the commencement of the action need not be pleaded puis darrein continuance, where no prior plea has been filed; nor need it be pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the action merely; but a plea of such release in bar, generally, is good. Kimball v. Wilson, 14 D. 342.

Costs are presumed to have been adjusted by the parties where a general release by one of the plaintiffs is given pending the action; and as the plaintiffs are entitled to have the release pleaded, neither party can claim costs where the plea is adjudged sufficient. Id.

A release obtained by defendant after an action commenced must be specially pleaded in the answer, or in a supplemental answer. Smithwick v. Ward, 75 D. 453.

10. Impeachment, generally. — The consideration of a release under seal can not be denied at law. Barnes v. Ward, 57 D. 590.

11. Relief against, in equity. — Equity will look into the consideration of a release under seal, and if it was obtained by fraud or imposition, or by taking undue advantage of the situation of the party executing it, will either set it aside altogether or restrain the party holding it from making use of it at law. Barnes v. Ward, 57 D. 590.

12. Covenant not to sue. — A covenant not to sue made to a portion only of joint debtors does not release any of them. Matthey v. Gally, 60 D. 595.

A covenant never to sue one of two joint and several promisors in a note does not, like a release to one, discharge the other obligor. Goodnow v. Smith, 29 D. 600; Boseman v. State Bank, 46 D. 291; Harrison v. Close, 3 D. 444; especially where the obligation is only not to sue for a limited time. Ward v. Johnson, 8 D. 729.

Such a covenant is a good defense to the covenantee in an action against both promisors on the note, but the plaintiff, under statute 1834 c. 189, is entitled to judgment against the other promisor. Goodnow v. Smith, 29 D. 600.

The payment of half the note before due, and taking at par the note of a third person indorsed by the plaintiff without recourse, for a small sum, constitute a sufficient consideration for such a covenant. Id.

A covenant not to sue generally may be pleaded as a release. But a covenant not to sue for a limited period cannot be pleaded in a creditor's action; the debtor's remedy is an action on the covenant. This latter doctrine does not apply to actions of assumpsit; accordingly, where the holder of a note stipulated not to sue the maker for a specified time, in consideration of a mortgage security given by the indorser, the maker may rely on the covenant, though no party thereto. Clopper v. Union Bank, 16 D. 294.

A covenant not to sue upon a claim cannot be pleaded to, and presents no bar to

* Effect of release granted on payment of part of sum due, see note, 64 D. 133-143.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

an action on such claim. The only remedy of the covenantee in such a case is a suit for damages on the covenant or agreement. Rucker v. Robinson, 90 D. 412.

A surety is not discharged by an express covenant not to sue the principal debtor for a certain or prescribed time, because, notwithstanding the agreement, suit may be commenced at any time. Id.

A covenant not to sue one of two joint trespassers, does not operate as a discharge of the other. Snow v. Chandler, 34 D. 140.

Nothing short of a payment of the damages by one joint trespasser, or a release under seal, can operate to discharge the other. Id.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

[Includes the organization of churches and other bodies formed for religious purposes; their property rights; powers and duties of their officers, and the rights of members, pastors, etc.]

Exemption of, from taxation, see TAXES, 28.

Mandamus to officers of, see MANDAMUS, 20.

1. Organization. — An ecclesiastical society, established by local limits before the adoption of the constitution of this state, has not been thereby, nor by subsequent statutes, divested of its local character. Atwater v. Woodbridge, 16 D. 48.

The church consists of persons who have made a public profession of religion, and who are associated together by a covenant of church-fellowship for the purpose of celebrating the sacrament, and watching over the spiritual welfare of each other. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223.

A congregation is a voluntary association of individuals or families, united for the purpose of having a common place of worship, to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines and duties, to administer the ordinance of baptism, etc. Id.

A religious association formed on the basis of a community of property, each member surrendering to the association the property that he owns, to be enjoyed in common by all, and agreeing to promote its interests by his labor and otherwise, in consideration that he is to receive religious instruction, etc., as well as support for himself and family, and that in case of his withdrawal from the association, the value of his property is to be refunded to him, is not forbidden by law. Schriber v. Rapp, 30 D. 327.

The privilege of withdrawal secured to the members of such an association, cannot be exercised after the death of a member by his personal representative so as to enable him to claim compensation for services rendered to the society by the decedent. Id.

2. Subscriptions. — Parol evidence is admissible to show that a subscription, expressed in terms to be "for the purpose of building a Catholic chapel," was intended "for the purpose of building a Roman Catholic chapel," to be used as a place of public worship, according to the rights and ceremonies of the Roman Catholic church. O'Hear v. De Goezbrand, 80 D. 653.

The question is one of fact, whether the rules of the canon law of the Roman Catholic church, relative to the property in pews, were adopted or recognized by the signers to a subscription for the building of a Catholic chapel. Id.

A person subscribed toward the payment of a debt due from the building of a church, and the trustees borrowed money to pay the debt on the faith of the subscription. Held, that the subscriber was bound. 1870. Trustees v. Garvey, 5 R. 51.

One who had executed his note to the trustees of a church, as a donation to enable them to buy a bell, died before the bell was ordered. Held, that the note could not be enforced although the bell was afterward ordered. Pratt v. Baptist Soc., 34 R. 187.

3. Elections. — The appointment of persons to preside at an election of trustees of a church, who are not elders or churchwardens, is illegal, under 3 Rev. Stat. 292, unless there are no such officers present. People v. Peck, 27 D. 104.

The term "elders" in this statute does not include preachers in the Baptist church, though commonly called elders. Id.

The register of the members is not the only evidence as to the number of qualified electors at elections under this statute, but parol proof is admissible, especially where it does not appear that a register is in existence. Ib.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The certificate of such an election, signed at any time afterwards, is admissible evidence, though another certificate has been given. Ib.

The statute requiring the presiding officers to certify the results of the election immediately is directory. Ib.

The omission to give notice of such an election, in all respects as required by statute, does not invalidate the election, if fairly conducted, and if all the members are present. Ib.

4. Rights of members, generally. — A member of the society of Shakers is bound by his covenant with the society, whereby, on becoming a member, he stipulates never to make any claim for his services. Waite v. Merrill, 16 D. 238.

The covenant exacted by the society of Shakers of its members is not void, and is not in violation of any constitutional right. Ib.

The members of the church have no other or greater rights as corporators than any other members of the society who statedly attend with them for the purposes of divine worship. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223.

Members of the church excluded for heresy may still not only be voters as members of the congregation, but may be also elected trustees, and have the management of the temporal concerns of the congregation. Ib.

A member of a church cannot maintain an action against one disturbing him in his devotions there, by making loud noises in talking, singing, and the like. Owen v. Heeman, 37 D. 481.

A by-law of a religious society provided that any member should be dropped from the list who had ceased to worship regularly with the society or had failed to contribute to the support of its worship for one year. Held, that a member could only be expelled by a vote of the society, after a hearing. Gray v. Christian Society, 50 R. 310.

5. Powers of the society, contracts, etc. — Unincorporated religious associations have quasi corporate existence in law, especially in Pennsylvania since the act of 1731, with the power to hold land and build appropriate houses, and to acquire and enforce contract rights. Phipps v. Jones, 59 D. 708.

In the absence of evidence as to the manner in which a church makes a contract, but it appearing that there are trustees, of whom the officiating priest is the chairman, it will be presumed that they are empowered to bind the church by contract; but they must act jointly, delegate their power, or ratify the acts of one or more of them; and where the priest alone employed a sexton for the church, without the authority from, or ratification by the other trustees, — held, that the church was not liable for such employment. St. Patrick's R. C. Church v. Gavalon, 25 R. 305.

A society incorporated for religious worship has no power to contract for a steamboat excursion, to raise money for the church purposes, and cannot recover for expenses or loss of anticipated profits by reason of the defendant's breach of such contract. Harrison v. First Bryan Bapt. Church, 36 R. 117.

6. Property, and how it may be acquired. — Property held in trust for an unincorporated religious society vests in the corporation whenever the requisites of the statute are complied with so as to render them legally competent to take property in their corporate capacity. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223.

A pious use is considered a charitable use, both in England and in this country; and funds devoted to the purposes of an association of Shakers are dedicated to a pious use, and must therefore be held to be appropriated to a charitable use. Gass v. Wilhite, 26 D. 446.

A trust under which a society of Shakers holds lands is not repugnant to a law which limits the amount of land which religious societies can hold, to four acres. Ib.

A conveyance to certain individuals, of the site of the Dutch church in Garden street, in the city of New York, in 1691, in trust for the use of the ministers, elders and deacons of such church, and their successors, and for no other purpose, was a valid conveyance to a charitable or pious use at the common law, and vested the legal title to the premises in the trustees absolutely and irrevocably, for the uses therein declared. Reformed Protestant Dutch Ch. v. Mott, 32 D. 613.

Where real estate is conveyed to trustees for the use of a church or congregation as a place of worship, and such church or congregation is afterward incorporated, to enable the corporation to take and hold the legal title, it will be presumed, after a great lapse of time, that there was a conveyance of the legal title from the trustees to the corporation. Ib.

The effect of the Act of March, 1801 (1 R. L. of 1801, 339), upon real estate held by individuals in trust for a Dutch church, incorporated prior to the passage of that Act, was to transfer the legal title to such estate from the trustees directly to the corporation for the use of the corporators. Ib.

No subsequent violation of such trust would ever revest either the legal or equitable title to the property conveyed in the original grantor, although a palpable breach thereof might form a proper ground for an application to the court of chancery on the part of the corporators, or by the attorney-general, to compel the due execution of the trust. Ib.

The dedication of a meeting-house creates a charitable use in favor of the beneficiaries, over which chancery will exercise jurisdiction to maintain the trust and to enjoin invasions thereof. Curd v. Wallace, 32 D. 85.

A building for the sessions of a Sunday school and religious lecture is for a "religious purpose," although occasionally used for fairs and other benevolent purposes. Orwig v. First Presb. Church etc., 32 R. 417.

7. — and how transferred. — Act of 1806 (Laws of 1806, c. 43, sec. 4) gives to religious corporations the power to convey real estate which is held in trust for the corporators; provided, the previous consent of the court of chancery to the alienation is given, as authorized by that act. Ref. Prot. Dutch Church v. Mott, 32 D. 613.

Whether the subsequent ratification of a sale made by such corporation, without having previously obtained the consent of the court of chancery, would have the effect of vesting the title in the grantee discharged in equity of the charitable trust or use, quære. Ib.

Land was conveyed to certain persons named "and to such as they shall associate to themselves, their heirs and successors forever, for the erection of a house for their assembling themselves together publicly to worship God, as also the erection of a dwelling-house for such minister or ministers as shall be by them and their successors from time to time orderly and regularly admitted for the pastor or teacher to the said church or assembly," "and for no other intent, use or purpose whatsoever." Held, 1. Not to constitute a public charity; 2. That the land so conveyed might be sold by authority of the legislature or of a court of equity; and 3. On an application for a sale of the property, that the vote of a majority of the pew-holders or members of the society was not of itself a sufficient authority to enable the corporation to make the sale, nor a sufficient reason to justify the court in authorizing it to be made; but that those seeking the sale must satisfy the court that it was reasonably required for the accommodation of the society as a whole, and that the proposed change would not subject the minority to an unreasonable sacrifice of interest or convenience, or in any way work injustice to them. Old South Soc. v. Crocker, 20 R. 299.

Lands were deeded to a Catholic bishop, his successor and assigns, for the purpose of "erecting thereon a Roman Catholic church and other buildings pertaining thereto, or to be exchanged therefor or used in the purchase of other property in the town." Having built the church on part of the land, — held, that he might sell the rest to pay a debt incurred in the erection. Blanc v. Albury, 51 R. 666.

A covenant of the society of Shakers, by which the members agree to bring in and devote their property to the uses of the society, does not create a trust void for uncertainty, or for want of certus que trust, or because it creates a perpetuity. Gass v. Wilhite, 26 D. 446.

8. Effect of church divisions on rights of property. — Religious societies may submit to arbitration their respective claims to the use of a meeting-house. Curd v. Wallace, 32 D. 85.

The effect of the statute of 1814 on the rights of seceding church members considered. Ib.

The seceding members of such society are not entitled to a distribution of any share of the common property thereof. Gass v. Wilhite, 26 D. 446; Curd v. Wallace, 32 D. 85.

The seceding members of a church forfeit all right to church property. Where a number of the members of a church congregation, although they constitute a majority thereof, dissolve their connection with the church of which they were members, and the entire ecclesiastical body of which it is a part, and unite with another and distinct religious organization, they forfeit all right to the church property; and as they have attached themselves to a separate and distinct church, they cannot be regarded as a "party," within the meaning of the statute, occasioned by a schism or division of the society, and entitled to a proportion of the use of the property. McKinney v. Griggs, 96 D. 360.

The words "schism or division," in a statute providing that in case of such an occurrence each party is to have the use of the church and appurtenances a part of the time in proportion to its numbers, contemplate a division of the society on account of differences among themselves, and not to a difference of faith, or the withdrawal of part of the congregation, and their attaching themselves to another church. Ib.

The title to the church property of a divided congregation is in that part, though a minority, which adheres to the ecclesiastical laws, usages and principles of the denomination under which the church was constituted. Schnorr's Appeal, 5 R. 415; Roche's Appeal, 8 R. 275.

The property of a religious corporation, in case of separation, both parties still adhering to the tenets and discipline of the organization, should be divided between them in proportion to their numbers at the time of such separation. Niccolls v. Rugg, 95 D. 462.

The proper mode in making a partition of the property of a religious corporation, in case of a division, is to count church members by virtue of their membership, and, in addition, to count as members of the congregation all pew-holders. Id.

The right of voting upon questions affecting the property of a religious corporation should not be confined to church members, but should also extend to those who have contributed to the support of the church, although not members. Id.

Certain persons organized themselves under a general statute into a corporation as a "Unitarian Society of Christians," and continued to hold property and conduct public worship as such until the pastor publicly avowed that he was "neither a Unitarian nor a Christian." Thereupon a majority of the members of said society formed a new society and re-employed said pastor. He continued to preach his own doctrines in the meeting-house of the society, and was supported by a majority of the society. The minority filed a bill against the majority and the pastor, praying an injunction to restrain the preaching of such doctrines in the meeting-house. Held, that they were entitled to the injunction. Hale v. Everett, 16 R. 82.

9. Pews, and rights of pew owners.*

— For a disturbance of an occupant of a pew an action on the case only may be maintained in his behalf in England, because there his right of property is incorporeal—a mere easement. Shaw v. Beveridge, 38 D. 616.

A pew owner, if he is improperly disturbed in his right to the use of his pew, may, according to the circumstances, maintain case, or ejectment. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223; or a writ of entry, Gay v. Baker, 9 D. 159; or an action of trespass for a disturbance in his possession, for he is here deemed to have an individual right of property therein, and not a mere easement. Shaw v. Beveridge, 38 D. 616.

A pew-holder has not an absolute, but a qualified property in his pew, it being subject to the right to make necessary alterations in the meeting-house, or to pull it down and rebuild it; but if he is injured in his property by such alterations, or by the destruction and rebuilding of the house, he may have an action on the case for his damages. Daniel v. Wood, 11 D. 151.

The parish may alter the shape and form of the meeting-house or rebuild it on the same ground, an indemnity being paid to those of the pew-holders whose pews are destroyed. Gay v. Baker, 9 D. 159; Jones v. Towne, 42 R. 602.

The grant of a pew in perpetuity does not give to the owner an absolute right of property, but simply entitles him to the use of the pew, for the purpose of sitting there during divine service. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223.

A member of a religious corporation is not liable for pew rents, where intruders, without authority from the charter of the law, take possession of the church, expel the vestry and choose a new one, although such member retains his pew but refuses to occupy it. Boagh v. Hendel, 30 D. 291.

The right to a pew can be transferred only in a manner provided for transfer of realty. Barnard v. Whipple, 70 D. 422.

10. Secular officers. — The trustees of a religious society have no right to defend proceedings to test the validity of their election, at the cost of the society. Harrison v. First Presbyterian So. of Hartford, 33 R. 34.

11. Ecclesiastical courts. — Legal tribunals have no jurisdiction over the church as such, except so far as is necessary to protect the civil rights of others, and to preserve the public peace. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 24 D. 223.

The church judicatories determine all questions relating to the faith and practice of the church and its members, but cannot interfere with the temporal concerns of the congregation or society with which the church is connected. Id.

The canon law of the Roman Catholic church is without force or authority, as such, in Vermont, and is to be considered in determining the legal rights of parties only so far as it is recognized in or made part of some agreement under which those rights are derived. O'Hear v. De Goebriand, 80 D. 653.

A classis of the German Reform Church of the United States, sitting as an ecclesiastical court, declared certain offices held by defendant vacant. Held, that this decision was binding on the civil courts. Roski's Appeal, 8 R. 275.

In a suit to enjoin the plaintiffs in error, as an ecclesiastical court, from proceeding with the trial of the defendant for alleged offenses and misconduct as a presbyter,—held, 1. That the fact that the commission issued by the bishop, appointing persons to investigate the charge and make presentment, was irregularly issued, would not affect the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court; 2. The ecclesiastical court is the exclusive judge of the sufficiency of the presentment; 3. Such court is not bound by the rules of law as to challenge of jurors; 4. Where there is no right of property involved except clerical office or salary, the spiritual court is the exclusive judge of its own jurisdiction. Chase v. Cheney, 11 R. 95.

Where a Presbytery have decided that certain members of a Presbyterian church under its jurisdiction have seceded, the decision binds the civil courts, and the seceders, although a majority, lose their rights to the church property. Gaff v. Greer, 45 R. 449.

12. The minister. — The church judicatories cannot remove a minister without the consent of a majority of the members of the congregation, or of their legally constituted trustees, if they are incorporated. First Baptist Church v. Withersell, 24 D. 223.

* Nature of pew-holder's title, see note, 80 D. 662-664.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume L.

No action lies by a Catholic priest against his bishop for removing him from his office. O'Donnovan v. Chataud, 49 R. 462.

13. His compensation. — A clergyman entered into a contract for a year's service with a vestry, who were not legally elected, but who, so far as he knew, were the officers de facto. Having performed the duties according to such contract, he was held entitled to recover for his services. St. Luke's Church v. Mathews, 6 D. 619.

But when, apprised of the illegality of the election of the vestry, he made with them a contract for the ensuing year, it was considered proof of collusion, which should prevent him recovering for services during this time, and a perpetual injunction was decreed against any suit for services rendered during the second year. Id.

The pastor of a religious society got judgment against the trustees for his salary, and a levy was made on the church communion service. Held, invalid. Lord v. Hardie, 33 R. 683.

No action lies in favor of a Roman Catholic priest against his bishop for salary or support during a period for which the bishop refused to assign him a charge. Twigg v. Sheehan, 47 R. 727.

14. Actions by or against religious societies. — An unincorporated religious society could not sue at common law in its own name, nor in the name of its agents or trustees in whom no right of property is vested; but by the statute of 1814, of this state, the trustees in whom title is vested may sue. Curd v. Wallace, 32 D. 55.

A plain equity principle allows the committee of an unincorporated society to sue and be sued as representatives of the whole. Phipps v. Jones, 59 D. 708.

Unincorporated religious societies may sue on a contract made with them in their associate capacity and for the legitimate purposes of their association, even though there be no persons named or described in the contract as trustees or committeemen on behalf of the society. Id.

Whether chancery can interfere to prevent changes in the doctrines or modes of worship originally established by a religious society, quære. First Baptist Church v. Withersell, 24 D. 223.

Religious societies have the right to prescribe such rules as they may think proper for preserving order when met for public worship, and evidence tending to prove the violation of their rules is admissible to reduce damages in an action against them. McLain v. Matlock, 65 D. 746.

The G. congregation and the L. congregation entered into articles of association to build a church in which "divine service" only should be held. For a period of twenty years no other than meetings for public worship or preaching the gospel were held in the church. Sunday schools were not in existence in the neighborhood when the church was built. Held, that the G. congregation was entitled to an injunction restraining the L. congregation from holding a Sunday school in the church. Gass' Appeal, 13 R. 726.

No action lies against the trustees of a religious society for expulsion from the church organization connected with it. Hardin v. Second Baptist Church, 47 R. 556.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

[Includes state court decisions relative to the removal of civil and criminal causes, from a state court to the United States circuit court, under the provisions of the several acts of Congress upon that subject.]

Compelling, by mandamus, see MANDAMUS, 10.

1. Under sec. 12 of the Judiciary Act.*—An action brought by a citizen of one state against a citizen of the same state jointly with citizens of another state, is not removable to the circuit court of the United States. Miller v. Lynde, 1 D. 86.

Action by a citizen of a state in which it is brought, against a foreign corporation, may be removed for trial to the United States court, if within the provisions of the United States statutes relating to removal of causes from state to federal courts, although the defendant has fully complied with the provisions of a state law directing how service of process shall be made upon foreign corporations. Such state law does not infringe upon the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. Hobbs v. Manhattan I. Co., 96 D. 472.

The United States statutes relative to transferring causes from the state to the federal courts authorize the transfer where the plaintiff is a citizen of the state where the suit is commenced and the defendant is a citizen of another state; where both plaintiff and defendant are non-residents of the state in which the action is commenced, the case is not within the statute. Wills v. Home Ins. Co., 4 R. 180.

A petition, by defendant, to remove a cause into the United States court must show that the plaintiff was a citizen of the state at the time of the commencement of the action; an averment that he is a citizen is insufficient. Holden v. Putnam Fire Ins. Co., 7 R. 287.

A Massachusetts statute required that foreign insurance companies, doing business in that state, should appoint a resident agent, upon whom all lawful processes against them might be served with like effect as if they were domestic companies. Held, that a foreign company, by accepting service of process, as provided by the statute, was not precluded from removing a cause from the state court into the United States courts, in a proper case. Morton v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 7 R. 505.

In an action brought in New Hampshire, by an administrator appointed in that State, but a citizen of Massachusetts, against a Massachusetts life insurance company, upon a policy by which defendants promised to pay a certain sum to plaintiff's intestate, a citizen of New Hampshire, his executor, etc., after his death, for the sole use of his wife, a resident of New Hampshire,—held, that the cause could not be removed into the United States court under the act of 1789. Geyer v. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 9 R. 185.

A state statute requiring corporations organized under the laws of another state, as a condition to doing business in the state, to appoint an agent upon whom service of process may be made, and to agree not to remove suits into the federal courts—held, that the statute, so far as it required an agreement against the removal of suits, was repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that the agreement under it was void. Morse v. Home Ins. Co., 13 R. 297; overruling same case, 11 R. 580.

Corporations are citizens within the meaning of the clause of the constitution of the United States which extends the judicial power of the courts of the United States to controversies between the citizens of different states; and they are citizens only of the state or sovereignty that created them. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickinson, 13 R. 295.

The right to have a cause transferred from a state court to the United States court is not controlled or abridged by the act of the legislature of a state authorizing the service of process on the agent of a foreign corporation. Id.

2. Under act of March 3, 1833 (24 St. at L. 633.)—A state court cannot prevent or oppose the removal of a case to the federal court, if it is legally removable thereto. In a case to which the act of Congress applies, the removal is a matter of right and not within the discretion of the state courts. Yankey v. Richardson, 81 D. 769.

Judgment against a defendant was entirely reversed, it appearing that the proceedings in the action were a manifest fraud, with a view to deprive the defendant of his right to remove the case to the United States court. Ib.

3. Act of April 9, 1866 (14 St. at L. 27.)—Where it appeared from the affidavit of a person of color, charged with a capital offense, that he could not have full and equal benefits of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and that his right cannot be enforced in the state courts,—held, that under the act of Congress of 9th April, 1866, the state courts will proceed no further in the prosecution until certified of the action of the circuit court of the United States under the act of Congress, March 3, 1863. State v. Dunlap, 6 R. 746.

It is erroneous in such a case to order the removal of the indictments to the circuit court of the United States; but not to suspend proceedings in the cause till certified to the court under the aforesaid act of Congress. Ib.

4. Act of July 27, 1866 (14 St. at L. 306.)—The right of a defendant to a transfer of the cause is not defeated by the fact that the co-defendant is a resident of the same state with the plaintiff, provided a severance can be had, and the rights of the petitioner can be determined separately. Stewart v. Mordecai, 2 R. 555.

An affidavit filed in conformity to the acts of Congress, passed 27th July, 1866, and 2nd March, 1867, relating to removal of causes from state to United States courts, cannot be traversed in the State court. Ib.

An administrator filed a bill to marshal assets against creditors, some of whom had commenced suits at law. An injunction was allowed, conditioned to allow the claims to be litigated to ascertain the amounts due, the priority of the claims, and the right to payment out of the funds. One of the creditors resided in another state, and made application to have his action at law removed to the United States court. Held, that the cause was not subject to removal, as it was merely collateral to the suit in equity. Burtis v. Loyd, 12 R. 574.

5. Act of March 2, 1867. (14 St. at L. 558.)—1. General rules.—Act of Congress, March 2, 1867, providing for the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court, where either party believes he will not obtain justice in the state court, because of prejudice, etc., merely extends the privilege of removal to the plaintiff as well as to the defendant, and does not repeal the previous act of July, 1866, providing for such removal in cases of citizenship of different states, on the petition of the defendant, etc. Washington etc. R. R. Co. v. Alexandria etc. R. R. Co., 100 D. 710.

An order of a state court, transferring a cause to the federal court under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, is an appealable order, and the state court have jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal. Akerley v. Vilas, 1 R. 166; Burson v. Nat. Park Bank, 13 R. 285.

The application of a party to remove a cause to the circuit court of the United States is analogous to a plea to the jurisdiction of the state court, and, when granted, the party against whom it is taken has the right to appeal. The case would be different if the application to remove is refused. In the latter case no irreparable injury would follow, and the appeal would not be allowed. State v. Judge etc., 8 R. 583.

A mandamus will therefore issue, on application, from the supreme court, directing a judge of the district court to grant an appeal from an order transferring a cause to the circuit court of the United States, if the case is in other respects, appealable. Ib.

The act of Congress of March 2, 1867, in so far as it gives a non-resident plaintiff the right to remove a cause from the state to the federal courts, is unconstitutional. Whiton v. Chicago etc. R'y Co., 3 R. 101; contra, Burson v. Nat. Park Bank, 13 R. 285.

An action was removed, on petition of the plaintiff, from a state court to the circuit court of the United States. The judgment there rendered was reversed by the supreme court of the United States and the cause was remanded to the state court where it began. Held, that the removal did not operate as a discontinuance of the original action, and that the plaintiff might proceed with his case as if no removal had been had. Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Francis, 24 R. 674.

On petition for removal of a cause to the federal court, the state court may determine whether the bond is "good and sufficient," but cannot arbitrarily reject one good in form; and technical objections to the affidavit must be taken when the affidavit is read below, or are deemed waived. Mix v. Andes Ins. Co., 30 R. 260.

2. When a removal is proper.—A non-residence insurance company doing business in a state, and accepting service of original process through its agents, in conformity to the laws of the state, is not thereby deprived of the right to a removal to the federal courts in an action commenced against it in the courts of the state by a citizen. Knorr v. Home Ins. Co., 3 R. 26.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where a citizen of one state commences an action against a citizen of another state in the courts of the latter state, the plaintiff is, nevertheless, entitled, afterward to have the cause removed to the United States courts, under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867. The affidavits in such a case need not set forth the facts on which the applicant for the transfer bases his belief that local prejudices exist; it is sufficient if they state that he has reason to, and does, believe that such local prejudice exists as will prevent his obtaining justice. Meadow Valley M. Co. v. Dodds, 8 R. 709.

A national bank located and doing business in a state is a citizen of the state within the meaning of the act relating to the removal of causes into the federal courts. Cook v. State Nat. Bank, 11 R. 667.

In an action commenced by a citizen of another state against a citizen of Indiana, the court, on plaintiff's application, and after a trial, in which the jury disagreed, ordered the cause to be removed into the circuit court of the United States under the acts of Congress. Held, that the cause could be removed at any time before another trial. Barron v. Nat. Park Bank, 13 R. 235.

Where, by the law of a state, a county may be sued as a corporation, an action brought against a county by a non-resident of the state is removable into the United States circuit court. Floyd County v. Hurd, 15 R. 682.

A corporation of another state sued here may remove the cause into the federal court, and its authorized agent may make the requisite affidavit. Mix v. Andes Ins. Co., 30 R. 260. But see Cook v. State Nat. Bank, 11 R. 667.

3. When not proper—A corporation cannot remove a cause into the federal court under the act of March 2, 1867, as it cannot make the affidavit required by the act. Cook v. State Nat. Bank, 11 R. 667.

In an action by a citizen of New York in a state court of New York, against a national bank located in Boston, — Held, 1. That the defendant was a citizen of Massachusetts, within the meaning of the acts relating to the removal of causes to the federal courts; 2. That the joinder in the action as defendants, of the drawers of the check, would not deprive the bank of the right to alone apply for a removal of the case to the federal court, the causes of action being distinct and only properly joined by virtue of a state statute; 3 (by a divided court). That the cause could not be removed by the bank into the federal court, under the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, as being a corporation, it could not make the affidavit required by the act. Id. But see Mix v. Andes Ins. Co., 30 R. 260.

In a suit in a court of this state against a railroad corporation established in another state, the defendants filed an affidavit of their acting superintendent that he believed and had reason to believe that from prejudice and local influence, they would not be able to obtain justice in a state court. He had no authority to make this affidavit, except what was incident to his office. Held, that this affidavit was not sufficient for the removal of the case into the circuit court of the United States, under the Act of 1867. Mahone v. Manchester and L. R. R. Co., 15 R. 9.

An officer of a foreign corporation sued in a state court cannot (at least without special authority) make the affidavit required by the act of Congress of 1867, for the removal of the suit to the United States circuit court, as that act requires an affidavit of the defendant's own belief. Quigley v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 21 R. 757.

In an action pending in a state court, in which some of the plaintiffs were non-residents of the state and the others residents, the non-residents moved to have the cause removed into the United States circuit court, under act of Congress of March 2, 1867. Held, that the cause could not be removed. Beery v. Irick, 12 R. 539.

A suit in a state court, in which a citizen of the state is plaintiff, and a citizen of the state and a citizen of another state are defendants, cannot be removed on the petition of the citizen of the other state into a United States circuit court, under the United States statute of 1867, chap. 196, as a whole suit; nor can it be so removed, as far as relates to the petitioning defendant, at least if the cause of action is not so divisible that the suit can proceed separately against each defendant in the different courts. Florence S. M. Co. v. G. & B. S. M. Co., 14 R. 579; Burch v. Davenport etc. R. R. Co., 26 R. 150.

By statute of Massachusetts a disputed claim against the insolvent estate of a deceased person, in process of settlement in the probate court, may be tried before a jury in a court of common law, like proceedings being had as in an action at law, except that the judgment is not followed by execution, but is conclusive as to the amount to be allowed by the probate court. Held, that such a suit could not be removed into the United States circuit court. Du Vieser v. Hopkins, 17 R. 141.

Creditors of an intestate's estate, some of whom resided in New York and others in Georgia, filed a bill against the administratrix, in Georgia, for a marshaling of the assets of the estate. The administratrix, by cross-bill, alleged that the estate was insolvent, and obtained an injunction restraining creditors from suing until the assets were marshaled. The New York creditors thereupon petitioned to remove the suit to the United States court. Held, that under the act of 1867 this could not be done. Büss v. Rawson, 9 R. 164.

A cause cannot be removed from a state to a federal court, pending an appeal from a decree upon the merits. Beery v. Frick, 12 R. 539; notwithstanding the fact that the judgment may have been reversed on appeal, and the cause remanded for new trial or further proceedings. Akerley v. Vilas, 1 R. 166; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 5 R. 642; Bryant v. Rich, 8 R. 311; Crane v. Reeder, 15 R. 223; Boggs v. Willard, 22 R. 77.

An action cannot be removed under the act of 1867, ch. 196, after a trial on the merits in a state court, although such trial has resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Gapin v. Critchley, 17 R. 176. But see Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. 214.

6. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. Sec. 639 etc. — A citizen of New Hampshire brought action against a Vermont corporation, and afterward, in good faith, moved to and became a citizen of Vermont. Afterward the defendant petitioned for a removal of the cause to the United States circuit court. Held, that both parties being citizens of the same state at the time of the petition, the removal could not be had. Laird v. Conn. and P. Rivers R. R., 20 R. 215.

An action by the citizen of a state against a foreign corporation cannot be removed into the United States circuit court under the Revised Statutes after one trial has been had, although the action is one where review will lie. Whittier v. Hartford Ins. Co., 20 R. 185.

When a cause has been called for trial in its order, and a jury has been called to try it, the trial is begun, although the jury has not been sworn, and it is then too late for the defendant to apply to remove the cause into the United States courts. St. Anthony Falls Water-Power Co. v. King Bridge Co., 23 R. 682.

Section 639 of the United States Revised Statutes, providing for the removal of causes at any time before trial, from state to United States courts, on the ground of prejudice or local influence, is not repealed by the act of Congress of March 2, 1875. Barber v. St. Louis etc. R. R. Co., 22 R. 243.

A state court loses jurisdiction of a cause, upon proceedings being taken to remove it into the United States circuit court, and the question of such loss of jurisdiction can be raised by answer. Shaft v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 23 R. 138.

An action was commenced against a non-resident insurance company, by the service of the summons upon the person appointed by such company, under and in pursuance of the statute, as its agent and attorney within the state, upon whom all process against it might be served, and who was also its general managing agent, in the state. Such agent and attorney, upon entering defendants appearance, filed a petition for a removal of the cause to the circuit court, under U. S. R. S., § 639, which was signed by him as such attorney, and verified by his affidavit which also stated that he was defendant's general managing agent. Held, 1. That the petition and the filing of it were the acts of the defendant. 2. Semble, that it was not essential that the petition be verified; but, 3. That if a verification was necessary, the affidavit was sufficient, and made by the proper person. Ib.

A colored man cannot remove an indictment against him into the federal court for trial, upon the allegations that such prejudices exist against his race in the state that justice will not be done to him, and that none but white men can there sit on the jury. State v. Strauder, 27 R. 606.

7. Under act of March 3, 1875 (18 St. at L. 470-471). — After a cause has been once tried in a state court and a verdict rendered, it cannot be removed into the United States circuit court, although the verdict may have been set aside for error and a new trial granted. Chandler v. Coe, 22 R. 437.

It is too late to remove a cause into the circuit court of the United States, under U. S. Stat. of March 3, 1875, after a time has passed at which it could have been tried. New York Warehouse etc. Co. v. Loomis, 23 R. 372.

On an application to remove a cause from a state to the federal court, the state court has power to inquire into the truth of the facts alleged in the petition. Burch v. Davenport etc. R. R. Co., 26 R. 150.

Where there are several defendants, not residing in the same state, a cause cannot be removed on the petition of one who is a citizen of another state than that where the plaintiffs reside and suit is brought, unless a final determination can be had as to him without the presence of the other defendants. Ib.

Exclusive jurisdiction having once attached as against all the defendants, in the state court, and judgment having passed as to some of them, jurisdiction must continue until a complete determination of all the issues between all the parties; jurisdiction cannot be ousted or defeated at any subsequent stage of the action by parties who have appeared and submitted thereto. Ib.

In an action of trespass on land, a non-resident defendant sued with residents may remove the cause to the federal court so far as he is concerned. Simmons v. Taylor, 31 R. 566.

8. Removal of criminal causes. — After a cause has been fully removed from one court to another, there can be no further proceeding therein in the former court. State v. Reid, 28 D. 572.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

An order of removal made before a plea is entered is premature, and therefore inoperative, and the jurisdiction of the cause remains in the court where it was originally commenced. Ib.

The superior court to which a cause is removed, has no power to return it to the superior court whence it came. Ib.

The court from which a cause has been removed may, after its removal, amend by supplying an omission in the record of something which occurred prior to the removal, and may then send a new transcript of the amended record to the court to which the cause was removed. Ib.

I. WHEN IT LIES.

II. PROCEDURE.

III. REMEDIES UPON REPLEVIN BONDS.

I. WHEN IT LIES.

1. Jurisdiction. — Replevin at common law defined, and the extent of the remedy explained: Wilson v. Rybolt, 77 D. 486; Maxham v. Day, 77 D. 409.

Detinue for unlawful detentions, and replevin for unlawful takings, were finally made, at common law, to cover the whole ground of unlawful deprivations of personal property, so far as recovering the specific articles was concerned. Wilson v. Rybolt, 79 D. 486.

Detinue and replevin, in their fullest scope, were formerly in use in Indiana, but the whole ground for both these actions is now covered by the code provision for the recovery of the personal property. Ib.

Replevin is a local action in cases of distress for rent, because the place is material, but not where the object is merely to try the right of property. Crocker v. Mann, 26 D. 684.

Replevin, in Missouri, is not a local action in any case, because distress for rent does not exist here. Ib.

One court cannot take property from the custody of another by replevin, or any other process. Lewis v. Buck, 82 D. 73.

Property held by a United States Marshal

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

under a writ from a district court cannot be taken from him by any process from a state court; and if surrendered upon a writ of replevin, the state court having custody of the property will order its return upon demand, and a showing by the marshal of his authority for holding it. Ib.

A plea in replevin that the defendant is a United States Marshal, and holds the property by virtue of a levy under an attachment from the United States district court, is, if not denied, a conclusive defense to an action in a state court. Ib.

Where a state court replevies property out of the possession of an officer of a United States court whose jurisdiction first attached, the former tribunal has jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of its own proceedings, and in dismissing the action, take any necessary steps to enforce a redelivery of the property to the officer, who has been divested of its possession by its process. Booth v. Ahlman, 84 D. 711.

2. When replevin will lie, generally. — Replevin lies wherever trespass de bonis asportatis would lie. Marshall v. Davis, 19 D. 463; Brusen v. Ogden, 20 D. 593; Allen v. Crary, 25 D. 566; Orocker v. Mann, 26 D. 684; and therefore lies against an officer by a stranger to an execution, whose property has been seized under color of process. Phillips v. Harries, 19 D. 166; or against a plaintiff in execution, by whose direction it is levied upon property of a third person. Allen v. Crary, 25 D. 566; or for goods wrongfully detained by a fraudulent purchaser. Root v. French, 28 D. 482; or in any case where the plaintiff has a present right to the possession of any personal property in the possession of the defendant. Shaddon v. Knott, 58 D. 63; or for any tortious or unlawful taking of goods, and not in cases of distress only. Pangburn v. Partridge, 5 D. 280; Daggett v. Robins, 21 D. 752.

Replevin lies in Connecticut only in cases where cattle or goods have been impounded and distrained. Watson v. Watson, 23 D. 324.

Replevin lies in Pennsylvania wherever one claims goods in possession of another, without regard to the manner in which the possession was obtained. Herdic v. Young, 93 D. 739.

3. When it will not lie. — A disseisee cannot maintain replevin for grain sown by him on the land of which he has been disseised, which has been cut and removed by the disseisor. De Mott v. Hagerman, 18 D. 443.

Trespass quare clausum fregit would lie in such a case for the first entry, and after a recovery in ejectment, damages would follow for the mesne profits. Ib.

Title to land will not be tried in an action of replevin, ex directo, though it may sometimes come in question incidentally. Snyder v. Vaux, 21 D. 466.

4. The necessary wrongful taking. — To maintain an action of replevin, a wrongful taking must be shown; a wrongful detention is not sufficient. Harwood v. Smet-hurst, 80 D. 207.

Replevin is founded upon the unlawful taking, which fixes the character of the recovery, and enters directly into the question of damages. Herdic v. Young, 93 D. 739.

A wrongful taking from the actual or constructive possession of the plaintiff is necessary to support trespass or replevin in the cepit. Marshall v. Davis, 19 D. 463.

Delivery by a bailee without authority to one who is ignorant of the owner's rights does not constitute such a wrongful taking of a chattel by the party so receiving it as to support replevin. Ib.

The wife of the bailee is a competent witness in such a case, because the bailee's interest is balanced, he being liable in any event. Ib.

The possession of property has been changed, so that a writ of replevin may be sued out, where the property is seized by the defendant under an attachment, and an inventory is made, and the defendant locks up a portion of the property in a trunk, takes away a portion, leaves the trunk and the remainder of the property in the office where it was at the time, locks up the office, and takes away the key, but afterwards gives the key to the plaintiff's attorney with the understanding that the rights acquired by the levy should not thereby be lost. Mazon v. Perrott, 97 D. 191.

5. — or detention. — A tortious taking is not necessary to maintain replevin; it is sufficient if the property is unlawfully detained. Badger v. Phinney, 8 D. 105; Dearmon v. Blackburn, 60 D. 160; Eveleth v. Blossom, 92 D. 555.

A wrongful detainer after a lawful taking is not equivalent to a wrongful original taking. Marshall v. Davis, 19 D. 463.

Property wrongfully taken is wrongfully detained until restored to its owner. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

Property is wrongfully detained in replevin, though lawfully obtained, if kept after the plaintiff is lawfully entitled to have it returned to him. Ib.

Any act will constitute a wrongful detention in replevin if it amounts to conversion in trover. Ib.

A wrongful detention may be shown in replevin by proof of wrongful taking. Ib.

6. Replevin in the cepit, or in the detinet. — Replevin in cepit can only be brought when trespass could be maintained, and that will lie for an injury to land only when the plaintiff is in possession. Stockwell v. Phelps, 90 D. 710.

Replevin for a wrongful detention would lie, prior to the code, for property wrongfully taken, and the code has not altered the rule. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

Plaintiff having a cause of action for a wrongful taking of property, and also for its wrongful detention, may waive the former and sue for the latter, the same as before the code. Id.

An action of replevin is always in detinet, under the statute of Michigan, whether the taking be wrongful or not; and where the taking is wrongful, and the plaintiff establishes his right to the property, the action cannot be defeated by a failure to make a prior demand. Le Roy v. East Saginaw City Ry., 100 D. 162.

7. Who may maintain replevin. — The assignee of the buyer of a chattel, who has never had possession, may maintain replevin against the seller. Woods v. Nixon, 1 D. 364.

One whose goods, in the hands of his agent, are seized by a sheriff under an execution against the agent, may maintain replevin for them against such sheriff. Clark v. Skinner, 11 D. 302.

The owner of property levied upon and sold under a writ of attachment against another may recover such property from the purchaser, and damages for its detention. Overby v. McGee, 63 D. 49.

A landlord may bring replevin for chattels wrongfully severed from the freehold by the tenant, as the title to the land is not thereby drawn in question, semble. Anderson v. Hayler, 85 D. 318.

The owner of land may bring replevin for chattels severed from the freehold, where there was no adverse possession, but not if the land was held adversely, for he cannot assert his title in that manner. Id.

A defendant in replevin cannot maintain a second action for replevin, for the same property against the plaintiff in possession during the pendency of the first suit, nor can one deriving title from the defendant after the service of the writ maintain such action. Hines v. Allen, 92 D. 574.

An action of replevin cannot be maintained by a part owner of a chattel for his undivided part; and when it appears from the plaintiff's own showing that he is merely a part owner, the court will abate the writ ex officio. Hart v. Fitzgerald, 3 D. 75.

Where several own cereal grain, of the same kind and value, mingled together by their consent, or by reason of circumstances reasonably to be foreseen, each may maintain replevin for his just proportion. Pizzack v. White, 33 R. 211.

8. — and for what property. — Where things are affixed to the freehold, replevin will not lie; but if, after a levy, they are severed, they become personal property, and may be replevied. Cresson v. Stout, 8 D. 373.

Replevin may be maintained for goods taken on execution from the possession of the defendant by one having the property therein, and the right to reduce them to actual possession. Dunham v. Wyckoff, 20 D. 695.

Replevin lies for trees cut when the defendant had neither possession, title, nor claim to the land, but was a mere trespasser. Snyder v. Vaux, 21 D. 466.

A willful trespasser can not acquire title by altering the form of the property, as by working trees into rails and posts. Id.

Replevin lies for trees made into posts and rails by the wrongdoer. Id.

An action of replevin is authorized by Iowa code to recover possession of personal property taken by legal process from the owner, when such property is exempt from seizure by such process; and the action may be brought at any time before the property is finally sold by virtue of the process, unless the same issue has been res judicata on motion. Wilson v. Strip, 61 D. 138.

Replevin may be maintained for goods seized by a sheriff, on an execution against their former owner, on proof that plaintiff had possession of them coupled with an interest; and notwithstanding the legal title and right of possession may have been vested in a third person. Johnson v. Carnley, 61 D. 762.

Where a portion of chattels cannot be replevied, because defendants have destroyed, concealed, or sold such portion, the plaintiff may replevy that part of the property that can be found, and maintain a separate action to recover the value of that which had been thus severed, semble. Bennett v. Hood, 79 D. 705.

Where defendants have replevied property from a third person, and it has been delivered into their possession upon their giving a bond, plaintiff may replevin it out of their hands before the settlement of their suit with the third party, if plaintiff was not a party to that suit, as the property was not in the custody of the law. Hagan v. Dewell, 88 D. 769.

Replevin may be maintained by the maker to recover the possession of a promissory note which has been paid. Savery v. Hays, 89 D. 511.

One whose property has been replevied by a writ against his agent or his bailee can retake it by replevin from the plaintiff in the first action, even during the pendency of that action. White v. Dolliver, 18 R. 502.

9. What property is not repleviable. * — Replevin will not lie for property held by an officer by virtue of an execution. Spring v. Bourland, 54 D. 243; Kellogg v. Churchill, 9 D. 104; nor for specific chattels in a sheriff's custody under a lawful writ

* Replevin of property levied upon, under execution, see note, 9 D. 106-107.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

commanding him to seize and hold that identical property. Griffith v. Smith, 99 D. 90; nor for goods seized upon a warrant issued by an officer under the patrol law. Gist v. Cole, 10 D. 616; nor for goods taken on mesne process. Smith v. Huntington, 14 D. 331.

Replevin does not lie for property in the custody of the law, nor can cross-replevin be maintained. Hagan v. Deuell, 88 D. 769.

A defendant in replevin can not maintain replevin against the officer executing the first writ, on the ground that the property was not subject to seizure, for as to him the property is in the custody of the law. Dearmon v. Blackburn, 60 D. 160.

The principle that goods so taken are in custodia legis, and can not be replevied, applies only between the officer and the defendant from whose possession they are taken. Dunham v. Wyckoff, 20 D. 695.

It is an abuse of the process of the courts to use writs of replevin to procure the seizure and removal of property in a sheriff's hands under the order of the chancellor, and such writs form no justification or color of excuse for the act. Biggs v. Garrard, 44 D. 778.

Replevin does not lie for trees cut on land when the defendant was in possession under a claim of title. Snyder v. Faux, 21 D. 466; nor for crops severed by the person in possession of the land under claim of title, either at common law or under a statute enabling the owner of the land to maintain replevin for timber, lumber, coal, or "other property" severed therefrom. Renick v. Boyd, 44 R. 124; nor for a specific quantity of mineral ore, until such mineral has been converted from real into personal property by being severed from the earth. Knowlton v. Outter, 52 D. 156; nor for articles of dress or personal adornment upon the person of the defendant, without his consent, even though he wears them for the sole purpose of keeping them beyond the reach of legal process. Mazham v. Day, 77 D. 409.

A statute of Michigan providing that no replevin shall lie for any property taken by virtue of any warrant for the collection of any tax, assessment, or fine, in pursuance of any law of that state, must be construed as applying only to cases in which a valid tax might, by legal possibility, have been imposed and collected by regular and proper proceeding under some statute authority. Le Roy v. East Saginaw City R'y, 100 D. 162.

10. The necessary title or possession of plaintiff. — Replevin can not be maintained unless the plaintiff have, at the time of the taking, either the general or special property in the goods. Sanford Mfg. Co. v. Wiggins, 40 D. 198.

A person having neither possession nor right of possession cannot maintain replevin. Berthold v. Fox, 97 D. 243.

It is not sufficient for the plaintiff in replevin to have a clear legal title to the property in controversy, but he must also be entitled to the immediate possession in order to warrant a recovery. Britt v. Aylatt, 52 D. 282.

Replevin may be maintained by one having the right of possession, whether he has ever had possession or not, and whether his property in the goods be absolute or qualified. Harlan v. Harlan, 53 D. 612.

To maintain replevin, in Missouri, all that is necessary is to show actual possession, or the immediate right thereto in the plaintiff, and that the property was subsequently found in the hands of another without the plaintiff's consent. Crocker v. Mann, 26 D. 664.

Replevin for slates taken out of a quarry does not lie by one not in possession of the real estate against one in possession under a claim of right. Brown v. Caldwell, 13 D. 660.

A disseisor cannot maintain replevin for wheat which he has planted on the land, against the true owner, who re-enters on the land while the wheat is growing and takes actual and lawful possession of the land and of the wheat. Hooser v. Hays, 50 D. 540.

The delivery by an owner of goods, of a common carrier's receipt for them, not negotiable in its nature, as security for an advance of money, with the intention to transfer the property in the goods, is a symbolical delivery of them, and vests in the person making the advance a special property in the goods sufficient to maintain replevin against an officer who afterward attaches them upon a writ against the general owner. First Nat. Bank v. Dearborn, 15 R. 92.

Plaintiff leased wheat-land to defendant, defendant agreeing to pay as rent one-half the wheat-crop at the threshing time. When the wheat was threshed defendant delivered only one-third, retaining the remainder. Held, that plaintiff could not replevy the balance of wheat due him under the lease. Lacy v. Weaver, 19 R. 683.

II. PROCEDURE.

11. Demand before suit. — A party rightfully in possession of property belonging to another, does not unlawfully detain it, until after a demand by the true owner, and a refusal to deliver the possession. Galtin v. Bacon, 25 D. 258; Sargent v. Sturm, 83 D. 118.

Where the taking of the property is tortious, no demand is necessary. Galtin v. Bacon, 25 D. 258; Sargent v. Sturm, 83 D. 118.

Whoever takes the property of another, without his assent, express or implied, or without the assent of some one authorized to act in his behalf, takes it, in law, tortiously. Galsin v. Bacon, 25 D. 258.

The possession of property acquired by a person purchasing from a bailee, who has no authority to sell, is tortious, and the owner may maintain replevin therefor without demand or notice. Ib.

The owner of property may maintain replevin therefor without previous demand, where the person in charge of the property disposes of it without authority, and notwithstanding the property is in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, without notice of the real owner's title. Trudo v. Anderson, 81 D. 795.

A demand and refusal to deliver goods need not be proved in order to maintain replevin against one who obtained the goods by fraudulent means, or against his vendee, who purchased with knowledge thereof. Butters v. Haughwout, 89 D. 401; nor where the parties had stipulated that the goods should be sold and the proceeds paid over to the one entitled. Ib.

Proof of a demand and a refusal in replevin, where defendant came lawfully into possession, is not always necessary; for no demand and refusal are necessary in replevin for property wrongfully detained. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

Proof of a demand and notice in replevin for property wrongfully detained is but evidence of a wrongful detention, which is the material fact to be alleged in the complaint. Ib.

12. Who may sue. — It is not clear that a part of the defendants in an execution can replevy; but if a party do replevy, they will not be permitted to vacate the bond, on the ground that the other defendants are not obligors in it. Wilson v. King, 14 D. 84.

13. Parties defendant. — The owner of property may maintain replevin against a sheriff's vendee, although such action would not lie against the sheriff. Dodd v. McCraw, 46 D. 301.

The owner of goods carried by an express company may, after tendering the sum legally due for transportation, and demand and refusal, maintain replevin for the goods against the agent of the company who has them in custody. Boeleth v. Blossom, 92 D. 555.

Replevin does not lie against a creditor who has directed an attachment of goods not belonging to the debtor, either alone or jointly with the attaching officer, since the attached goods are in the legal custody and possession of the officer only. Richardson v. Reed, 64 D. 77.

Replevin cannot be maintained against a person who has no possession or control of the goods to be replevied. Ib.

The doctrine that an action lies against each of several co-trespassers, and that plaintiff may elect de melioribus dominis, does not permit that one, after obtaining a judgment in replevin against one trespasser, may afterwards sue the other for damages, or that he may afterwards maintain a joint action against both. Bennett v. Hood, 79 D. 705.

An officer, under a general promise of indemnity, but without direction from the execution creditor to levy upon any specified property, seized chattels in execution under a void judgment. In replevin against the officer and the execution creditor, it appearing that the latter never had possession of the goods, — held, that the action could not be maintained as to him. Grace v. Mitchell, 11 R. 613.

14. The affidavit. — The affidavit upon which a writ of replevin issues, if substantially in the language of the statute, is sufficient. Burton v. Curyen, 89 D. 350.

15. The bond or undertaking. — Property was levied on by a constable by virtue of an execution in his hands, and was afterward replevied by one claiming title thereto by purchase from the judgment debtor prior to the levy. The plaintiff in replevin gave an undertaking, in all respects according to law. Held, that on executing such undertaking, the right of possession, and all the interest which the constable had acquired by his levy, passed to and became vested in the plaintiff in replevin, even assuming that his alleged purchase was fraudulent and void as against creditors; and such right of possession and interest are paramount to any to be acquired by a subsequent levy, and if a subsequent levy is made, and the officer sells the property, such plaintiff in replevin has a remedy by action of replevin against the purchaser. Crittenden v. Lingle, 84 D. 370.

The Indiana code gives an action for recovery of possession of personal property which has been wrongfully taken or is unlawfully detained. The plaintiff need not ask for the immediate possession of the property, but may leave the possession to be determined by the final judgment, in which case the bond and affidavit required where an immediate delivery is claimed need not be filed. Catterlin v. Mitchell, 89 D. 501.

16. Custody of the property. — The delivery of the property under a writ of replevin to the plaintiff in an action entitles him, as against the defendant, to the right of possession pending the determination of the suit. Lowry v. Hall, 37 D. 495.

The person in possession of personal property may contest the right to it, without a redelivery thereof. Gray v. Allen, 45 D. 523.

In replevin the officer may take the property described in the writ from the possession of a stranger to whom it belongs, and he is justified by his writ; but the party in whose behalf the writ issued is answerable for the wrong done. Shipman v. Clark, 47 D. 264.

The execution of a replevin bond gives the right of possession to the defendant in a suit for certain premises in which a writ of sequestration has issued. Linard v. Crossland, 60 D. 213.

By the English law, if the defendant in replevin claims property in the goods or chattels described in the writ, the officer cannot lawfully deliver them to the plaintiff until the question of property has been determined in his favor on a writ of de proprietate probanda, sued out by him. In Massachusetts, the question of property is to be tried in the replevin suit. Willard v. Kimball, 87 D. 632.

Trespass is maintainable under the English law, against an officer serving a writ of replevin and delivering goods and chattels to the plaintiff, where the defendant in replevin claims property in them, and the plaintiff has sued out his right of de proprietate probanda. Ib.

When property is taken by plaintiff in replevin, and while in his possession pending the proceedings, it dies or is destroyed without his fault, he is not liable to defendant for its value in case of a verdict in favor of defendant. Bobo v. Patton, 19 R. 593.

17. Claim of property by third person. — After a claim of property interposed in replevin, the sheriff cannot remove the property even for safe keeping, or dispossess the defendant until such claim is tried. Lieher v. Pierson, 20 D. 612.

A writ de proprietate probanda is an inquest of office, and is always issued by the plaintiff upon a return of a claim of property, and the defendant cannot hasten his proceedings. Ib.

Property found for the claimant does not conclude the plaintiff, but he may sue out a new writ of replevin. Ib.

If the defendant remove or secrete the goods before the claim is tried, the plaintiff may have a capias in withernam and take other goods of the defendant in lieu thereof, which cannot be replevied until the original distress is returned. Ib.

In an action of trespass for taking away goods, where the defendant justifies the taking as sheriff, under a writ of replevin, and the plaintiff replies that the taking was after a claim of property by him, he must state precisely the time of making the claim. Ib.

The averment of a claim "at the said time," etc., referring to the time mentioned in the declaration, is bad on special demurrer. Ib.

The party whose goods are taken on a writ of replevin, in an action to which he is a stranger, has a remedy by action to recover for the goods taken. Shipman v. Clark, 47 D. 264.

An action cannot be maintained by the owner of goods against a sheriff, or his deputy personally, for taking such goods under a writ of replevin against another person having them in possession. Willard v. Kimball, 87 D. 632.

The failure of plaintiff in a replevin suit to maintain his action will not render the officer who served the writ liable in damages to the defendant, or to any other person who may have a claim to the replevied property. Ib.

The statute giving a third person a right to contest the title to property replevied before sheriff and jury does not prevent the party from resorting to any other remedy which the law gives him. The statutory remedy is not exclusive. Hagan v. Duell, 88 D. 769.

18. The writ. — Writs of replevin, in this state, issue out of the circuit court, as other writs do, and are there returnable; and the suit is docketed, proceeded in, set down for trial, and tried, agreeably to the laws and practice of the court, as other actions are. Daggett v. Robins, 21 D. 752.

To the regularity of the writ of replevin it is not essential that the bond should be fully certified thereon, or that it should disclose an impounding and distraining. Watson v. Watson, 23 D. 324.

A writ of replevin should contain such a description of the goods, on its face, as would enable the sheriff, with reasonable certainty, to distinguish them from other property of a like nature; and it should state not only the township in which the property was alleged to have been detained, but the particular place in the township, when the description of the place is necessary to identify and describe the property to be replevied. Stevens v. Osman, 48 D. 696.

A defect in a writ of replevin must be taken advantage of by special demurrer, as the description would be held sufficient after verdict; it would also be deemed sufficient if the defendant had avowed or pleaded property in himself, as there would then be no controversy between the parties as to what the goods were. Ib.

The value of the goods replevied need not be alleged in writ or declaration under the English law. Pomeroy v. Trimmer, 85 D. 714.

The value of the goods to be replevied need not be alleged in writ of replevin directed to a deputy sheriff. Such is the construction of the statutes of Massachusetts, and the law is understood to be the same in Maine. Ib.

Plaintiff's allegation of value in a writ of replevin to be served by a sheriff or his deputy has, when made, been held admissible against him in evidence of the value, but not to be conclusive evidence of the value of the property, even on the question of the juriadiction of the court; and it is not in any way binding on the defendant. Id.

The value of goods to be replevied ought, perhaps, to be alleged in a writ of replevin where it is served by a constable, because his authority to serve it is limited to cases in which the sheriff or his deputy is a party and the property does not exceed a certain value; and because his authority in specific cases must appear on the face of the writ. Id.

Describing an animal in a writ of replevin as a "heifer" and in certificate of appraisal as "a cow," is no ground for dismissing the writ, particularly where the description in the appraisal directly refers to the writ, and clearly identifies the animals replevied. Id.

Although an alias writ of replevin is unauthorized and invalid, yet where the plaintiff recovers judgment, and the subsequent proceedings up to the judgment must be sustained as in all respects in accordance with the statute, and the judgment is the same which would have been rendered had no alias writ issued, the defendant cannot complain. Mason v. Perrott, 97 D. 191.

19. Declaration. — The declaration in replevin must assert property in the plaintiff, either general or special, and an allegation that he was "entitled to the possession" is not enough. Pattison v. Adams, 42 D. 59.

The declaration in replevin must allege that goods taken are plaintiff's property, and that they were taken out of his possession. Luther v. Arnold, 62 D. 422.

In actions for a tort it is not in general sufficient to allege that the defendant injured or took divers goods and chattels of the plaintiff without giving a description of them; and this more particularly is necessary in replevin and detinue, for the reason that it is only in these forms of action that the goods themselves can be recovered. Stevens v. Osman, 48 D. 696.

The right of plaintiff to recover in replevin for one hundred bushels of wheat, which were measured out from a quantity in possession of the defendant, is not affected by the fact that he did not bring the suit for the whole, although the evidence showed that all the wheat belonged to him, and that he did not own as a tenant in common with others. Crouse v. Derbyshire, 82 D. 51.

The court will not presume in replevin that defendant came lawfully into possession, because it is not averred that he did so unlawfully, especially as against averments of title in the plaintiff and an unlawful detention by the defendant, all admitted by demurrer. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

20. Complaint. * — Place does not become material by being alleged in the complaint in an action of replevin, but may be stricken out as surplusage. Crocker v. Mann, 26 D. 684.

Replevin was commenced at common law by an original writ issued out of the court of chancery, and issued only at Westminster; and to remove the inconvenience of procuring the writ when required in a distant part of the kingdom, the statute of Marlbridge was passed, which dispensed with the original writ, and substituted a proceeding, upon a complaint made to the sheriff, which was called a "proceeding by plaint." Anderson v. Hapler, 85 D. 318.

"Plaint," in Illinois statute providing that replevin be commenced by plaint, has the same meaning that it had under the statute of Marlbridge, and signifies a complaint that the goods or chattels were wrongfully taken or are wrongfully detained, which is made by means of the affidavit required by the statute. Id.

A complaint, in an action under the code, to recover possession of personal property is sufficient, without any allegation of demand and refusal, where it merely alleges that the same is the property of the plaintiff, and that the defendant has become possessed of and wrongfully detains it. Oleson v. Merrill, 91 D. 428.

Under the allegation that defendant "wrongfully detains," plaintiff may prove, in an action under the code to recover possession of personal property, either a wrongful taking, a demand and refusal, or facts which render a demand necessary where the original taking was lawful. Proof of any facts showing that the property was wrongfully detained at the time of the commencement of the action will satisfy the allegation of the complaint, and entitle the plaintiff to recover. Id.

A description of property in the complaint in replevin as "one white shoat of the value of fourteen dollars," is sufficiently explicit. Onstott v. Ream, 95 D. 695.

21. Matters of defense. — Property in a stranger is pleadable in replevin. Marsh v. Pier, 26 D. 131.

A trespasser sowing wheat on land can not maintain replevin against the true owner, who enters into actual possession and cuts the grain. Therefore, in replevin brought for cutting grain sown by the plaintiff on land in his possession, evidence is admissible on the part of the defendant to show that he was the real owner of the land, and as such entered into possession and took the crop; and that the plaintiff was merely a trespasser. Elliott v. Powell, 36 D. 200.

A defendant in an action of replevin in this state may avail himself of a delivery to him of the same property pursuant to a writ of replevin issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction of another state, previously, while the parties to the action and

* Sufficiency of the description of the property in complaint, see note, 48 D. 696-699.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

the property in dispute were within the jurisdiction and subject to the law of the place of delivery. Lovry v. Hall, 37 D. 495.

A ministerial officer cannot defend under process fair upon its face alone, where the object of the action to which he is defendant, is, as in replevin, but to recover possession of the goods seized under the process: he must, in all such cases, in addition to the process, show by the production of a valid judgment, that the court which issued it had authority to do so. Beach v. Botsford, 40 D. 45.

Where a manufacturing corporation assigned its property to one of its creditors (who was also a stockholder, and whose individual property was liable to execution against the corporation), upon condition that he apply it toward the payment of his claim, and pay back any surplus to the corporation, if such property is seized under execution against the corporation as its property, in a suit by another creditor, and the former creditor and stockholder brings an action of replevin against the attaching officer, the latter cannot raise the question whether the property, although belonging to such creditor and stockholder, could be attached for the debt of the corporation, it having been seized as the property of the corporation. Sargent v. Webster, 46 D. 743.

The objection to the sufficiency of a plaint in replevin should be urged by motion to quash, and comes too late on the trial. Brown v. Keller, 83 D. 258.

That property is in the possession of a United States Marshal by virtue of process of a United States court, is an impregnable defense to an action of replevin for the same property in a state court. Booth v. Ableman, 84 D. 711.

A defendant in replevin who prevents an officer from delivering property replevied to plaintiff by attaching it upon a writ in his own favor, cannot object to the prosecution of the replevin on the ground of such non-delivery. Pomeroy v. Trimmer, 85 D. 714.

Where the plaintiff, in a writ of replevin, has caused the officer, to whom the writ was committed, to bring an action against the defendant and another officer for taking the replevied property out of his hands by writ of attachment, before its delivery to the plaintiff, such suit is between different parties and for a different cause, is no bar to the replevin suit, and is no ground for dismissing it. Id.

Where the plaintiff in a replevin suit has begun an action as executor against the defendant and his officer, for the conversion of the replevied property, and it fails to appear that the conversion relied upon is the same act for which the replevin is brought, it cannot affect the replevin suit. Id.

An action to recover the possession of personal property may be defeated by a showing that during the pendency of the action, and before a trial thereof, the defendant has been required to deliver, and has delivered, the property to a third person, entitled to its possession as against both plaintiff and defendant. Bolander v. Gentry, 95 D. 162.

22. Plea or answer. — The general issue in replevin admits the right of property to be in the plaintiff. Harper v. Baker, 16 D. 112.

Under the general plea of property without further special plea, evidence of a delivery to a defendant in an action of replevin, of the same property in a prior undetermined action in another state, may be received. Lovry v. Hall, 37 D. 495.

The general issue in an action of replevin is simply a denial of the taking, and admits the plaintiff's property in the thing taken. Sanford Mfg. Co. v. Wiggin, 40 D. 198.

Where an answer in replevin does not deny the value of the property alleged in the complaint evidence as to its value should not be admitted. Tully v. Harloe, 95 D. 102.

23. Plea in abatement. — The remedy where property in custodia legis has been replevied is not a motion to quash, especially where the writ has not been returned. The defense should interpose a plea in abatement or in bar. Hagan v. Deuell, 88 D. 769.

24. Non cepit. — The plaintiff in replevin must show an unlawful taking or detention to support the issue on his part under a plea of non cepit. Simpson v. McFarland, 29 D. 602.

Non cepit and property in another may be pleaded together in replevin. Id.

The plea of non cepit in replevin admits property in plaintiff, and takes issue on the caption and detention only. Mackinley v. McGregor, 31 D. 522.

25. Avowry. — The general issue and notice in replevin under the Massachusetts statute of 1836, c. 273, are equivalent to a common law avowry, or plea of property in another, with a suggestion of a return. Hoffman v. Noble, 39 D. 711.

26. Evidence, generally. — The defendant in replevin, under a plea of property in a stranger, may prove that a sale by such stranger, under which the plaintiff claims, was fraudulent. Quincy v. Hall, 11 D. 198.

Evidence that the property was taken by force, may be given in an action of replevin, to enhance the damages, although issue is joined on the question of ownership. Moore v. Shenk, 45 D. 618.

The plaintiff in replevin may prove, in mitigation, as the defendant in trespass may, a return of the property, or a part of it, to the defendant after the suit was commenced and before judgment. Booth v. Ableman, 88 D. 730.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

In mitigation of damages, payments on a judgment under which the officer had seized goods on execution, though made after the commencement of a replevin suit against the officer to recover the same, should be admitted in evidence for the plaintiff in that suit. But it seems that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to prove the payment of the judgment after the suit was commenced, in bar of the defendant's right of recovery. Id.

A plaintiff in replevin who has obtained possession of the property under the statute, and against whom the defendant seeks judgment for a return of it, or the value in case a return cannot be had, may show that the value is less than that alleged in the complaint, although the answer does not deny such alleged value. Jenkins v. Steenka, 88 D. 675.

Evidence as to the kind or quality of lumber in dispute is admissible for plaintiff in replevin as a means of showing its value, and also as bearing upon the question of ownership, where there is a contest over lumber from two different mills, and there is a great difference in the quality. Id.

The receipt by a bailee, acknowledging the ownership of a general owner in property bailed, is admissible as part of the res gesta, in an action of replevin brought by the latter for the property after the bailee has wrongfully transferred it to another. Burton v. Curyea, 89 D. 350.

27. Burden of proof. — The onus of proof is not thrown on defendant by a plea of property in replevin, and therefore he is not entitled to commence and conclude the argument. Marsh v. Pier, 26 D. 131; Turner v. Cool, 85 D. 449.

The plaintiff in replevin, to recover, must prove that he was entitled to the possession of the property in controversy at the commencement of the action. Alden v. Carver, 81 D. 430.

The burden of proof is upon defendant to prove the amount before he can have judgment in replevin for the value of the property and damages for its detention, where his answer in the replevin suit alleges that he holds the goods as marshal or sheriff under an execution, etc., but does not show the amount of the execution. Booth v. Ableman, 88 D. 730.

28. Trying question of title. * — Title to realty may be tried, incidentally, in replevin or other transitory action. Elliot v. Powell, 36 D. 200; Harlan v. Harlan, 53 D. 612.

Where in an action of replevin the issue made is the question, in general terms, of the claimant's right of property in the goods, and the only pleading before the court at that time is the claimant's answer, in which he does not plead his title or inform the opposing party or court on what title he intends to rely to maintain his claim to the property, but afterwards relies on a trust deed for that purpose, the opposing party must be allowed to impeach the validity of such deed. Linn v. Wright, 70 D. 282.

After the conveyance of land on which was a growing crop, the crop was taken under an execution against the grantor. In an action of replevin by the grantee against the sheriff, — held, that the latter might show that the conveyance was made to defraud the grantor's creditors. Pierce v. Hill, 24 R. 541.

29. Instructions. — Evidence of ownership in replevin, being a disputed fact, is for the jury, and the court cannot instruct them that the evidence shows title in one of the parties. McDonald v. Scaife, 51 D. 556.

An instruction, "if you believe from the evidence that the property in question was plaintiff's, you must find the defendant guilty," given to the jury in an action of replevin, is technically erroneous in not embracing proof of a demand; but where the record shows clear proof of demand before suit, and the evidence sustains the verdict, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment. Jarrard v. Harper, 92 D. 84.

30. The verdict of finding. — The jury is authorized to assess the value of property in all cases, under sect. 11, chapter 132, Wisconsin Revised Statutes, where they find that the defendant in replevin is entitled to a return, whether he waives it or not. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 82 D. 689.

The verdict in replevin, "we, the jury, find the defendant guilty," is not precisely right; but the finding is equivalent to a finding of property in the plaintiff in a case where the proceedings were ore tenus. Jarrard v. Harper, 92 D. 84.

A verdict for the plaintiff in replevin transfers title to defendant, it seems, on a plea of property and retention by the defendant. Herdic v. Young, 93 D. 739.

31. Recovery of value of property sued for. — The jury are to assess the full value of goods in replevin where the pleadings and evidence show that the party recovering is the general owner, or is a bailee, and connects himself with the general owner. Booth v. Ableman, 88 D. 730.

The jury are to find only the value of the party's interest who recovers in replevin if the pleadings and evidence show that he has only a special interest in the property, and that the general property is in the other party. Id.

Where property is replevied from a sheriff or marshal who holds it under execution, and who has only the execution creditor's interest in it, the value of the officer's interest is the amount of the execution, with interest and costs thereon; and should he recover, the amount of his recovery will be limited to this amount, where the value of the property is greater than the amount of the execution. Id.

32. Recovery of damages in lieu of possession.—In an action of replevin the jury may give such damages as they think the plaintiff is justly entitled to, as an equivalent for the injury sustained. Dorsey v. Gassaway, 3 D. 557.

The measure of defendant's damages in action of replevin, in the absence of evidence of fraud, malice, negligence, or oppression, is the value of the property at the time it was replevied by the plaintiff, with interest to the time of the trial. Berthold v. Fox, 97 D. 243; McDonald v. Scaife, 51 D. 556.

Damages, where the property levied upon is replevied from the sheriff, and the verdict is for the defendant, will be the amount of the execution, with interest and costs, if the value of the property exceed such amount; and if it be less, the damages will be for the full value of the property. Jennings v. Johnson, 49 D. 451; Swcliffe v. Dohrman, 51 D. 450.

The measure of damages in replevin may be less than the value of the property in a proper case, as it may go beyond the value to compensate for injustice and outrage. Herdie v. Young, 93 D. 739.

The measure of damages in replevin for logs cut from an adjoining tract through a bona fide mistake as to the boundary line, and transported to a boom, is the value of the logs at the boom, less the cost of cutting, hauling, and driving them there. Id.

In replevin of property having a usable value (as a horse) the value of its use, during the time of detention, is a proper item of damages. Allen v. Fox, 10 R. 641.

Where the defendant in replevin puts it out of officer's power to execute the writ and deliver the property to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may proceed in the cause, and recover damages for the full value of the property as well as for the detention. Pomeroy v. Trimmer, 85 D. 714.

Replevin sounds in damages as trespass; and, it seems, exemplary damages may be given where there has been outrage in the taking, or vexation and oppression in the detention. Herdie v. Young, 93 D. 739; McDonald v. Scaife, 51 D. 556.

33. When defendant is entitled to a return of property replevied.—In replevin by a mortgagee against a mortgagor of chattels, where the mortgage was not recorded in the proper county, and the goods have been attached by a creditor of the mortgagor, the defendant, upon a judgment of non-suit, because no wrongful taking or detention was shown, cannot have a return of the property awarded, he not being entitled to the possession against the mortgagee, nor liable to the attaching officer. Simpson v. McFarland, 29 D. 602.

A defendant cannot have judgment for a return of the property where he prevails under a plea of non cap in replevin, but he may have a return awarded where he pleads property in himself or another. Id.

The consignee of goods is entitled to a judgment for their return in replevin brought against him by one who claims that they were obtained from him by the consignor by a fraudulent purchase, where such consignee has made advances in good faith, without notice, on the credit of the goods, and a verdict is accordingly returned in his favor, although he has, since the trial commenced, collected the amount of an acceptance belonging to an agent of the consignor deposited with him, by such agent, as collateral security for the same advances, until the arrival and approval of the goods, under an agreement with the agent that if the consignee is not satisfied with the goods on arrival he may require the agent to pay him his advances and commissions and take back the goods and acceptance. Hoffman v. Noble, 39 D. 711.

Where the writ commanding an officer to replevy a certain number of barrels of mackerel is, with the assent of the defendant, executed by taking in part two half-barrels as equivalent to one barrel, the defendant cannot claim a return thereof on the ground that the officer seized property not described in his writ. Gardaer v. Lane, 85 D. 779.

One co-tenant cannot maintain replevin against the other for the common property. And where he brings such action against his co-tenant, and fails on that ground, the defendant is entitled to a judgment for the return of the property. Witham v. Witham, 99 D. 787.

34. The judgment and how entered.—A general judgment for damages in replevin said to be good without otherwise specifying the value of the property sued for. Marsh v. Pier, 26 D. 131.

Under the Texas statute, in order to render judgment in an action of replevin, it is essential that the value of the property should be ascertained, and the sheriff is required to assess its value when taking the bond required of the claimant. This estimate may be acquiesced in by the parties to the suit, and taken as the true value for the purpose of rendition and enforcement of judgment, but it has never been held that the estimate of value thus made was conclusive upon the parties. Lean v. Wright, 70 D. 282.

The judgment in replevin against one or two joint takers for a portion of chattels taken and nominal damages, under which all the property is recovered, some of it,

* Damages, what may be recovered as, see note, 22 R. 284-287.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

however, in a damaged condition, is a bar to a subsequent action against both takers for further damages for the taking and detention. Bennett v. Hood, 79 D. 706.

The defendant in replevin may waive the return of property and take judgment for its value alone, in Wisconsin, where the plaintiff has obtained possession of the property, and the jury find the defendant entitled to possession. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 82 D. 689.

35 — and how enforced. — An execution issued to enforce a judgment for the return of property in replevin, or its value, may not be resisted upon the ground that the property has been destroyed by the act of God. De Thomas v. Witherby, 44 R. 542.

36. Suing out second writ after judgment. — After a judgment in replevin against a defendant, he cannot sue out another writ of replevin to prevent execution against himself, and to procure a restoration of the property to himself; and if such second writ is issued, the court will, on application, supersede the writ if it be not returned, or set it aside as irregularly issued if it is returned. Tison v. Bowden, 71 D. 101.

III. REMEDIES UPON REPLEVIN BONDS.

37. Validity of the instrument. — A plaintiff in an action of replevin, when he succeeds on the issue of property, recovers the whole in damages, and a condition in a bond given by the defendant, to return the property to the plaintiff if it should be so adjudged, is void. Moore v. Shank, 45 D. 618.

Defendants executed a bond for the purpose of procuring a writ of replevin, which bond a justice of the peace approved and thereupon issued a writ of replevin for certain property in plaintiff's possession, and which he claimed to own. The property was taken under the writ. The value of the property exceeded the amount for which the justice of the peace had jurisdiction, and on the hearing of the cause the justice dismissed the proceedings on that ground, and directed a return of the property to the plaintiff. The defendants' refusing to return the property, this action was brought upon the bond. Held, that the justice, not having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the bond was void and no action could be maintained thereon, and that the defendants were not estopped by the recitals in the bond. Caffrey v. Dudgeon, 10 R. 126.

38. Right to proceed upon the bond. — An execution is not an execution upon a judgment in replevin, so that upon its return unsatisfied an action upon the replevin bond can be maintained, where after judgment for the defendant in replevin for the value of the property, the execution is issued in form in assumpsit, and purporting to be issued in favor of a plaintiff. Williams v. Vail, 80 D. 76.

39. Matters of defense. — Giving a bond conditioned to return the property replevied will preclude defendant from asserting that less property was replevied than is described in the bond. Kearles v. Lord, 34 D. 525.

40. Amount recoverable. — The measure of damages in an action on a replevin bond is the amount of judgment recovered in the replevin suit, when a return of the property is waived and a judgment for its value obtained, in accordance with the statute; and the damages cannot be reduced by showing that the plaintiff in the action on the bond was but a part owner of the property. Williams v. Vail, 80 D. 76.

A judgment in an action against the sureties on a replevin bond cannot be given for more than the penalty and costs. Interest is not recoverable. Fraser v. Little, 87 D. 741.

RESISTING OFFICERS.

Right to resist wrongful arrest, see ARREST, 23.

1. Jurisdiction. — An assault on and resistance to an officer acting in the execution of his powers as such, is an offense indictable at common law. State v. Downer, 30 D. 482.

An offender may be proceeded against as at common law, though a statute has superadded to the offense a higher penalty. Id.

2. What constitutes the offense. — No one is justified in resisting an officer acting under process that he is legally authorized to obey. State v. McNally, 56 D. 650.

3. Indictment. — An indictment for impeding an officer in his execution of civil process must show the nature of the process, so far that the court may see whether it was legal, and that the officer had authority to serve it, and the mode of resistance should be set out, as also that in which the process was attempted to be executed, and it must also appear from it that the persons impeding the officer knew of the character in which he acted. State v. Downer, 30 D. 482.

An indictment for knowingly and wilfully resisting an officer need not aver that the officer informed defendant at the time that he acted under the authority of a warrant. It is not necessary that the indictment should set forth the acts of the officer at length, or show that in making the arrest he complied in all respects with the requisites of the statute. State v. Freeman, 74 D. 317.

The time of the commission of the offense of resisting an officer in the execution of legal process is immaterial, and need not be proved as laid in an indictment; and where it is alleged under a videâcet, it is nugatory, and not traversable, and if repugnant to the fact, it does not vitiate the indictment, but the evidence itself may be rejected as surplusage. Id.

4. Matters of defense.—An officer seizing under attachment property not that of the defendant, cannot lawfully resisted by the real owner, if he had at the time reasonable cause to believe the property to be that of the defendant in the attachment suit; and did, under such belief, attempt the seizure in good faith. State v. Downer, 30 D. 482.

An officer is protected in the service of process, and a person resisting him is liable, notwithstanding errors or irregularities in issuing the process, where it is regular and legal in its frame, and appears to have been issued by a magistrate having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of the respondent. State v. Weed, 53 D. 188.

An officer is not to be governed by motives and designs of complainant, in executing criminal process regular and legal upon its face, and he will be protected, although the complainant's objects are illegal, and so known to be by the officer. Id.

An officer is presumed, in serving writ, to have discharged his duty, and if a party who resists an officer relies on the fact that he omitted to declare the authority under which he acted, that is a proper matter of defense. State v. Freeman, 74 D. 317.

The owner of personal property has no right to resist an officer who attempts in good faith to attach it upon process against a third person, although such resistance be necessary to protect the property from being taken by the officer. State v. Richardson, 75 D. 173.

It is no defense to an indictment for resisting an officer in serving a writ of attachment that the property did not belong to the individual against whom the process was issued, but to the defendant, who made only sufficient resistance to prevent his property from being taken into the officer's custody. Id.

The unlawful omission of an officer to make a subsequent complaint against a person, whom he has lawfully arrested without a warrant, is no defense to an indictment of the person for assaulting the officer in resisting the arrest. Com. v. Tobin, 11 R. 375.

REVENUE.

[Includes state court decisions relative to the collection of duties on imports, and the administration and operation of the internal revenue laws.]

I. DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

II. INTERNAL REVENUE.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

I. DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

1. Collection of. — Giving of additional securities for payment of duties does not relieve the importer from his personal liability; nor will the unauthorized and illegal removal of the goods from the custody of the custom house officers discharge him. United States v. Murdock, 89 D. 651.

2. Actions to recover of purchaser, sum paid for duties. — The act of Congress of 1864, chapter 163, section 94, which authorizes persons who before its enactment had made contracts without other provision therein for the payment of duties subsequently imposed on articles to be delivered under them, to recover from the purchaser a sum equivalent to the duties so imposed if the same had not been previously paid by him, is constitutional; and such sum may be sued for and recovered in either a federal or state court. Amnidown v. Freeland, 3 R. 359.

3. — to recover back duties paid under protest. — Where a collector levied a tonnage duty illegally, and the same was paid compulsorily, — held, he was liable to refund the amount, notwithstanding he had paid over the money to the government, and no notice was given him not to pay over the money so collected. Ripley v. Gelston, 6 D. 271.

II. INTERNAL REVENUE.

4. Officers of internal revenue. — A collector of an internal revenue district, under the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, is the recognized agent of the government, and is responsible to the government and to individuals for all money collected and all acts done by his deputy collectors, who are the agents of the collector, and are responsible to him, and not to the government or individuals, and he may or may not, as he pleases, take security from the deputies for the faithful discharge of their duties. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

5. Official bonds, and liability of sureties. — The bond of a deputy collector of internal revenue, executed before the passage of the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864, covered all taxes assessed and collected under the previous act of July 1, 1862, whether the same were collected before or after the act of June 30, 1864; and whether it extended to taxes collected under the latter act is a question not material in this case as between the sureties and the obligee of the bond, since the sureties on this bond, and those on a bond executed after the passage of the latter act, have themselves settled the matter of the appropriation of the payments to be made, by their indorsements on the bonds of the sums agreed upon, and have provided, by their concurrent agreement, for the final adjustment of their respective liabilities upon them. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

Sureties on the bond of a deputy collector of internal revenue are not relieved from liability because of the collector's failure to discharge him immediately upon the discovery of his defalcation, especially where the sureties suffered no detriment by his continuance in office. Nothing less than fraud, actual or constructive, on the part of the collector could relieve them from their responsibility. Id.

It is fraud on the sureties of a deputy collector of internal revenue, and they are discharged from liability, if the collector consents to his using the public money in his private business of buying and speculating in grain, wherefrom a defalcation on his part results. Id.

The offices of collector and deputy collector of internal revenue, as created by the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, are continued under the act of June 30, 1864, by virtue of the saving clauses of that act, which exclude from the operation of the repealing clause the provisions of the former statute creating the offices; and the bonds given by such officers in qualifying under the former act are continued in full force and effect under the latter act, and it was not necessary for either of them to give a new bond after the passage of the latter act. Id.

The giving of a bond by a collector of internal revenue is not a condition precedent to his authority to exercise the powers and perform the duties of his office under either act of Congress relative to the collection of internal revenue; but the provision in question is merely directory to the proper officer of the treasury department, and a bond may be required or waived at his discretion. It is intended solely for the security of the government, and constitutes no part of the contract of the sureties of the deputy collector, and his not giving a bond can in no way affect their responsibility. Id.

6. Taxation of distillers and brewers. — The fixtures and furniture of a tenant of a distillery upon which the United States had a lien, were sold under an execution issued on a judgment obtained against him by a creditor in a state court. Held, that the property was not sold subject to the lien, but the lien was to be first discharged. The lien of the United States on the proceeds is superior to that of the judgment creditor or of the landlord for rent. Dungan's Appeal, 8 R. 169.

7. — of other occupations and commodities. — Molasses manufactured from sorghum is a subject of taxation, under the United States internal revenue acts of July 1, 1862, and June 30, 1864. Pickering v. Day, 95 D. 291.

8. Stamps, and effect of omission to affix them. — 1. In general. — The failure to properly cancel United States revenue stamps affixed to an instrument does not render it invalid or incapable of being introduced in evidence. D'Armond v. Deboe, 2 R. 718.

The provisions in the United States Statutes of 1866, chapter 184, section 9, that no instrument, not duly stamped as required by law, shall be admitted or used in evidence in any court until a legal stamp shall have been affixed thereto, applies only to the courts of the United States. Green v. Hobay, 3 R. 339.

United States internal revenue stamps are exempt from all state and local taxation. Paifrey v. City of Boston, 3 R. 364.

A deputy collector has no power to remit penalties and stamp instruments that have been left unstamped by inadvertence or mistake, except when he acts by special authority from the collector. City of Muscatine v. Sterneman, 6 R. 635.

2. What instruments must be stamped.—An ad valorem stamp is not required on a deed reforming the description in a prior deed of the same premises. A stamp affixed to such deed as a contract or agreement is sufficient. Greve v. Coffin, 100 D. 229.

Congress has no power to impose a stamp tax upon official bonds given to a state by its officers. State v. Garton, 2 R. 315.

The provisions of the act of Congress of June 30, 1864, requiring stamps upon written instruments, apply to bonds given by state and municipal officers on entering upon their official duties. City of Muscatine v. Sterneman et al., 6 R. 685.

Congress has no authority to impose a stamp duty on certificates of sale of lands for taxes, and where a stamp is placed upon such certificate and is included in the amount for which the land was sold, the sale is void. Barden v. Columbia County, 14 R. 762.

The United States internal revenue laws were not in operation in the Confederate States during the war. It was therefore unnecessary to stamp promissory notes to give them validity. McIlwain v. Mudd, 4 R. 106.

3. Omission of the stamp.—The internal revenue act of June 30, 1864, prohibiting unstamped instruments from being received in evidence, does not apply to state courts. Therefore an omission, without fraudulent intent, to stamp a promissory note, does not render it void. Bumpass v. Taggart, 7 R. 623; Green v. Hobay, 3 R. 339; Dailey v. Coker, 7 R. 279; Burson v. Huntington, 4 R. 497; Duffy v. Hobson, 6 R. 617; Davis v. Richardson, 7 R. 732; Sammons v. Halloway, 4 R. 465. So held in the case of an unstamped chattel mortgage. Moore v. Quirk, 7 R. 499; and in the case of an unstamped deed of real estate. Moore v. Moore, 7 R. 466.

A written agreement not stamped as required by law—held, not admissible in evidence in a state court. Chartiers etc. Co. v. McNamara, 13 R. 673; City of Muscatine v. Sterneman, 6 R. 685.

A promissory note not stamped in accordance with the United States revenue laws may, in the absence of fraud, be stamped at the trial of an action on the note, and then given in evidence. Mere omission to stamp a note is not evidence of fraudulent intent. Morris v. McMorris, 7 R. 696.

When a promissory note for $120, made June 20, 1865, and bearing only a five-cent internal revenue stamp, was offered in evidence,—held, 1. That such note is not invalid under the internal revenue act, approved March 3, 1865, unless the proper stamp was omitted to evade the provisions of such act; 2. That such note is admissible in evidence, and that the provisions of the act of Congress, approved July 13, 1866, were intended to be prospective, and not retrospective, and apply only to instruments issued after such act took effect. Rhelnstrom v. Cone, 7 R. 48.

Where a certificate of deposit is inadmissible for want of a stamp, parol evidence is admissible to prove the facts it recites. Leach v. Hale, 7 R. 112.

It is not within the constitutional power of Congress to declare that a contract or conveyance between citizens of a state, affecting real estate, is void, for the reason that a revenue stamp has been omitted. Moore v. Moore, 7 R. 466.

The clause in the United States internal revenue act, providing that instruments not stamped as therein required shall not be recorded, does not affect the recording of such instruments under state laws. Moore v. Quirk, 7 R. 499.

9. Penalties for violation of internal revenue laws.—Under the United States statutes of 1862, ch. 119, § 31, or 1864, ch. 173, § 41, an informer cannot sue an internal revenue collector, in a state court, for a share of a penalty paid to the collector, unless the penalty has been recovered by a judgment of a United States court. If a penalty is paid by compromise or agreement, before final judgment, neither of these statutes gives an informer any share therein. Rice v. Thayer, 7 R. 516.

REWARDS.

[Includes the validity and effect of an offer of compensation for services to be rendered by any person who may accept such offer and render such services; and the enforcement of such offer by action.]

1. Offers of, who liable on.—A United States marshal who offers a reward for the arrest of a fugitive from justice, and signs the instrument as "U. S. marshal," acts as a principal, and is liable as such. Murray v. Kennedy, 77 D. 189.

An action lies against a town to recover a reward offered under the provisions of a general statute. Jasaris v. Town of Exeter, 2 R. 185.

Any person may bind himself by a public offer of a reward for the arrest of a criminal offender, whether the offer is oral or otherwise. Hayden v. Souger, 26 R. 1.

2. Offer and acceptance a contract.* —The offer of a reward for the detection of an offender, the recovery of property, and the like, is an offer or proposal on the part of the person making it to all persons, which any one capable of performing the service may accept at any time before it is revoked, and perform the service; and such offer on one side, and acceptance and performance on the other, is a valid contract made on good consideration, which the law will enforce. Ryer v. Stockwell, 73 D. 634.

An advertisement offering a reward for certain information, upon its being furnished, becomes a written contract, against which the statute does not run for four years. Id.

3. Notice of acceptance of offer. —A. offered to give $5,000 to any person who would bring the body of his wife from a burning building, dead or alive. B., a paid member of the fire department, on the faith of the offer, and at great personal peril, but without notice of acceptance of the offer brought the dead body from the building. Held, that he was entitled to the reward. Reif v. Paigs, 42 R. 731.

* When advertisement offering reward may become a contract, see note, 73 D. 638, 639.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

4. When earned. — An offer of a reward by public advertisement is to be regarded as a conditional promise. Whoever would entitle himself to the reward must prove that he has performed substantially the service proposed in the advertisement, though it need not be performed literally. Bess v. Dyer, 85 D. 747.

One who gives to the owners of stolen property, who have offered a reward for its recovery and the detection of the thief, information by which, with reasonable diligence on their part, they are enabled to recover the property and detect the thief, is entitled to the reward, although he does nothing further to aid in the recovery of the property and the conviction of the thief. Id.

Where a reward is offered for such information as will be sufficient to convict a criminal, a claim to the reward does not attach until the prisoner has been convicted, as the sufficiency of the information can only be determined by the event of the trial. The statute of limitations runs from this time. Ryer v. Stockwell, 73 D. 634.

To entitle one to a reward offered for "apprehension and conviction" of a criminal, his services must have been instrumental in procuring both the apprehension and conviction. Fitch v. Snedaker, 97 D. 791.

Defendant offered a reward for the "capture and conviction" of each of certain criminals. Plaintiff captured two of them who confessed their guilt: but the indictments against them were dismissed at the solicitation of the defendants' attorneys, in order to use them as witnesses against the others. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the reward. Louisville and N. R. R. Co. v. Goodnight, 19 R. 80.

The defendant, a detective officer, knowing that M. had wrongful possession of plaintiff's watch, offered to recover it for $50, which plaintiff agreed to pay. Meantime M. sent the watch by express to plaintiff. The defendant however arrested M., and thus compelled him to recall the watch before delivery. Held, that defendant had no right to compensation, or lien on the watch therefor. Hoffman v. Barthelmess, 36 R. 129.

5. Performance in ignorance of offer. — To claim a reward for the arrest of a person there must have been a contract, i. e., an agreement on the one side to give, and on the other to receive, and there could be no such agreement if the arrest was made in ignorance that a reward was offered. Stamper v. Temple, 44 D. 296; Fitch v. Snedaker, 97 D. 791.

One who gives information before a reward is offered, which leads to the arrest of a criminal for whose "apprehension and conviction" a reward was afterwards offered, is not entitled to the reward, although in addition thereto he was active in assisting the prosecuting officers, and in procuring evidence in the hope of earning such reward. Fitch v. Snedaker, 97 D. 791.

An offer of reward for the arrest and conviction of a criminal relates to information thereafter to be given, and is not a promise to reward any person for past information gratuitously given. Id.

An action will not lie to recover a reward offered for the finding of lost property by one who found the property without knowing of the offer. Howland v. Lounds, 10 R. 654.

The plaintiff recovered property stolen from the defendant and returned it to him. Defendant handed him some money, saying "here is something for what you have done." Plaintiff did not, at the time, look at the money, but afterward found it to be $2. Defendant had on that morning offered a reward of $50 for a recovery of the property, of which fact plaintiff was at the time ignorant, but for which he brought this action. Held, that he could not recover. Martin v. Treat, 9 R. 307.

6. Revocation of offer. — In case of an advertisement offering a reward, until performance the offer is a proposal merely, and not a contract, and may be revoked at the pleasure of him who made it. Ryer v. Stockwell, 73 D. 634.

7. Rights of finder of lost property.* — Where a reward was offered by public advertisement for the recovery of lost bank bills, — held, that the finder of a part was entitled to a pro rata part of the reward offered. Symmes v. Frasier, 4 D. 142.

A person finding the property of another has no right to a reward from the owner; he is only entitled to be paid his necessary expenses in its preservation. Amory v. Flynn, 6 D. 316.

The finder of lost property has a lien thereon for the amount of the reward offered by the loser for its restoration, and he may retain possession thereof until the reward is paid. Wentworth v. Day, 37 D. 145.

The discovery of an article voluntarily laid down by the owner in a banking-house, and upon a desk provided for the use of such persons having business there, is not the finding of a lost article, entitling the person discovering it to a reward offered to the finder. Kincaid v. Eaton, 93 D. 142.

8. Who may sue for a reward.† — If a promise is made to any one who shall do a certain thing, the person doing it is entitled to the benefit of the promise. Bull v. Talbot, 1 D. 62.

An informer is entitled to recover a reward offered for stolen goods, unless it is found that he had possession of the goods, knowing them to be stolen, before the offer of the reward; or that he was connected with the alleged felony, either as a participator in the felonious taking or in the concealing of the stolen goods. Jenkins v. Keen, 74 D. 596.

The selectmen of a town, under the authority of a general statute, offered a reward for the apprehension and conviction of a person guilty of the commission of a high crime. The plaintiff, claiming to have performed that service, brought action to recover the reward. Held, on demurrer, that the action was well brought. Janerin v. Town of Exeter, 2 R. 186.

In an action for a reward, — held, that if two persons jointly perform the service, they must be joined as plaintiffs. Id.

In a proceeding to compel the payment of a reward offered by a governor for the apprehension of a fugitive from justice, the defense set up that before said reward was offered the plaintiff had apprehended the fugitive, and that said fugitive had been delivered and was in jail when the proclamation of the reward was delivered to the public printer for publication; that, on learning these facts, the proclamation was withdrawn, and that the plaintiff did not know, when he apprehended and delivered the fugitive, that a reward had been offered. Held, 1. That when the proclamation was signed and entered on the executive journal the offer was complete, and that those acts amounted to a publication; 2. That as the evidence was not clear that the delivery to the jailer was made before such signing and delivery, the plaintiff could recover. Auditor v. Ballard, 15 R. 278.

A public officer, whose compensation is fixed by law, cannot recover a reward for services rendered within the scope of his official duties. Matter of Russell, 50 R. 55.

A deputy sheriff making an arrest in the line of his duty, and when sent by the principal sheriff to attend to it in his stead, cannot, as a matter of public policy, be entitled to claim a reward offered for such arrest. Stamper v. Temple, 44 D. 296; but the rule is otherwise where a sheriff was acting outside the line of his official duty, and in reliance upon a reward offered. Davis v. Munson, 5 R. 315.

A promise of reward to a constable for arresting a criminal is without consideration. The duty of the constable is to do so without reward. Smith v. Whilden, 49 D. 572; Hayden v. Souger, 26 R. 1. Otherwise as to a special constable, holding a warrant directed simply to any constable of a county, and who in like manner and with the like reliance makes the arrest; and any special constable may maintain an action to recover the reward jointly with others who assisted in the arrest. Hayden v. Souger, 26 R. 1.

A police officer cannot stipulate for extra compensation nor take a reward for services rendered within the duties of his office, and for which he receives a stated salary. Kick v. Merry, 66 D. 658.

One cannot recover a reward where his acts were performed with knowledge of the offer of a reward, but without any intention of claiming it. Hewitt v. Anderson, 38 R. 65.

9. Matters of defense. — In an action to recover a reward offered in an advertisement for the arrest and conviction of one who set fire to a certain house, such conviction having been effected, it cannot be urged that the agreement was a nude pact, the services being such as any good citizen is bound to perform. Plaintiff put himself to extraordinary trouble to procure the conviction, which it can hardly be said every good citizen is bound to do. Ryer v. Stockwell, 73 D. 634.

Where an offer of a reward is made in a newspaper without authority, the alleged promisor is not estopped from denying his liability, although he knew of the publication and did not object to it. Hugill v. Kinney, 42 R. 801.

RIGHT (WRIT OF).

1. Title necessary in demandant.*

— The demandant in a writ of right may recover under title by disseisin, unless the tenant can show a better title. Hunt v. Hunt, 37 D. 130.

The demandant in a writ of right may recover the proportionate interest to which he shows title, although less in extent than his writ demands. Shaefer v. Gates, 38 D. 164.

2. Plea. — Darrein seisin is a good plea in a writ of right. Hunt v. Hunt, 37 D. 130.

RIOT: UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

Calling out militia in cases of, see MILITIA, 7.

1. What constitutes.† — Where numbers unlawfully combine to disturb another in the enjoyment of a lawful right, the act is a riot. Com. v. Runnels, 6 D. 148.

An assembly summoned by a constable to execute lawful process is not an unlawful assembly, and the persons assembling are not indictable for riot, though they use oppressive and abusive means in its execution. State v. Stakcup, 35 D. 732.

Under a statute making violent and tumultuous conduct by three or more persons a riot, persons conducting a charivari or serenade with bells, horns, tin pans, guns, etc., are guilty of a riot. State v. Brown, 35 R. 210.

2. Indictment. — It is sufficient if an indictment for a riot charge that the defendants unlawfully assembled "with force and arms," and being so assembled committed the act, without repeating the words "force and arms," as they apply to every distinct allegation. Com. v. Kunnels, 6 D. 143.

If an unlawful act is charged in the indictment to have been committed, it is unnecessary to allege that it was done in terrorem populi, but where the defendants went about armed without committing any act then that allegation is necessary. Id.

Where, on indictment for riot against the defendant and two others named, with "divers other persons, to wit, to the number of five," without alleging that the five others were unknown, or setting out their names, the grand jury find a true bill only against the defendant and one other, to which the defendant pleads guilty, judgment must be arrested. State v. McDonald, 10 D. 591.

An indictment for riot need not allege that the defendants riotously fought through and with each other. It is sufficient if it charge that defendants, with force and arms, unlawfully and riotously assembled and gathered themselves together to disturb the peace of the state, and being so assembled, then and there made a great noise, disturbance, riot, and tumult, and then and there unlawfully, riotously, etc., remained and continued together, making such noise, riot, tumult, and disturbance for the space of, etc. State v. Dillard, 35 D. 128.

An indictment for riot must aver that defendants unlawfully assembled, and this averment, as well as the subsequent riotous acts of the defendants, must be proved on the trial. State v. Stalcup, 35 D. 732.

3. Conviction and punishment. — In an indictment for a riot, if one of several be convicted, and the others are not yet arrested, he is subject to punishment, although the others may afterward be acquitted, because he is estopped by the verdict to deny his guilt. State v. Pugh, 2 D. 621.

Rout and riot are kindred offenses, and a general verdict of guilty under an indictment for riot is sufficient though the evidence establishes only rout; and rout will be established by showing the preparation for battle, and staking money upon the issue of a prize fight. State v. Sumner, 42 D. 357.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

[Includes the rights and liabilities of the owners of land bordering on the sea, or on rivers, creeks, lakes, ponds, etc., as respects the banks or shore, the water, and the land under the water. Other titles analogous to this are FISHING; MILLS, NAVIGATION, WATERCOURSES.]

Compensation to riparian owner, for erecting toll-bridges, see BRIDGES, 8.
Rights of littoral owner as regards fisheries, see FISHING, 5.

See also FISHING, MILLS, NAVIGATION, WATERCOURSES.

1. In general.* — The owner of land is not the owner of timber floating in a stream running over his land, but has an exclusive right to seize such wood. Rogers v. Judd, 26 D. 299.

The measure of damage for seizing such timber by another is the injury to the landowner's exclusive right, that is, what his chance of seizing the timber was worth. Id.

The maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas, emphatically applies to riparian proprietors. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

The riparian owner inflicts no legal injury on his neighbors by using his property cautiously, prudently, and in accordance with its nature and character, though he thereby occasions them some annoyance and loss. Neal v. Henry, 33 D. 125.

The heir of a lessee for years, of a lot fronting on a navigable stream, is not a riparian owner within the meaning of the Maryland act of 1745. Casey v. Inloes, 39 D. 658.

A riparian proprietor has no property in the water itself which flows by or through his lands, but a simple usufruct while it passes along. Stein v. Burden, 65 D. 394.

A riparian owner of land bounded by navigable water has a right of access to such navigable water of which he cannot be lawfully deprived; and any one doing anything in front of the land of such a riparian proprietor, which makes it less accessible, is liable in damages therefor. Clark v. Peckham, 14 R. 654.

2. Right to natural flow of the stream.† — A riparian proprietor has the right to a flow of water in its natural current, without any obstructions injurious to them. Pillsbury v. Moore, 69 D. 91; Evans v. Merriweather, 36 D. 106; subject only to the right of eminent domain. Ten Eyck v. Del. & R. Canal Co., 37 D. 233. This right is incident to the property he has in his land, and he cannot be deprived of such right but by grant, actual or presumptive. Tillotson v. Smith, 64 D. 355; or by use or occupation for such a length of time that a grant will be presumed. Davis v. Fuller, 36 D. 334; Coaker v. Hunter, 15 D. 726; Buddington v. Bradley, 26 D. 386.

Any person situated above or below the owner of land along a stream who shall make any change in the natural flow of the stream so as to materially damage the land of such owner is liable for the damages occasioned thereby. Tillotson v. Smith, 64 D. 355; Omelwany v. Jaggors, 27 D. 417.

At common law, each riparian proprietor has an equal right to the use of the water which flows in the stream adjacent to his land as it was wont to run, without diminution or alteration. No proprietor has a right to use the water to the prejudice of another above or below without a prior right to divert it, or unless it is necessary for domestic uses and watering stock. Loddell v. Simpson, 90 D. 537.

A riparian proprietor, whose rights are not limited by usage or convention, has the absolute right to use the water in any manner he may desire while it is passing over his land. He must transmit it by its natural channel to the next occupant, and he is permitted to exact the same condition from the proprietor above. The right thus acquired is not a right to the water itself, but an interest in the manner of its flow. Cooper v. Williams, 22 D. 745; Dilling v. Murray, 63 D. 385.

A riparian proprietor may appropriate water at a lower place on his premises than the point at which the stream in its natural flow would enter the land of a proprietor below him, if there is no unreasonable or excessive use or unnecessary waste. Wade-worth v. Tillotson, 39 D. 391.

A riparian proprietor may erect any work in order to prevent his land from being overflowed by any change of the natural state of the stream, and to prevent its old course from being altered. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

Plaintiff was the owner of a reservoir dam erected across a stream running through his land for the purpose of accumulating surplus water for the use, in dry seasons, of his factory, situate several miles below. Defendant, the owner of land situate on the stream between the dam and the factory opened the gates and allowed the surplus water to escape. Held, that an injunction would not lie restraining defendant from so doing, although the detention of the water worked no material injury to him. Clinton v. Myers, 7 R. 373.

Water in a running stream flowing in its natural channel, is not the subject of property. Cooper v. Williams, 22 D. 745.

A surplus of water appropriated for public use for the purpose of a state canal, which continues to flow down the natural channel, and is not required for such use, belongs to the owners of the water-rights on the margin of the stream below, just as if no such appropriation had been made. Varick v. Smith, 28 D. 417.

The lessee of such surplus from the state acquires no right, and may be restrained from diverting the same to the injury of the riparian owners below. Id.

The riparian owner on one bank is entitled to only half the water in the stream, as against an owner on the other bank. Olney v. Fenner, 57 D. 711.

The right to running water, in California, is a right running with land, a corporeal privilege bestowed upon the occupier or appropriator of the soil, and has none of the characteristics of mere personality. Hill v. Newman, 63 D. 140.

The right to running water exists, in California, from policy of her laws, without private ownership of the soil, upon the ground of prior location upon the land, or prior appropriation and use of the water. Id.

Proprietaries of Pennsylvania and New Jersey never owned the bed of the Delaware river, but their respective grants extended only to low-water mark on either side; and the bed of the river and the river itself remained in the crown, and passed by force of the revolution and of the treaty of peace to the two states, to be owned and enjoyed on the same principle as a navigable river flowing between two coterminous nations. Ticum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 100 D. 597.

3. Title to bed of the stream. — 1. Navigable streams. — A grant of land bounded on a river in which the tide neither ebbs nor flows extends ad flum aqua, but a grant bounded on a navigable river extends to high-water mark only. Arnold v. Mundy, 10 D. 356; for a riparian owner on a navigable river owns only to the bank, and his ownership is not extended to the center by a statute declaring the river non-navigable. Wood v. Fowler, 46 R. 330.

The ownership of soil covered by the waters of a navigable river is vested in the public. Stuart v. Clark, 58 D. 49.

Land between the high and low water mark of tides belongs to the sovereign, and may be granted by the sovereign. Ward v. Willis, 72 D. 570.

A statute prohibiting entries of land covered by navigable waters and directing public land bordering on such waters to be surveyed, so that the water should form one side of the survey and the land be laid off back from the water, prohibits the acquiring of title by entry and patent to land between high and low water mark of tides. Id.

Land between the high and low water mark of tides is "land covered by a navigable water." Id.

A riparian owner whose lands are bounded by a navigable stream above the ebb and flow of the tide has an absolute right to use the land covered by said stream to the centre of the thread thereof, subject to the right of the public to use the stream as a public highway for the passage of vessels employed in its navigation. Walker v. Shepardon, 65 D. 324.

Where one holds lands along a navigable stream, and is also entitled to the land the river covers, by virtue of a grant from the state, a conveyance by such person of a tract bounding the same on the river, will pass to the grantee the soil ad medium flum aqua, as well as the land expressly granted. Broune v. Kennedy, 9 D. 503.

By the common law of Maine beds of tide-water creeks become the property of the owners of the lands through which they flow, subject to the restriction that such owners are not allowed "to stop or hinder any passage of boats or other vessels in or through any creek or cove, to other men's houses or lands." Low v. Knowlton, 45 D. 100.

2. Non-navigable streams. — In a river not navigable, the owner of the soil on one side is the proprietor of the bed to the middle of the stream. Horne v. Richards, 2 D. 574; Stuart v. Clark, 58 D. 49; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 16 D. 342; Brown v. Chadbourne, 50 D. 641; although the United States survey, under which he holds, meandered the bank, and the bed of the stream was not in terms conveyed. Ross v. Faust, 23 R. 655; unless the conveyance denotes an intention to the contrary. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715. And the complete control of the use of such land covered with water is in the riparian owner, except so far as limited and qualified by such rights as belong to the public at large, to the navigation, and such other use, if any, as appertains to the public over the water. Ryan v. Brown, 100 D. 154; Lorman v. Benson, 77 D. 435; Berry v. Snyder, 96 D. 219.

And such proprietors have a right to use the water flowing over it in its natural current, without diminution or obstruction, and it is immaterial whether the party be a proprietor above or below on the river. Covales v. Kiddes, 57 D. 287; but he possesses this right only in common with every other proprietor. Rhodes v. Whitehead, 84 D. 631.

The thread of a stream is ascertained by measurement across, without regard to the depth of the water. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715.

A parol declaration of intention cannot vary the description in a deed so as to extend the land to low-water mark instead of to the middle of the stream. Id.

The owner of land on both sides of a stream is, in common presumption, the owner of the whole stream, and the burden of proof is on one claiming an easement over it to show his right. Wadsworth v. Smith, 26 D. 525.

The owner of such a stream may permit others to pass over it under an agreement for compensation. Id.

An agreement will be implied by one using such a stream to pay a reasonable sum therefor, in the absence of an express promise. Id.

A stream of water, which has been diverted from its natural channel by reason of an unusual freshet, and allowed by an adjoining proprietor to flow over his land for the period of ten years, without objection, cannot be restored by him to its original course. Woodbury v. Short, 44 D. 344.

4. Title to islands. — An island lying on one side of a stream belongs to the owner of the bank on that side. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 16 D. 342.

An island lying in the middle of a river, so that the original middle line passes through it, belongs to the owners of the land on the two banks, according to the original dividing line. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715; Deerfield v. Arms, 28 D. 276; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 16 D. 342.

An island cut off from the mainland by a navigable stream in the ordinary stages of low water cannot be added to the land of an adjacent owner merely because in every dry season the river almost disappears, and no water flows over the intervening dry, sandy, or pebbly bed. Stover v. Jack, 100 D. 566.

A patent entitling the patentee to coal and minerals, under the bed of a navigable river from the low-water mark on one shore to the same line on the other, does not entitle him to the minerals of an island within the bounds of his patent, which was subject to application and sale under laws existing before the law under which his patent was granted, and still in force. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Winchester, 58 R. 740.

5. — to flats and land under water.

1. At common law. — By the common law, all that portion of land on tide-waters between high-water mark and low-water mark, technically known as the "shore," originally belonged to the crown, and was held in trust by the king for public uses, and was not the subject of private property without a special patent or grant. Pike v. Monroe, 58 D. 751; Barker v. Bates, 23 D. 578; Mayor of Mobile v. Eslava, 33 D. 325; Lorman v. Benson, 77 D. 435. And the "shore" is the space between high and low water mark. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co., 89 D. 164; Storer v. Freeman, 4 D. 155.

Shores of a sea and navigable rivers, within the flux and reflux of the tide, belong prima facie to the king, and may belong to a subject; but the jus privatum of the proprietor is subject to the jus publicum which belongs to the king's subjects. Moulton v. Libbey, 59 D. 57.

A railroad company, in pursuance of an alleged franchise embraced in their charter, constructed their track along the bank of a navigable river, below high-water mark, thus cutting off, without compensation, the riparian owners from the benefits incident to their property from its contiguity to the water. Held, that the title of owners of

* Islands arising from sea, to whom belong see note, 53 R. 215-221.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

lands bordering on tide-waters ends at high-water mark; that below the ordinary high-water mark the title to the soil is in the state; and that the riparian owner has no rights beyond high-water mark, as against the state and its grantees. Stevens v. Paterson and N. R. R. Co., 3 R. 269.

2. Under ordinances, statutes, etc. — A proprietary grant, in 1690, of "a piece of land below high-water mark, to set a shop upon, not exceeding forty feet in width," was construed to include the land as far as low-water mark. Adams v. Frothingham, 3 D. 181.

The owner of land adjoining tide-waters is the proprietor of the flats to low-water mark, not exceeding the distance of one hundred rods, subject to the right of free fishing of each householder in the waters covering them. But the right to erect weirs upon those flats, or to set nets or seines, "making them fast in the usual way, by grapples to the shore," belongs exclusively to the proprietor of the flats. Duncan v. Sylvester, 41 D. 400; Storer v. Freeman, 4 D. 155; Parker v. Outer Mill-dam Co., 37 D. 58.

The Massachusetts Colony ordinance of 1641, declaring the proprietor of land on the seashore to be the owner to low-water mark, etc., though never in force in Plymouth colony as a positive law, is a settled rule of property throughout the state. Barber v. Bates, 23 D. 678.

The ordinance of 1641 vests tide-lands in proprietor of adjoining upland, subject only to the limitations and qualifications contained in the proviso to the ordinance. Pike v. Monroe, 58 D. 751.

The owner of upland owns to low-water mark, under the Massachusetts colony ordinance, where land is bounded on salt water in which the tide ebbs and flows. Valentine v. Piper, 33 D. 715.

An ordinance declaring that proprietors of land "shall have property to low-water mark," contemplates and refers to a mark which could be readily ascertained and established, which would be the usual or ordinary low-water line. Garriah v. Union Wharf, 46 D. 568.

The owner of a lot upon the water-front of San Francisco, as established by statute, below low-water mark, is not owner upon the "shore," and is therefore not a "riparian proprietor" as that term is used in the law of tide-waters. Dana v. Jackson St. Wharf Co., 89 D. 164.

The title of a riparian owner of land in Illinois bounded by the Ohio river extends at least to low-water mark. Ensminger v. People, 95 D. 495.

Riparian proprietors in Pennsylvania take to the ordinary low-water mark unaffected by drought. Stover v. Jack, 100 D. 566.

What constitutes the low-water mark of navigable streams in Pennsylvania must be determined by the law of that state, and not by the law of England or sister states. Id.

At common law, only those streams are navigable in which the tide ebbs and flows; as to them, low or high water mark is decided by the ebb and flow of the tides. But the common law being inapplicable in Pennsylvania, it has not been adopted. Id.

The right to land between low water and ordinary high water on a stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, is in the owner of the adjacent fast land as against an intruder, subject to the use of it by the public as a common highway. Ball v. Slack, 30 D. 278.

The possession of the fast land is the possession of the flats in such a case, and is not interrupted by the passage of boats and other craft over the flats at high water. Id.

A riparian owner's right of exclusive possession to the shore of a navigable stream does not extend beyond low-water mark. Harvey v. Thomas, 36 D. 141.

Flats lying in a cove are to be divided among the riparian proprietors bounding on the cove by lines drawn from their respective lands to a line drawn across the mouth of the cove, so as to give each the same proportion of that line as he has of the line bounding the cove. Ashby v. Eastern R. R. Co., 38 D. 428.

The burden of proof rests on one claiming flats on an arm of the sea as appurtenant or parcel of his wharf, and petitioning for damages for laying a railroad across the same, to show that the line of low-water mark extends so far as to include some part of the soil over which the railroad is laid. Id.

A riparian proprietor's ownership of land under water of an unnavigable stream is measured by lines at right angles to the bank, without regard to the course of the lines bounding the remainder of his tract. McCullough v. Wall, 53 D. 715.

A riparian owner whose land extends to low-water mark has a right to the exclusive use of the bank to such mark, and may establish a private wharf thereon, and charge what is reasonable for its use by those navigating the river. Ensminger v. People, 95 D. 495.

A mussel-bed, between which and the shore no water flows at low tide, belongs to the owner of the adjacent shore. King v. Young, 49 R. 596.

But one who plants oysters in the bed of a navigable river, below low-water mark, has not such a property therein that he can maintain trespass against a person taking them away, although he owns the adjacent shore. Arnold v. Mundy, 10 D. 356.

A sand-bar in a navigable river is subject of private ownership, and the party holding the title thereto may maintain an action in the nature of trespass against one for entering and removing sand therefrom. Berry v. Snyder, 96 D. 219.

Land under the water of a navigable bay or harbor, on Lake Erie, may be held by private ownership, subject to the public rights of navigation and fishery, by title from an express grant made or sanctioned by the general government. Hogg v. Bearman, 52 R. 71.

The plaintiff owned land on the sea coast at Far Rockaway, Long Island. Several miles east of his land was the island of Long Beach, bounded on the east by an inlet from the ocean to Hempstead bay. Between 1835 and 1869 the beach from opposite the island to the west of plaintiff's land was overflowed and washed away, and bars, shoals and islands were formed and constantly changing. By sudden, violent and frequent changes the inlet moved to the west of the plaintiff's land, and a continuous bar was formed. About 1869 the inlet closed up and the original one reopened, leaving a continuous beach to the west, with a lagoon inside of it running across the plaintiff's land. Held, that the title to that beach was in the plaintiff. Mulry v. Norton, 53 R. 206.

3. The acquisition and transfer of title.—The owner of upland, to which flats adjoin, may sell the upland without the flats, or the flats without the upland, or both together. Pike v. Monroe, 58 D. 751; Barker v. Bates, 23 D. 678.

Whether flats pass as appurtenant, by a conveyance of upland, depends upon the intent as ascertained by the terms employed. Barker v. Bates, 23 D. 678.

A deed bounded on a river in which the tide ebbs and flows conveys the flats in front of and adjoining the same, to the extent of one hundred rods from high-water mark, if they extend so far. Pike v. Monroe, 58 D. 751.

Where lands are under the low-water mark, title is not to be acquired by prior occupancy, while they are part of the public domain. Gray v. Bartlett, 32 D. 208.

The presumption of a grant of upland carries with it the adjacent flats to low-water mark, without proof of any actual adverse possession of the flats, where there is no evidence of a separate alienation of the flats. Valentine v. Piper, 33 D. 715.

The possession of flats actually taken by wharves and building, and continued for a length of time sufficient to bar actions and entries, affords a conclusive presumption that the division of such flats among the coterminous proprietors has been settled by mutual agreement. Id.

That an ancient street has been laid out across flats on the shore of an arm of the sea in conformity with the lines of lots and of wharves on one side of such street, in accordance with which the land and flats on that side of the street have long been held and occupied, is evidence, to show that the flats on the other side of the street were to be divided according to the same course or system. Id.

The question whether the legislature intended to grant the right of building a railroad on soil situated below high-water mark will be determined by an inspection of the charter. A specific grant is necessary to convey such right. Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. R. Co., 3 R. 269.

6. Ice, and rights relative thereto.—All persons have a right to travel on the ice over a public river, and any one who cuts a hole in the ice, in or near the traveled way on such ice, is liable for injuries sustained by those passing over said way, without fault or negligence on their part. French v. Camp, 36 D. 728.

The plaintiffs, engaged in the ice business at Detroit and lessees of a large portion of the water front at Belle Isle, in the Detroit river, constructed a boom along the same fifteen feet from the shore. The defendant's ferry boat was run up and down the river so near the boom that the swell broke up and destroyed the ice formed inside the boom in the winter, and the weather becoming and continuing warm, new ice did not form. There was room for the passage of the boat at a safe distance from the boom. Held, that the defendant's boat was liable for damage to the plaintiffs' business. Peoples' Ice Co. v. Steamer Excelsior, 38 R. 246.

7. Right to erect dams.—1. *The right to erect, generally.—The prescriptive right to maintain a dam which causes an overflow of another's land, and to apply the water of the stream to a special purpose, may be acquired by erecting and keeping up such dam and so using the water for twenty years without objection. Cowell v. Thayer, 38 D. 400.

The state may authorize a riparian owner upon a stream not navigable at the point in question, but becoming navigable below, to dam the stream and use the water for his purposes, but not to the injury of other riparian owners. Morrill v. St. Anthony Falls Water-Power Co., 37 R. 399.

The statute of 1803 only authorizes the erection of a dam in a navigable stream for the purposes of furnishing water power, and not for the purpose of creating a basin as a harbor for rafts. Com. v. Church, 44 D. 112.

A riparian owner on one bank of a river is entitled to the flow of water past his land unobstructed, and undiverted and without material diminution, and may build a dam to the center of the stream. Olney v. Fenner, 57 D. 711.

A riparian proprietor to whom water first comes has no right to erect dams across the stream and spread out the water, so that it is lost by absorption and evaporation to an extent that prevents it from flowing to another riparian proprietor, as it would have done but for the dams. Perrea v. Knipe, 87 D. 128.

* See note on dams and levees causing injuries to property, 57 D. 684-693.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

It is not a reasonable use of water for a riparian proprietor, who desires to use the same for watering cattle and for domestic purposes, to erect dams across the stream, by which the water is spread out and lost by evaporation and absorption so as to injure another riparian proprietor below. Ib.

Failing to object to the erection of a dam, and even expressing one's self satisfied with the use about to be made of the water, is only evidence of a license, not a license in itself. Johnson v. Lewis, 33 D. 405.

2. The liability of owners of dams. — The erection of a dam in a navigable stream is prima facie indictable as a nuisance at common law; and a defendant, who claims the right to erect and maintain such a dam, under the provisions of the statute of 1803, must show it. Com. v. Church, 44 D. 112.

A statute authorizing the building of a dam protects the persons so authorized from indictment for a nuisance, without limiting their liability for damages resulting from the flowing the lands of others. Crittenden v. Wilson, 15 D. 482.

One having a prescriptive right to maintain a dam may repair and tighten it and use the water in a more economical way, so as to raise and keep the water at a greater height on an adjacent proprietor's land than has been usual in the ordinary condition of the dam and customary use of the water, if the dam itself is not raised and the water is not kept at a higher level than the dam was formerly capable of in its ordinary operation when not leaky. Cowell v. Thayer, 38 D. 400.

A riparian owner may swell water up to his neighbor's line, when the water is in its natural state, by a dam erected below without being liable for injury done by high water, though increased by such obstruction, but the rule does not apply to a navigation company erecting a dam under a charter. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 47 D. 474.

A corporation erecting a dam in a stream is liable for injury by high water to a mill proprietor above, which is increased by such dam, under a charter authorizing it to erect the dam and making it liable for "any damages," etc., although in an ordinary stage of the river the dam does not swell the water back upon the mill-wheel. Ib.

The owner of a dam must so govern and control it that injury will not result to his neighbors. Fraser v. Sears Union Water Co., 73 D. 562.

The want of reasonable care by plaintiffs to prevent an injury is no defense to an action against the owners of a dam for damages caused by the negligent construction and use of the dam. Ib.

Each riparian proprietor has the right to use the waters of a stream on his own premises for any purpose for which it may be legitimately used, and no one has the right by any erection on his own premises to interfere with such enjoyment to the prejudice of another; although, it seems, where proprietors draw water from the same dam, each has the right to continue to use the water, whatever may be the effect on another, unless the latter has acquired by grant or prescription the right to an exclusive use, or to use whenever there is not water enough for both. Brown v. Bowen, 86 D. 406.

3. Remedy of party injured by a dam. — Raising water by a dam above its natural level, in the part of the channel of a stream owned by another riparian proprietor, does not give him a right of action unless special damages are also shown. Garrett v. McKie, 44 D. 263.

The lower proprietor cannot raise any dam or other work to prevent the enjoyment, by the upper proprietor, of a servitude which exists in favor of his estate, notwithstanding the fact of an aggravation of the servitude. The remedy is by injunction. Barrow v. Landry, 77 D. 199.

A riparian proprietor has the right to abate as a nuisance a dam erected on the stream below him, and which throws back the water upon his lands. The proper mode of abatement is to lower the dam, if there be a prescriptive right for it, to the height authorized by the prescription, or in the absence of prescription, to such a height as will stop the reflux of the water at his boundary line. Wright v. Moore, 82 D. 731.

The erection of a dam across a natural stream, by a riparian owner thereon, and on his own land, may be restrained before the trial of the action, where it appears that it will injure the health of neighboring residents, although the complainant shows no probable special damage to himself. Oglesby v. McQuagge, 42 R. 112.

A bill for an injunction against maintaining a dam on the plaintiff's land and to abate said dam as a nuisance, will lie in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, where the defendants claim the right to keep up the dam under a parol license from the plaintiff's grantor, and have undertaken to maintain their right by force; but the defendants are not liable for the expense of removing the dam erected under the license, though they are liable for rebuilding or repairing the dam after the license was revoked, and for the expense of abating the new or repaired dam. Stevens v. Stevens, 45 D. 203.

4. Right to tolls for logs passing dams. — Toll thorough, being against a common right, is not to be exacted from citizens but upon good consideration, and under license or authority from the sovereign power. Wadsworth v. Smith, 26 D. 525.

The right to exact a toll for the use of a channel, way, passage, or other easement, must be established by proof that the same was exposed and offered for the use of all, at a fixed compensation. It must have become such a common channel, way, or passage, by the consent or acts of the owner, that he cannot maintain trespass against any person who may use it, paying the established toll. Dwinn v. Barnard, 48 D. 507.

8. Wharves, piers, or bulkheads.*

—1. Who may build, generally. — A riparian proprietor on navigable water has no right, at common law, to wharf out against his own land; and in cases of purpresture, the right of entry is not in the adjacent land-owner, but in the crown. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co., 89 D. 164.

The owner of a lot on the water front of San Francisco has no right, without license, to wharf out from his own land into the bay. Id.

The right of the public for purposes of navigation must be appurtenant to ordinary means of navigation; and it can, therefore, never be unlawful to erect such wharves and landings as will accommodate all vessels ordinarily using the stream, unless there are some exceptional circumstances which may render the structures improper. Ryan v. Brown, 100 D. 154.

The owner of land bordering on a navigable stream may build a wharf for his own use or for the use of the public, but he must so construct it as not to interfere with the free navigation of the river. Sherlock v. Bainbridge, 13 R. 302.

Defendants, being the owners of an estate upon a navigable river, were erecting a wharf against their estate, extending out into said river. At the suit of the complainants, who were the owners of the estate next below them on said river, a preliminary injunction had been issued restraining them from the completion of their wharf. Upon a motion to dissolve said injunction—held, the evidence showing that the injury to the complainants caused by the completion of said wharf would be slight and contingent, and that, on the other hand, the wharf would greatly promote the defendant's trade and business, that the injunction could not be maintained, except so far as to prevent the respondents from so constructing the wharf as to spread its materials into the water in front of the plaintiff's estate. Thornton v. Grant, 14 R. 701.

A riparian owner on navigable water may extend his occupation beyond low-water mark, to the point of navigability, by wharves, piers, or fillings, subject to the paramount right of navigation, and this right may not be taken away by the state without compensation. Union Depot, etc., Co. v. Brunswick, 47 R. 789.

The common council of a city has no power to establish a "dock line" beyond which no riparian owner upon a navigable stream might construct a wharf. Such owner, owning the land to the center of the stream, subject to the public easement for navigation, has a right to construct his wharf as he pleases, so that it does not interfere with such easement. To restrict his right to build a dock beyond such line would be taking private property without making just compensation. Walker v. Sheperdson, 65 D. 324.

2. Rights and liabilities of the owners of wharves. — When persons have acted unlawfully or injuriously in extending their wharf beyond the line of low-water mark, they may be amenable to the sovereign power; but they cannot be called upon by those who have no interest in the land covered by the wharf, to make compensation to them for its use. Gerrish v. Proprietors of Union Wharf, 46 D. 568.

The object of the law permitting individuals to build wharves in front of their lands, in navigable waters, is to facilitate commerce, not to allow neighboring docks and wharves to be destroyed. Frink v. Lawrence, 50 D. 274.

The wharf-boat of a riparian owner moored to his bank is entitled to the same immunities from trespass or obstruction by vessels navigating the river as the land itself. Bainbridge v. Sherlock, 95 D. 644.

A riparian proprietor cannot maintain ejectment for that portion of a wharf, constructed on his land, which extends below the low-water mark. Coburn v. Ames, 28 R. 634.

A statute authorizing owners to erect piers and bulkheads and fill up the riverbed in front of their lands, does not justify them in closing up the space between the river and the end of a street which ran over their land, so as to obstruct the passage from such street to the river. People v. Lambier, 47 D. 273.

3. Rights of the public in wharves. — A wharf is private property, and the consent of the owner must be obtained before the public have a right to use it. O'Neill v. Annett, 72 D. 364.

Wharves built by individuals in front of their lands, in navigable waters, must not improperly impede public navigation, and if they do this, they become public nuisances. Frink v. Lawrence, 50 D. 274.

The erection of a wharf in tide-waters is not a nuisance, if the navigation is not injured by the erection. Thornton v. Grant, 14 R. 701.

A court of equity will not interpose by injunction to prevent the erection of a wharf in such waters, unless it appears that the party petitioning will be materially and substantially injured by such erection. Id.

One navigating a river has the right to land at such wharf as suits his convenience, and if in so doing the current of the river or other circumstances carries the stern of his boat down stream so that a portion of his boat's length lies in front of an adjoining wharf, but still in the navigable water of the river, he is not a trespasser and cannot be made liable for any consequential damages which may be sustained by the owner of the wharf, provided he use due care and dispatch, and subject others to no unnecessary inconvenience. Sherlock v. Bainbridge, 13 R. 302.

The public may not gain by prescription the right to use the land of an individual, on a navigable river, as a place of landing and of deposit of chattels for an indefinite time. Thomas v. Ford, 52 R. 513.

4. Dikes and levees.—A riparian proprietor will be enjoined from constructing a dike which will destroy the dike of the opposite proprietor and cause overflow of his lands, which latter dike the opposite proprietor has a legal right to maintain, as he claims, under one who built the dike when he owned the land on both sides of the stream; and the court will cause the abatement of so much of the defendant's dike as will injure the dike or land of the plaintiff. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

A proprietor is not bound to yield part of his soil for the construction of a levee for the purpose of reclaiming overflowed lands, when such levee was not originally necessary to prevent his lands from inundation, but was rendered necessary by the closing of a bayou for the purpose of reclaiming lands belonging to the state or individuals. Cash v. Whitworth, 71 D. 515.

9. Remedies for flowage.—1. *In general.—In case of injury from flooding, the injury is a consequence which must be shown to have been produced by a specific cause: it is too general to lay the flooding as a consequence without more. Good v. Mylin, 49 D. 493.

In an action for flooding plaintiff's land, damages cannot be recovered for the trouble and expense for establishing the plaintiff's right to recover for the injury caused by the flooding. Id.

A riparian proprietor has a right to maintain a dike on his land, constructed along the line of a creek, and which in time of flood causes the surplus water to flow wholly over the land on the opposite side of the creek, when both he and the opposite proprietor claim under the same person who erected the dike when he owned the land on both sides of the creek. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

* Overflowing or otherwise injuring property of riparian proprietor or other land owner, see note, 87 D. 684-698.

One who owns land at the junction of a creek with a river may change the channel and mouth of the creek on his own land, exercising reasonable care and regard for the rights of other riparian owners. He may not make such change however if it may reasonably be anticipated that it will increase the danger of inundation on the opposite side of the river in cases of unusual but not unprecedented floods; but if such change merely creates a sand-bar in the river, and this contributes to an injury by the breaking of a levee and the overflow of land on the opposite bank of the river in an unusual but not unprecedented flood, it is not a ground of recovery. Railroad Co. v. Carr, 43 R. 428.

2. Liability of the upper proprietor.—Where the owner of higher lands constructed a ditch to drain the surface-water therefrom, which increased the flow of water upon a lower proprietor, or which threw the water upon his land in a manner different from that in which it would have naturally flowed, to the latter's injury, the former is liable for the injury thus occasioned, even though the ditch was constructed by him in the course of the ordinary use and improvement of his farm. Livingston v. McDonald, 89 D. 563; Lattimore v. Davis, 33 D. 581; Miller v. Laubach, 86 D. 521.

Injuries by flowing surface water, done to a neighbor as a result of ordinary farming operations, such as plow furrows, are not actionable; but where ditches which cause an increased flow of water on the lands of an adjoining owner were dug to reclaim or improve the land, the higher owner is liable. Livingston v. McDonald, 89 D. 563.

An upper land owner may not collect the surface water in channels and drains and turn it in increased volume on the land of a lower owner to his detriment, and the latter may defend his land against it by dam or embankment. Crabtree v. Baker, 51 R. 424.

And the owner of land may erect an obstruction thereon to prevent the influx of foul water from adjoining premises wrongfully permitted by the owner of the latter, even if it results in turning back the surface water which flows naturally from such premises. Beard v. Murphy, 86 D. 693.

The owner of land through which a stream flows may increase the volume of water by draining into it, without any liability for damages to a lower owner. Müller v. Laubach, 86 D. 521.

3. Liability of the lower proprietor.—A riparian proprietor may not erect any work that in time of ordinary flood will throw the water on the grounds of another proprietor, so as to overflow and injure them; and for such injury he will be liable in damages. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

One who erects a dam on his own land is responsible for all injury caused by it to the land of another in times of usual, ordinary, and expected freshets. McCoy v. Danley, 57 D. 580; Casebeer v. Mowry, 93 D. 786.

The erection of a dam across a stream in such a manner as to throw the water back upon plaintiff's land, being a wrongful act, should render the defendant liable for any injury resulting from its erection and maintenance, such as stopping a flow of ice, and causing it to interfere with plaintiff's mill. Cousles v. Kidder, 57 D. 287.

A riparian owner is liable in damages for raising the water of a stream above its natural banks, though he prevent its overflow by embankments, if in consequence of his action the water percolates through the natural banks and his land so as to drown the adjoining land of another. Pisley v. Clark, 91 D. 72.

The defendants, in pursuance of authority granted them by the legislature, built a dam which backed the water upon the ancient mill of plaintiff. Held, that defendants were liable for the injury occasioned. Lee v. Pembroke Iron Co., 2 R. 59.

The occupant of premises injured by setting back water thereon is entitled to recover damages against the wrong-doer to an amount sufficient to indemnify him for the injury to such interest as he had in the premises. Brown v. Bowen, 86 D. 406.

The allegata and probata must agree; hence, where issue was taken upon an allegation of flooding plaintiff's land by means of a dam across a stream of water, evidence that the water was raised by obstructing two outlets or sluices from the pool of the dam through the left bank, which had carried the water around and below the dam into the natural channel, is not admissible. Good v. Mylin, 49 D. 493.

The plea of a prescriptive right to the use of a ditch in draining defendant's land presents no defense to an action for the overflowing of the plaintiff's land, caused by the formation of a dam in a stream from the washings of sand through the defendant's ditch; for the prescriptive right to the use of the ditch does not carry with it an easement of overflowing the plaintiff's land, since the sand bank causing the overflow may not have formed until some time within the period of prescription. Boundaries v. Bramley, 73 D. 470.

A corporation authorized by the legislature to construct a boom in a navigable river is not liable for flowage of land caused by an extraordinary freshet, not reasonably to have been anticipated and guarded against, although to some extent occasioned by the boom, the boom having been properly constructed. Borchardt v. Wausau Boom Co., 41 R. 12.

10. Remedies for obstructing navigation. — One who obstructs the flow of river or streams over their accustomed beds, so as to prevent them from being used as formerly, and turns them into a new channel, thereby authorizes the public to make the same use of them in the new channel, as they had been accustomed to do in the old. Dwinnel v. Barnard, 48 D. 507.

The public is not entitled to the use of water diverted from a public stream by an individual proprietor, if such diversion has not caused any obstruction to the former use of the stream. Id.

One cannot enter upon the lands of another, and remove an obstruction to a stream, on the ground that it is a nuisance, who has not been injured by its existence. Id.

Riparian proprietors on the Mississippi river cannot make any erections on their own lands which would infringe upon the public easement or amount to a nuisance in the river, although great public benefits would result from so doing. People v. City of St. Louis, 48 D. 339.

Streams only which are wholly within the state are referred to by article 18, section 4, of the Michigan constitution of 1850, which declares that "no navigable stream in this state shall be either bridged or dammed without authority from the board of supervisors of the proper county." Egan v. Brown, 100 D. 154.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal Board have such control over the canal and its approaches as to be authorized to remove such obstructions as are unlawful; but they have no such judicial authority as to make their finding conclusive upon the fact of illegality, and if they interfere with private rights, they act at their peril, and are responsible for their conduct. Id.

Erections by riparian owners in waters whose beds are public property are unlawful, not because they are nuisances, in the proper sense of the term, but because they are encroachments on the public domain; but where the ownership is private, and the public rights are simply easements or privileges, the owner may use the beds as he pleases, so long as it does not injuriously affect the public enjoyment; and his use is prima facie lawful. Id.

The extent to which private improvements in natural watercourses is compatible with public use must depend upon circumstances, and always be a question of fact. Id.

Erections in a river at the head of navigation, and serviceable to navigation, do not become unlawful by the subsequent opening of a canal, which is in no sense a part of the river, but an independent water-way connecting the river above the falls with the stream below. Id.

11. — for retarding flow of the stream. — Riparian proprietors have a right to the use and enjoyment of the stream as it passes through their land, but as this right is common to all through whose land the stream flows, no one proprietor can wholly destroy or divert it, either by preventing the water from flowing to a lower proprietor, or by throwing it back upon the mills or lands of one above. Oary v. Daniels, 41 D. 532.

Property in a stream is indivisible, each proprietor being entitled to the use of the whole of it as it flows through his land, and one proprietor can not appropriate a specific portion of it to his own use to the exclusion of those below him. Phumleigh v. Dawson, 41 D. 199.

That plaintiff's dam obstructs navigation is no defense to an action for obstructing the flow of water to his mill. Hall v. Pine, 44 D. 762.

An injury is the direct and immediate consequence of the acts of a private corporation, when such corporation constructs an embankment in the mouth of a creek, thereby preventing the water from flowing in its accustomed channel, and depriving the injured party of its use for milling purposes although the property injured is an incorporeal right in the land of another; and it is no defense to an action for damages for such injury that the water flowing in the mouth of the creek is a public navigable river, under servitude to the public interest and subject to legislative control. Tineman v. Belvidere, etc. R. R. Co., 69 D. 565.

Reasonableness of the detention of running water depends upon the size of the stream, as well as the use to which it is subservient. In small streams the water may be detained for a reasonable time in order to accumulate a head which can be made available for practical use; but the right to detain is not limited to the time necessary for repairs, or to extraordinary occasions. Davis v. Getchell, 79 D. 636.

A riparian proprietor cannot unreasonably detain water or throw it back beyond his own line, unless he has acquired the right to do so by grant, license, or prescription. Rhodes v. Whitehead, 84 D. 631.

19. — for diversion.* — The owner of one bank ad medium flum aquas has no such ownership of half the stream as to justify him in diverting the water therein to that extent. Blanchard v. Baker, 23 D. 504.

A riparian owner is liable for the diversion of the stream by his agent, though such diversion is forbidden by him, if having notice that it is being made, he makes no objection. Moans v. Merrhoeather, 38 D. 106.

The upper riparian proprietor must not materially lessen the quantity of water flowing in the stream. Miller v. Miller, 49 D. 545.

The diversion of a watercourse by a riparian proprietor, without returning it to its natural channel before reaching the land of a proprietor below, is unlawful and subjects the wrong-doer to an action for damages by the lower proprietor. Phumleigh v. Dawson, 41 D. 199.

The lower riparian proprietor cannot divert the waters of a stream, so as to prevent it from flowing in a natural state over or past the land of a higher proprietor, which borders on one side of such stream, by conducting the water in sluices past his land, and emptying it into the stream below. Parker v. Griswold, 42 D. 739.

A riparian proprietor substantially diverting a watercourse, by so doing encroaches on the rights of a proprietor below, who may maintain an action for the diversion, although he sustains no present damage thereby. Newhall v. Iveson, 54 D. 790.

A riparian owner diverting a stream is liable, notwithstanding an obstruction by an intervening owner, for the injury thereby occasioned to a lower proprietor, if the removal of the intervening obstruction would not restore the accustomed flow of the stream. Olney v. Fenner, 57 D. 711.

A riparian proprietor has no right to divert a stream, or any part of it, from its accustomed course, to the injury of other persons. Burwell v. Hobson, 65 D. 247.

A riparian proprietor is liable for damages to an injured party where he diverts water from its natural channel for artificial uses in quantity sufficient to injuriously affect rights of the proprietor below, and does not return the water to its natural channel before it reaches the lands of such proprietor. Stein v. Burden, 65 D. 394.

A riparian proprietor may use water in a stream for domestic and culinary purposes and watering stock, without being liable to a proprietor below for a consequent diminution of the water, if the right be reasonably and properly exercised. Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 39 D. 391.

Use of an artificial aqueduct to conduct to one's house or barn the water in a stream running through his land, which he has a right to use, does not render him liable to a proprietor below him on the same stream, if the right is not abused by using more than his fair proportion of the water, and unnecessarily depriving the lower proprietor of water which would otherwise come to his land. Id.

The loss of water merely incidental to the proper use and enjoyment of it by a riparian proprietor, as by permitting it to escape through penstocks from an aqueduct employed to conduct it to such a proprietor's house, in order to prevent freezing or stagnation, is not an injurious diversion rendering the party liable to a lower proprietor, although the water so escaping is permanently diverted, if there is no unreasonable use or unnecessary waste, which is a question for the jury upon all the facts. Ib.

The right of a riparian proprietor to recover for the diversion of water exists although no particular or actual damage has been sustained by reason of such diversion, and although at the time thereof no beneficial use of the stream was made. Parker v. Griswold, 42 D. 739.

A legislative act authorizing the construction by a riparian proprietor of a pipe or culvert to convey a watercourse along and across a highway does not affect the rights of a proprietor below to maintain an action for diversion thereby. Newhall v. Iveson, 54 D. 790.

A riparian owner increasing the flow of water equal to the quantity taken from a stream flowing through his land, by means of excavations and ditches, all constituting part of the same improvement, is not liable for a diversion to a proprietor below. Willot v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 57 D. 85.

A riparian proprietor may show, in mitigation of damages, that the means provided by him for restoration of the water to its natural channel are rendered inefficient for that purpose, after the water has left his land, by the act or interference of a third person, but it is no excuse for his wrong. Stein v. Burden, 65 D. 394.

The right of a riparian proprietor to divert water from its channel is conditional, and the condition is his duty to restore the water thus diverted to the stream from which it was taken. It is not an absolute right, but a contingent one, made absolute only by a return of the water. Ib.

An upper proprietor of land, in which originates a spring forming a stream, running through his land into that of another, may divert the stream, and cause it to overflow and irrigate his land, provided it resumes its natural channel before it enters the land of the lower proprietor; and he is not liable for injury to such proprietor, unless he wantonly and maliciously uses the stream, and takes more water than is necessary for agricultural purposes. Tolle v. Correll, 93 D. 540.

The lower proprietor is presumed to know that the upper proprietor has the right to use the water running through his land for irrigation purposes, and if he erects a mill on his land, he cannot lessen the upper proprietor's vested rights, and the damages he may sustain are damnum absque injuria. Ib.

A riparian owner has no right by erecting an embankment, to divert the natural course of water overflowing from a river in the time of a freshet, and turn it upon the land of his neighbor. Shane v. Kansas City etc. R. R. Co., 36 R. 480.

An upper riparian owner on a stream has no right to divert the water, by pipes and reservoirs, for the use of his locomotive engines, to the detriment of a lower proprietor, a mill owner; and such conduct may be enjoined. Garwood v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 38 R. 452; Smith v. City of Rochester, 44 R. 393.

Where a lake, formed by surface water, is situate on the lands of different owners, neither can drain it without the consent of the other. Schaefer v. Marthaler, 57 R. 73.

13. — or contamination of the water. — A riparian proprietor has no right to injure or corrupt water to the injury of others, though he own the land in fee over which the water flows, and hold by title derived from the United States. Lewis v. Stein, 50 D. 177; McCallum v. Germantown Water Co., 93 D. 656.

The authority to injure water, as by sawdust, will not be presumed in opposition to clear evidence of the legislative will that no one should do so. Lewis v. Stein, 50 D. 177.

The right to impair the quality of water cannot be acquired by a riparian proprietor by prescription. Ib.

A prescriptive right to render running water unfit for drinking or domestic purposes requires the strictest proof of its existence. McCallum v. Germantown Water Co., 93 D. 656.

An upper riparian proprietor claiming the right by prescription to pollute a stream cannot do so to a greater extent than it was polluted at the commencement of the twenty-one years. The right must be measured by the enjoyment. Ib.

Any user of a stream by an upper proprietor which substantially diminishes its volume, or defiles or corrupts it to such a degree as essentially to impair its purity and prevent the use of it for any of the reasonable and proper purposes to which running water is usually applied, is improper, and will be enjoined. Merrifield v. Lombard, 90 D. 172.

Where several riparian owners, acting independently, discharge refuse from their mills into a stream to the injury of a lower proprietor, an injunction may issue in a suit against all and before any action at law. Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 52 R. 763.

In an action by a lower against an upper riparian owner on a stream, for fouling the stream by means of a hog-yard, and depriving him of its use for domestic purposes, an instruction, that if the stream in its natural state was more useful to all the owners for stock purposes than for ordinary domestic uses, the upper owner had a right reasonably so to use it, in spite of the injury complained of, is correct. Hancliffe v. Case, 32 R. 715.

One operating a coal mine in the usual manner may discharge the percolating water into a stream which naturally drains the land, although this may swell the stream, and render it by impurity unfit for the domeistic purposes of lower proprietors. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 57 R. 445.

A coal mining company fouled a natural stream of water by pumping water from its mines into it, to the damage of a riparian proprietor. Held, that the act could not be justified either by the importance of the industry or by general custom. Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 39 R. 785.

14. Accretion.—A riparian proprietor is entitled to all accessions made to his land by the retreating of the river from its former limits, or by the slow and secret deposit of sand and other substances, so as to leave the soil theretofore inundated uncovered by water. Hagan v. Campbell, 33 D. 267.

All accretions to a public landing necessarily attach to it, and form a part thereof. Godfrey v. City of Akron, 52 D. 476.

Imperceptible accretions to the bank of a river from washings from the opposite bank belong to the proprietor of the land, to which they become affixed. Spigener v. Cooner, 64 D. 755.

A change in the course of a river from a known cause, or by human agency, does not deprive a proprietor of the right to go to the center of the old channel, if it can be ascertained. Id.

An accretion between the meander line and the water's edge on a navigable stream belongs to the owner of the adjoining land. Kraus v. Cranford, 87 D. 414.

The owner of a lot on the water front of San Francisco does not become the owner of land adjoining the lot and lying in the harbor beyond it, where such land has been gained from the sea by the gradual accretion of sand and earth caused by a purpulture or encroachment in the form of a wharf in the public harbor beyond it. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co., 89 D. 164.

The channel of a river must be regarded as the rightful and accustomed channel, as between the riparian owners, where it has been gradually changed, by wearing away on one side and increasing on the other. Gerrish v. Clough, 97 D. 561.

Land formed by accretions on one side of a river belongs to the riparian owner on that side, and is as much entitled to protection as his original land. Id.

A riparian owner may protect his banks from the encroachment of a river, by rubbing or other means, provided he does not cause a change in the then accustomed channel of the river, to the material and appreciable injury of other riparian owners. Id.

The owner of lands bounded on a lake, whether navigable or not, is entitled to the land left dry by the gradual or imperceptible receding of the waters. Warren v. Chambers, 4 R. 23.

* Right of riparian owners to accretions, see note, 53 R. 215-221.

The owner of land bounded "along the high-water mark" of an artificial pond is not entitled to accretions, although the result of natural causes. Cook v. McClure, 17 R. 270.

Every riparian proprietor whose land is bounded by water is subject to loss by the same means which may add to his territory, and as he is without remedy for his loss in this way, he cannot be held accountable for his gain. Lintchicum v. Coan, 53 R. 219, 221, note.

The proper mode of apportioning accretions among riparian owners is the following: Measure the entire river front as it was when the lots were laid out, and note the aggregate number of feet frontage, as well as that of each lot; then measure a line drawn as nearly as may be with the middle thread of the stream opposite the shore line so measured; then divide the thread line into as many equal parts as there are lineal feet in the shore line, giving to each proprietor as many of these parts as his property measures in feet on the shore line; and then complete the division by drawing lines between the points, designating the lot or parcel belonging to each proprietor both upon the shore and river lines. Kehr v. Snyder, 55 R. 366.

15. Alluvion.—Land formed by a gradual and imperceptible recession of the waters of a lake or river, whether navigable or not, belongs to the riparian owner from whose shore the water has so receded. Warren v. Chambers, 91 D. 538; Livingston v. County of St. Clair, 16 R. 516.

Land formed by alluvion, in a river not navigable, by slow and imperceptible accretion, is the property of the owner of the adjoining land. Deerfield v. Arms, 28 D. 276.

Whatever addition is made to the shores of rivers or streams by alluvion, from natural causes, or from a union of natural and artificial causes, belongs to the riparian owners of the shores. Adams v. Forthingham, 3 D. 151; Municipality No. 8 v. Cotton Press, 36 D. 624.

Whether the alluvion forms at or against the shore, so as to cause an extension of the shore or bank of the river, or whether it forms in the bed of a river and becomes an island, is immaterial in determining to whom it belongs. Deerfield v. Arms, 28 D. 276.

Land formed by alluvion in a river is, in general, to be divided between the several riparian proprietors entitled thereto, according to the following rule. 1. Measure the whole extent of their ancient line of the river, and compute how many rods, yards, or feet each proprietor owned of such line; 2. Divide the newly-formed bank or river line into equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned rods, yards, or feet of the old line;

* See note on the law of alluvion, 33 D. 276-281.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

and 3. Draw lines from the point at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old to the points thus determined as the points of division of the newly-formed shore. Id.

Such rule is to be modified under particular circumstances, as, where the ancient margin of the river has deep indentations or sharp projections, the general available line should be taken, and not the actual length of the line on that margin as elongated by indentations or projections. Id.

Where the mouth of a creek, which is the beginning point of a grant bounded on one side by such stream, shifts gradually, owing to the action of the creek and the stream into which it empties, the change operates to the gain or loss of the parties on the respective sides of the creek; but if it is occasioned by the act of one of the parties, the other party is not injured thereby. Ball v. Slack, 30 D. 278.

A lot bounded by a street which faces on tide-water is not entitled to the alluvion that may be formed on the water side of the street. Mayor of Mobile v. Selava, 33 D. 325.

The legislature cannot deprive a riparian proprietor of his right to the future alluvion that may be deposited upon his river front. Municipality No. 2 v. Cotton Press, 36 D. 624.

A change in the character of property from rural to urban, effected by its incorporation as a city, does not deprive it of the right to future formed alluvion. Id.

Principles of the Roman and Spanish laws, with respect to alluvion, explained. Id.

The principle that gives alluvion to the riparian proprietor upon whose front it is deposited, is founded upon the consideration that his exposed situation burdening him with the risk of loss through the agency of the river, he should be allowed the benefits which its contiguity may confer, as a compensation. It in no manner depends upon the duty of keeping up levees and embankments to guard against the overflow of the river. Id.

The intervention of a public road between a tract and a river does not prevent the gain by alluvion from belonging to such tract. Id.

Where a public use exists in the banks of a river, the future alluvial accretions will be subject to the same use; but the right of property therein will be vested in the same person in whom is the property in the bank; and it seems that when, by reason of the increase by accretions, any part of the original bank is no longer needed for the exercise of the use, the owners of the right of property therein will also be entitled to its occupation. Id.

Alluvion formed on the shore of a navigable river belongs to the shore-owner, claiming under a government donation and survey, where such alluvion is formed out of a bar existing at the time of the survey, which was overflowed at high water, and most of it every year, and which was not included in the survey, the government surveyor running the line as near the bank as the land was susceptible of ownership, the lower line not being marked because the river was considered the line, though at low water the distance across the bar to the water from the mainland was nearly half a mile. Stephenson v. Goff, 43 D. 171.

A public street extending to a navigable river will not be deemed cut off therefrom by additions made by alluvial deposits, nor by the voluntary act of the owner of the land. The filling in of the land carries with it the extension of the street. People v. Lambier, 47 D. 273.

An increase of alluvion caused by pressure or encroachment in the form of a wharf in a public harbor does not come within the rule that lands gained from the sea by the washing up of sand or earth little by little become the property of the owner of the land adjoining. Dana v. Jackson Street Wharf Co., 89 D. 164.

Where a new shore is formed on a river not navigable, by the alluvial deposits taken from the opposite side by the wearing away of the stream, the land on the new shore is to be divided between the owners entitled to it, according to the following rule: "Give to each owner a share of the new shore line in proportion to what he held in the old shore line and complete the division of the land by running a line from the bound between the parties on the old shore to the point thus ascertained on the new." 1871. Batchelder v. Keniston, 12 R. 143.

16. Right to wrecks, and property adrift cast on shore.*—The sovereign has the right to wrecks and all property stranded on the sea-beach. Heifield v. Baum, 57 D. 563.

A wreck cast on the sea shore belongs to the owner of the shore, as against a mere stranger, if not reclaimed, and he may bring trespass against such stranger for taking the same. Barker v. Bates, 23 D. 678.

The value of the wreck may be recovered as damages in such action. Id.

Property carried away by flood and stranded on another's land continues to be the property of him who owned it at the time of the flood, and he may enter and take it away. But he is not bound to do so, and may abandon it without incurring responsibility for injury done by it. Forster v. Juniata Bridge Co., 55 D. 506.

The owner of land on which property carried adrift is stranded may, after notice given, disincumber his land by casting such

* Rights and liabilities of owners of property set adrift by wrecks, see note, 55 D. 506-512.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

property back into the stream; but he has no right to appropriate it to his own use. Id.

The refusal of the owner of property cast adrift by a flood to remove it from the land on which it has stranded does not divest him of his right in it, nor bar his entry to reclaim it. A man who has abandoned his property may at any time resume the ownership of it. Id.

The owner of land has no lien on property carried upon it by a flood. Id.

Trover may be maintained by the owner of property cast adrift by a flood, against the owner of the land upon which it is cast, upon proving property in himself, and actual conversion by the defendant. Id.

17. Right to take seaweed.*—The right to take seaweed growing on the bed of a navigable river, below low-water mark, belongs to the public and not exclusively to the riparian proprietor. Chapman v. Kimball, 21 D. 707.

Seaweed cast upon the shore between high and low-water mark belongs to the public, and may be lawfully appropriated by any person. Mather v. Chapman, 16 R. 48.

18. Relative rights of upper and lower proprietors.—A riparian proprietor is bound to make such reasonable use of a stream of water running through his land as will do the least injury to those below him, consistent with a valuable benefit to himself, and it is a question for the jury whether such proprietor has used more than his just proportion. Evans v. Merrineather, 38 D. 106.

The right to have a natural stream of water to flow freely over the land of a lower proprietor carries with it the right to enter on the land below to cleanse out the stream and remove obstructions. Prescott v. Williams, 39 D. 688.

A rightful use of one's own estate, whether covered by water or not, may not unfrequently have some effect to diminish the value of an adjoining estate, or to prevent its being used with the comfort which might have been otherwise anticipated; this is damnum absque injuria, for which the law does not and cannot make compensation. Gerrish v. Union Wharf, 46 D. 568.

Every injury to a riparian proprietor below will not confer a right of action. It is necessary to take into consideration the capacity of the stream, the adaptation of the machinery to it, and all the attendant circumstances; and when all these are properly considered, if the proprietor below is materially injured, when considered in relation to the facts of the particular case he is entitled to redress. Dilling v. Murray, 63 D. 385.

* Right of citizens in and upon the seashore, see note, 16 R. 61-63.

The superior owner may improve his lands by throwing increased waters upon his inferior, through the natural and customary channels, but the principle should be prudently applied. Kaufman v. Grissamer, 67 D. 437.

A superior owner has no right to dig new channels and cause increased flow of water through them upon his inferior's lands. Id.

An inferior owner is not obliged to receive on his land waters which nature never appointed to flow there, and may dam up a channel cut for the carrying of such waters to and upon his land. Id.

Owner of higher lands may, in the improvement of his lands, or for his own use, retain all the surface water, that is, water flowing in no regular or definite channel, upon his land, and prevent it from percolating or flowing upon the lower land of an adjoining proprietor; or he may so drain such surface water as to prevent any portion of it reaching such lower lands. Livingston v. McDonald, 89 D. 563.

The owner of an upper field may not so concentrate surface-water upon his own land as to increase its natural flow upon a lower field of another. Templeton v. Vesloe, 37 R. 150.

Defendant owned a saw-mill and other mills upon a stream above plaintiff's lands. During the winter he deposited upon the ice in the stream refuse matter from such mills, which, during a freshet, was floated on to plaintiff's lands, doing them great injury. Held, 1. That the deposit of such refuse, without care or oversight, so that it could be floated on to plaintiff's lands, rendered defendant liable for the injury done to the land thereby. 2. That while defendant was not liable for the freshet, he was bound to know that freshets were liable to occur, and not leave his refuse so as to be carried away on to plaintiff's lands by a freshet. Washburn v. Gilman, 18 R. 246.

ROBBERY.

[Includes the offense of feloniously taking property from the person of another by force and violence, or by putting him in fear.]

Assault with intent to commit, see ASSAULT, 25.

1. What constitutes the offense.* —

A person in actual possession of money has such ownership thereof as makes it robbery to take it from his person without his consent. Stegar v. State, 99 D. 472.

Masked burglars forcibly took from the possession of a cashier the keys of his bank. At the same time they compelled him to divulge the combination of the lock of the vault. They entered with the keys and robbed the bank. The keys were never returned. Held, sufficient to warrant a finding of robbery of the keys. Hope v. People, 38 R. 460.

The defendant, falsely pretending to be town marshal, seized the prosecutor, to whom another was showing a trick at cards, shoved him against a wall and threatened to take him to jail unless he paid him money, whereupon the prosecutor paid him money, as he said, to keep from going to jail and being bothered. Held, robbery. Bussey v. State, 51 R. 256.

Defendant, by means of threats of personal violence and menaces, compelled J. S. to pay to him money which defendant believed to be justly due to him from J. S. Held, not to constitute robbery. State v. Hollyway, 20 R. 586.

The complainant was fraudulently induced by two confederates to expose some money in his hand; one of them then snatched it from him and ran away, while the other held him so that he should not pursue, and a struggle between them ensued. Held, that this did not constitute robbery. Shinn v. State, 31 R. 110.

2. The necessary force. — Snatching a thing unawares is not considered a taking by force; but if there be a struggle to keep it, or any violence done to the person, the taking is robbery. State v. Trezler, 6 D. 568.

Where the prosecutor in the presence of the prisoner accidentally dropped a bank note, and the prisoner took it up and refused to deliver it, whereupon a struggle ensued for the possession of it which resulted in the prisoner's keeping it and carrying it away, — held, that it was a forcible trespass, the note not being the subject of larceny. Ib.

Robbery is committed by force, larceny by stealth, and where there is no violence or circumstance of terror resorted to for the purpose of inducing the owner to part with his property for the sake of his person, the crime committed is not robbery, but larceny. State v. John, 69 D. 777.

* See monographic note on what constitutes, and the various elements of robbery, 70 D. 178-191.

To constitute robbery, the force used must be either before or at the time of the taking, and of such a nature as to show that it was intended to overpower the party robbed, or to prevent resistance on his part, and not merely to get possession of the property. Ib.

The expressed determination of a felonious intent, accompanied by force sufficient to carry the intent into effect, makes a case of taking by open violence or robbery, as distinguished from a secret taking or mere snatching by surprise from the hand of another. State v. McCune, 70 D. 176.

The fact that surprise aided the force employed by prisoner will not prevent the force employed from aggravating the case to one of robbery. Ib.

Taking a watch from a person is robbery, where the prisoner passed his arm through the arm of the prosecutor and used violence sufficient to break the ribbon watch-guard worn by the prosecutor about his neck, at the same time exclaiming, "Damn you, I will have your watch!" notwithstanding the force did not affright, but merely surprised, the prosecutor. Ib.

3. Indictment. — The indictment must state that the property was taken from the person of another; to say that it was taken from him is insufficient. Stegar v. State, 99 D. 472.

In an indictment for robbery, the property may be laid as belonging either to the actual owner or the person robbed. Brooks v. People, 10 R. 398.

An indictment for robbery of bank bills alleged the value of the bills but not their denomination. Held, bad. Arnold v. State, 21 R. 175.

4. Instructions. — An instruction that, "to constitute robbery, the person robbed must have been first put in fear of his person or property," is not quite full enough. If the goods be taken either by violence, or by putting the owner in fear, it is sufficient to render the felonious taking a robbery. McDaniel v. State, 47 D. 93.

SABBATH BREAKING.

[Includes the offense of violating the laws enforcing the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest. Contracts made on Sunday are treated under SUNDAY; and the effect of the day upon the computation of time is under TIME.]

1. Constitutionalality of statutory provisions.—A general law prohibiting the transaction of business on Sunday is constitutional. Ex parte Burke, 43 R. 231.

A statute prohibiting "any worldly employment or business whatever on the Lord's day, works of necessity and charity only excepted," is essentially a civil regulation, made for the government of man as a member of society, and its sole mission is to inculcate a temporary weekly cessation from labor. Specht v. Com., 49 D. 518.

Such a statute is not in conflict with that section of the constitution giving all men the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, and declaring that no preference shall be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship. Id.

A municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale of goods on Sunday is not in violation of a constitutional provision which secures to all "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship," but is valid as a police regulation. City Council v. Benjamin, 49 D. 608.

Such a statute is remedial, and should be liberally construed in respect to the mischiefs to be remedied. Smith v. Wilcox, 82 D. 302.

A law authorizing the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday is constitutional. State v. Bott, 33 R. 224.

The statute prohibiting labor on Sunday is constitutional, although it provides that it shall not affect those who conscientiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath. Johns v. State, 41 R. 577.

A Sunday law, making it a misdemeanor "for any person engaged in the business of baking to engage, or permit others in his employ to engage, in the business of baking for the purpose of sale, between the hours of six o'clock P. M. on Saturday and six o'clock P. M. on Sunday," etc., is a special law, and as such, unconstitutional. Ex parte Westerfield, 36 R. 47.

2. What constitutes the offense.—The question of desecration of Sunday by criminal labor is one of fact. It is not unlawful, in the fall, before corn is ripe, to haul corn to feed hogs in the field and to feed them there on Sunday, it being the ordinary practice of good husbandmen to gather the feed daily in the field. Edgerton v. State, 33 R. 110.

The owner of a saloon whose clerk, without his knowledge or consent, but while he was on the premises, opened it on Sunday morning to clean it, and sold a drink to a customer, may properly be convicted of keeping a saloon open on Sunday. People v. Roby, 50 R. 270.

An innkeeper sold cigars on Sunday from a stand which was a part of his establishment. Held, that he was not punishable under the statute for engaging in common labor and his usual avocation. Carver v. State, 35 R. 205.

3. Works of necessity.—In a statute forbidding labor on Sunday except "works of charity or necessity," the word "necessity" does not imply a physical or absolute necessity; such labor as is necessary to the accomplishment of a lawful purpose, under the particular circumstances, is not prohibited. Wilkinson v. State, 26 R. 84.

Where the prisoner had hauled to market on Sunday his dead-ripe crop of water melons, which otherwise would have been spoiled,—held, that this was a work of necessity within the meaning of the statute. Id.

Where the jury have been unable to agree upon a verdict until the morning of the Sabbath, it is a work of necessity then to receive their verdict. Van Riper v. Van Riper, 7 D. 576.

It is lawful for a common carrier to transport cattle on Sunday. Philadelphia, etc. R. R. Co. v. Lehman, 40 R. 415.

It is lawful to make necessary repairs of a railway track on Sunday in order to avoid delaying trains on week days. Yonaski v. State, 41 R. 614.

It is lawful for a railway company to run trains for passengers, mails and express freight on Sunday. It is a "work of necessity." Com. v. Louisville and N. R. R. Co., 44 R. 475.

Selling cigars on Sunday is not a work of necessity. Mueller v. State, 40 R. 245.

The court will take judicial notice that carrying on the business of a barber on Sunday is not necessary. State v. Frederick, 55 R. 555.

4. Indictment.—An indictment for an offense against public morals, and not against an individual, is sufficient which charges that the defendant, "on Sunday, the second day of April, A. D. 1854," in the county where the indictment was found, "did sell to divers persons a large quantity of ardent spirits, to wit," etc., without stating the names of the persons to whom the spirits were sold, or that they were sold to some person to the grand jurors unknown. State v. Parnell, 63 D. 72.

5. Observance of different day as defense.—Seventh-day Adventists, and others who conscientiously keep the seventh day of the week to worship God, are as much bound to refrain from business or worldly employment on Sunday, under a statute prohibiting the same, as any other persons. Specht v. Com., 49 D. 518.

Jews are bound to observe the civil regulations made for the observance of the Christian Sabbath. Society etc. v. Com., 91 D. 139.

An indictment lies against one laboring on Sunday, although he belongs to a sect who observes another day as the Sabbath, and conforms to their practice. Scales v. State, 58 R. 768.

6. Evidence. — A corporation is liable to indictment for Sabbath-breaking, but in the case of a railroad company its assent cannot be inferred by proof of the passage of a single train over a railroad on Sunday. State v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 36 R. 803.

7. Conviction and punishment. — There can be but one violation, by the same person on the same day, of a statute prohibiting business on Sunday, and but one penalty can be inflicted. Friedeborn v. Com., 57 R. 464.

V. REMEDIES BETWEEN BUYER AND SELLER.

I. THE CONTRACT; VALIDITY; RIGHTS OF THE PARTIES, ETC.

1. What Constitutes a Sale; Validity.

1. What words or dealings import a contract of sale.—A delivery of certain articles in consideration of being paid what they are worth constitutes a sale. Hill v. Hill, 1 D. 206.

A "sale" means a contract between parties to pass rights of property for money which the buyer pays, or promises to pay, to the seller for the thing bought and sold. Huthmacher v. Harris, 80 D. 502.

A sale or gift may be inferred from circumstances, where there is no proof of an actual sale. Moon v. Hawks, 16 D. 725.

A proposition to sell must continue down to its acceptance to constitute a binding contract of sale. Mactier v. Frith, 21 D. 262.

In case of a contract of sale by letter between parties at a distance, the will of the party making the proposition to sell must continue until the other party shall have received the letter, and signified, or had an opportunity to signify, his acceptance, in order to constitute the "meeting of minds" necessary to complete the contract. Ib.

Acceptance of a subsisting written offer to sell completes the bargain, though the party offering has no knowledge of the acceptance at the time. Ib.

A sale of goods to a consignee, whereby title passes, may be inferred by the jury, without proof of an express agreement, from evidence that on consigning the goods and advising the consignee of the fact by letter attached to the invoices, the consignors, at about the same time, drew sundry bills on the consignee, which the latter accepted, particularly where there has been a course of dealing between the parties warranting such inference. Holbrook v. Wright, 35 D. 607.

Where timber, or produce of land, or other thing annexed to the freehold, is sold specifically, whether it is to be taken by the vendee, under a special license to enter for that purpose, or whether it is to be severed from the soil by the vendor, in the contemplation of the parties it is still evidently and substantially a sale of goods only. Smith v. Bryan, 59 D. 104.

Delivery of an article at a fixed price, under an alternative agreement that the article is to be paid for or returned at the option of the party receiving it, constitutes a sale. Crocker v. Gullifer, 69 D. 118.

"Sale" means a transfer for valuable consideration, while "gift" means a gratuitous transfer without an equivalent. Parkinson v. State, 74 D. 522.

The distinction between a sale and an exchange or bargain of barter is that in a sale a price is attached to the article sold, which may be received in money or in a chattel at an estimated price; whereas in barter, one chattel is exchanged for another, no price being attached. Fuller v. Duren, 76 D. 318.

B received one hundred and seventy-five dollars as an advance to buy barley for W, and agreed to deliver to W one thousand bushels of barley at a certain time and place. Held, that this was a contract of sale, and that B was not an agent of W. Black v. Webb, 55 D. 456.

2. What do not.—Where one carries wheat to a mill to be ground into flour, the contract is not a sale, but the property in the flour is in the one depositing the wheat, although it is, with his knowledge, mingled with wheat belonging to the miller. Inglebright v. Hammond, 53 D. 430.

Title does not vest in a vendee under a contract in the words, "We have this day sold four hundred tons of pig-metal, now at our landing, or that will soon be delivered there," in the absence of evidence that there was a defined lot of metal in the intention of the parties. Winslow v. Leonard, 62 D. 354.

Where one forwards grain to another, and draws on him in favor of a bank which advances money on the draft, the transaction cannot be regarded as a sale of the grain to the bank, so as to divest it of its remedy against the drawer if the drawee fails to pay the draft, or to oblige it to account for the value of the grain in a suit against the drawer. Kupfer v. Bank of Galena, 85 D. 309.

A contract for a sale of cattle at a specified price, which contemplates delivery at a future time, and provides for a deduction from the price if upon delivery any of the cattle be dead, is not a bill of sale, and does not pass title, but is merely a contract to sell, and the vendee or his assignee has no right to take possession of the cattle without the consent of the vendor. Lounsdale v. Hunsaker, 88 D. 465.

3. Sale distinguished from bailment.—A contract to deliver wheat to a miller and to take flour therefor of a specified quality, at the rate of a certain number of pounds for so many bushels of the wheat, is a sale and not a bailment, where there is no agreement to manufacture the flour from the wheat delivered; and one purchasing from the miller flour made from the wheat so delivered, is not liable in replevin to the party delivering such wheat. Smith v. Clark, 34 D. 213. Contra, Foster v. Pettibone, 57 D. 530.

The contract is a conditional sale, and not a bailment, where property is delivered to one for a certain consideration, and no option is given to the purchaser upon any contingency to return it, and none is given to the seller to reclaim it, except upon the purchaser's failure to make payment or to retain possession. Bryant v. Crosby, 58 D. 767.

A contract is one of sale, and not of hiring or loan, where the purchaser at a sheriff's sale of a tailor's stock in trade left the goods with the latter to be made up and sold by him as he pleased, for his own profit, accounting to the purchaser only for the money paid by him; and the goods may be again levied upon and sold, under execution against the tailor. Dick v. Cooper, 64 D. 652.

4. — or mortgage.—Whether a contract is a mortgage or absolute sale with a right to repurchase, or a pledge, depends upon the intention of the parties, to be ascertained by the circumstances attending the transaction. Eland v. Radford, 42 D. 610.

A contract is not a mortgage, but an absolute sale, with a right of repurchase, where there is an absolute bill of sale of the property, with a defeasance that the purchaser is to give back the property if repaid the purchase money within a year. Ib.

An absolute bill of sale cannot be shown to be a mortgage, as against creditors of the vendor, where there is no immediate delivery of the property. Chenery v. Palmer, 65 D. 493.

An instruction relative to a chattel mortgage is correct, where vendor and vendee have mutually abandoned a contract of sale, by the vendor's receiving back the property and returning the consideration, but entering into a new arrangement forming an executory contract of sale to the same vendee; if the jury are charged that if they should find that the new arrangement had any connection with the prior purchase, or that the contract of sale was abandoned in contemplation of the new arrangement, then such arrangement was in effect a mere mortgage of the property to the original vendor as security for the price, and as a mortgage subject to the ordinary rule forbidding the retention of possession by the mortgagor. Tomlinson v. Roberts, 68 D. 367.

5. — or lease.*—The real character of a transaction is not affected by the name given to it. Thus a conditional sale is such, though it be called a lease. Murck v. Wright, 95 D. 455.

A lease does not amount to a sale when it provides that the lessor is to furnish ten cows for the lessee, to be kept on the leased property, for the use and benefit of the lessee, the lessor to pay all the taxes and to risk them against all unavoidable accidents, although the lessee agrees at the expiration of the lease to redeliver to the lessor the same cows "or those worth as much in all respects." Smith v. Niles, 49 D. 782.

A written agreement is a contract of sale, and not a lease, which purports by its terms to be a "lease" of a certain chattel for a specified term at a stipulated monthly "rent," varying in amount each month, with provisions against waste and subletting, and for a surrender of the property at the end of the term, and that the "lessor" may enter and take possession in case of default in the payment of "rent" when due, and at his option terminate the lease, but that if the "rents" are paid as agreed, the chattel shall "be and become the property of the second party without further consideration or payment." Miller v. Steen, 89 D. 124.

An agreement for the hire of a sewing machine at a specified rent payable monthly, the machine to belong to the hirer when a certain sum is paid, is not a sale, and the hirer cannot confer title on one who in good faith undertakes to purchase it from him. Singer Manf. Co. v. Graham, 34 R. 572. Compare Singer Manf. Co. v. Cole, 40 R. 20; Latham v. Sumner, 31 R. 79.

A. agreed in writing with B., "leasing" to him, all the coal beneath the surface of a certain tract of land "owned by A. B. covenanted to mine and pay "royalty" for a certain number of tons every year whether mined or not. There were provisions for distress or forfeiture. The agreement was "perpetual until all the coal was mined," and it extended to the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the parties. B. covenanted to pay the taxes on all the coal mined. Held, not a lease but a sale of all the coal in place, and that B. was liable for all the taxes thereon. Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Sanderson, 58 R. 743.

6. Validity of the contract, generally.—The liability of the purchaser of a chattel as surety on the vendor's note, or the discharge of a debt due from the vendor to the purchaser, is a sufficient consideration for the sale of such chattel. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

* Contracts of sale or lease providing for payments by installments, see note, 89 D. 127-129.

A transfer of chattels, by which an option is given to the transferee, either to return or pay for the same by a certain day, is a valid sale, and vests the property in the transferee. Burwell v. Bicknell, 35 D. 262.

Unsoundness of an article sold amounts neither to want nor failure of consideration. In the absence of warranty, the soundness or unsoundness of the subject-matter of the sale has nothing to do with the consideration. Egan v. Call, 75 D. 653.

A sale of property by a debtor, even if void as against creditors, is good as between himself and his vendee, and all the world except his creditors. And such a sale cannot be attacked by a creditor merely because he is a creditor, but only when he has a judgment establishing his debt, and an execution issued thereon, or has some process regularly issued, as in the case of attachment, authorizing a seizure of the property. Bickerstaff v. Doub, 79 D. 204.

A sale without reservation, for a full price, for the purpose of paying certain debts of the vendor, and with that intent, is a lawful and honest transaction. And a jury is not at liberty to deduce fraud from that which the law pronounces honest. York County Bank v. Carter, 80 D. 494.

A contract of sale is not rendered invalid merely because the seller had knowledge of the illegal purpose to which the articles sold were to be put, and the purchaser will be liable for the contract price unless he can show that the seller participated in the intent to commit, or had some interest in, the illegal act. So held where a citizen of the United States, after the war had been declared, sold to another a lot of hogs, with knowledge that the latter bought them for the use of the confederate army. Hedges v. Wallace, 92 D. 497.

A mere possibility or expectancy not coupled with any interest in or growing out of property cannot be made the subject of a valid sale or transfer. Skipper v. Stokes, 94 D. 646.

7. Law of place.*—The sale of a vessel then at sea, valid by the law where the sale was made and where the vendor and vendee reside, is valid here, although the law of this state controlling transfers was not complied with. Thuret v. Jenkins, 12 D. 608.

Where an article is sold and delivered in one state, to be paid for upon its arrival in another state, the provision respecting payment serves only to designate the time of payment, and does not subject the contract to the operation of the laws of the latter state. Houghtaling v. Ball, 59 D. 331.

Where the subject of and parties to a sale of personal property are within the jurisdiction of another state, and the contract is made and executed according to the laws of that state, the validity of the sale must be tested by the laws of the place where the contract is made, and no subsequent removal of the property outside the state for a lawful purpose divests the jurisdiction. Born v. Shaw, 72 D. 633.

An action lies in Rhode Island for breach of a contract of sale of goods, the contract being made there and valid there, but the goods to be delivered in New York, where the contract was invalid by the statute of frauds. Hunt v. Jones, 34 R. 635.

Where one in Vermont buys goods of another in New York, upon an order by mail, the goods to be shipped by express, C.O.D., the sale is in Vermont. State v. O'Neil, 56 R. 557.

Mere knowledge of an illegal purpose for which goods are purchased will not affect the validity of the contract of sale in the country to which they are to be taken and sold, where the goods are sold and delivered in the government where the contract is made, and the sale there is legal, and nothing remains to be done by the vendor to complete the transaction, and he is not in any way to be further connected with it. But if it is an ingredient of the contract between the parties that the goods shall be illegally sold, or that the seller shall do some act to assist or facilitate the illegal sale, or if the goods are to be delivered where the sale is prohibited, the contract will not be enforced. Smith v. Godfrey, 61 D. 617.

Laws prohibiting the sale of liquors in New Hampshire can not extend to a sale made in another state in which such sales are lawful, where the sale is complete in the latter state. Id.

Defendant ordered, by sample, liquors of plaintiff's agent. The order was sent to plaintiff, and the goods were by him shipped to defendant. The defendant lived and the order was given in a state where the sale of liquors was unlawful. Plaintiff lived in and the goods were shipped from a state where such sale was lawful. Held, that the sale was made in the latter state, and that plaintiff could recover the price in an action in the courts of the former state. Boothby v. Plaisted, 12 R. 140; Hill v. Spear, 9 R. 205; Tegler v. Shipman, 11 R. 118. But where a dealer in Ohio received in Michigan an order for liquors, which were afterwards shipped in Ohio and delivered to the vendee in Michigan,—held, to be a sale in Michigan, and invalid under a statute rendering void all "sales, contracts or agreements relating" to liquor; and that this was so although the order for the liquor was void under the statute of frauds. Webber v. Howe, 24 R. 590.

Davidson, at Ozark, sent a written order, to Carl & Toby, merchants at Little Rock, to send him one gallon of whisky by express, C. O. D. It was sent accordingly, the sellers agreeing with the express company that if it was not taken within thirty days, it might be returned and they would pay freight both ways. Davidson received and paid for it. Held, a sale at Little Rock. State v. Carl, 51 R. 565.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

8. Validity of sales of goods not in possession. A sale of chattels in possession of a third person at a distance, conveys the property to the vendee who with reasonable diligence endeavors to get possession thereof, as against a sheriff who attaches the same in the mean time as the goods of the vendor. Ricker v. Cross, 22 D. 480.

Personal property in the adverse possession of another, or subject to the lien of an attachment, may be sold by the owner. Callins v. Lockwood, 42 D. 729.

Title passes by sale without delivery from the true owner, though at the time of the sale the goods are in the tortious possession of a third person. Webber v. Davis, 69 D. 87.

A contract for the sale of property which the vendor does not possess, to be delivered in future, is not illegal unless both parties understood it to be a mere speculation in the future price, with no intention of delivering or accepting, and the burden of proof is on the party alleging the illegality. Conner v. Robertson, 55 R. 521.

9. — or not in case. — That a bargain is in words of either past or present time does not conclusively evidence a perfect sale, for the sale is not perfect if the vendor did not then own the article contracted for, or if it was not then manufactured or in existence, or not yet selected out of a lot of similar articles. Winslow v. Leonard, 62 D. 354.

The subject-matter of every executed contract of sale must have an actual or potential existence. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 74 D. 421.

Hope or expectation of means founded on a right in being may be the subject of a sale. Id.

Possibility or contingency, not founded upon right or coupled with an interest, cannot be the subject of a sale. Id.

An agreement made for a valuable consideration to deliver to one the first female colt which a certain mare might produce, vests a property in the colt when produced, for which trover may be maintained. Fonville v. Casey, 4 D. 559.

One may transfer title to crops not then in case, and which are to be grown upon the land; and the property will pass as soon as they are grown. Baxter v. Bush, 70 D. 429.

10. Effect of fraud or deceit.* — A sale is void for fraud, if the vendor was induced to make it by misrepresentations made to him by the purchaser in respect to material facts peculiarly within his knowledge, by which the seller was deceived to his injury. Griffin v. Chubb, 58 D. 85.

One purchasing goods on credit knowing his insolvency and inability to pay is not guilty of such fraud as will avoid the sale if he purchased without the preconceived design of not paying for them. Bidault v. Wales, 59 D. 327.

A vendee purchasing goods with a preconceived design of not paying for them obtains no property in the goods. Id.

Such preconceived design may be evidenced by a resale of them at a sacrifice, an assignment in insolvency or to a favored creditor, or absconding with the goods, or other circumstances. Id.

A vendee's intention at time of purchase not to pay for the goods, and his knowledge of his insolvency, which he does not communicate to the vendor, do not make the purchase fraudulent, and the sale cannot be avoided after the delivery of the goods. Smith v. Smith, 60 D. 51.

A sale is vitiated by any misrepresentation or concealment of material facts respecting the property for the purpose of deceiving, and which does deceive, the buyer. Wintz v. Morrison, 67 D. 658.

11. — of false representations. — Fraudulent representations, to avoid a sale, need not be such as would sustain an indictment for obtaining goods under false pretenses. Nichols v. Michael, 80 D. 259.

A purchase of personal property by means of false representations of solvency gives no title to the vendee, and the vendor may recapture the property if it can be done without unnecessary violence to the person and without breach of the peace. Hodgeson v. Hubbard, 46 D. 167.

A representation by a vendor that a glandered horse has the distemper only, to conceal the fact that he has the glanders, is as much a suggestio falsi and suppressio veri as to represent an unsound horse as sound, or as to conceal the unsoundness. George v. Johnson, 44 D. 288.

A remark of a vendor after the completion of a contract for the sale of a horse, and when the vendee has come to take it away, that he "must take the horse at his own risk," comes too late; and when, in such a negotiation, a fraudulent concealment or false suggestion takes place, such a remark at any stage of the contract, although it might negative the allegation of warranty, would not exonerate the party from the consequences of the fraud produced by the suppression of truth and suggestion of falsehood. Id.

Where the seller of a diseased horse represents him as sound at the time of the sale, such representation does not vitiate the sale, unless when he made it he knew that the horse was unsound. There is no deceit without a scienter. Staines v. Shore, 55 D. 492.

It is a false representation if a vendor exhibits a mule to a proposed vendee, and at that time represents the animal sound, if he knows to the contrary, even though the vendor afterwards says to such vendee: "The animal will be sold in a short time at auction, and you will then have a chance to buy him;" and about an hour subsequently the mule is offered for sale at auction, and the proposed vendee purchases the mule upon the prior representations of the seller. The fact that at the auction it was stated that the vendor did not warrant or guarantee the animal in any particular does not alter the rule. Harris v. Mullins, 79 D. 320.

12. Sales and purchases prohibited by statute. — Property sold upon an illegal or fraudulent consideration has the effect to pass title to the vendee; but the parties have no remedy against each other. Ohio L. I. & T. Co. v. M. I. & T. Co., 53 D. 742.

An immediate purchase of goods lost at play by the loser or a third person for him would be a palpable evasion of the statute. A note given by such purchaser would be a note given for money lost at play. Hockaday ads. Wilks, 40 D. 606.

Where goods are sold, a sale of part of which is prohibited by law, the illegality of the sale of that part can have no effect upon the sale of the other articles made at the same time for a separate, agreed, and ascertainable price, wholly distinct from the price of the prohibited articles. Walker v. Lovell, 61 D. 608; Boyd v. Eaton, 69 D. 83.

A contract is not invalidated because of knowledge of vendor of goods that his vendee intends to sell them in another state, in violation of its laws. A debt arising upon such a contract may be collected by an action in the courts of the latter state, if the contract of sale was valid in the state where it was made. Gaylord v. Scragen, 76 D. 154; Ross v. Mitchell, 45 R. 520; Feineman v. Sachs, 52 R. 547. This rule does not apply where the contract is so connected with illegal transactions or purposes as to be inseparable from it. Tatum v. Kelley, 94 D. 717.

13. Validity, as against creditors, generally. — Personal property delivered to the vendee, under a conditional sale, without payment of the purchase price, is liable to execution by the creditors of the vendee, because as to such creditors the sale is considered fraudulent. Ross v. Story, 44 D. 121.

A bona fide transfer of goods by a non-resident need not be recorded to render it valid against subsequent attaching creditors, under the Maryland statute of 1834, where there is actual or constructive delivery. Van Brunt v. Pike, 45 D. 126.

No actual removal is necessary to render a sale valid against the creditors of the vendor of logs which were on the ice of a river and on the land of strangers, especially where personal notice was carried home to such creditors. Samborn v. Kittredge, 50 D. 58.

A sale of personal property, not followed by delivery, is void at common law as to the creditors of the vendor; but under the Oregon statute such a sale is valid as to creditors, if the bill of sale is recorded within ten days thereafter. Monroe v. Hussey, 75 D. 552.

The owner of property can sell it and give good title to a bona fide purchaser despite his creditors, up to the time when they shall have acquired a lien. McMahan v. Morrison, 79 D. 418.

A sale of chattel, attended with delivery and transfer of possession, which was retained for several weeks, is not a fraudulent transaction in law, and if the sale was collusive, it is for the jury to determine it as a fraud in fact. Graham v. McCreary, 80 D. 591.

Where a vendor of goods makes an arrangement with the vendee by which the former shall have the privilege of reclaiming them upon payment of the amount of a claim which the vendee holds against him, such arrangement will create a trust for the benefit of the vendor, and render the sale void as to creditors, if the value of the goods exceeds the amount of such claim. But if the value of the goods did not exceed the amount of the vendee's claim, it is doubtful whether the reservation of the right to buy them back at their full value would constitute such a benefit to the vendor as to avoid the sale. Grant v. Lewis, 90 D. 785.

Where a sale is made, in fact, to defraud creditors, the jury have no right to find for the vendee, in an action by him to recover the property which has been levied on and sold by creditors of the vendor, even though the evidence prove an actual delivery and a continuous change of possession. Gallagher v. Williamson, 83 D. 114.

A bona fide sale of property by a debtor in insolvent circumstances, to his creditor, in payment or satisfaction of his debts, is not fraudulent, merely because such creditor thereby obtains a preference over other creditors, and although he may know at the time that his purchase will have the effect of defeating the collection of other debts from his vendor. Walden v. Murdoch, 83 D. 135.

A transaction is a sale, and will be upheld, if bona fide, as against the vendor's creditors, although it was agreed that if, when the goods were sold by the vendee, more should be realized than the price paid by them, the excess, after deducting the expenses of the sale, should be credited to the vendors. Reeves v. Sebern, 85 D. 513.

While a sale of personal property will be presumed to have been made in good faith, where all the elements of a valid sale exist, such would not be the presumption when, in proving what is claimed to be a sale, some essential requirement is wanting. Thus where a sale of personal property is made without a delivery of possession to the purchaser, as to creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers, such a sale is presumed to have been made in bad faith. Corgan v. Frew, 89 D. 236.

A sale of provisions upon a condition that they shall remain the property of the vendor until paid for, and with the understanding that they may be used and consumed by the vendee before payment is made, is valid as against attaching creditors of the vendee, if there is no fraud in the sale, as the title to the provisions remains in the vendor until the condition of the sale is performed. Armington v. Houston, 91 D. 366.

A contract that all the colts to be foaled by certain mares sold by A. to B., and kept in A.'s stables under B.'s care, were to belong to B., is a valid contract of sale, and not void as against creditors for want of delivery. Hull v. Hull, 40 R. 165.

14. Effect of possession remaining in seller.* — 1. In general, and as between the parties. — Change of possession is a rule of local policy uniformly required in the transfer of all personal property situated in Vermont, in order to place it beyond the reach of process against the transferor, and is not controlled by the law of the state where the contract is made. Rice v. Courtis, 78 D. 597.

Retention of possession of goods by vendor is presumptive evidence of fraud, and the burden of rebutting this presumption, and of showing by satisfactory evidence that there was really no intent to defraud, is cast upon the purchaser. Grant v. Lewis, 80 D. 785.

The validity of a sale is not affected as between the parties by possession remaining with the vendor, if it be consistent with the terms of the contract. Griffin v. Chubb, 58 D. 85; Sezey v. Adkinson, 91 D. 698.

Nor does the rule extend to a state or town levying a poll-tax. Daniels v. Nelson, 98 D. 577.

2. As respects creditors and subsequent purchasers. — An open and substantial change of possession is necessary to make a sale of personal property valid as against creditors and subsequent purchasers. French v. Hall, 32 D. 341; Whitney v. Stark, 68 D. 360; Rocheblaw v. Potter, 14 D. 305; Davis v. Bigler, 1 R. 393. This rule depends upon neither the statute 13 Eliz., ch. v., nor statute 27 Eliz., ch. iv., but upon the circumstance that the vendee by suffering the vendor to remain in possession, enables him to commit a fraud upon innocent third persons. The rule is a rule of policy required for the prevention of fraud, and is to be inflexibly maintained. Davis v. Bigler, 1 R. 393.

* Change of possession, when required, see note, 6 D. 287-288.

A sale of personal property in the hands of a bailee, without change of possession, is valid as against an execution creditor, where the vendor does not again take it into his possession. So also where actual possession is taken by the vendee, and the property is left with the bailee for a special purpose. Linton v. Butz, 47 D. 501.

A sale of property not susceptible of delivery, as a growing crop, is not constructively fraudulent as to creditors or subsequent purchasers merely because the seller retained possession and was to cultivate and deliver it at a stated time. Cummins v. Griggs, 87 D. 482.

A statute requiring actual and continued possession in case of sale of goods to render the sale valid against creditors of the vendor and subsequent purchasers, though it does not use the word "exclusive," necessarily implies that the possession should be exclusively in the vendee. Clafin v. Rosenberg, 97 D. 336.

The vendee must take actual possession, and the possession must be open, notorious, and unequivocal, such as to apprise the community, or those who are accustomed to deal with the party that the goods have changed hands, and that the title has passed out of the seller and into the purchaser. Id.

To constitute a valid sale of all the goods in a store as against creditors of the vendor, there must be a complete change of the dominion and control over the property, and some act which will operate as a divestiture of title and possession from the vendor, and a transference thereof to the vendee, who must exhibit the usual indicia of ownership; and though it may not be essential that the goods should be moved to a different house, there must be some open and notorious act clearly indicative of delivery and possession, such as taking an invoice, putting up a new sign, or any other reasonable means which would impart notice to a prudent man that a change had taken place. Id.

The vendor may be employed to render services in and about the property in the same manner as any other agent or employee, in such a case, and the sale may still be valid as against creditors of the vendor, provided the requirements of the law concerning change of possession have been complied with; but the law does not permit a joint or concurrent possession of the vendor with the vendee. Id.

Where one sells personal property for the consideration of a pre-existing debt, and for the convenience of the purchaser retains possession, such retention is not necessarily fraudulent as against creditors. Pregmail v. Miller, 53 R. 684.

The defendant, in the employment of M. on his farm, agreed to buy of M. a horse then on the farm and apply his wages to the payment. Two years afterwards M. sold and delivered the horse to him, taking his receipt in full of wages earned in payment. The defendant continued in M's employment on the farm, the horse remained in M's stable, the defendant taking care of it, breaking it and shoeing it, paying M. for the feed. Held, that title did not pass as against M's creditors. Hull v. Sigsworth, 40 R. 167.

3. What amounts to a retention of possession.—The possession is not changed within the meaning of this rule, where the vendor's servant retains the possession of the articles, though the vendor may have removed from the place where they are kept. Moore v. Kelley, 26 D. 283.

Where the vendor retains possession nominally as agent of vendee, but with the right to sell and have all he can make beyond the actual cost, that is such an interest reserved as is utterly inconsistent with good faith in the sale, as against his creditors. Grant v. Lewis, 80 D. 785.

Employment of vendor by the vendee in the subordinate capacity of clerk or salesman to take charge of the goods which were the subject of the sale, is not incompatible with an actual and continued change of possession within the meaning of the statute, and is not of itself conclusive evidence of fraud. It is not per se a fraud which admits of no explanation, but is a strong circumstance tending to show that there has not been such change of possession as the statute requires. Godchaux v. Mulford, 85 D. 178.

Where the vendee so employs the vendor thereof, the latter cannot be allowed to remain in the apparently sole and exclusive possession of the goods after sales, for that would be inconsistent with such an open and notorious delivery and change of possession as the statute contemplates. But if it is apparent to all the world that he has ceased to be the owner, and that another has acquired and openly occupied that position, the statute is satisfied. Id.

Where the vendor has been so employed, it is competent for a creditor of the vendor to prove this fact as tending to show that there has been no actual and continued change of possession; but when proved, it does not become conclusive of that question, but is only an element of proof to be weighed by the jury. Id.

Giving back possession of personal property to the vendor, after a sale thereof, upon a hiring, and for a temporary purpose, does not render such sale fraudulent, where there has been a visible and substantial change of possession. French v. Hall, 32 D. 341.

A vendor assisting the vendee to thresh grain in a barn, being part of the property conveyed, is not such a retention of possession as will render a sale fraudulent and void as to the creditors of the vendor. Wilson v. Hooper, 36 D. 366.

Personal property the subject of a conditional sale, the possession of which is retained by the vendor, either exclusively or jointly with the vendee, is not liable to execution by the creditors of the vendee. Rose v. Story, 44 D. 121.

Where a vendor and vendee have mutually agreed to rescind a contract of sale, and the vendor takes the property back and returns the consideration, but a new arrangement is made whereby there is an executory agreement to sell to the same vendee, the new arrangement, regarded independently of the previous transactions, is not to be considered in legal effect a sale and mortgage back, so as to make the vendee's possession fraudulent, but as a mere agreement for a future sale. Tomlinson v. Roberts, 68 D. 367.

2. Requirements of the Statute of Frauds.

15. *What is a sale within the statute, generally.—The sale of bank stock is within the statute, and a broker who disposes of such stock for another, is to be considered the agent of both the owner and the purchaser. Cobin v. Williams, 5 D. 417.

The statute applies where a purchase is made by one in his own name and upon his own credit, and it cannot be proved by parol that the purchase was for another's benefit. Holida v. Shoop, 59 D. 88.

A contract is within the statute of frauds which is for delivery, and not manufacture and delivery, of certain articles, such contract being a contract of sale. Fickett v. Swift, 66 D. 214. Whether this would be the case were the goods to be delivered in the future, to be manufactured by the seller, or were some important alteration in their form to be effected by him before delivery, not decided. Id. v. Stanton, 40 D. 696.

An oral contract by one person to deliver to another one hundred sewing-machines, at a time and place designated, upon condition that a part of them not then finished should be completed in season by a third person, who was making them for the former, he not being a manufacturer of machines himself, but having fitted up a shop for their manufacture, and contracted with such third party to occupy the shop and make the machines for him at a certain price each, he furnishing the shop-room, materials, and tools, is a contract for the sale, and not for the manufacture, of the machines, and therefore within the statute of frauds, where at the time of the making of the contract thirty-six of the machines were completed, and the remaining sixty-four were being manufactured in the shop, and the whole were to be boxed up and delivered together. Axtester v. Hough, 79 D. 229.

An entire contract cannot be within the statute as to part of it and without the statute as to the residue. An entire contract for the sale of goods which is as to a part of the goods within the statute is wholly within the operation of the statute. Id.

The fact that goods sold are to be boxed and transported to the place of delivery by the seller does not take the sale out of the operation of the statute. Id.

A sale of growing annual crops is a sale of chattels, it seems, within the meaning of the statute. Kingsley v. Holbrook, 86 D. 173.

Plaintiff made a parol contract with defendant, whereby the latter was to raise three acres of potatoes and deliver them to plaintiff at a stipulated price per bushel. In an action for non-delivery,—held, that it was a question for the jury to determine, whether, under the contract, the defendant was bound to raise the potatoes himself, in which case it would be a contract for work, labor and materials, and not within the statute; or whether he might procure them by purchase or otherwise, which would render it a contract of sale, and therefore void. Pittin v. Noyes, 2 R. 218.

Defendants went to the shop of plaintiff, wagon and carriage-makers, to purchase brewery trucks. Plaintiff having none on hand, ordered them with the defendants' assent from wagon-builders in another city. The trucks were accepted and paid for by plaintiff. Some alterations were made by plaintiff, at defendants' request, and a painter, employed by the defendants, painted their names and business on the sides of the trucks while on the plaintiff's premises. Held, a contract for sale of goods within the statute. Pawelski v. Hargreaves, 54 R. 162.

16. What is not.—Goods contracted for are not within the statute when they are not in existence at the time of the contract or where some act remains to be done to put them in a condition to be delivered. Gadsden v. Lance, 37 D. 548.

The seventeenth section of the statute of frauds of Charles II., which requires delivery by the vendor and acceptance by the vendee of part of the goods sold, or something given in earnest or part payment to bind the bargain, or some note or memorandum of the bargain, in writing to be signed by the parties, etc., in order to give validity to the contract, was never re-enacted in Texas, and is not a part of the law of that state. Cleveland v. Williams, 94 D. 274.

The parties entered into a parol agreement for the sale of a large quantity of bricks to be delivered within a month: after the expiration of the month the defendant called upon the plaintiff's agent, who had charge of the kiln, took away eight hundred of the bricks and told the agent that he would call for the remainder the following week. Defendant did not call for them, nor did the plaintiff separate the bricks from the rest of the kiln. Held, that the latter contract was not within the statute of frauds, as part of the goods had been delivered, and its terms could be ascertained by reference to the former contract. Damon v. Osborn, 11 D. 229.

17. Sales of goods to be manufactured.*—A contract for the sale of articles to be manufactured, or prepared for delivery by work and labor, and where the work and labor are a part of the contract, is not within the statute of frauds relative to the sale of goods, wares and merchandise. Reichelberger v. McCauley, 9 D. 514. S. P., Mixer v. Howarth, 32 D. 256; Parsons v. Loucks, 8 R. 517; Goddard v. Binney, 15 R. 112; Meincke v. Falk, 42 R. 722.

The statute of frauds applies to an oral contract for the sale of goods in existence at the time of making the contract, but not to an agreement to manufacture and deliver goods. Parsons v. Loucks, 8 R. 517.

A contract, if essentially one for sale of goods, is within the statute, whether the goods are then manufactured or not; but if it be essentially that the promiser is to manufacture and deliver the goods, although from his own materials, it is without the statute. Pittin v. Noyes, 97 D. 615.

An oral contract for sale and delivery of an article to be subsequently manufactured by the vendor is within the statute of frauds, unless the agreement calls for the peculiar skill, labor or care of the manufacturer, in which case it is for work and labor and not within the statute. Prescott v. Locke, 12 R. 55.

18. Necessity of memorandum.—Upon a joint sale to two, both vendees are principals, though the article sold might have been intended by them for the individual use of one; and therefore the undertaking of the other is not required by the statute of frauds to be in writing. Wainwright v. Strass, 40 D. 675.

A contract may be proved by parol, where the chattels have been delivered, and no writing is necessary. Sahman v. Mills, 51 D. 630.

* Contract to manufacture article, when no within statute of frauds, see note, 9 D. 188-190.

An oral contract for sale of personal property is valid, though under the statute of frauds some memorandum in writing signed by the defendant may be necessary to enable the plaintiff to enforce it. Hunter v. Giddings, 93 D. 54.

19. Execution of the memorandum.

—Signing, by the vendors, of a memorandum of a contract for the sale of goods, is a sufficient compliance with the statute of frauds. Russell v. Nicoll, 20 D. 670; Douglas v. Spears, 10 D. 588.

A memorandum of sale, written by a vendor in his book, and signed by him, and by the purchaser's agent in his own name, is a valid contract, not to be varied by parol. Wiener v. Whipple, 40 R. 775.

An entry made by the vendor in his book of sales, of the name of the buyer and the terms of the contract of sale, which was read to the agent of the vendee making the purchase, and assented to by him, is an insufficient memorandum within the statute, it not being signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. Bailey v. Ogden, 3 D. 509.

Under the statute, there must be a subscription by both parties, as well as an expression of the consideration. Corbitt v. Salem Gas-light Co., 25 R. 541.

A memorandum written by the broker employed to make the purchase, with a lead pencil in his book, in the presence of the vendor, the names of the vendor and vendee, and the terms being stated in the body of the memorandum, which is not subscribed by the parties, is sufficient within the statute. Merritt v. Olson, 7 D. 286.

A memorandum in writing signed by the party to be charged is not established by showing that the seller gave to the buyer a bill of items of the property, together with an order for the delivery of the goods where they were stored, and that the buyer stamped with a machine his name and the date thereon, without evidence showing when or for what purpose it was done. Boardman v. Spooner, 90 D. 196.

A telegram accepting an offer by telegraph to sell, together with a letter of same date signed by the same party and to the same effect, afford sufficient evidence of subscription by said party to take the case out of the statute. Trevor v. Wood, 93 D. 511.

A purchaser signed and delivered to the seller a written agreement to buy shares of stock from him on specified terms. The seller did not sign, but orally agreed to sell on those terms. The seller tendered the stock and requested the price, but the purchaser declined to fulfill. In an action to recover the purchase price—held, that the agreement was valid. Mason v. Decker, 28 R. 190.

Plaintiffs made defendant a verbal offer for a quantity of ice; defendant afterward telegraphed that he would accept the offer, and plaintiffs wrote to him inclosing a memorandum of the contract of sale for his signature, but defendant did not receive the letter, owing to a misdirection, until several days had elapsed, and meanwhile he had sold the ice to other parties. Plaintiffs seized the ice on a writ of replevin. Held, that there was no memorandum signed by the party to be charged within the statute; and that the seizure, by the officer, of the ice, and delivery to plaintiffs under the replevin process did not amount to a delivery and acceptance within the statute. Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 16 R. 462.

20. Its sufficiency, generally.

—Where, on a sale by commission merchants of goods of their principal, a bill of parcels is made out and delivered to the purchasers, stating them to be such, the acceptance of such bill is a sufficient recognition by the purchaser of the commission merchant's authority to sign his name, and the bill itself is a sufficient memorandum of the contract to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Batters v. Sellers, 9 D. 492.

The note or memorandum should contain a warranty of quality of articles sold, if any there be. The omission of such term cannot be supplied by parol, to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Peltier v. Collins, 20 D. 711.

The object of the memorandum is not merely to prove that there was a bargain, but to show what the bargain was, at least, the extent and entirety of the consideration for the promise. Id.

If the bought and sold note delivered by a broker materially differ, there is no valid contract. Id.

The note or memorandum must express the price upon which the sale was effected, or it will be insufficient. Id. v. Stanton, 40 D. 698.

Superadding to the terms of the contract words expressing an obligation which the law implies does not change the nature or extent of the obligation or the remedy upon it. Reed v. Randall, 86 D. 305.

Where goods are sold, the sale to be subject to the buyer's approval an entry in the broker's books reciting the sale, but omitting to state that the sale was to be subject to the buyer's approval is defective, and does not take the case out of the statute. Boardman v. Spooner, 90 D. 196.

A memorandum signed by A. alone, whereby he agrees to furnish B. with a specified quantity of ice, at a specified price per ton, but not specifying time of delivery or of payment is sufficient under the statute, and not to be varied by parol proof of an agreement for a particular time of delivery or payment. Williams v. Robinson, 40 R. 352.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

The plaintiff brought action for the non-performance of an agreement contained in the following memorandum, signed by the defendants: "New York, 13th May 1861. We agree to deliver P. S. Justice one thousand Enfield pattern rifles, with bayonets, no other extras, in New York, at eighteen dollars each, cash upon such delivery; said rifles to be shipped from Liverpool not later than 1st July, and before if possible. W. BAILEY LANG & Co." Held, that this memorandum was sufficient to bind the defendants; that there was a good and sufficient consideration for their obligation and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover. Justice v. Lang, 1 R. 576.

The defendants orally bargained with Freeman, claimed by them to be the agent of the plaintiffs, and by the plaintiffs to be a broker, for the purchase from the plaintiffs of pork at a price exceeding $50. Freeman telegraphed to the plaintiffs: "Mendel five bellies, eight. Ehrlich offers seven-eights ten bellies lighter than last." On the same day he made the following entry in his entry book: "Sold account C. H. North & Co., Mendel, 5 bellies, 8." Held, not a sufficient memorandum to comply with the statute. North v. Mendel, 54 R. 879.

21. What payment or part payment will satisfy the statute.*—The statute provided that contracts for the sale of goods for fifty dollars or upward shall be void unless a memorandum be made or there be a delivery and receipt of part of the goods, or, "unless the buyer shall at the time pay some part of the purchase-money." Held, that to take a parol contract out of the operation of the statute, payment must be made "at the time" of the contract, or, if made subsequently, it must be made and received for the express purpose of fulfilling the statute, or when made the parties must substantially re-state and re-affirm the terms of the contract. Hunter v. Wetzel, 15 R. 508.

Parties made an oral contract for the sale of goods, void under the statute. Subsequently the purchaser gave and the seller accepted a check for a part of the price. At that time the essential terms of the original contract were restated. The check was good when delivered, and was duly paid. Held, a payment, and "at the time" of the contract. Hunter v. Wetzel, 38 R. 544.

22. What delivery will satisfy the statute.†—Delivery of an article sold takes the contract out of the statute of frauds. Houghtaling v. Ball, 59 D. 331.

* Effect of payment of installment of price to take a sale out of the statute, see note, 56 D. 643-645.

† See monographic note on the sufficiency of delivery and acceptance to take a verbal contract for sale of goods out of statute of frauds, 49 D. 335-340. See also notes, 55 D. 575; 57 R. 16-22.

Effect of symbolical delivery to satisfy the statute of frauds, see note, 49 D. 336-338.

Delivery and acceptance of part of the goods need not be at the time of the sale in order to render the contract valid without a memorandum; under the statute they may be made afterward. McKnight v. Dunlop, 55 D. 370.

Actual or manual delivery of goods is not necessary in order to satisfy the statute where they are ponderous and incapable of being handed over from one to another, and where the buyer so far accepts them as to treat them as his own; or where the delivery is symbolical; or where actual delivery is impracticable, and can only be by such symbolical means as the circumstances of the case will allow. Atwell v. Miller, 61 D. 294.

Where a contract of sale is verbal, the delivery of the goods, after acceptance, to a carrier designated by the buyer, is sufficient to satisfy the statute. Cross v. O'Donnell, 4 R. 721.

Existence of a delivery sufficient to take a sale out of the statute is a question of fact for the jury, under the direction of the court. Houghtaling v. Ball, 59 D. 331; Godchaux v. Melford, 85 D. 178.

The continued change of possession required by the statute to validate a sale of goods and chattels must be actual, and not constructive. Fitzgerald v. Gorham, 60 D. 616.

The California statute providing that a sale of chattels not accompanied by "an actual and continued change of possession" shall be conclusive evidence of fraud against creditors or bona fide purchasers, does not require that the vendor, under penalty of forfeiture of the chattels, shall never afterwards have any control over or use of them. The word "actual" was designed to exclude the idea of a mere formal change of possession, and the word "continued," to exclude the idea of a mere temporary change. (Rule of Bacon v. Scannell, 9 Cal. 272, overruled.) Stevens v. Irwin, 76 D. 500.

To make a sale valid under that statute, delivery must be made, the vendee must take actual possession, that possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee. It must be continuous; not taken to be surrendered back; not formal, but substantial. But it need not continue indefinitely when it is bona fide and openly taken, and is kept for such a length of time as to give general advertisement to the status of the property, and the claim to it by the vendee. Id.

A sale of chattels, where the vendee buys bona fide, takes possession openly, and holds exclusive possession for a year or more, is not void as to the creditors of the vendor under that statute, because the vendee afterwards puts the property into the possession of the vendor, who is his attorney in fact. Id.

For Index to Notes in American Decisions and American Reports, see Volume I.

Where one person by a written contract sold to another trees growing upon the former's land, and the latter, after removing certain of the trees, resold the remainder to the owner of the land by a parol contract, the sale is a contract for the sale of goods, and the purchaser under said parol contract being in possession of the land upon which the trees were growing, the sale eo instanti, by force of law, gave possession of the trees to the defendant, and the delivery was perfect. Smith v. Bryan, 59 D. 104.

Parties orally agreed for the purchase and sale of a lot of cotton, consisting of six bales, weighed and stored in a warehouse, and the seller gave the purchaser an order on the warehouseman for it. The seller notified the warehouseman of the sale and the purchaser applied to him for the cotton, but delivery was postponed by the agreement of the warehouseman and the purchaser until the next morning. No money passed, and no other writing was executed. Held, a valid delivery and acceptance. King v. Jarman, 37 R. 11.

23. What will not. — A sale of chattels without immediate delivery is void against creditors, by the statute of frauds, though no levy is made before a subsequent delivery. Chenery v. Palmer, 65 D. 493.

An actual delivery of the goods, or a part of them, is not always required by the statute of frauds, but a virtual or constructive delivery may be sufficient. Those circumstances which ought to be held tantamount to an actual delivery, ought, however, to be so strong and unequivocal, as to leave no doubt of the intent of the parties. An agreement with the vendor about the storage of the goods, and the delivery by him of the import entry to the agent of the vendee, are not sufficiently certain to amount to a constructive delivery, or to afford an inducium of ownership. Bailey v. Ogden, 3 D. 509.

Where a person in Massachusetts sells some hides in a New York warehouse, and gives a bill of the goods and an order on the warehouseman to the buyer, without notifying the warehouseman, this is not such a delivery to and acceptance by the buyer as satisfies the statute of frauds. Boardman v. Spooner, 90 D. 196.

An agent of a principal residing in Ohio contracted with a person residing in Indiana to sell him goods exceeding $50 in price. Nothing was said as to the manner of shipment. There was no memorandum, earnest money, nor payment, and the vendee did not receive any part of the goods. The principal afterward in Ohio, without the knowledge or assent of the vendee, shipped a part of the goods to the vendee, who refused to receive them. Held, that the contract was an Indiana contract; that it was an entire contract, and the vendee was not bound to accept part; that the delivery to the carrier, under the circumstances, was not a legal delivery to the vendee; and that the contract was void under the statute of frauds. Hawman v. Nye, 30 R. 199.

24. Necessity and sufficiency of acceptance by buyer — 1. Necessity. — Under that section of the statute of frauds which provides that "no contract for the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise for the price of thirty dollars or more shall be allowed to be good unless the purchaser shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment," or some writing properly signed, a mere delivery of goods to the purchaser will not be sufficient. There must further be an acceptance by the purchaser, else he will not be bound. Maxwell v. Brown, 63 D. 605. S. P., Caulkins v. Hellman, 7 R. 461.

To constitute an acceptance and receipt within the statute in case of a verbal sale of goods, there must be a delivery of the goods with intent to vest the right of possession in the vendee, and there must be an actual acceptance by the latter with intent to take possession as owner. Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 96 D. 533.

Where plaintiff called upon defendant and offered to sell him a cargo of coal at a certain rate, defendant to pay the freight, which offer the defendant accepted, and plaintiff accordingly sent him the coal by a vessel which was wrecked on the way, thereby preventing defendant from receiving the same, plaintiff cannot maintain an action against him for the purchase price; as under the statute of frauds, in the absence of a written memorandum of sale, there would have to be an acceptance by the buyer as well as a delivery by the seller. Maxwell v. Brown, 63 D. 605.

Defendants verbally ordered lumber of plaintiffs, to be taken from certain lots designated by defendants in plaintiffs' yard, and to be cut by plaintiffs into sizes required by defendants and placed on plaintiffs' dock, and notice to be given to defendants, who agreed thereupon to take it. Plaintiffs filled the order, placed the lumber on the dock and gave notice to defendants, as agreed, but before they removed it, it was accidentally burned. Held, that the contract was one of sale under the statute of frauds; that there was no receipt and acceptance of the lumber by defendants; that the title thereto had not passed, and that defendants were not liable for the price agreed to be paid. Cooke v. Millard, 22 R. 619.

2. Sufficiency. — Acceptance within the meaning of the statute of frauds, must be by some clear and unequivocal act of the party to be charged, or of his agent duly authorized to receive the property. Snice v. Warner, 43 D. 417.

Delivery and acceptance, such as will take a sale out of the statute, cannot be shown by words; some acts transferring possession are necessary. Shindler v. Houston, 49 D. 316.

The acceptance and actual receipt of the goods sold, or some part of them, by the vendee, must be intended by the parties to effect a final and complete change of property in order to take the case out of the statute. Hesse v. Jordan, 17 R. 578.

Delivery of goods to, and their acceptance by, a carrier named by the purchaser is a sufficient receipt and acceptance to take the sale out of the statute. Spencer v. Hale, 73 D. 309. But see to the contrary, Johnson v. Cuttle, 7 R. 545.

The acceptance and receipt required by the statute, may be made by an agent of the buyer empowered for that purpose, but an agency to so accept and receive cannot be inferred from the fact that the buyer has designated a particular carrier to whom the property is to be delivered for the purpose of transportation. Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 96 D. 533.

In case of goods sold under a verbal contract, the fact that the vendee sold, or offered to sell, such goods at their place of destination in anticipation of their arrival does not amount to such an assumption of authority or ownership over them as will constitute an acceptance and receipt within the statute of frauds. Id.

An oral agreement to purchase all the leather of a certain thickness in a large pile of leather, the same to be selected by the seller, the delivery of a part of the leather thus selected to a common carrier not expressly authorized by the purchaser to accept it, and the acceptance by the purchaser of that part from the carrier, without any intention to accept the remainder, do not constitute a sufficient acceptance to take the sale out of the statute of frauds. Atherton v. Newhall, 26 R. 47.

3. Rights and Liabilities of the Parties; and herein of Bona Fide Purchasers.

25. Of the seller; and herein of his Lien. — A vendor who acts as seller and buyer and as agent for the vendee must exercise the utmost degree of good faith. Weaver v. Lapeley, 94 D. 671.

The title of a vendor of goods is superior and will prevail, where the goods had come to the possession of the vendee, and ascertaining his insolvency, he deposited them in his warehouse subject to the order of the vendor, and notified him thereof by letter, although before the vendor had signified his assent the goods were attached by another creditor. Sturtevant v. Orser, 82 D. 321.

A vendor has a lien on the goods for the price if no credit is given, and the goods are not actually delivered. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754.

The vendor's lien is waived by giving credit for the price. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754; Bras v. Torrey, 13 D. 279.

Unless credit in a sale is expressly given, which is a waiver of any right to demand immediate payment, the vendor's lien continues to exist; and if the buyer is insolvent when he demands delivery, the seller may refuse to deliver, even when credit has been given. Southwestern Freight etc. Co. v. Standard, 100 D. 255.

Where goods are sold to be paid for on delivery, if upon delivery the vendee refuses to pay for them, the vendor has a lien for the price, and may resume possession of the goods. Palmer v. Hand, 7 D. 392.

If before the delivery is completed the vendee sells or pledges the goods to a third person for value, but without notice to the vendor, the lien the latter may have is not affected, and he can recover from such subsequent purchaser. Id.

A vendor of personalty has no lien, after an absolute delivery, for the unpaid purchase money. Lupin v. Marie, 21 D. 256.

A vendor has no lien on goods in case of the purchaser's insolvency, where before the insolvency the goods have been delivered to an agent for the purchaser, and the latter has sold them and assigned the contract to a third person for value, and directed the agent to deliver them, and the agent has accordingly charged the goods to the assignee. Ford v. Sproule, 12 D. 439.

If a vendor has no lien or privilege on goods at the place where he sells them, he acquires none by their removal elsewhere. Whiston v. Stodder, 13 D. 281.

A vendor of movable goods has, by the civil law, a lien on them while they remain in the possession of the vendee. Hobson v. Davidson, 13 D. 294.

The vendor's civil law privilege upon movables does not attach at common law, under which he who sells and delivers a movable is, in the distribution of assets of a succession among creditors, a mere ordinary creditor for the price. Copley v. Sanford, 46 D. 548.

The vendor may resume his lien in case of insolvency of the vendee before payment, though credit is given, and may retain the goods, if in his actual possession, or stop them in transitu. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754; Merchants' etc. Bank v. Hewitt, 66 D. 49.

In case of a sale where title has passed, and the goods have been constructively delivered, possession cannot be coerced until payment is made, for as long as the vendor retains and has not surrendered possession, his lien exists; and though there may be a delivery which will pass the title, it will not necessarily destroy the lien. Southwestern Freight etc. Co. v. Standard, 100 D. 255.

market overt here, a purchase for a valuable consideration and without notice vests no higher title in the vendee than was possessed by the vendor, and in the case of a purchase made in a foreign country, the general principle of law applies, unless some local law be shown which would affect the property. Wheehright v. Depeyster, 3 D. 345. S. P., Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541; McMahon v. Sloan 51 D. 601; Agnew v. Johnson, 62 D. 303.

When the same goods are sold to two different persons, by conveyances, equally valid, he who first lawfully acquires the possession will hold them against the other. Lawfar v. Sumner, 9 D. 119; Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686; Jewett v. Lincoln, 31 D. 36; Winslow v. Leonard, 62 D. 354; Brown v. Pierce, 93 D. 57.

A fraudulent purchaser acquires no title to goods purchased, as against the defrauded vendor. Root v. French, 28 D. 482; Cary v. Hotelling, 37 D. 323.

A mortgage of slaves subsisted when the mortgagor, claiming full title, sold them for a full consideration; though as to the mortgagee, the sale transferred only an equitable interest, yet, as between the vendor and vendee, the sale passed the absolute title to the vendee, and therefore, when subsequently the mortgagor obtained his discharge under the insolvent law, and purchased the slaves from the mortgagee, the title thus acquired will inure to the benefit of the vendee. Dorsey v. Gassaway, 3 D. 557.

A purchase of goods for two may be for their equal, without being for their joint benefit. Hull v. Connolly, 15 D. 612.

A sale of a chose in action vests no legal title in the assignee, and if tainted with iniquity, fraud, or champerty, in its origin, will not receive the aid of equity in its enforcement. Fletcher v. Ferrel, 35 D. 143.

A sale of wood on a tract of land, with a provision that it is to be got off within two years, does not entitle the purchaser or his vendee to take away any wood after that time, though it may have been cut before; nor can he or his vendee recover any compensation for wood so cut which the landowner will not suffer to be removed. Kemble v. Dresser, 35 D. 364.

A purchaser at an administrator's sale of a "drill machine," which unknown to the parties, contained money and other valuables, secreted there by the decedent, passes to the buyer the right to the machine and every constituent part of it, but not to the valuables, which, upon discovery, are held by him as treasure-trove, for the personal representative of the deceased owner. Hutchmacher v. Harris, 80 D. 502.

One who takes property from a fraudulent purchaser in payment of or as security for a pre-existing debt against such fraudulent purchaser, cannot hold it against the vendor. Nor will the creditor of the fraudulent vendee, who levies on and sells the property fraudulently obtained, on an execution against the fraudulent vendee, and who becomes the purchaser at execution sale, acquire any title. But a bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent vendee, paying a valuable consideration, without notice of the fraud, in the usual course of trade, can hold the property against the original vendor. Sargent v. Sturm, 83 D. 118.

A stipulation by the vendee of a newspaper to pay "all of the outstanding liabilities" of the paper, will not make the vendee liable for the damages for libel subsequently recovered against the vendor, in a suit pending when the sale of the paper was made. Perret v. King, 31 R. 240.

On a contract by a corporation to purchase certain goods subject to inspection and approval by its agent, the corporation is liable if the agent fraudulently or in bad faith disapproves the goods. Lynn v. Baltimore and O. R. R. Co., 45 R. 741.

A conditional vendee in possession of cattle, under an agreement that he is to keep, feed and work them until a specified time, and then restore them to the vendor, or that if he pays a certain sum by that time, the vendor is to release his right to them, may sell the same within the time, with such right as he has. Vincent v. Cornell, 23 D. 653.

The vendor cannot maintain trover for such cattle against such purchaser from the vendee, he having no knowledge of the agreement. Id.

The purchaser would be liable in trover after demand made after the expiration of the time, and non-payment of the sum specified, if the cattle were in his possession. Id.

27. What protection is accorded to bona fide purchasers.—One who bona fide, and for a valuable consideration, purchases of the mortgagee a slave held as security for money advanced, and without notice of the complainant's title, will be protected in equity as well as at law. Bell v. Beeman, 9 D. 604.

Purchasers without notice are not entitled to protection, further than as they have actually paid the purchase money. Hoffman v. Strohecker, 32 D. 740.

The general owner cannot maintain replevin or trover against a bona fide purchaser from his bailee if he placed the property in the hands of the bailee for any other than a legitimate purpose, or if he is fairly chargeable with any negligence by means of which the bailee was enabled to impose upon the purchaser. Burton v. Curyea, 89 D. 350.

Temporary delivery of possession of a chattel to a purchaser who, after retaining it for a few hours, redelivers it or permits it to return to the possession of the vendor does not pass the property as against a second purchaser from the vendor who subsequently takes possession. Fletcher v. Howard, 16 D. 686.

Continued change of possession is necessary to transfer the title as against a subsequent purchaser for value. Id.

A verbal sale of standing trees is not binding on a subsequent purchaser without notice. Gardiner Mfg Co. v. Heald, 17 D. 243.

A fraudulent sale is not binding upon a subsequent bona fide purchaser from the vendor. Newson v. Lyman, 20 D. 156.

A subsequent purchaser of a personal chattel cannot set aside a prior conveyance to another's intestate on the ground of fraud. Green v. Kornegoy, 67 D. 261.

A sale voidable by the vendor for fraud, cannot be set aside by the vendor as to a bona fide purchaser from the vendee, for value, and without notice of the fraud. Rosley v. Bigelow, 23 D. 607; Root v. French, 23 D. 482; Wineland v. Coonce, 32 D. 320; Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541; Jennings v. Gage, 56 D. 476; Sinclair v. Healy, 80 D. 589; Fascett v. Osborn, 83 D. 278; Stadfield v. Huntsman, 87 R. 661; LeGrand v. Buysaula Nat. Bank, 60 R. 140; and a party making advances on the security of the goods in good faith, without notice of any fraud, is a bona fide purchaser under this rule. Hoffman v. Noble, 39 D. 711; but this principle does not apply to sales upon condition, and where the original owner has never consented to the transfer of the property. Jennings v. Gage, 56 D. 476.

A purchaser of personal property from one in possession under a sale upon an unfulfilled condition gets only the conditional title of his vendor, although he buys in good faith and in ignorance of the condition. Sumner v. Woods, 42 R. 104.

A purchaser of goods from a fraudulent vendor may have the legal and beneficial ownership therein, and may transfer it to a bona fide purchaser at any time before the creditors of the fraudulent vendor take steps to divest him of the property. Sharp v. Jones, 81 D. 359.

In consideration of supplies, A., by a written instrument, not recorded, sold to B. so much of a growing crop of cotton as would be sufficient to make two bales of lint cotton, each weighing not less than 500 pounds, the same to be gathered, prepared for market and delivered by the first of the next December. C., an execution creditor, levied on seed cotton in a pen, part of the crop, before the first of December. Held, that C.'s levy had preference, although A., before the levy, intended to gin, bale and deliver that particular cotton to B. Williamson v. Steele, 31 R. 652.

Williams bought of plaintiffs, at Savannah, Georgia, 118 bales of cotton, giving therefor his checks on Bryan & Hunter, of the same place, having previously put the latter in funds by his draft on defendants to their order, and otherwise. Plaintiff delivered sixty bales to Williams, and it was shipped by Williams to defendants, at New York, the bill of lading being in his name and having attached thereto the draft indorsed by B. & H. Defendants paid the draft on presentation, the amount being more than the price of the sixty bales, and the transaction being according to their custom with Williams, and received the cotton without knowledge of any claim on it. One of the checks on B. & H., being post-dated, was dishonored, and plaintiffs brought replevin for forty-five bales, part of the sixty, relying on a statute of Georgia which provides that "cotton, rice, and other products sold by planters and commission merchants on cash sale shall not be considered as the property of the buyer, or the ownership given up, until the same shall be fully paid for, although it may have been delivered into the possession of the buyer." Held, that the action could not be maintained; that assuming that the statute was part of the contract, it simply made the delivery conditional, affected nothing but the delivery, and could not affect the rights of a bona fide purchaser in this state; and the sale being absolute and unconditional, title passed to defendants. Comer v. Cunningham, 33 R. 626.

The plaintiff in good faith purchased of defendant a non-negotiable certificate of a scrip dividend of a corporation. The certificate had been illegally issued, and so decreed by the Court of Chancery. Held, that plaintiff could recover the purchase-money from defendant. Wood v. Sheldon, 36 R. 523.

On receipt of $75 a piano was delivered by C. to N., under a writing reciting a hiring, and promising quarterly payments of $50 each in addition, so long as it should be kept, to return it on demand, not to remove it without C.'s consent, and to keep it insured; also stipulating that on further payment of $350 in equal monthly installments the piano was to become N.'s. N. sold the piano to a purchaser in good faith. Held, that the latter got title, the agreement not having been recorded. Knittel v. Cushing, 44 R. 598.

23. Who are deemed to be bona fide purchasers.—In order that a purchaser from a fraudulent vendee may be protected, he must have parted with value upon the apparent title of the wrong-doer and his right to dispose of the property. Barnard v. Campbell, 17 R. 208.

A creditor who accepts goods in payment of a pre-existing debt is a purchaser for valuable consideration within the meaning of the rule that a bona fide purchaser of personal property for value without notice, from a vendee who obtained it by means of fraudulent representations, takes a good title as against the original vendor. Butters v. Houghton, 89 D. 401.

29. Who are not so deemed. — Where goods are obtained by fraud, the vendor may reclaim them against all persons except a bona fide purchaser without notice, and an officer who takes them in behalf of creditors by legal process does not come within the exception. Atwood v. Dearborn, 79 D. 755.

There can be no innocent purchase of void bonds, where the defect is a matter of law, with a knowledge of which every person is chargeable. Town of Rochester v. Alfred Bank, 80 D. 746.

Where a purchaser has obtained property from a fraudulent vendee in payment of a pre-existing debt, or as an execution creditor, it is unnecessary, in an action by the original vendor against said purchaser to recover the property, to prove, on the trial, that he participated in the fraud of the fraudulent vendee. Sargent v. Sturm, 83 D. 118.

A party who designedly abstains from making inquiry, for the purpose of avoiding knowledge, will not be regarded as a bona fide purchaser without notice, and is not thereby relieved from the effects of the knowledge his inquiries would have developed. Allen v. McCalla, 96 D. 56.

The transfer of a bill of lading as mere collateral security for a pre-existing debt does not make the transferee a purchaser for value. Loeb v. Peters, 35 R. 17.

30. Purchases from one having no title.* — 1. General rules. — A bona fide purchaser from one who has no title or authority to sell, acquires no title against the true owner. Williams v. Merle, 25 D. 604; Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541; Burton v. Curyea, 89 D. 350; Wilson v. Crocker, 97 D. 389; even when the sale is made or confirmed by the transfer of a bill of lading or other document symbolizing and describing the property sold. Burton v. Curyea, 89 D. 350.

No one can transfer to another by sale, a right of ownership in a thing wherein he himself had not a right of property, except in the instances of cash, bank bills, checks and notes payable to bearer or transferable by delivery, in the ordinary course of business to a person taking them bona fide, and paying value. Fawcett v. Osborn, 83 D. 278; Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541.

The owner of property cannot be divested of it except by his consent, or by operation of law. Williams v. Merle, 25 D. 604.

* See monographic note on rights of purchaser of chattels, from one having no authority to sell, 25 D. 606-616.

A certificate of the inspector of pot and pearl ashes, under the statute, does not determine the title so as to protect a bona fide purchaser. Id.

An honest purchaser under a defective title cannot hold against the true owner. Saltus v. Everett, 32 D. 541.

A person to whom personal property is transferred, which property had been in the mere possession of another, but not used for the purposes of trade, must take it at the hazard of a demand by the proper owner. Such possession, though indicative of title, is not title. Agnew v. Johnson, 62 D. 303.

If a bailee sell property to an innocent purchaser, without notice, the sale transfers no right of property as against the bailor, and the latter may have recourse either to the bailee or his vendee. Chism v. Woods, 3 D. 740; Bailey v. Shaw, 55 D. 241; Burton v. Curyea, 89 D. 350.

A purchaser of personalty with notice that his vendor is not to have the title to the articles until the performance of certain conditions, acquires no title as against the person on whose behalf performance was to be made, he being the owner of the articles. Waterston v. Getchell, 17 D. 251.

A sale and delivery of goods, on condition that title shall not vest in the vendee until payment of the price, passes no title until the condition is performed; and the vendor, if guilty of no laches, may reclaim the property, even from one who has purchased from his vendee in good faith and without notice. Burbank v. Crocker, 66 D. 470; Lane v. Borland, 31 D. 33; Zuchtmann v. Roberts, 12 R. 663; Marvin Safe Co. v. Norton, 57 R. 566. If such a transaction be regarded as a sale and mortgage back, the mortgage must nevertheless prevail against a bona fide purchaser from the mortgagor in possession, though he has no notice of the mortgage. Lane v. Borland, 31 D. 33.

The original vendor, after notice to a second purchaser that he owns part of the goods, may maintain an action against him for a return of the goods, or their value, without more particularly designating the articles claimed by him, where the goods have been sold to the first purchaser upon condition that no title should vest in him until payment of the purchase price. Burbank v. Crocker, 66 D. 470.

2. Illustrations. — Where T., by means of fraudulent representations to P., procures the sale to himself of a portion of certain chattels owned by P., but of which T. at the time is in lawful possession, and P. does no act to disaffirm T's title on the ground of such fraud. T. may reclaim and maintain possession of the entire portion so sold to himself against a subsequent bona fide purchaser to whom P. has sold and delivered part of the same under the mistaken belief that the total quantity of the chattels was sufficient to satisfy both sales, although such belief was induced by the fraudulent representations of T.; and the second purchaser, in an action against P. on the warranty of title implied in the sale to himself, may recover the value to the chattels so reclaimed from him by T. Brown v. Pierce, 93 D. 57.

Goods were bought by means of fraud under such circumstances as entitled the vendor to treat the whole transaction as void, and the vendee, upon getting possession, immediately transferred them, by general assignment of all his property, to an assignee. Held, that the vendor could maintain replevin against the assignee. Farley v. Lincoln, 12 R. 182.

B. sold a wagon to H. on condition that it should remain the property of B. till paid for. Plaintiff repaired it for H. by putting in new wheels and axles. H. took it from plaintiff's possession without his knowledge or consent, and afterwards agreed with plaintiff that the "running part" of said wagon should remain the property of plaintiff until paid for. H. never paid either B. or plaintiff and neither had notice of the other's claim. B. took the wagon back from H. and sold it to defendant, who did not know of plaintiff's claim. Held, that defendant was liable in trover for the wheels and axles. Clark v. Wells, 12 R. 187.

J. S., who pretended to represent B. & Co., called upon D. and contracted with him for wool to be consigned to B. & Co. at P. J. S. also called upon B. & Co. and pretended to be the son of D., and contracted to sell them wool. The wool was shipped by D., consigned to B. & Co., but was received by J. S., who delivered it to B. & Co. and received the value of it. Held, that D.'s title was not divested and that B. & Co. were liable to him. Barker v. Dinmore, 13 R. 607.

A., falsely representing himself to be a member of a firm, bought in the name of the firm goods from B, who sent them by a carrier to the firm. On the refusal of the firm to receive them, A. sold them to C., to whom they were delivered by the carrier at A.'s request. Held, that A. had no title to the goods, and that an action for their conversion would lie by B. against C., although the latter was a purchaser in good faith. Moody v. Blake, 19 R. 394.

H., relying on the representations of R. that he was the agent of L., agreed to sell chattels of his to L., on credit, delivered them to L., and received part of the price from R. R. was not such agent and had no authority to purchase for L. L. bought the chattels from R. without knowledge of the fraud. Held, that title did not pass, and that H. could recover their value of L., less the amount paid by R. Hamel v. Letcher, 41 R. 519.

The owner of a diamond ring put it in the hands of a jeweller to match it, or failing in that, to get an offer for it. The jeweller sold it to the defendants. Held, that even if the defendants acted in good faith, they got no title. Levi v. Booth, 42 R. 332.

The plaintiff, refusing to sell to C., a broker, delivered goods to him on his representation that they were for an undisclosed principal in good credit, entering and billing them as a sale to C. It turning out that there was no such principal,—held, that the plaintiff might maintain replevin for the goods from the defendant, C.'s bona fide pledgee. Rodliff v. Dallinger, 55 R. 439.

31. Purchaser from a thief.*—No title can pass through a thief. Those who buy of him should be compelled to give up the property, unless they have converted it, when they should be held for its value. Factors and agents should be held to the same accountability. Kock v. Bransch, 100 D. 324.

The owner of stolen property may maintain an action for its value against a person who has innocently bought it from the thief, and resold it in good faith, if the property itself has passed beyond the reach of the owner. Sharp v. Parks, 95 D. 565.

A purchaser of stolen goods, either directly from the thief or from any other person, although in the ordinary course of trade and in good faith, will not acquire title as against the owner; and a carrier or bailee stands in no better position than a purchaser. Bassett v. Spofford, 6 R. 101.

Acquisition of title by sale in market overt, of stolen property, is not recognized in this country. Pawcett v. Osborn, 83 D. 278; Rogers v. Huie, 54 D. 300; Carmichael v. Buck, 70 D. 226; Worthy v. Johnson, 52 D. 399.

A sale of a government bond by a thief to a purchaser in good faith, for value, without notice, passes a good title. Sections 62 and 64 of the criminal code of Illinois do not change the rule of the common law that the bona fide holder of money or negotiable paper transferable by mere delivery, and not overdue, who has taken it in the usual course of business, and for a valuable consideration, acquires a perfect title. Jones v. Nellis, 89 D. 389.

32. Duty to make inquiry.—One proposing to buy an interest in a business and a stock of goods, having ample opportunity to examine and investigate, may not rely on the seller's representations as to value of the goods or extent of the business. Poland v. Brounell, 41 R. 215.

Notice to one of two joint purchasers concerning terms of sale is notice to both.

*Purchase from a thief—market overt, see note. 25 D. 605-610.

Hadley v. Clinton County Importing Co., 82 D. 454.

The law prescribes the manner in which property belonging to the United States is to be sold, and parties dealing with agents or officers of the government in this regard are bound to know the extent of their authority. Johnson v. Friebe, 96 D. 508.

Bare possession of a horse by an army officer with consent of the quartermaster having charge of horses belonging to the government, and the sale of such horse by him to another, though a bona fide purchaser, are not sufficient to pass title to the purchaser. Id.

II. DELIVERY AND PAYMENT. ACCEPTANCE.

1. In general.

33. Necessity of delivery.*—Personal property passes by delivery only, and to make a sale of it valid, there must be a delivery. Boetick v. Keiser, 20 D. 237; unless the property at the time of the transfer is abroad and incapable of delivery, in which case the vendee may take possession within a reasonable time after the property comes within his reach. Thuret v. Jenkins, 12 D. 508.

Delivery is not essential, as between parties, to complete a sale of personal property and the passing of a title when nothing remains to be done but for the purchaser to take possession; but as to creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers, a delivery is indispensable to complete the sale. Corgan v. Freese, 89 D. 286; Peabody v. Carroll, 13 D. 305; Wilson v. Hooper, 38 D. 366; Hooban v. Bidwell, 47 D. 386; Danley v. Recker, 50 D. 242; Griffin v. Chubb, 58 D. 85; Winslow v. Leonard, 82 D. 354; Call v. Gray, 75 D. 141; Kohl v. Lindley, 89 D. 294.

Delivery is necessary to complete a sale, so far as the rights of a second purchaser or judgment creditor without notice are concerned. Ludwig v. Fuller, 35 D. 245.

A sale without delivery is valid against the vendor. Webber v. Davis, 69 D. 87.

Delivery is not necessary to pass the title, as between the parties to the sale, if the purchase price has been paid. Costar v. Davies, 46 D. 311.

Where goods are purchased in a retail store, it is necessary, in order to vest the title in the vendee, and make the sale valid as against the creditors of the vendor, that the goods sold should be separated from the bulk of the other goods, and that possession should be delivered with as little delay as is consistent with the nature of the articles purchased. Eagle v. Eichelberger, 31 D. 449.

A marked distinction exists between delivery to pass property in goods to a purchaser, and the actual delivery which will destroy the vendor's lien. Arnold v. Delano, 50 D. 754.

A mere intention of the vendor to deliver to the vendee certain specific goods is not a sufficient identification thereof to pass the title. Golder v. Ogden, 53 D. 618.

Mere contract to sell personal property without any delivery, either actual or symbolical, does not pass the title as against third persons, although it may have that effect as against the vendor. Brown v. Pierce, 93 D. 57.

Want of delivery may be evidence of fraud, but is not per se conclusive of it. Cocke v. Chapman, 44 D. 536.

Where personal property is sold to be paid for when delivered, and a part only is delivered under the contract, the property in the part not delivered still remains in the vendor. Lewis v. Ross, 59 D. 49.

34. Time and place of delivery.—
1. Time.—Under the statute of frauds, a contract for the sale of goods need not specify time or place of delivery; but if plaintiff testifies that time or place was agreed upon, and the contract does not specify it, he cannot recover on it. Smith v. Shell, 52 R. 365.

A contract providing for the delivery of a spinning machine at a time and place certain, is sufficiently complied with, if such machine is delivered and received without objection, at a subsequent time. Baldwin v. Farnsworth, 25 D. 252.

A vendor engaging to deliver a chattel has no right to require a demand from the vendee, but must tender the chattel at the time specified. Wagers v. Dickey, 49 D. 467.

A reasonable time in which to complete delivery of cattle must be given where they have been sold in good faith, but are roaming at large over immense uninclosed plains. Under the rodeo laws of California, a reasonable time after the sale must be given in which to prepare for a rodeo, and to give the proper notices thereof, so that the cattle purchased may be separated from stock owned by others, and be properly marked and branded. In the mean time, the rights of the purchaser will be protected; because such a sale, under these circumstances, is not fraudulent as against the creditors of the vendor, merely because the sale is not followed by an immediate delivery of possession. Walden v. Murdock, 83 D. 135.

Reasonable time in which to prepare for a rodeo for the purpose of marking and branding cattle, will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case, but one day's time is clearly insufficient. Id.

The object of counter-branding cattle, or, in lieu thereof, to give a "written descriptive bill of sale," is to show what animals have been sold, and to stop the vendor from subsequently claiming them, because they carry his mark and brand. It does not dispense with the delivery required by law, to make the sale valid as against creditors and subsequent purchasers. Ib.

The rodeo laws only require counterbranding by a seller of cattle, or a descriptive bill of sale, and not a branding by the purchaser. Ib.

2. Place.—If no place of delivery is mentioned in a contract to deliver specific articles at a day certain, the creditor has the right to appoint the place. Aldrich v. Albee, 10 D. 45.

The place of delivery of articles stipulated in a sealed contract is a condition precedent merely, imposed upon the party bound, which may be waived by the party entitled to its performance without producing any alteration of the original contract. McCombe v. McKennan, 37 D. 505.

An agreement to accept delivery at a place other than that specified in the original contract does not constitute a new contract. Ib.

Covenant may be sustained upon a contract under seal notwithstanding by subsequent consent of the parties the place at which the articles called for were to be delivered was altered, and performance may be shown by evidence of a delivery at the place agreed upon. Ib.

The place of delivery mentioned in a written contract of sale may be changed by a subsequent parol agreement. Hunt v. Thurman, 40 D. 683.

35. What is a sufficient delivery.—Delivery is a fact dependent upon intention, and must be determined by the jury from a consideration of the whole evidence. Byer v. Byer, 41 D. 410.

To constitute delivery, it must be such as waives the vendor's lien. Messer v. Woodman, 53 D. 241.

In determining whether delivery has been made, regard must be had to all the facts bearing upon the particular question, and especially to the character of the transaction in which the parties may have been engaged, to ascertain whether the delivery was such as the nature of the case admitted. Hall v. Richardson, 77 D. 303.

Slight evidence of a delivery is sufficient to support a bona fide sale for value. Obtaining possession by the vendee, with the vendor's consent, before any attachment or second sale, completes the transfer, without formal delivery. Principle applied to furniture sold in a building leased to the vendee, of which he takes possession together with the vendor. Shumway v. Rutter, 19 D. 340.

Marking of shingles with the initials of the purchaser under a bill of sale for a specified quantity out of a larger mass, is evidence of a delivery of possession to go to the jury. Jewett v. Lincoln, 31 D. 86.
